THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

VOL. 3.

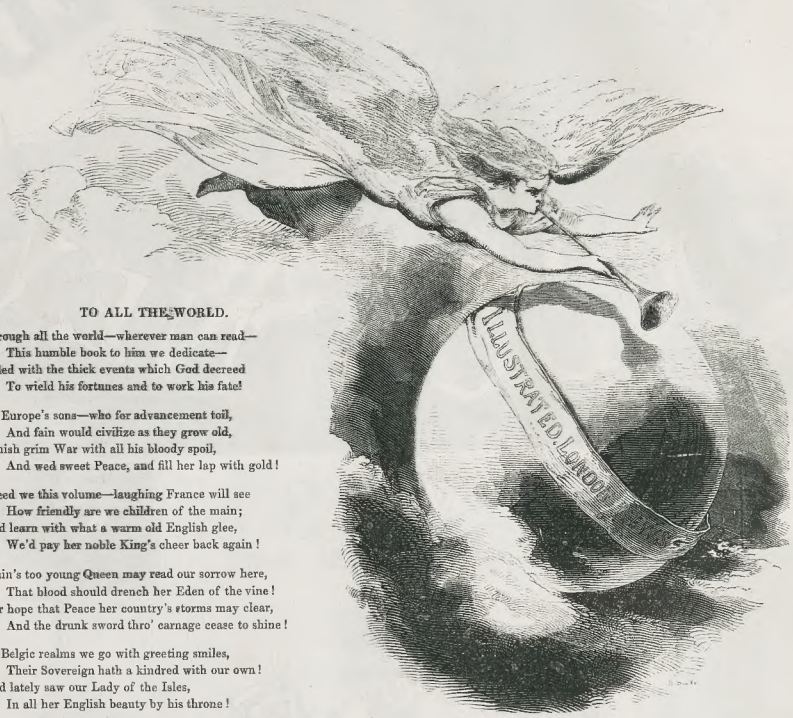
July 1, to Dec. 30, 1843.

LONDON:

PUBLISHED BY WILLIAM LITTLE, 198 STRAND.

1843.

DEDICATION.



TO ALL THE WORLD.

Through all the world—wherever man can read—
This humble book to him we dedicate—
Filled with the thick events which God decreed
To wield his fortunes and to work his fate!

To Europe's sons—who for advancement toil,
And fain would civilize as they grow old,
Banish grim War with all his bloody spoil,
And wed sweet Peace, and fill her lap with gold!

Speed we this volume—laughing France will see
How friendly are we children of the main;
And learn with what a warm old English glee,
We'd pay her noble King's cheer back again!

Spain's too young Queen may read our sorrow here,
That blood should drench her Eden of the vine!
Our hope that Peace her country's storms may clear,
And the drunk sword thro' carnage cease to shine!

To Belgic realms we go with greeting smiles,
Their Sovereign hath a kindred with our own!
And lately saw our Lady of the Isles,
In all her English beauty by his throne!

Prussia may give us too a kindly word
Of welcome, as we there extend the hand,
For a free-granted fellowship incurred,
By her own King, when lodged on English land!

The Austrian favor we would kindly gain—
Rome's sunny smile—and Lisbon's vintage-car—
And speed unchecked thro' all the wide domain,
That sways the Sultan or that owns the Czar!

Then to the burning Ind, where Ganges float
Down the blue stream dark cargoes of the dead!
May we not steer a light and living boat,
Freighted with mercy, love, and peace instead!

On the hot carcase let the vulture feed!
Our hope is still that Britain's generous breast,
May never typify the vulture breed,
And pant for conquest where men pine for rest!

From Afric's soil let Slavery's taint be swept!
We go to greet the children of the free;
And where the widow wailed—the father wept—
To plant the love that springs from Liberty!

America! the World Columbus found!
Have we not borne into her bosom fair,
An Art-instruction that may yet abound
In her young home, and thrive and quicken there?

So would we plunge into our fast career,
Thro' all the living world of men—and so
Pour kindness down—that happiness might here
Fill all the trumpet-blast that Fame should blow!

THE GETTY CENTER LIBRARY

TO VOL. III.

PREFACE!—Preface to what?—to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS? No—that journal came out without preface—it had a mere announcement—the very simplest of introductions to the public, but it and the public became friends—close friends—warm friends—and, as we hope and believe, friends not easily to be parted.

Well, then—this is not a preface to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, but it is a preface to our third volume, and if our third volume had not emphatically declared to us that it wanted a preface, a preface would not have been writ. When a very spirited lady, by name Lady Augusta Clavering, made her appearance at some public ball and found that the minor functionaries had omitted the ceremony of announcing her, she was reported to have halted at the threshold of the festive scene, and to have exclaimed, with much energy and some passion, "Lady Augusta Clavering! Lady Augusta Clavering! own sister to the Duke of Argyll, and nobody to introduce her!!" Now, we would not willingly put our third volume in the condition of Lady Augusta Clavering. We would not plunge it neck and crop—head over heels—into the new year, with that grim and boisterous reproof coming back to us from its indignant lips, and shouting through the realms of its new future, with a sort of bursting vexation—"The Third Volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS!—the Third Volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS! firm friend of the Queen, and fixed favourite of the people, and nobody to introduce it!!"—This is a disgrace which the present preface declares shall not come to pass.

Permit us, then, most dear Public, to introduce you to the Third Volume of the ILLUSTRATED NEWS, elegantly attired, though dressed for no party!

And if we throw off the punster's hood, and set that style of joking which is good-in-youth, but bad-in-age apart, we may take up the tone serious to describe, if they were not indescribable, the pride and gratification we experienced, in being thus, for the third time, in a condition to be put upon the shelf—not shelved as we use the word despisingly, but in the sense of treasure-trove—picked up, garnished, and bound together as a fair ornament for the place we occupy—as a familiar friend—a library oracle to be consulted and referred to—for wisdom and history, for entertainment, intelligence, and art!

Ponder, reader, over the pages of this Third Volume, and see if they do not point to the future—if they do not embody the spirit of the past. Fancy yourself gifted with life, even to the length of two centuries, and as their silver is frosted upon your brow, go to your old book-case, and though the worms have eaten away the word, take from the half crumbling shelf this still preserved volume of the ILLUSTRATED NEWS. If you have memory open it for that! It will fill you with beautiful recollections of an earlier time—it will be an evergreen for your heart. If you have grandchildren open it for them—it will show faithfully what these times were, and it will reflect their living action with pictured fidelity, so that the historian may reap his harvest in that field, and the novelist feed his fiction out of that granary, and the dramatist gather his incidents from that store! Let us confess that in the establishment of this journal, its value, to the future, has not been among our least or most interested considerations.

But, reader, you are not the old man we have taxed our imagination to make you—you are young, vigorous, full of present intelligence, and wisely curious about the progress of events. Come here, then—the year is done—the pantomime is over, and here is your panorama!

What want you more? Is not the register true in detail and illuminated by art? What stirring things come to your memory that are not here? Your popular and far-loved Queen has gone upon the broad waters to receive the homage of a royal hospitality from the Monarch of France. Here is the pictured record of her visit. She has threaded the curious streets of the ancient cities of Belgium, with their allegorical pageants and strange devices, and we have loyally followed her progress; and, with the pencil of art and history, brought those rare old places, with all the excitement of their modern circumstances, within the compass of our jewelled pages. The English hospitalities of our Nobility to their Sovereign are here—our University celebrations—our City feasts and strifes—in a word, all the landmarks of Time's Progress Truth and Art have set up within this tome.

Our own sense of gratulation in the production of this Third Volume lies in the strength and endurance of the public friendship which has continued to promote our success, and left us the pride of knowing, that, if our two former volumes have been kept by many thousands, this will be kept by many thousands more, for our circulation, within the last six months, has continued to grow larger, and our influence unfailingly to extend.

With deep thankfulness, therefore, we launch this, our third cargo, upon the waters—the public are the pilots of the vessel, and they will take it safe to port, manned and rigged with our thanks and gratitude, and anchored, we hope, in the bosom of prosperity, with a cable that shall never break.

CHRONOLOGY OF REMARKABLE EVENTS IN 1843.

JUNE 24, TO DECEMBER 30.

JUNE.

24. Important victory obtained by Gen. Rivera, at Monte Video; 400 killed.

25. Reaction in Andalusia and Catalonia in favour of Espartero.—Violent hailstorms in the Department of Maine et Loire, in France, by which much corn and fruit were destroyed, and large oak trees torn up.—Repeal Meeting at Galway of between 500,000 and 400,000 persons.—Riots at Newcastle Emlyn, South Wales, and the soldiers disarmed by a mob of 20,000 persons.

26. The Rev. Mr. Head, rector of Feniton, Devon, sentenced by the Bishop of Exeter to three years suspension from the ministry, and the loss of his living, for publishing a letter impugning certain doctrines of the Church of England.—The Universal Peace Convention closed their three days' conference on the best means of averting the calamities of war.—The Governors of Bethlem Hospital resolve to provide a pianoforte and other musical instruments for the use of the patients.—A man suffocated in a yeast-trough at the brewery in Broad-street, Soho.—St. John's, Roman Catholic Church, Islington, consecrated with great pomp.—Serious riots on the Beauharnois Canal, in Canada.—A Mrs. Catharine Gilmour, alias Cochrane, who fled from Scotland in January last, to avoid a charge of murdering her husband, arrested and claimed by the British Consul at New York; being the first arrest under the new treaty.—The French Government declare against the reduction of the army, but in favour of reducing the marine.

27. An action of libel, tried in the Court of Queen's Bench, Mr. Colburn, the publisher, &c., v. the publishers of the Atlas, newspaper, for imputed libellous criticism of new books: verdict for the plaintiff 40s.—Lord Cottenham's motion in Parliament for a select committee on the Bankruptcy Act of last session, negatived without a division.—Mr. Murray, the eminent publisher, of Albemarle-street, died, in his 65th year.—Opening of the New Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead, by the King of the Belgians.

28. Marriage of H.R.H. the Princess Augusta of Cambridge and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, celebrated with great state in the new chapel, at Buckingham Palace; her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, and the King and Queen of the Belgians, &c., present.—The Oxford Convocation, amidst the utmost tumult, conferred the degree of D.C.L. on Mr. Everett, the American Minister; the dissentients alleging that Mr. Everett was, at one time, a Unitarian Minister.

29. The Queen held her first Drawing-room for the season at St. James's Palace.

30. Mr. Hume's motion in Parliament for the discontinuance of the King of Hanover's Pension, lost by 197 to 91.—Otho, King of Greece, refused to pay the arrears of interest on the guaranteed loan.

JULY.

1. The Irish Weekly Repeal Rent amounted to £2495.—Destructive Fire at Pandon Dean, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.—Fatal Duel at Camden Town, in which Lieutenant Fawcett was shot by Lieutenant Munro, his own brother-in-law.

2. The Boston and Halifax Royal Mail steamer, Columbia, wrecked on Seal Island.—Dr. Hassemann, the originator of the Homœopathic System, died in Paris.—News received of fresh troubles in the Punjaub and Affghanistan. A pigeon flew from Paris to Antwerp in two hours and twenty minutes.

3. The Prizes offered by the Royal Commission for Cartoons for the Decoration of the New Houses of Parliament, having been awarded, Westminster Hall, Chantrey bequest, was opened to the public, for the first week, at a small charge, and afterwards gratuitously.—The Grand three days' Regatta commenced at Putney.—Great Cattle Repeal Meeting at Dublin.—A young man was killed in the Theatre Royal, Dublin, by jumping from the gallery to the pit. Carmarthenshire, and the southern mining and manufacturing districts, became the seat of disorder, which was at first confined to the rural districts.

4. The East India ship Regular lost on her outward passage from London to Bombay; crew and passengers saved.

10. The Fifth Anniversary of the Royal Agricultural Society of England held at Derby; the Earl of Hardwicke President.—Destructive Fire at Nightingale's Premises, Manchester; £15,000 lost.—Destructive Fires on this and the two following nights in London.

12. News received of the Siege of Monte Video by the Buenos Ayreans, on April 8.—Dreadful explosion of a portable Powder Magazine, on board H.M.S. Camperdown, at Sheerness, several persons injured, and a seaman and a young lady killed.—Mr. W. S. O'Brien's motion for a committee of the whole House of Commons on the redress of Irish grievances, negatived by 243 to 109, after five nights' debate.

14. The Marquis of Clarincarde's motion in Parliament, censuring the recent dismissal of Irish magistrates, rejected by 91 to 39.

19. Terrific explosion and conflagration at the Turpentine Works, Barking-road, St. George's-in-the-East.

17. The Scotch Church Bill passed in the House of Lords.—Mr. E. Wood's motion in Parliament for abolishing the Duties on Wool, rejected by 142 to 79.

19. Total Wreck of the Pegasus, off Holy Island, on her passage from Leith to Hull; upwards of 40 persons lost, among whom was Mr. Elton, the actor.—Launch of the Great Britain Iron Steam-ship, at Bristol, in the presence of Prince Albert and a vast assemblage.

20. Her Majesty's State Visit to the Italian Opera.—In the House of Commons, Government declare their intention to abandon the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, the Factories Bill, and every other measure determinedly opposed; the Municipal Corporations Bill withdrawn.

23. The insurrection in Spain completely successful. On the 15th Narvaez arrived in the neighbourhood of the capital, which he summoned to surrender. On the 17th he withdrew, to meet and attack the troops of the Government, under Zurbano and

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 61.—Vol. III.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE CORONATION.

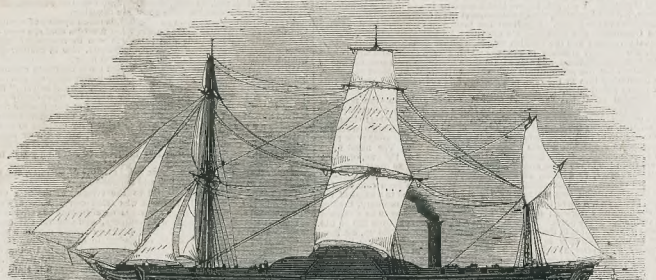
The past week has furnished us with another anniversary of the coronation of her Majesty, an event always pregnant with happy congratulation, and recorded by the people in a sincere spirit of national joy. The cannon booms with stately echoes along the sunny hills, the bells roll their loud and stirring merriment upon the popular ear, the voice of festive holiday speaks blithely out, and there is a spirited and healthy tone of general cheerfulness in the demeanour of the thousands of loyal subjects who once more welcome the hour which confirmed the young Victoria upon her throne, and gave her to hold queendom of the greatest empire of the world. All this is as it should be. It proves that there is no disappointment in the national heart—that the Sovereign has fulfilled her calling, and gathered the graces of popularity among the blessings of her reign; in a word, that she is surrounded with an atmosphere of personal love, in which her people are as happy as herself. But other and higher thoughts than are so far suggested present themselves to the reflection of the Christian and the philosopher upon the recurrence of the anniversary which celebrates the crowning of Victoria the First. A glance at the past—at the auspicious reality of the imposing ceremony, now become matter of history—is enough to call up bright memories of the abounding hope and joy which then filled the bosom of the nation. Men fixed glad eyes upon their young and beautiful Monarch as upon a star in whose sweet radiance they deemed they could discover consolation, prosperity, and peace. She seemed as it were the fair harbinger of a long reign of blessings—of a reign which should lift up the hopes of the people, comfort the poor, expand commerce, give wings and impetus to trade, be fraught with moral, religious, and political civilization, and hush the trump of war in the world's homes.

A few years have past, and have they realized these fond and sanguine aspirations? or have they only taught another great moral lesson of the powerlessness of even the fairest ambition, supported by the highest destiny, to convert a nation into the Eutopia of social and political happiness, so that its empire shall not be greater than its content! The wilfulness of Governments will have its way; and even under the fair sway of a pure and gentle woman, a large amount of sorrow and distress and wrong may be suffered to sink into the heart of a community.

We do not thus insinuate that there has been any disappointment to the people from the reign of Victoria. Personally she has learned to live in their hearts, and wherever the influences of the throne could extend, they have been most genial and eloquent of good effect. She has identified herself with her subjects most fairly and familiarly, and, as she loves them dearly, must know them well. Her marriage gratified them, and its fruits gave fresh food for gratulation, while her conduct as wife and mother has inspired a reverence and respect which hold graceful kindred with the popular esteem.

And yet even under one so good and so much regarded we cannot, without waiving the strict integrity of truth, declare that national interests have been much advanced, or national happiness much extended, or that the people have been rendered as content in their condition as they confess themselves to be fortunate in their Queen. Fulfilments have not equalled the brightness of auspices, and the strongest Governments have not been able to surround themselves with the popularity which attaches to the throne. It is, moreover, a bitter sadness to reflect amid the surface festivity which pervades the Coronation holiday—amid the cannons' loud boast of joy and the vaunting merriment of the pealing steeples—how many hearts are alive only to the utterance of discontent and suffering, and can afford to those lively demonstrations no other sympathy than a sigh. It is sad to find commerce languishing and trade drooping its inactive limbs, in a word, such a depression of the functions of the social body as betrays a weakness commensurate with its distress; and amid all this to hear the loud distraction of political agitation, and to find riot and disaffection strangling the hopes of peace. These are evils which the best of sovereigns could not remedy alone—which good government and vigorous legislation only can overcome; and for these the people are now invoking the Executive with heart and soul. The call for a Poor-law with some charity in its spirit—for the means of religious instruction—for education for their wretched and depraved—for a political economy that shall infuse into the machine of Government life and power and honesty of purpose—for the exercise of public as well as individual benevolence—for the strengthening of national virtue, and the repression of the crimes of wealth. The faltering revenue which burthens them with an intolerable and grinding income-tax, can never become firm until we bless the people with a few of these results; and some of the most palpable wrongs of the community might be well redressed at once. There is that gaunt and grievous curse—the Poor-law. It might, with one mighty peal of exultation from the people's universal voice, be rased from the statute-book of the land. In England its abolition would pour a gushing flood of ecstasy into the spirit of the people; while the annihilation of its miseries in Ireland, would go far to hush the canting fury of Repeal. In the progress of moral and religious education giant strides are to be made by the Church, by the Government, by the aristocracy, and by all denominations of the people; and yet this good work is allowed to grow halt and maim under the withering influence of hopeless party strife. How does that curse of party sear and blight and paralyse the best energies of civilisation, and the noblest ambitions of public men!

But let the nation now or never look to the Government and to its representatives, under the constitution, to work out a regeneration of affairs, to dispel some of the clouds that are upon us, to cheer the drooping spirit of the land, so that when gay anniversaries greet us in the round of time, and such events as the coronation of our beloved Sovereign bring with them their pleasures of memory, their annual blush of joy, the happiness of the people may not be shadowed with the dark influences of either wretchedness or wrong; but, rather that a revived pride and a refreshened confidence in their governors may enable them to confess a contentment as sweet as the graces which surround their Sovereign, and a prosperity as abounding as the virtues which adorn her throne.



HER MAJESTY'S STEAM FRIGATE PENELOPE.

There is no vessel in the British navy which has excited so much attention in the nautical world as this extraordinary steam frigate, which has been converted from a 46 gun sailing frigate to a war steamer, of a magnitude unequalled in our own or any foreign service, with an armament that will enable her to bid defiance to any two line-of-battle ships, especially as her steam will give her the means of taking a commanding position. She is one of the old French "Hebe" class of frigates, of which there are now between thirty and forty in ordinary at the various ports, all of them in good condition, but quite useless, in consequence of their being unable to cope with the large class of frigates which have lately been introduced into the navies of all the maritime powers. She has been elongated 63 feet, having been cut in half, and lengthened to that extent. In this additional space, which has been given to her right amidships, her engines and boilers are placed, together with 600 tons of coals, leaving her original dimensions as a frigate for her armament and men. Some idea may be formed of her great capability and power from the fact that, in addition to her own crew of three hundred officers and men, she can accommodate a thousand soldiers, with provisions and water for the whole, for a voyage to the Cape of Good Hope. Her armament will consist of two large ten-inch pivot guns, of 84 cwt each, eight sixty-eight pounders, able to fire both shot and shell, and fourteen thirty-two pounders, making a total of twenty-four guns of this immense caliber. She has two steam engines, which are believed to be of the greatest power of any that have yet been made, either for marine or other purposes; the power of the engines conjointly is nearly 700 horses, although the nominal power is stated at only 625 horses. The diameter of the cylinders is 92 inches, and the length of stroke nearly seven feet; every part of the engines and boilers is made adequate in capacity and strength for 700 horses' power.

The engines are made upon what is called the direct-action principle, that is, the power is transmitted direct from the piston to the main axis, without the intervention of side levers or beams; they are upon the same plan as the engines of the Cyclops, Gorgon, Geyser, and many other steam frigates belonging to H. M. steam marine.

The condensers of the Penelope's engines are made upon the tubular plan of Mr. Samuel Hall's patent. There are two of them, each containing 7000 tubes, every tube being 6 feet 8 inches long. If the tubes of the two condensers were placed end to end they would reach a distance of upwards of 18 miles. The cold water is forced through the tubular condensers by four large double-action pumps, two to each condenser, which are placed on each side the air-pumps, and are worked by rods connected to the air-pump cross-heads.

The cylinders are each furnished with four distinct slide valves, two of which serve for the admission of steam, and two for the escape of the spent steam to the condensers; and the gear for working the slides is so arranged that the admission of steam into the cylinders may be cut off at one third of the stroke, at three fourths of the stroke, or at any intermediate portion of the stroke as may be required.

There are four boilers on the tubular plan, each boiler having five fire-places, that is, in all twenty fire-places; the boilers are arranged lengthways in the vessel with the fire-places (ten of a side) facing the sides of the vessel, so that the two stoke-holes or firing-places are one on the starboard, and one on the larboard side of the vessel. In a recess formed between the two foremost boilers is the step for the mainmast, which consequently stands nearly in the centre of the engine and boiler room.

The chimney is placed at the after end of the two after boilers, at a distance of 17 feet in the clear abaft the mainmast. The four boilers are each furnished with separate safety-valves, shut-off-valves, feed-pipes and other apparatus, so that any one, two, three, or all four boilers can be used at one time.

It should be observed that, to convert the Penelope into a steam frigate, it was found requisite to give her considerable additional length; to accomplish this the vessel was cut in two in midships; the fore part of the vessel was then drawn away from the after part a distance of 62 feet, and the intermediate space was then filled in with new wood; the frigate is therefore now 62 feet 6¼ inches longer than when she was first built; the 62 feet 6½ inches so added to the ship serves as the engine and boiler room, and within this space is contained the whole of the machinery, boiler, &c., as also the coal-boxes ranged on each side the whole length of the engine-room, and capable of receiving 600 tons of coals, that is, fuel for 16 days' steaming.

The total weight of the machinery, including the paddle-wheels, the boilers, and the water in the boilers, is 435 tons. Each of the paddle-shafts weighs 11 tons, and is 22 inches diameter. The engines are furnished with a disconnecting apparatus, by means of which the paddle-wheels, one or both, can at any time be disconnected from the engines, and cast loose: the apparatus consists of two strong bolts, connected with the paddle-wheel crank, by forcing out or withdrawing of which bolts the connecting or disconnecting is effected. To assist in the connecting or disconnecting the engines, and for other operations, each wheel is furnished with a brake lever, or compressor, by means of which the wheels can, in the roughest weather, be held fast in any position.

The chimney of the boiler is constructed on the ordinary plan; but the lower part is so arranged that a telescope-funnel can at any time be applied; that is, a chimney made in parts to slide into or shut up one within another, so that the whole may be lowered out of sight.

The order for the Penelope's engines was given on the 27th April, 1842: they were quite completed, ready for fixing on board the vessel by the 1st of March last. The fixing of the engines was commenced in the second week of April, and completed on the 21st June, 1843.

She will be rigged in the same manner as when she was a sailing frigate, with the exception of having no yards and sails on her mizen mast. The rigging we have given of her represents her as she will be when sailing and not steaming. Her engines were tried on Thursday, when she made an experimental trip down the river, and were found to answer admirably, working with the most perfect ease, and without causing any perceptible vibration. She is 245 feet long, and of 1780 tons.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, June 27, 1843.—Private letters received this morning from Andalusia and Catalonia give as certain that a steady reaction in favour of Espartero was operating amongst all classes of the people, and that little or no doubt was entertained that the Regent would succeed in putting down the insurrection. The patriots of Barcelona are far from being sanguine as to ultimate success. They publish pompous proclamations, decree laws, and call for forced contributions; but their hearts are heavy, their spirits are damped each time they regard Montjouich, or hear the name of the truly brave Echalecia pronounced. Let but Espartero give the Andalusian army a few months to recruit, discipline and the whole insurrection will dwindle away, and French men-of-war be called into requisition to convey the leaders to hospitable France. Be assured that even Prim, the renowned battle-cry deputy, will wait in Catalonia so long as his retreat into France is secured. His threat to keep up a guerilla warfare in the mountains is sheer nonsense, and he is well aware that he could not carry it into execution. The mountaineers are led by their priests; they are superstitious and headstrong, but faithful to their principles; those principles are monarchical; and, had the cause of Don Carlos been well conducted, he would have found a great support in the mountains of the principality. Prim has raised the standard of ultraradicalism, and they have a horror of all that emanates from Spanish liberalism. The wound-be Liberal of 1823 chastised their villages; Zurbano murdered barren whole districts, and shot in cool blood the father and the son. Prim would be driven from the mountains his presence would be considered as compromising the principles of the mountaineers. The insurrection may, with powerful protection—certain of a retreat—keep the country for a time in a state of civil war; oceans of blood may be shed, but its defeat is certain. I do not believe that Espartero is generally unpopular in Spain, but the Lopezites, the Christinos, and the Afrancesados are decidedly obnoxious to the people. Espartero has justice on his side. In dissolving the Chambers, and changing his ministers, he was acting under constitutional privilege; and the Spanish people, whether Constitutionalist or Carlist, are strongly attached to the laws which govern them, and will defend him who respects them, and acts within their tenets. Great credit is due to Espartero for the promptitude with which he rewarded Colonel Linage for his zeal in promoting him to the rank of a general, and conferring on him the title of Count Montjouich.

Marshal Soult has succeeded against the commission—the peace of Europe is secured—the Marshal has his 14,000 men! It is a singular fact, and one that offers subject for serious consideration, particularly to Englishmen, that whilst the French Government declared it impossible to augment the effective of the army—indeed made it a cabinet question—they of their own accord proposed a serious reduction in their marine. The naval force of France consists, at the present moment, of 24 ships of the line, of which 8 are from 100 to 120 guns, and 16 from 80 to 90 guns; of 29 frigates, 30 corvettes, 52 brigs, 72 flutilas, 49 steam-boats, and 53 transport corvettes—in all, 309 vessels. The Government proposed, and it has been consented to by the commission, that the naval force shall be reduced to 8 ships of the line, 12 frigates, 8 corvettes, and 31 brigs; to be laid up in ordinary, 12 ships of the line and 6 frigates; 4 ships of the line and 4 frigates to be stationed in command of the ports. There are to be 8 steam-boats of from 220 to 540 horse power. Thus, in the event of war, taking the vessels laid up, &c., &c., the French could only bring into service 24 ships of the line, 20 frigates, 8 corvettes, 31 brigs, and 8 steamers—in all, 91 ships.

The latest accounts from Algeria offer little interest; indeed the belligerents seem to be repairing their late fatigues—for their late victories—for both parties are elated with success. The Duke d'Aumale quits Africa about the 25th or 30th; it is intended, as I mentioned in my last, that he only retires as governor-general.

The Prince de Joinville, with his beautiful bride, is expected daily at Brest, from whence they will proceed to the Chateau d'Eu.

The great benefits arising from the judicious interference of the jure de paix in France has often been commented upon by English writers, and particularly, I believe, by Lord Brougham. In the hope that this paragraph will attract the attention of some influential member of the Legislature, I have thought proper to give the following statistical account of the labours of those truly worthy judges. There are distributed over the different departments 2846 juges de paix. During the past year they had to investigate 655,374 cases; of this number they succeeded in pacifically amicably arranged 268,885, and they induced the plaintiffs of 118,441 suits to abandon their pretentions as unjust. I am afraid we could not show as much in England.

I have lately visited Dieppe, and was much struck with the marked improvement which has taken place in the town within the last year, and at the indication everywhere observable of a rapidly increasing commerce. To the election of M. Vavasseur, the wealthy manufacturer, as deputy for this department, may be attributed much of the increased prospects alluded to. During the contest he pledged himself that, if elected to the office, he would immediately establish a bank in Dieppe, advance a considerable sum of money for the completion of the harbour, and import there all the American cotton for Hitherto nearly the whole has gone to Rouen—and well has he redeemed his promise. The bank, with a large and solid capital, was opened for business on the 1st of January in the present year. Several hundred labourers are actively employed in the works of the harbour, and no less than 400 large American ships with cotton have entered the port within the last few months. As a watering-place Dieppe offers many attractions, and though, owing to the very unseasonable weather which has prevailed hitherto, comparatively few visitors have arrived for the season, the public promenades and the public baths are well attended, and every day brings fresh importations of strangers from England and Paris. The facilities given by the Dieppe steamers to the Parisians for a great temptation to take a trip to the coast, the distance being now easily performed between Paris and Dieppe in eight hours.

During my journey I was much gratified to observe that the crops everywhere appeared healthy and abundant. I never remember having seen the corn land so promising; but, as the soil in this part of Normandy is light and dry, the late heavy rains, which in the southern parts have proved so done so much serious damage to the harvest, have been anything but injurious in their effects here. The colza, or rape, which the Normandy farmers plant very extensively, and on which they depend to a great degree for the profitable working of their farms, is, in some places, more or less damaged; but, so far as I can learn, the crop will be an average one. The apple crop, I am sorry to say, will be greatly below an average in quantity, owing to the blight and heavy hailstorms, which have seriously destroyed the fruit throughout the whole district; and, as the beverage of the Normandy peasantry is chiefly cider, the falling off in the produce will be seriously felt.

Amongst the advantages proposed to be conferred on the port of Dieppe by M. Vavasseur was the establishment of two large and powerful steamers to ply daily between Brighton and Dieppe, to make the passage in time to reach Paris the same day; and active steps were taken towards the accomplishment of the plan; but the opposition raised against the measure by the townspeople, and particularly the hotel-keepers, led to the abandonment of the scheme for the present. They were fearful that the facilities afforded by this increase of accommodation would issue in the making Dieppe merely a turn of transit for passengers, and with great reason, for only on Sunday last the Steam Navigation Company's boat the Dart, bringing with her about sixty passengers, landed them a short time only before the starting of the diligences for Rouen and Paris; the result was, that upwards of thirty passengers who had breakfasted on board the steamer never entered an hotel at all, but, having sent their baggage to the coach-office, amused themselves for an hour in visiting the principal streets, and then took their departure.

At Rouen I found the same feeling prevalent—a decided opposition existing in the minds of the same classes against the railroad. Both innkeepers and diligence proprietors complained that the passengers arrived from Paris in sufficient time to take their departure for Havre by the steam-boats, and to Dieppe, on their way to England, by diligences in communication with the railway, without stopping, either to pass the night or to breakfast on

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Bishop of LONDON moved the second reading of the Church Endowment Bill, and expressed his gratitude for the support he had received from the laity and landowners in his district. His success had outrun his most sanguine expectations, in proof of which he might allege the fact, that ten churches were required for the parish of Bethnal-green, and no less than nine had been already erected.—After some observations from Lord MONTEAGLE and Lord BROUGHAM in support of the bill, it was read a second time, and was ordered to be committed on Thursday.—Lord BROUGHAM complained that during his absence from ill health, on the previous evening, the Earl of Aberdeen had brought forward the Scotch Church Bill, although he had requested him to postpone it even for a single day. Making the bill a declaratory bill was an insult and an affront to the judges who had given judgment in the Auchterarder case, and he thought it very extraordinary that the Earl of Aberdeen should have decided behind his back that his judgment was not law. He would on Thursday enter into the question, in order to prove that the judgment was correct.—After some observations from the Earl of HADDINGTON in reply, their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

In reply to a question from Mr. ROEBUCK, Lord STANLEY said that the services of Sir C. Napier in the late campaign in Scinde had been rewarded by a cross of the military order of the Bath, and the first regiment which had since fallen vacant; but Government had not yet determined on the mode in which the thanks of Parliament should be proposed to the army under his command.—Sir T. WILDE moved for a select committee to inquire into the progress made in carrying into effect the recommendations of Mr. Rowland Hill for Post-office improvements, and whether the further carrying into effect of such recommendations or any of them will be likely to prove beneficial to the country.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said he should agree to the motion, merely altering it so as to confine it to the investigation of the manner in which the penny-postage system had been carried out.—Mr. F. BARING said it was with great regret that he had perceived Mr. Hill's retirement from the service of the public; and from his great capabilities, the Government, having broken its bargain with him, might remedy the evil by finding some other situation in which his abilities could be employed to advantage. It was not to be denied that the Post-office authorities were adverse to the plan of Mr. Hill, and they ought not to be left wholly to their own control in carrying it out.—After some observations from Mr. WALLACE, Sir R. PEEL said he never doubted the advantage likely to result from the penny-postage system, and revenue considerations alone had caused him to hesitate about the propriety of its adoption. He had before now given his testimony as to the abilities of Mr. Hill; and, if it were deemed desirable to continue his services, the proper way would have been to make him secretary to the Post-office. The character of Lord Lowther was a sufficient guarantee that the new system would be carried out in good faith, and the house might rest assured that the whole influence of the Government would be directed to aid the success of the system. In reply to some observations from Mr. M. GIBSON, respecting inconveniences alleged relative to the arrangements in the Manchester Post-office, Sir G. CLERK said that those inconveniences were to be attributed to the exorbitant terms demanded by the railway companies for conveying the mails. He hoped, however, that all cause of complaint would, ere long, be removed.—After some further observations from Mr. ADLINGTON, Mr. HUME, and Mr. HUTT, Sir T. WILDE replied, after which the motion, as amended, was agreed to.—On the motion of Mr. MACKINNON, a select committee was appointed to inquire into the means and expediency of preventing the nuisance of smoke arising from fires or furnaces.—Some matters of minor importance were subsequently disposed of, after which the house adjourned.

WEDNESDAY.

Neither of the houses of Parliament sat on Wednesday, the Lords having adjourned over, and the Commons not having made a house.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY

The Roman Catholic Oaths Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Earl of ABERDEEN, after giving an explanation of the circumstances that had induced him to bring on the Church of Scotland Benefices Bill on Monday night, the absence of Lord Brougham, which, it appeared, was not occasioned by any intentional disrespect to the noble and learned lord, but merely arose from a misunderstanding, moved the adjournment of the committee until Monday next.—Lord BROUGHAM expressed himself satisfied, and the matter dropped.—The Sugar Duties Bill was read a second time; after which Lord REDESDALE moved the second reading of the Hampstead-heath (Inclosure) Bill; but, after a few words from Lords BROUGHAM and CAMPBELL, withdrew it, and their lordships immediately afterwards adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The Lagan Navigation Bill was read a third time and passed.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved the appointment of the following gentlemen on the Post-office Committee:—Sir George Clerk, Viscount Elrington, Mr. Benson Hoskyns, Mr. Beckett, Mr. Bethell, Mr. Bernal Osborne, Mr. Ricardo, Mr. Trotter, Mr. F. Baring, Mr. Cripps, Mr. Hawes, Mr. Escott, Mr. Wyse, Mr. Bramston, Mr. M. Gibson, and Mr. W. Patten.—In some discussion that ensued between the Irish Arms Bill, after which the chairman reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

Lord CARBERRY presented a petition from Cork against the repeal agitation now going on in Ireland.—Lord Ellenborough gave to the Duke of Wellington to attend and give evidence before the Shipwrecks Committee of the House of Commons.—On the motion of the Earl of ABERDEEN the Apprehension of Offenders Bill, to sanction international system of surrendering offenders between this country and America, was read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The Earl of LEICESTER made an application for time to refute the evidence given in the House of Lords on the Townsend Peerage Bill; and was assured by Mr. J. S. WORTLEY that every attention should be paid to his communication.—Mr. H. BERKELEY moved for leave to bring in a bill to enable the lord of the manor of Berkeley to grant leases of certain lands, and to provide that when the bill for inclosing of common lands came before the house, he should move that nothing should authorise the inclosure of common fields, or waste lands within ten miles of the cities of London and Westminster or within five miles of any other town or city of the United Kingdom.—A conversation arose between Mr. H. HINDE and Sir J. GRAHAM, respecting the National Records; as also between Mr. ARKLOWAY and Sir J. GRAHAM on the Post-office regulations.—Sir J. GRAHAM, in answer to Mr. HAWES, gave an explanation relating to the Factories Education Bill.—The house then went into a committee of supply; and Mr. Hume brought forward his promised motion to reduce the King of Hanover's pension, which was negatived by a majority of 197 to 91.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Queen and Prince Albert, the King and Queen of the Belgians, attended by the Countess of Dunmore, the Countess Vilain XIII., Viscount Hawarden, Baron de Dieskau, M. de Moerkerke, Colonel Buckley, and Sir Edward Bowyer, honoured the Italian Opera with their presence on Saturday evening. The Duchess of Kent also honoured the Opera with her presence.

SUNDAY.—The Queen, the King of the Belgians, the Duchess of Kent, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Royal Suite in Waiting, and the Household, attended divine service on Sunday morning in the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace. The Bishop of London preached the sermon, taking his text from Colossians, chap. iii., verse 17. The Hon. and Rev. Charles L. Courtenay read the prayers.—Sir Robert Peel had an audience of the Queen on Sunday.

The King of Hanover, attended by the Baron de Rettzenstein, honoured Sir Robert Peel with his company at dinner, at the residence of the Right Hon. the Speaker, in Whitehall-gardens, on Saturday, and afterwards left town for his residence at Kew.

On Monday the Queen had an evening party at Buckingham Palace. The suite of state rooms were opened and brilliantly lighted up. The Royal Family and other illustrious visitors were received in the drawing-room. Her Majesty's private band was in attendance in the Palace during the evening. The Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty and Prince Albert yesterday.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert are expected to visit Plymouth in August, and the inhabitants are subscribing towards a splendid regatta to be given on the occasion.

His Majesty the King of the Belgians held a levee at Buckingham Palace on Monday for the reception of the Foreign Diplomatic Corps. The Countesses de St. Aulaire, the lady of the French Ambassador, and Madam Van de Weyer, the lady of the Belgian Minister, were presented to the Queen of the Belgians.

Tuesday was the anniversary of her Majesty's Coronation. Sir R. Peel had an audience of her Majesty. The Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty and Prince Albert.

The King of the Belgians officiated at the opening of the new Infant Orphan Asylum at Wanstead, in the place of his royal nephew, Prince Albert. The King was received with every mark of enthusiasm by the assembled multitude.

The King of Hanover honoured the Duke and Duchess of Northumberland with his company at the public breakfast given by their Graces at Sion House. His Majesty returned to town shortly before seven, and dined with the Queen. In the evening he visited her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the Countess de St. Aulaire with his company, at the Ambassy, in Manchester-square.

The marriage of the Earl of Shelburne with Mdlle. Flahaut is settled; it is, we understand, to take place at Vienna, at the same time as that of the Lord Chartres with the daughter of the Earl of Lichfield.

The D'Este, daughter of the late Duke of Sussex, arrived at the close of last week from Paris; and since her arrival the royal family, and most of the principal nobility, have paid visits of condolence at her town residence.

HER MAJESTY'S DRAWING ROOM.—The Queen held her first drawing room this season on Thursday, at St. James's Palace. The park, as early as eleven o'clock, presented a most animated appearance, thousands of her Majesty's loyal subjects having taken their places on each side of the road leading from Buckingham Palace to St. James's. Many, however, who had paid for standing places on benches, carts, and tables, were doomed to disappointment, for at twelve o'clock an order was issued to the police to remove all the chairs, benches, &c., from the line of road through which her Majesty passed, an order which was immediately, in the most quiet manner, carried into effect. Shortly after one o'clock the Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, Great Officers of State, and the Household began to arrive in rapid succession. They all came in full state. The different branches of the royal family also came in full state. St. James's Street was crowded with the carriages of the nobility and gentry going to the drawing room. Her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert, left Buckingham Palace, attended by her suite, and escorted by a detachment of Life Guards, shortly before two o'clock. Her Majesty was loudly cheered.

HEALTH OF EARL GREY.—We are rejoiced to find that the state of the noble earl is such as to justify hopes of a slight increase in the days which have, of some years, since his lordship's illness, been excited in the minds of his family.

We are happy at being able to state that the Earl of Ripon, who has been indisposed for a few days, is also in a fair way of recovery.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

UNIVERSAL PEACE CONVENTION.—A public meeting of the Friends of Universal Peace was held at Exeter Hall on Monday, being the concluding meeting of the Convention, which was for three days engaged in considering the best means of averting the calamities of war. A number of distinguished foreigners and members of Parliament were present on the occasion. The Marquis de la Rochefoucauld Liancourt came forward to propose the following resolution, and was received with great applause:—"That this meeting, regarding the whole scope of the New Testament, and the awful horrors of war among the nations of the earth, is convinced in the strong conviction that war is inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity, and the true interests of mankind."—The Rev. J. C. Beckwith seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.—Sir William Molesworth proposed the next resolution, which was condemnatory of the war in the East and the traffic in opium.—Mr. Joseph Sturge proposed a resolution urging upon the consideration of all Governments, nations of promoting the happiness of mankind, the reference to arbitration of all future international disputes, which was carried unanimously.—The Rev. John Burnet, of Cumberwell, seconded, and Arnold Buffum, of Ohio, seconded the following resolution, which was carried with great cheering:—"That this meeting unequivocally avows its attachment to civil order and good government; it, however, deeply deprecates the adoption of violent and illegal measures with a view to the abolition of the Established Church, and is of opinion that the principles which are being made for the preservation of tranquillity in Ireland by the employment of military force, and recommends to the friends of peace throughout Ireland to adopt all peaceful and constitutional measures, by memorials, petitions, &c., in order to avert so fearful a calamity." Thanks were then voted to the president, and the meeting broke up.

MESSRS. ACKERMANN'S BANKRUPTCY.—At a meeting of the creditors of the above firm, held on Monday last, it was stated that the liabilities amounted to £30,864 9s. 6d., and the assets to £28,314 18s. 5d. A proposition was made in behalf of Messrs. Ackermann and Co. to pay a composition of 15s. in the pound, in six instalments of 2s. 6d. each, at intervals of six months' date from the 1st of August next. The first instalment to be paid on the 1st of September next. There were upwards of one hundred creditors present, and they unanimously agreed to accept Messrs. Ackermann's proposition, and signed the resolution to that effect before leaving the meeting.

ST. LUKE'S CHARITY SCHOOL.—The anniversary festival of this excellent charity was celebrated on Monday evening at the Freemasons' Tavern: nearly one hundred gentlemen sat down to dinner; the Hon. Charles Cullard presided. The gallery was filled by the patronesses of the charity. After the usual loyal and patriotic toasts, nearly 500 children, boys and girls, the objects of the charity, were introduced. The Rev. Dr. Kirwan made a powerful appeal on behalf of the charity, which the company responded to by a subscription amounting to £324, including the annual donation of £50 from the Earl of Shrewsbury, President of the Society.

HERALDS' COLLEGE'S CORPORATION.—On Thursday a general court of the governors of this corporation, established for the relief and support of sick, maimed, and disabled seamen, and the widows and children of those who may have been slain in the service of their country, was held at the offices in Birchin-lane, J. C. Powell, Esq., in the chair, when the president and committee for the year ensuing were elected. The amount received during the past year from the seamen of London vessels and from ships under the management of the corporation amounted to £18,868, and the sums paid to London and out-port pensioners, and in temporary relief, including charges for management, amounted to £18,103, leaving a cash balance of £764. The pensioners on the books of the corporation up to the 31st of December last were 1485 men, 2353 widows, and 3475 children.

EFFECTS OF THE DUKE OF SUSSEX.—The sale of the plate was concluded on Thursday, when the more important lots were as follow:—A noble tankard supported on lions, engraved with the battle of Culloden, and a medallion of William Duke of Cumberland on the lid, £715; the Irish gold inkstand of William III., in a shagreen case, with the royal arms and cypher of William, with inkstand and sandstand and bell in the centre, 53l. per ounce; and a tankard of green marble, silver gilt, on the lid is the date of 1614, and the monogram of Anne Queen of Denmark.

HER MAJESTY'S CORONATION.—Wednesday being the anniversary of her Majesty's coronation in 1838, the morning was ushered in by the firing of a royal salute at the different fortifications surrounding the metropolis. The royal standard was hoisted at the Tower, Somerset-house, the Italian Opera-house, and the usual public buildings. At one o'clock the Park and Tower guns fired a royal salute, and the vessels in the docks hoisted their colours, as well as those up and down the river, English and foreign, which presented a variegated and lively appearance.

GRAND ENTERTAINMENT AT THE MANSION HOUSE.—On Wednesday the Lord Mayor gave a very splendid entertainment to the judges and the members of the bar. The guests were more numerous than we have seen upon any similar occasion at the Egyptian Hall, there being upwards of 150 individuals seated at the tables in the Egyptian Hall. Several ladies were amongst those who honoured the Lord Mayor with their presence.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

RAILWAY COLLISION IN THE SUMMIT TUNNEL.—A frightful accident occurred on Wednesday week in the centre of the Summit Tunnel. The mail train leaves Manchester at ten minutes before eleven o'clock A.M., and travels at a great speed; no intimation had been given to the driver on entering the tunnel that a luggage train was standing in the centre, and the steam prevented him from seeing the light at the end of the train. The consequence was, that when about half way through the tunnel it overtook and dashed into the luggage train, smashing two or three carriages; but most providentially not hurting an individual.

MYSTERIOUS AND FATAL OCCURRENCE.—Last a week a sailor named Rose belonging to the Liverpool was found lying in a dying state on the side on the roadside near to Conon Bridge. On receiving medical aid, he so far recovered as to be able to state that he was sitting on the parapet by the roadside, when a man came past smoking a pipe. He addressed the stranger, and asked him for a light, when the latter, on hearing, without replying, dealt him a tremendous blow, which knocked him over the parapet and broke his neck. The unfortunate man lived only a few hours.

FIRES.—On Tuesday morning a fire broke out at Mr. Wm. Turner's, Turner, a tradesman residing in Coppice-row, Clerkenwell green. It was discovered at about half-past nine in the morning, and the engines arrived almost immediately. There was a plentiful supply of water, and the damage was confined entirely to the room in which it originated.—On the afternoon of the same day another alarming fire broke out in the lower part of the premises of Mr. Cole, pawnbroker, Wellington-street, near the Victoria Theatre, by which a considerable amount of property was for a time placed in great jeopardy. Considerable damage was done to the furniture; but the lodgers sustained no injury. The firemen declare that they derived no assistance whatever from the spout.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.—An extraordinary sensation was created on Hampton Court racecourse by a desperate attempt at suicide which was made by a Mr. N—— in one of the refreshment booths, under the following circumstances:—It appeared that the unfortunate gentleman, who resides in the neighbourhood of Hampton Court, had foolishly been tempted to stake several sums of money in play at various gaming-tables, at the last of which he found himself minus altogether of sixty pounds. Utterly unconscious of the merciless character of the scoundrels by whom he had been fleeced, the wretched victim implored the ruffians to restore to him part, at least, of what he had lost, stating that he wished, if possible, to keep his unprovidence from the knowledge of his wife. The brutal men, however, heartily laughed at, and further remonstrance was met only by insult. In about a quarter of an hour afterwards Mr. N—— entered a refreshment booth, where gentlemen were eating sandwiches and drinking champagne, when he suddenly exclaimed, "If somebody will lend me a knife I'll cut my throat!" One of the bystanders, thinking he was joking, immediately snatched up a knife and handed it to him, when, to the utter horror of all present, the unfortunate gentleman inflicted a severe wound on his throat before the knife could be taken from him. He was immediately conveyed to the house of a surgeon in the neighbourhood, where he remains in a very dangerous state.

A brutal ruffian named Atkinson, an itinerant coffee-seller, was apprehended on Tuesday whilst in the act of committing a murderous assault on an unfortunate woman, in York-street, Westminster. She is not expected to recover.

[illegible]—On Thursday morning, shortly before [illegible] destructive fire broke out in the upper part of the house [illegible] manufacturer, in Derby-lane, near to the opposite Duke-street. Only a few minutes elapsed before nearly all the contents of the house were consumed. Eleven engines were at work in checking the progress of the devastating element, and after the greatest exertions the fire was arrested in its progress, confining the loss principally to Mr. Biddle's premises, all of whose family are believed to have escaped.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

What a week has been the present, and what a se'nnight of promise the ensuing bids fair to be, for every true-born Briton "with oak and steak!" During the last five days people have been "running all over the country"—at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, at Bibury-upon-Stockbridge, and at Hatcham Park, upon the shirts of London. The details of these pleasant trysts, however, are now matters of history; for which reason we pass on to the happiness that is to be carried by the sage who declares that "man never is, but always to be, blest." The only race meeting of any consideration for the first week in July is the Newmarket of that ilk. For but the ultra-turfite set their faces towards Cambridgeshire for the occasion. The issues of any matches are the July and Chesterfield Stakes for two year-olds, but they rarely give rise to anything impressively bearing on the betting for the following year. For this we have always to wait till after the autumn meetings of the north and south. The sporting feature of the coming week, at least in metropolitan regard, will be the Thames Grand Regatta, which will commence on Monday next, and continue for three days. For the amateur and professional oarsmen of our glorious river there will be emphatically "fat cats for all." The amount subscribed towards the fund whence the various prizes are to be provided for, amounts to £750. The races are appointed to commence each day at 3 P.M., and continue till dusk, to the unspeakable satisfaction of the watermen of Lambeth, Vauxhall, Battersea, Chelsea, Fulham, Putney, Hammersmith, Mortlake, Barnes, Kew, Richmond, Twickenham, Isleworth, Hounslow, Brentford, Kingston, Hampton, Thames Ditton, Walton, Weybridge, Chertsey, Staines, Windsor, Eton, Maidenhead, Henley, Reading, Wallingford, Abingdon, Oxford, and all the towns and villages between them and the metropolis.

MONDAY.—First row, gentlemen's pair oars: first heat; second row, gentlemen's pair oars, second heat; third row, watermen's scullers, first heat; fourth row, watermen's scullers, second heat; fifth row, gentlemen's four oars, first heat; sixth row, gentlemen's four oars, second heat; seventh row, watermen's pair oars, first heat; eighth row, watermen's pair oars, second heat; ninth row, gentlemen's eight oars, first heat; tenth row, gentlemen's eight oars, second heat.

TUESDAY.—First row, landsmen's fours—first heat; second row, landsmen's fours, second heat; third row, gentlemen's fours, first heat; fourth row, watermen's sculls, first heat; fifth row, double [illegible] watermen), first heat; sixth row, double [illegible] second heat; seventh row, gentlemen's pair oars, first heat; eighth row, gentlemen's pair oars, second heat; ninth row, watermen's pair oars, grand heat (watermen, final heat); eleventh row, gentlemen's [illegible]

WEDNESDAY.—First row, apprentices four oars, first heat; second row, apprentices four oars, second heat; third row, amateur scullers, first heat; fourth row, amateur scullers, second heat; fifth row, amateur scullers [illegible] sixth row, apprentices, grand final heat.

In addition to these there will be a four oars watermen's match on the last day.

No event in the annals of Thames rowing ever excited the interest which attaches to the approaching regatta. It has been instituted by the aristocracies that, should circumstances permit, either her Majesty and Prince Albert will both honour it with their presence, or that his Royal Highness, at all events, will be present. To facilitate the arrangement the Marquis of Londonderry has appropriated his villa of Rosebank, near Fulham, to the use of the royal party. With the present brilliant weather, we may calculate on a scene never witnessed on any northern stream a proud impression of the panorama exhibited when the Doge goes forth to wed the Adriatic. Everything that experience and care can suggest will be done for the preservation of order; and all that lavish expenditure can ensure to give eclat to this great national pageant. All the races will be run with the tide from Putney-bridge to Hammersmith, except those for fours and eights, which will come off between Putney and Chiswick, either with or against the stream, as the tide may serve. The winners of the various contests will be announced by hoisting on board the committee's yacht a flag of the colour displayed by the conquering boat. Vivant Regina: æquora; vivat Britannia.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

HUNGERFORD REGATTA

The regatta at Hungerford-market on Tuesday, amongst the watermen plying at the stairs, drew together a very large concourse of spectators, who appeared to enter very fully into the interest of the sport, and were evidently highly amused with the result. It was the 27th anniversary of the establishment of this, and was by order of sovereign and grace, as the bills described, "by ladies and gentlemen, and by the downstairs inhabitants of Hungerford-market, to be conducted for by six pairs of oars, in three heats. The distance was the same as either heat, but the course was one in which, through the constant arrival and departure of the various steamers from the Watermen's Adelphi Pier and that at Hungerford, the rowers were extensively exposed to much inconvenience. They were also annoyed off Hungerford stairs, down, round the Thames police ship at Strand-lane, up the Middlesex shore, round a mark moored off Milbank, and to the Suspension-bridge, down to Hungerford-stairs.

Between ten and three in the afternoon the following took their stations for the first heat: [illegible] green, and James Dodd and F. Braithwaite, light blue. It was very well contested in the first heat, and second and third heats, and very pretty match. It was unanimously won by light blue, yellow bearing second.

Immediately after the first heat, Thomas Moody and Thomas Worthy, pink; William Dimond and Richard Tomlinson, white; and George Bancroft and David Ead, scarlet, went away for the second heat. Scarlet came in first, white close upon it, [illegible] and scarlet started for the grand heat. Yellow dashed off with the lead, but soon gave place to light blue off the Savoy. Scarlet soon challenged the second place, and the two boats were fairly abreast, which ended in yellow dropping astern. Light blue held the lead, and won by a few yards; scarlet second, yellow third.

RICHMOND REGATTA.—On Wednesday a grand regatta took place at Richmond under the patronage of the nobility, gentry, and inhabitants, in honour of, and to celebrate the nuptials of her most gracious Majesty the Queen and Prince Albert. The Prince Highness the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, by free watermen, for a prize wherry, and a purse of money to be divided among the unsuccessful competitors. A match was also rowed by nine watermen's apprentices, for a suit of trousers and other prizes.

The first race was rowed by William Matthews and John Nicholson, two of the first in the first heat. The course was from Putney-bridge, up the south shore, round a mark moored off the Honour the Vice-Chancellor of England's seat, down the river, round a boat moored off the College of Engineers, Putney, and up through the centre arch of Putney bridge. It was a very spirited match.

THE MARYLEBONE CLUB v. THE GENTLEMEN OF HANTS.—The grand match between the noblemen and gentlemen of the Marylebone Club and the gentlemen and players of Hampshire, which was commenced on Monday, at Lord's Cricket-ground, closed on Tuesday evening, the former beating their competitors by a majority of 55 runs. The ground, in consequence of the extreme beauty of the weather, was in excellent order, the game was finely contested throughout, and the batting of Sir F. Bathurst and Penner on the side of Hants, and of the Hon. E. Grimston and the Hon. W. Ryniston on that of Marylebone, was greatly admired by the numerous company assembled to witness the truly English and healthful sport.

POSTSCRIPT.

Friday Evening.

THE CARTOONS IN WESTMINSTER-HALL.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert visited the Cartoon Exhibition yesterday. The royal party and suite arrived at the hall at half past one. The King and Queen of the Belgians were in the same carriage with the Queen and Prince Albert. Sir Robert Peel and several of the Ministers joined the members of the Fine Arts Commission, were in attendance to receive her Majesty. A considerable number of persons assembled in Palace-yard, who saluted their Majesties as they passed along.

The Duke of Mecklenburg and his newly-married wife, the Princess Augusta, leave town for the Continent on Monday.

MR. BAKER.—Doubtless the success of "Don Pasquale" was produced on Thursday, for Labiache's benefit, and was deservedly successful. We shall have occasion to speak of this production hereafter. The ballet was "Ondine," which increases in favour.

Major-General Lygon has been appointed to the Colonelcy of the 10th Hussars.

The Gazette of Friday evening contains a list of [illegible] drum-major uniform of officers in the Royal Navy.

TATTERSALL'S, Thursday.—The room, as we anticipated, was [illegible] tended, and business confined to offers of 5 to 1 aget Colonel Charteris's Gohanna, and 7 to 1 agst Mr. Johnstone's Chanticleer for the Derby, for the Goodwood Cup.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE RACES, Wednesday.—The Gateshead or Lottery Stakes of 10 sovs. each, with 50 added: Colonel Anson's Partisan (Nat), 1; Mr. Bell's Wilnesour (Bunby), 2; Mr. Bell's Blackcap (Heartlile), 3.—The Northumberland Plate of 200 sovs. (74 subs., 52 declared): Mr. Ramsden's Gohanna, four yrs. 7st. 6lb. (Francis), 1; Lord Eglinton's Romp, six yrs. 8st. 12lb. 2; Mr. Cuthbert's Queen of Tyne, four yrs. 7st. 6lb. 3. Yarburgh's Heslington, five yrs. 8st. 2lb., [illegible] Sir C. Monk's Paganini, four yrs. (I. Lye), 1; Captain Harcourt's Arragill, five yrs., 2

GOLD CUP.—Queen of the Tyne, 1; Priscilla Tomboy, 2. Won by a neck.

Mr. Baker, the coroner, held an inquest yesterday, on the body of Mrs. Wharton, a lady, the wife of Mr. Wharton, banker of Stamford, Lincolnshire, [illegible] Stamford-street, who committed suicide by throwing herself into the river Lea. [illegible] she [illegible] thrice by cutting her throat, once by taking laudanum, [illegible] herself into the Serpentine, and once by jumping out [illegible] stage coach, when travelling on a journey to London in the midst of a party of her friends [illegible] they would be better without her. The jury returned a verdict that "the deceased had deceived herself whilst in an unsound state of mind."

FOREIGN.

[illegible] The Paris papers are exclusively occupied with the debate on the estimates of the War Department for 1844. Four more reductions, amounting to 1,016,000 francs, were effected in the demand for Algeria. On the grand total of 99,000,000 for the fortifications of Paris, an animated discussion arose, in the course of which one of the speakers suggested that the words "bankruptcy and despotism" should be inscribed on the [illegible] crown work. Marshal Soult replied with his accustomed temper, but result was the rejection of another reduction of 500 francs. The finals closed as follows:—Five per Cents., 121f. 40c.; Three [illegible] 80f. 50c.

SPAIN.—A letter from Bayonne [illegible] declared itself on the 19th. The political chief [illegible] put in the movement. Corunna declared [illegible] overpowered, and declared itself in Galicia. The [illegible] of Santiago, Lugo, Orense, Vigo, and Betanzos have declared themselves. The Regent arrived on the 23rd, at Coruna, and continued his march on Vigo. General Rodil has been appointed Commandant of the Balearic Islands. There is nothing [illegible]

FIRST FOLKESTONE TRAIN PASSING THE BLETCHINGLEY TUNNEL.

OPENING OF THE SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY.—TO BOULOGNE AND BACK IN A DAY.

This important railway, which has hitherto been open as far as Ashford only, is now completed to Folkestone, to which point the public were first conveyed on Wednesday last. The company having purchased the harbour of Folkestone, one of their objects is to establish a steam communication direct from that port to Boulogne, in addition to that which, when the line is completed, will be effected from Dover to Calais. To demonstrate the ease with which this may be done, and at the same time to show the practicability of a trip from London to France and back in a day, an experimental journey was performed on Saturday last, the result of which was perfectly satisfactory.

At six o'clock a special train, containing the directors and their guests, started from the London-bridge station, which arrived at Folkestone temporary station, a distance of 82 miles from town, in two hours and 40 minutes, having stopped at five stations by the way. In Folkestone harbour the Water Witch steamer, commanded by Captain Hayward, was lying ready, and, as soon as the different passengers could be got on board, she started for Boulogne.

Among the gentlemen congregated on board the vessel were several Members of Parliament, and other distinguished persons who take a warm interest in the promotion of science. By half-past twelve all the passengers had landed, and a copy of the London papers of that morning, containing the debates in Parliament of the previous night, were presented by the chairman of the directors to the astonished authorities of the place, who had come down to the pier to meet their English visitors. The whole population of the town and neighbourhood had poured out to witness the embarkation, and the very extensive piers of the harbour were crowded with spectators—a dense mass of people, high and low, rich and poor, in every costume and colour possible even to French imagination—blue, pink, red, black, brown, green, and pretty faces without end. The same scene was continued on the way from the harbour to the shore, where, in a saloon over the baths, a collation had been prepared for the visitors. This was a splendid room, beautifully decorated, and capable of holding, perhaps, 500 persons. A band was in attendance, and played the English and French national airs. The entertainment did credit to the town by whom it was provided. The chair was occupied by Mr. Baxendale. On his right was M. Mainet, the premier adjoint du Maire. On his left was the Sous-prefet o Boulogne, and opposite were Count de Steffi, Colonel Sausot, and other leading inhabitants of the place. The eating and drinking having subsided, the chairman then gave "The health of Louis Philippe," which was received with the most deafening cheers, particularly from the English present.—Colonel Sausot (Colonel of the National Guard, and formerly Colonel of Bonaparte's Guides) then gave "The Queen of England, the People of England, and perpetual Peace between the two Nations." This gave the French an opportunity of returning the compliment, which they did with all due gallantry and enthusiasm.—Mr. Baxendale, having returned thanks for "The health of the Directors," stated that, when the new iron steamers were put on the station, the people of Boulogne would be able to receive the London newspapers of the same day in four hours and a half after their publication. (Cheers.)—The health of the mayor having been drunk, the guests returned to the steam-vessel, escorted as before by a gazing and cheering multitude. They had remained two hours and ten minutes at Boulogne. The steamer got under way at forty minutes after two, and arrived in Folkestone harbour at half-past six. At five minutes past ten it arrived in London, stopping at eight stations to put down passengers. This trip, therefore, was performed in sixteen hours, allowing about two hours and a quarter at Boulogne. A steamer is being constructed by Maudslay and Field for Captain Hayward, which will do the distance to Boulogne (27 miles) in fine weather in two hours, so that the whole journey from London to Boulogne may in favourable circumstances be performed in four hours and a half. Thus persons leaving at six A.M., and returning to town at ten P.M., could (allowing for delays) spend at all events five or six hours at Boulogne.

CONSECRATION OF A ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH AT ISLINGTON.

On Monday the ceremony of consecrating the lately erected Roman Catholic church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, at Duncan-terrace, Islington, was performed, with all the pomp and display of the Romish ritual. The service was commenced at eleven o'clock, by which time all the seats in the building were occupied, and there were many who were glad to obtain standing room to witness the proceedings. Many of the most influential of the Roman Catholics were present. Amongst them were the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, the Hon. E. Petre, M.P., the Hon. P. Howard, M.P., Lady Camoys, Lady Bedingfield, Lady Cadell, Lady Clare, Lady Lovat and family, the Hon. Misses O'Ferrall, Petre, &c. The attendance of the Romish priesthood was extremely numerous, there could not have been less than fifty ecclesiastics present; amongst whom were Bishop Griffiths, V.A., who officiated as high priest; Dr. Morris, bishop of the Mauritius; Dr. Wilson, bishop of Hobart Town; and Dr. Wiseman, bishop of Melipotamus, and principal of the Romish College at Bath; Drs. Frere, and Dr. Burgios, Conor, and Messrs. O'Connor, Molino, Doyle, Cotter, Kyan, &c., priests. Drs. Picquot, Cox, D'Arcy, Rolfe, Norris, &c. The ceremonial was accompanied with the musical performances of Misses Lucomb, Bifield, and Whithurst, who sang respectively the Incarnatus and the Gratias Agimus. Mr. Fitzwilliam was amongst the tenors, and Mr. Le Jeune, sen., presided at the organ. The celebrated imperial mass, composed by Haydn, was selected for the occasion. The whole was got up in the most imposing manner, and conducted with great effect. The sermon, which was a most elaborate piece of elocutionary declamation, was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Wiseman, who took for the argument of his discourse the 15th verse of the 102nd Psalm, and in the course of it descanted to his auditors upon the prospects of the restoration of Catholicism. After the conclusion of the discourse a collection was made to the amount of £140.

The style adopted by the architect (Mr. Scholes) is, as may be seen by our engraving, the Anglo-Norman, the principal difference of which with the Gothic is the circular instead of the pointed arch.

INTERIOR OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH, ISLINGTON.

CATHOLIC CHURCH, ISLINGTON.

The exterior dimensions of the new church are as follow:—Length, 144 ft. 6 in.; width, 70 ft.; height of each of the two spires, 130 ft.; ditto to the cross on the apex of the pediment, 78 ft. The front elevation at the eastern end consists of a central compartment the whole width of the nave, flanked by two towers, each 15 ft. square, terminating with spires. The principal entrance is by a semicircular archway, above which are three semicircular headed windows; over these is a catherine wheel window, and the whole is surmounted by a lofty pediment, whose apex is crowned with a perforated cross. The dressings are of stone; the building itself of red brick. Entering at the large door, we have before us an uninterrupted sweep of 137 ft. 6 in.; the height to the ridge is about 70 ft.,; and the clear width between the main walls 40 ft. The range of windows in the clerestory is in perfect keeping with the whole structure—bold, high-raised, and uniform; the side chapels, opening into the great nave by the characteristic Norman archways, have an imposing effect. The chancel is very bold; the archway above the sanctuary, from its extreme altitude and exquisite workmanship, has a noble appearance, though the effect is somewhat marred by being crossed by one of the beams of the wrought roof-work. This last-mentioned portion of the edifice is visible to the height of 65 ft. There will be a gallery over the entrance-doors, but no side galleries; consequently, no columns will obstruct the view of the congregation; the pulpit is also so placed as to prevent the same obstruction; and it is entered by a staircase from the wall. There were to have been four side chapels but two of them are now formed into confessionals, communicating with the sacristy. Directly under the chancel is a crypt, or mortuary chapel, which will admit a large congregation to attend mass, or the funeral services for the dead. The chapel-house, situated on the south side, and which will have a convenient access to the sacristy and church, is now in the course of erection. For the completion of the whole £1500 is still required.

THE LATE EARL CATHCART.

This distinguished nobleman was the senior general in the British army, and had attained the advanced age of 88. He was the eldest son of the ninth Baron Cathcart (peerage of Scotland, of the year 1447), and received his education at the University of Glasgow, with the design of following the profession of the law; and he took his degree in 1776. In the same year died his father, who had been aide-de-camp to the Duke of Cumberland at the battle of Fontenoye; and the family estates devolved upon the peer just deceased when he was within a month of completing his majority. The design of following the legal profession was then abandoned, and, like many of his ancestors, he took up the profession of arms. With the 10th Light Dragoons he proceeded to America, and became successively aide-de-camp to Sir Thomas Wilson and to Sir Henry Clinton. After having distinguished himself in several actions, he received the appointment of aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief, and in that capacity served with great gallantry at the battle of Monmouth Court-house. He subsequently commanded at the outposts the Caledonian Volunteers, a corps raised by himself from amongst his fellow-countrymen. In the year 1799 he became major of the 38th Foot, and during the autumn served as quartermaster-general to the forces in North America till the arrival of General Dalrymple. In 1781 he was made lieutenant-colonel and captain of the Coldstream Guards, which, in 1789, he exchanged for the lieutenant-colonelcy of the 29th Regiment of Foot, of which he attained the command in 1792. War having been declared against France, an army was formed at Portsmouth, and placed under the command of Lord Moira; to this force the Lord Cathcart was appointed in 1793, as brigadier-general, and accompanied the army to Ostend. He shortly afterwards joined the Duke of York at Arnheim, and served through the remainder of the campaign; in this retreat Lord Cathcart is said to have shown much ability and courage, particularly at Boxtel, and under General Harcourt at Buren. He then returned to England; and, in the early part of 1801, attained the rank of lieutenant-general. In 1805 he was appointed ambassador to St. Petersburg, but his destination was subsequently changed; and, in lieu of proceeding to Russia, he took the command of the British army in Hanover, and gave much satisfaction by his conduct there in strengthening the British power, and conciliating the Russian general, with whom England was then acting in concert. He returned home on the death of Mr. Pitt, and in 1807 was sent on a mission to Sweden, having previously commanded the forces in Scotland for a short time. In this year, too, he was elected one of the sixteen peers of Scotland, made lord-lieutenant of Clackmannanshire, vice-admiral of Scotland, and one of the privy council. In the month of September, in 1807, occurred the attack on Copenhagen, an expedition undertaken to prevent the Danish fleet falling into the hands of the French. Twenty-seven sail of the line, under Admiral Lord Gambier, and 20,000 men, under Lord Cathcart, were the force despatched to Copenhagen; and the Duke of Wellington accepted a subordinate command in this expedition. The prompt surrender of the Danish fleet was demanded, and, on the failure of all negotiations with the Prince Royal, the bombardment instantly commenced. In two days a capitulation was effected; Lord Cathcart's army took possession of the citadel and dockyards, while the British admiral brought the captured navy of Denmark into the harbour of Portsmouth. On his return to England Lord Cathcart received the thanks of Parliament, and was rewarded with the title of an English viscount, the peerage which he inherited from his father having been a Scottish dignity. He had, however, previously enjoyed a seat in the House of Lords as a representative peer. Shortly afterwards he became Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, and in 1813 he proceeded as ambassador to St. Petersburg. Lord Cathcart accompanied the Emperor Alexander to Prague, was present at the interview between the three Sovereigns, and at the battle of Dresden, where he was close to General Moreau when he received his death wound. From the Emperor Alexander he received the Russian order of St. Andrew, and, not having quitted the Russian head-quarters during the campaign, he entered Paris on the 31st of March; in June he signed the treaty of peace, and in September he attended the Congress at Vienna as Plenipotentiary of Great Britain; on the completion of the labours of this celebrated Congress he received an earldom. Three years after Lord Cathcart attained his majority he married in America, where he was then serving, the daughter of Andrew Elliot, the Governor of New York. By this lady he had four sons and three daughters. His eldest son, Lord Greenock, who now has become second Earl Cathcart, is a well-known military officer, and succeeded his Royal Highness Prince Albert as colonel of the 11th Hussars. The deceased earl was a Knight of the order of the Thistle, a member of the Privy Council, colonel of the 2nd Life Guards, Vice-Admiral of Scotland, Governor of Hull, &c.

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE EARL CATHCART.

OPENING OF THE ROYAL MUSEUM AT KING'S COLLEGE.

The ceremony of opening the museum of philosophical instruments and astronomical apparatus, presented by her present Majesty to King's College, was briefly noticed in our last week's paper. His Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured the college with a visit on the occasion, and inspected the various departments of the foundation, with all of which he expressed himself much gratified. The reception of his Royal Highness by the governors, council, principal, professors, masters, and students, in the grand hall of the college, was a most interesting scene, especially when this noble vestibule, the finest part of the building, resounded with the national anthem and the enthusiastic plaudits of the company. His Royal Highness, with the visitors, and the whole of the company, then ascended the left-hand staircase, and first visited the museum.

PRINCE ALBERT OPENING GEORGE THE THIRD'S MUSEUM, KING'S COLLEGE.

This collection was formed at the Royal Observatory, in Kew Gardens, by King George the Third; and, upon the breaking up of that establishment, it was presented by her Majesty to King's College. At the same time was added a cabinet of specimens in natural history, from Kew Palace; and it is a condition of the Government grant, that the collection should form a separate museum in the college; that it should remain unbroken, and have associated with it the name of the royal founder. Accordingly, a spacious and well-lit apartment has been provided for the museum, and the apparatus has been placed under the charge of Professor Wheatstone. Independently of its intrinsic value, it possesses in some respects, a high degree of historic interest: it includes the celebrated "Boyle Models," with a catalogue, of which the following is the title-page:—"A list of some curious Mathematical Bodys, Figures, &c., from the collection of the great Mr. Boyle, supposed to be made two centurys agoe, and described in a German book of that date, which was sent (with this collection) to be placed in his Majesty's Observatory at Richmond, 13th of March, 1770;" and next is one of the MS. items, "Forty-one Brass Plates engraved with Astronomical, Astrological, and Mathematical Delineations." In the centre of the room is a large orrery, bearing the date 1733, and consequently one of the earliest construction: the workmanship of this, and some other apparatus here, is highly finished; and that of an armillary sphere, 1731, has not yet been surpassed. At the end of the apartment, shown in our engraving, is placed Mr. Babbage's calculating-machine, which naturally excited much attention during the royal visit on Thursday week; and in the view, the Prince is seen inspecting this wonderful engine: it is, however, only a small portion of the original machine, but it has been used for printing mathematical and astronomical tables, and has performed its work with all the precision which had been anticipated. The smaller apparatus is placed in glass-cases ranged round the room; and includes instruments for experiments in heat, electro-magnetism, acoustics, optics, magnetism, mechanics, crystallography, pneumatics, and electricity, in addition to the Boyle models; a series of apparatus made under the direction of Desaguliers, and described in his lectures; a rude and early model of Watt's steam-engine; and a complete apparatus made by Attwood, to illustrate his theory of the arch, including his celebrated model of a large elliptical arch of polished brass voussoirs, made by order of a committee of the House of Commons. To the museum brought from Kew have been made several additions in accordance with the present state of science: in each and all Prince Albert appeared to take great interest, and especially in the acoustic instruments, not forgetting Professor Wheatstone's speaking machine. His Royal Highness also particularly noticed a large model, some 15 feet in length, of the magnificent wooden bridge, constructed across the Rhine at Schauffhausen in 1758, but burnt by the French in 1799. This model was made by two of the carpenters employed in building the bridge: it was brought by them to England for exhibition, actually drawn by them in a sort of truck from Dover to London, and subsequently purchased by George III. At one end of the apartment is a fine marble bust of Queen Victoria by Weekes; and at the opposite end, upon a pedestal, is an elaborate statuette of George III., by Turnerelli, presented to the museum by H. Pownall, Esq. The collection must altogether be considered a valuable acquisition to the college; and it is proposed to extend the museum by the addition of two adjoining apartments.

Having inspected the royal museum, Prince Albert, who had been joined by the Prince of Wurtemburg and his suite, then proceeded to the anatomical museum, the cabinet of natural history, the library, and the chemical theatre. In the latter, Professor Daniell's powerful constant battery was put into play, and excited the marked attention of the company. Prince Albert likewise appeared much gratified with the Marsden library, a philological collection of great value, formed by Mr. William Marsden, the distinguished Oriental scholar, and munificently bequeathed by him to the college. Here, too, his Royal Highness closely inspected a beautifully-illuminated MS. presented to the college by the late H. R. Leathes, Esq. This unique treasure is a small folio written by the direction of Sir Thomas Wriothesley, Garter King at Arms, in the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII. It contains the statutes of the order of the Garter; a drawing of the House of Lords, temp. Edward I.; besides several other heraldic documents of ceremonials, &c., illustrated with the arms of the sovereign, knights-companions, insignia of the order, &c., all superbly emblazoned. Inserted is another copy of the statutes, in more elegant Latin, and, in many places, corrected in the handwriting of King Edward VI., which, from its rarity and high state of preservation, called forth the admiration of all present. In the general library the display of numerous valuable drawings and prints was very attractive; as was Partridge's portrait of the Rev. Dr. Major, head-master of the college school—of whom, by the way, Prince Albert obtained "a holiday" for the establishment. In the theatre, too, were exhibited various mechanical models, which were explained by Professor Cowper and other professors; the company numbering several elegantly-dressed ladies.

The whole party then left the interior of the college, and passed by the eastern archway to the terrace in front of Somerset House, where a very large crowd of persons had assembled. Here, too, was stationed a band of the Guards, who received the Prince with "God save the Queen." His Royal Highness then inspected the working of Professor Wheatstone's electro-magnetic telegraph, placed on the terrace; the wires of communication being laid from thence across Waterloo-bridge, westward, to the summit of the lofty shot-tower, in Lambeth. His Royal Highness, having walked to the extreme end of the terrace, returned, and entered his carriage at half-past one o'clock. His departure was accompanied by the same expressions of loyalty and attachment as his arrival had been. The whole ceremony was managed in the best taste, and reflects much credit upon those by whom the arrangements were made.

PRINCE ALBERT INSPECTING THE GALVANIC TELEGRAPH.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 8th.

SUNDAY, July 2.—Third Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 3.—Dog Days begin.
TUESDAY, 4.—St. Martyn.
WEDNESDAY, 5.—Sovereigns first issued, 1817.
THURSDAY, 6.—Old Midsummer-day.
FRIDAY, 7.—St. Thomas-à-Becket.
SATURDAY, 8.—Adam Smith died, 1790.

HIGH WATER at London bridge, for the Week ending July 8.

Mon.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursday.	Friday.	Saturday.
M. h. m.	A. M. h. m.	A. M. h. m.	A. M. h. m.	A. M. h. m.	A. M. h. m.
5 41	6 2	6 28	6 54	7 18	7 48	8 18	8 50	9 28	10 0	10 39	11 18

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. H. B."—Dolston.—We have a drawing of the subject proposed.
"Lynn Regis."—The report of the concert did not reach us in time.
"E. T."—Henley, is thanked for the communication.
"W. H."—Abingdon-street, should apply to the Toxopholite Society.
"Peter."—The charity referred to is excisive.
One of our readers, "D——m."—We think war should always be avoided if possible.
"J. M."—Wakefield.—We cannot entertain his proposition.
"R. K. L."—has better apply to a respectable solicitor.
"A. G."—The glorious and journal shall appear. A small packet is left at the office for him.
"W. A. J. Brighton,—is thanked for the permission.
"R. A. C."—Apply to any one of the society.
"S. Z. A."—Because it is injurious to health.
"M. A.," Round-court.—Not at present.
"J. ——."
"William W."—The portrait shall appear.
"A Watchman," and "J. W. S."—The one of the will be duly illustrated.
"J. B. M."—Magna Charta has been ...ographed by Mr. Netherclift, Bridge-street, Strand. The importation of American reprints of ...ks is prohibited. Apply to Messrs. Wiley and Putnam, ... Paternoster-row.
"A ——"—...overed object of antiquity will be illus... and particulars be forwarded.
"A ——"—Vol. I. of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
"C. ——."—We do not answer important questions.
"——."—The Hampden Memorial has appeared in No. 60.
"B. ——."—... of parliament. 2. The price is 5s. 6d.
"——."—... cannot review the tragical affair; nor do we think an answer would be answered by doing so.
"——."—... to correspondents also would be answered by doing so.
"Lady," Edinburgh.—The marriage being illegal, the issue could not claim the property. 3. There are two archbishops for England and the same ... for Ireland.
"——."—... Have it to have been a party arrangement, and not ...
"——."—...
"J. ——."—... One of the city companies makes such advances of money on ...
"——."—... engers on shipboard can have no such privilege as our ... ental supposes.
"G. L. S."—Tiverton, should inquire of a newsman.
"Curtius" may obtain the requisite information from the secretary of the Hon. East India Company.
"A Subscriber," Birmingham, should have had the courtesy to pay the postage.
"G. H. W."—We differ with him.
"George Alexander."—The published Ordnance Survey Memoir referred to is of the County of Lincolnshire, and may be heard of at Mr. Wyld's, ... graphical Establishment in the Queen's Chesney-grove.
"J. W. B."—We cannot admit such an absurdity as an "Essay in favour of ... ing."
"A Subscriber from the first," Birmingham.—The much admired portrait of Macready as Hamlet, is not only to be obtained in our journal.
Lines to Woman, by "J. A. S." are ineligible.
Our Subscribers, "H. C. R. H," "J. N.," "T. S.," and "Palumocthus," will perceive that the romance is resumed in the present number.
"Mark Shaw."—The communication from Louth did not reach us in time for our last number.
CHESS.—"Lyra."—See the solution; you will find you are wrong.
"J. S. D."—Certainly not; and we hope that "A. and B." will now play the strict game, and not allow a move to be taken back under any circumstances.
Communication received from "S. H. G."
"Curious" evidently intended the Bishop on the white Q R square to be a white bishop, although in his diagram we call it a black one.
Several communications will be answered in our next.

 We have been somewhat annoyed by persons calling at our office under the impression that the following notice, which lately appeared in the Gazette, had reference to the Proprietors of this journal:—"Joseph Wallace, Strand, a proprietor of the Illustrated Weekly Times, to surrender June 15, at three o'clock, July 11, at half-past two, at the Bankrupts' Court: solicitor, Mr. James, Basinghall-street: official assignee, Mr. Johnson, Basinghall-street." The paper in question—that is, the Illustrated Weekly Times—was one of those contained in this journal which contained no "London news," which, from being weekly in the first instance, grew weekly more and more, until it expired in the Bankruptcy Court. Any body who may search until the insolvency of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will have a tolerable chance of living for ever.

On the 8th of July will be published, price 18s., the Second Volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, containing the numbers for the half year ending June 24, 1843, splendidly bound in cloth, gilt edges, uniformly with volume one. Subscribers are informed that Covers, made expressly for binding the second volume, may be had by order of all newsmen and booksellers, price 3s. each. All the back numbers are reprinted, and Subscribers can complete their sets.

COMPLETION OF VOLUME II.—TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.—We shall have ready a complete Index and Title for the Second Volume, containing the Numbers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for the half year, ending June 24, 1843. It will be published in the Supplement, which will be presented GRATIS with the paper for July 8th.

The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS may be had by order of all booksellers and newsmen in town and country.

	£	s.	d.
Per Quarter	0	6	6
Half Year	0	13	0
One Year	1	6	0

Should any difficulty arise in procuring the paper in retired districts, a post-office order sent to our office will ensure the paper for the time subscribed for.

NOTICE.—All communications respecting the transmission or non-arrival of the paper, must be addressed only to the person who supplies the paper, or who receives the subscription.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1843.

The treatment of paupers in and out of their wretched workhouses, of debtors, criminals, and even lunatics, in our county prisons, the harsh conduct of gaolers, and the obstinate pertinacity of provincial justices in supporting in their vocation the most hardened practitioners of cruelty, are all subjects which have latterly demanded, if they have not obtained, the serious attention of society, with a frequency and importance of aspect quite alarming to men who have any real regard to the common liberty of the subject in this country. To-day they are elicited at some sad and painful inquest; to-morrow they arouse indignation in some newspaper narrative of sorrow and of wrong; anon they ooze out in evidence before some inquiring committee; and now they become so intrusive, so publicly disgusting in their shocking features, that, out of deference to the feelings and decencies of society, the Minister of the Crown is obliged to step in with the authority of his office, and to do his duty on behalf of the oppressed.

It is with mingled pain and shame that we thus trace so many remnants of the inhumanities of barbarism in an age and country which claim to be above all others Christianized and civilized too; but it is not the less true than disgraceful, that the journals of the day teem with instances of the depravity and inhumanity which we so loudly deplore, and that the half-dozen random papers which are now lying before us are rife with examples of misery, cruelty, and crime.

In one case a surgeon contracts with the parish authorities to attend a pauper district, and yet the husband of a destitute woman, in the extreme of pain and anguish consequent upon labour, applies five several times in the night at the practitioner's domicile, and meets with no attention to the case of his wretched wife, who is eventually delivered without the assistance of the parish doctor being afforded to her at all. The woman was in great danger, and might have died; the child did die, and the public became acquainted with the horrible neglect through the painful medium of the coroner's inquiry. Is this a proper treatment of the out-door sick and poor? Ought the negligence of parish officers to admit of the possibility of its occurrence?

Thus bad begins, but worse remains behind.

The next case is that of a pauper lunatic, a prisoner in Carnarvon gaol; and here the brutality of Knutsford and the cruelties of Northleach seem to have been out-Herod'ed upon the person of a hapless, unconscious creature (unconscious of all save his suffering) ——a being with no ray within his heart, because with no light upon his brain—a mind-bereaved, God-stricken maniac, not amenable to punishment in the sight of Heaven, or under the civilized laws of man. And yet this miserable object of the Divine visitation was, to use the words of the accusation, "stripped, handcuffed, his feet ironed, and left in this condition, naked, chained to an iron bed-tead, with no bed under him, in a solitary cell with a floor of stone," during the relentless bitterness of a cruel winter's night. And this crime against humanity—against the feelings of our common nature—was committed either all by the gaoler himself, or partly by his bidding and instruction, with no other warrant or authority than his own native barbarity, the loathful suggestions of his depraved and brutal spirit.

But the sequel of this story is—though not in the abstract so horrible—yet if possible more insulting to the principles of public liberty than the crime itself. It lies in the monstrous fact that the Carnarvon magistrates—although apprised of the wickedness that had been done, and remonstrated with upon its atrocity—have refused retribution upon the delinquent, and have shielded him in his unholy vocation by continuing him as governor of the gaol! This matter will, however, be brought before Parliament, and the public will have justice yet.

In the meanwhile, however, a letter from Mr. Frederic Pigou, published in Thursday's Chronicle, furnishes fresh data of abominable cruelty practised by this fiend-like functionary, who seems by his obduracy to have well merited the application of the Shylock taunt—

> You may as well forbid the mountain pines
> To wag their high tops, and to make no noise,
> When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven;
> You may as well do any thing most hard
> As seek to soften that hard heart of his.

In the last instance the victim, who was this time not a lunatic, lost his life instead of his senses, and from what cause is thus apparent in evidence:—

Ellen Davies being called before the inspector, deposes upon oath that her late husband, Owen Davies, a prisoner, complained during his illness of the gaoler George's treatment of him. He was above the middle size, and middle age, and he complained that he did not get the meat that was fit for him. "I recollect his sensing me to Dr. Roberts, the surgeon to the gaol, to say that he, Owen Davies, was very ill, and had not justice done him in gaol; that he took a great deal of physic, and had not such food as a sick person could eat; that he did not think he should live long; that he told me, with tears in his eyes, that George was starving him to death; that he often said, when I was attending him in the hospital, 'Ellen, if I die here, remember I die from starvation and ill-treatment at the beginning of my illness.'" In her cross-examination by Mr. George her statements were not shaken; she admitted that her husband had every attention during the latter part of his illness, and every thing a sick man could fancy or require; but she added, "If he had been half as well attended to at first, I think he would have been better."

The surgeon's evidence is confirmatory of this statement. He says, "Owen Davies frequently complained to me of the treatment he met with from George. George had used harsh language to him; I myself have heard George use harsh language to him: I have heard him say to him, in my presence, 'He is a d——d rascal, and the greatest thief in the country.' I recollect Owen Davies's illness, and he, like the deceased, did not get the diet I had ordered. He told George what Owen Davies's diet was to be. About six weeks after Owen Davies went to the hospital I said to George, 'The man is dying, you should not speak to him in that manner.' George replied, 'He is a great rascal! You say he is dying, but he is a long time about it!'!!!"

The surgeon adds:—"I did not enter these complaints in my journal, or report them to the visiting justices. I consider that if I had reported Owen Davies's complaints about George to the justices, it would only have exasperated him more against Owen Davies."

The whole of this case is too dreadful, but the addition of the surgeon is as inexplicable as it is dreadful too. It would indeed be ludicrous, though most painfully so, if it were not for its implication, that this fiendish gaoler is more formidable than surgeon and justices combined. The surgeon, who was doubtless culpable, but seems to have been helpless too, had no idea that, if he reported the brute whose tyranny must have shocked and offended him, the justices would dismiss him from his post; no, he only believed that it would have the effect of aggravating the cruelty which was already sapping the fountains of the prisoner's existence. And upon such chances is human life ventured in civilised England, when poverty or debt or sin has committed it to the tender protection of the callous functionaries of the law.

Amid the conflicting feelings which narratives like those we have detailed inspire, and with all their harrowing tendencies towards indignation and pain, there is, however, a gleam of comfort in the belief that Government is now alive to the necessity of vindicating the principles of humanity in a decisive spirit, and with a ready grace. The Berkshire justices, who have maintained all the insolence and obstinacy of the Dogberries of other counties —who persist in their patronage of cruel gaolers, and an infamously low rate of prison dietary—have at last got Sir James Graham at their heels; and although they fret, and pout, and bluster, the Home Secretary has threatened lustily to pluck their spurs from the sockets. He has, in a word, commanded them to carry the desired reform into effect—and, while we thank him for his spirit in this respect, we earnestly implore him to enlarge the whole measure of his benevolent action—to extend it from county to county, until its humanity shall cover the land—to crush the stolidity which opposes itself to the natural dictates of the heart—to eradicate for ever the heartless tyranny of gaolers—to see that Englishmen, whether paupers or criminals, are not starved either in the wrong of their honesty or their crime; in fine, to conciliate public opinion where it is swelling in the most philanthropic direction, and to prove that Government has as much regard as the people for the social sympathies and affections of the human race.

A morning contemporary, whose general ability and great circulation entitle it to the leading position it assumes, has thought proper, in its publication of Wednesday last, to allude, in terms of ridicule and condemnation, to the proceedings of a praiseworthy society which has been holding its meetings during the past week at Exeter-hall, and the existence of which is universally recognised by the designation of the "Peace Convention." It appears to us that our contemporary, in pursuing this course, acts most unwisely as regards the cause of Christianity and the happiness of nations, and fails to evince a philosophical appreciation of the harmonizing influence which the public repetition of kindly sentiments never fails to exercise over the human heart. Our contemporary, after referring in no very complimentary way to the principal actors in the proceedings of the society, as well as to the want of wisdom and utility which characterizes its objects, proceeds to enunciate the following ill-considered proposition:—"As long as man is man, wars will exist, and certainly association-mongering is not the way to prevent them." As long as "man is man," crimes, it may be said, will be committed, and therefore ought humanity be allowed to pursue an unchecked career in the indulgence of its worst propensities. According to this doctrine, the pulpit and the church may no longer resound to the voice of the minister, for it is dogmatised "vices will always exist, and preaching is not the way to prevent them." Association-mongering, to which such contemptuous allusion is made, has in itself nothing injurious or objectionable, provided that its objects are of a proper kind, and calculated to promote the public good; and it can only become contemptible—if the phrase be at all applicable—from extreme insignificance of numbers and influence. In the present case, however, the reference which our contemporary makes to the extent of the labours of the society to figure in its columns is an admission from which it would be unjust and unconplimentary towards our contemporary not to infer, that the insignificance of the Convention has not marred its comparative utility and success. For our own part, we consider that possessing no agency of physical or direct power, this peace society could not have proposed to itself any higher aim than that of being allowed, amid the din of politics and the howlings of party contention, to make itself heard in the calm language of reason and of humanity—to awake the latent echo of sympathy and approval which the well-directed appeal of benevolent wisdom never fails to elicit from the hearts of others, however turbulent the sounds or exciting the circumstances by which they are surrounded. To have the privilege therefore of loading the wings of the public press with its messages and arguments—thus bringing into electrical combination or salutary conflict the scattered elements of opinion—is in itself a great object gained; or we should rather say is the achievement of the principal object of the society, and the means of contributing no inconsiderable advantage to the cause of human improvement. We have been led into these remarks without the slightest regard to the station or politics of those whose connexion with the society has been made the subject of such severe animadversion by our contemporary, and merely because we believe there exists at the present time too ready a disposition to abandon as hopeless any scheme for improvement in social morality and the world's intercourse, to take for granted that what long has been, necessarily ever will be, and to cover with ridicule and deride as good-natured twaddlers, those who entertain and proclaim high aspirations for the temporal and eternal welfare of their species. Now this disposition cannot proceed from any motive, either wise, logical, or reasonai; for let any man examine his own heart, and he will find there a desire that good should universally prevail, and a conviction that, were it dependant on his own exertions, good should universally be established. It is, therefore, a reasonable and safe inference, that the same sentiments exist in the aggregation of individuals constituting the human world; and that when the interchange of the assurance of such sentiments has, by the communication of knowledge, become more general, and, by the consequency, brutalizing habits be considerably counteracted, a state of morality and society, regarded as now probable only by a few—prayed for as a blessing by more, and ridiculed as Utopian by many—may at length be happily established. Every well-intentioned effort, therefore, to produce or accelerate such a state of things deserves our warmest commendation; and there are no means so humble—no voice so low—as that they should be rejected as auxiliaries. Wars exist, no doubt, and may continue to do so; but if they be made more rare, and if this result be produced by the sensitiveness of public opinion on the subject, which, travelling upward, as a popular writer observes, opinions always do, from the lower to the higher ranks—if society impresses legislators and diplomatists with a proper sense of their responsibility in negotiation—of the enormous misery which wars involve, then, indeed, and the immense amount of weal or woe which they involve, the proud will be the reflections, or glorious the memories, of those who have contributed to produce so wholesome and beneficial a tone of public feeling.

All who make an exertion, however slight, for human improvement, from the Peace Convention at Exeter Hall to the derided preacher on the road-side, deserve from the public a God-speed; and of these least deserving of discouragement certainly are those who endeavour to banish mortal contention from the fair face of humanity, and to accelerate the period when mountains or seas interposed shall no longer—

> Make enemies of nations who had else
> Like kindred drops have mingled into one.

We are not going to trouble our readers with the question of repeal of the Union as an overbearing topic, strongly as its violent agitation may have taken hold of the public mind; but as that agitation is successful or shrinks back, we may, from time to time turn to any significant points of its progress or retrogression; and that, ever, with the purpose of maintaining and vindicating upon the subject the definite principles we have already so decidedly expressed. There is one aspect of the question, however, in which we have not yet seen it publicly regarded either the press or the people, and that one suggests the proposition that, were Ireland to gain the point fought for by her Agitator, she would gain a loss no less in dignity than in general welfare; she would be inverting the ordinary rules of ambition, and reducing herself from her position as an integral element of our home-empire to the form and spirit of a colonial settlement.

If Repealers mean absolute repeal—we mean repeal even to positive dismemberment—to break up the sisterhood between England and Ireland, and to shake off what, in Canada, was called the baneful domination of this country; if, in a word, they would erect Ireland into an independence, and make her a nation of herself, then that is clearly revolt, and nothing less. That would mean plain unvarnished treason against the British Crown. If, on the other hand, they mean to leave her perfectly under the final jurisdiction of this country by the voice of the Government and veto of the Sovereign, and to claim for her, instead of her present participation in the homegrantees of England, only such a Parliament as they have got in the Canadas and the Antilles, with all its acts amenable to what the Queen in Council shall see fitting for her prosperity, then she reduces herself at once to the condition of a colony, and loses, for a phantom of mistaken vanity, the pride and beauty of her national position in connection with the combined realms of Britain, of which she has hitherto formed so fair and beautiful an arm. What else she would lose by repeal of the Union it is impossible to say; but that she would soon lose pride, status, and importance, it is equally impossible to doubt.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

The life of the Hero of Waterloo was put in extreme jeopardy a few days since by the recklessness of a tipsy coachman. His grace was mounting his horse at a silversmith's, at the corner of Jermyn-street, when a carriage drew rapidly up, and the pole caught his grace's right leg, and very nearly precipitated him between the horses, who reared and plunged violently. His grace, however, recovered his seat and rode off.——Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to direct that the Dorset Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry shall in future be designated by the title of "The Queen's Own Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry."——The several fire insurance agents in Liverpool have received instructions from their respective companies in London not to take any further mercantile risks, no matter what premium might be offered.——Prince Charles Albert de Hohenlohe Waldenburg Schillingsfurst, the head of the Hohenlohe family, died on the 15th at Mergentheim, aged 67 years.——On Thursday week Edward Taylor, Esq., brother of Sir Brook Taylor, and of the late Sir Herbert Taylor, died suddenly at his residence on Marine Parade, Brighton. He was in the act of dressing, and in the presence of his servant, when he became a little faint, sat down in a chair and almost instantly expired.——The Rev. R. W. Sibthorp, formerly of Ryde, has fitted up rooms for the performance of mass at St. Helen's, to be opened on Sunday next.——A member of the Middle Temple has written to a morning contemporary denying that the benchers of that Temple had any participation in the entertainment given to his Majesty the King of Hanover by the Inner Temple.——From all quarters on the west coast we learn that the herring fishing has commenced, with an appearance indicating that the fish are everywhere abundant.——A very fine sturgeon, between five and six feet in length, was captured on Wednesday week in the Medway, at a place about four miles from Rochester, called Horn's Place. The fish was sent to London, but the corporation of Rochester have claimed it back as their right.——A novel circumstance occurred on the trial of a case in the Sheriff's Court on Tuesday last, when, there not being a sufficient number of jurors in attendance, seven jurors only were sworn, and the trial proceeded with.——There has just died at Coblentz, in the prison called the Convent of the Carmelites, a man known by the name of the old Frenchman with the white beard, confined there 32 years, of which 28 were voluntary: during that period he never asked for light or fire, no matter how severe might be the cold. He spent his time in making hair rings, ivory trifles, box paper-cutters, and other little objects, which he sold to strangers who came to see him.——With that considerate anxiety for the welfare of the Spitalfields weavers which the Duchess of Kent has ever evinced, her Royal Highness has purchased a beautiful dress of white moire and silver-watered silk, with other elegant and expensive specimens of their ingenuity and taste, to be worn at the ensuing royal marriage fête and the birthday drawing-room.——It is said that the elegant fashion of sedan-chairs is going to be revived in Paris, particularly in the Faubourg St. Germain.——The brother day the Duchess de Choiseul paid a visit to the Duchess de Fitz-James in an equipage of this description.——At the weekly meeting of the members of the Royal Asiatic Society, on Saturday, the Right Hon. the Earl of Auckland took his seat as president, in the room of the late Right Hon. Lord Fitzgerald and Vesci, who had presided over the society for a series of years.——The members of the Catch Club were honoured with the company of the King of Hanover, at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's-street, the established rendezvous of those eminent meetings, on Tuesday evening last.——A return made to the House of Commons shows that the quantity of cheese imported into Great Britain during the year 1842 was, from Europe, 165,614 cwt.; United States, 14,098 cwt.; British possessions, 36 cwt.; total, 179,748 cwt.——The annual assembly of the preachers in the connection of the late Rev. John Wesley will be held this year at Sheffield. The first public sitting, for the choice of president, secretary, and other officers, takes place on the last Wednesday in July.——On Saturday last a marble bust of the patriot Hampden was presented by Sir Henry Austen to the Reform Club, in Pall-mall, and being placed in the corridor on the first floor of the Club, now ornaments that beautiful building. The bust is from the chisel of Mr. Smith, the artist of Savoy-street, and is a fine specimen of skill and talent.——The Trustees of Sutherland resists all entreaties of the Free Protestant Dissenters to grant them sites for the erection of meeting-houses on his estates in Scotland.——The House of Lords have decided that Washington Shirley Ferrers had fully established his claim to the Earldom of Ferrers.——A Frankfort journal states that Dr. Sasz, editor of the Leipsic Pilote, had received orders to quit Saxony within a week.——Admiral Hugon has resigned the command of the French Mediterranean fleet; his successor is to be Baron Mackau.——A descendant of the celebrated landscape-painter, Claude de Lorrain, is living in Lorraine, in the Vosges, in reduced circumstances. The Minister of the Interior, on being made acquainted with this, has granted him relief. His name is Denis Lamorce.——By a recent survey it has been ascertained that the Travellers' Rest, on the summit of the high mountain pass over Kirkstone, leading from Windermere to Ullswater and Patterdale, stands on an elevation of 78 feet higher above the level of the sea than any other inhabited house in England.——The address from the county of Down against the Repeal of the Union had 8000 signatures.——The Roman Catholics are going to build a splendid cathedral at Elgin next season.——The Bishop of Salisbury will act for the Bishop of Bath and Wells at his approaching triennial visitation, which commences August 25. Indisposition prevents the latter from acting in person, active duty.——A gentleman named Mr. Robert Rathbone, of Park Farm, near Ruabon, in Flintshire, labouring under delirium tremens, threw himself into the river Dee, and was drowned.——A number of nightingales have this season surprised the good people of Barrow-on-Humber, having located themselves in an extensive osier plantation about half a mile from the village.——We believe we may mention, upon pretty good authority, that the individual who has been chosen by her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert to fill the highly important and most responsible appointment of tutor to the Prince of Wales, is the Venerable Samuel Wilberforce, M.A., the Archdeacon of Surrey, and one of the chaplains in ordinary to his Royal Highness Prince Albert.——There are in the republic of Mexico 53 cotton manufactories, with an aggregate of 135,000 spindles. They work up daily; on an average, 60,000lb. of cotton, and produce 43,760lb. of thread, which, when woven into cloth, &c., is worth 48,037,500 dollars. These facts we derive from a printed statement by the directors-general of Mexican industry, dated city of Mexico, March 28, 1843.——The Queen's Bounty has forwarded to the Rev. Isaac Gosset, vicar of Windsor, £100 in aid of the building fund of the new military church at Windsor. The Duke of Cambridge has also forwarded £50 for the same purpose.——The Echo de l' Orient, of the 7th ult., relates that a horrible murder has been committed at Teheran, on a young Pole, a prisoner from the Russian army, by three Mussulmen. They first broke his arm, then struck him in the face and body in 54 places, and afterwards cut his throat. The murderers fled to a mosque, but the Shah did not respect the asylum, and had them arrested, and ordered the lex talionis to be rigorously applied. They soon had each his arm broken, the body pierced with the same number of blows, and, lastly, the throat cut.——Mdlle. Lenormand, the celebrated fortune-teller, died last week in Paris, aged 7?. She leaves a fortune of about 500,000f., and has no other heir than a nephew, at present in the army.——Charles Price, the man who some weeks ago escaped out of the custody of the governor of the gaol of Newgate, has been apprehended by Forster, the officer. He surprised the unfortunate man on a bed of straw, in a most wretched condition, without a farthing in his pocket, or a shoe or a hat in his possession. He is to be tried at the next session of the Central Criminal Court.——An action for libel was tried in the Court of Queen's Bench on Wednesday, in which Mr. Colburn the publisher was plaintiff, and the publishers of the Atlas newspaper defendants. The libellous matter complained of was contained in certain notices of new books published by the plaintiff, and the jury took a due sense of the enormity by giving the plaintiff a verdict for forty shillings.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

(Before Sir Lancelot Shadwell.)

OSBALDISTON v. SIMPSON AND OTHERS.

EXTRAORDINARY GAMBLING TRANSACTION.—In this case the bill was originally filed by the plaintiff, Mr. Osbaldeston, a gentleman of well-known celebrity in the sporting world, to obtain an injunction to restrain the three defendants, Captains Bowes, Simpson, and Chinery, from negotiating nine promissory notes for £2,000 each, which the plaintiff alleged he had been induced to give the defendant, Captain Bowes, and for having the said nine promissory notes delivered up to be cancelled, and that the defendants should pay the costs of this suit. From the statements made in the case, it appeared that the plaintiff and the defendants dined together at the Turk's Head, in the Strand, on the 18th of April, 1840, they being invited by Chinery. Upon that occasion cards were introduced, some time after dinner, and the plaintiff and the defendant, Captain Bowes, sat down and played at a game called Macao, at which game the plaintiff, Mr. Osbaldeston, and the packet was deposited in custody of the defendant Simpson, who kept the bank with Bowes. The next day the defendant Bowes, the cards having been inspected, consulted with his friends, and the result was, that the plaintiff was accused of having won the £2800 from the defendant Bowes by having used false cards for that purpose. The plaintiff, by his bill, then represented that the defendant Bowes threatened to bring actions against him (the plaintiff) under the provisions of statute 9th Anne, for penalties to the amount of £500 each other two defendants, and accordingly the pack of cards with which the game had been played was secured, and sealed up for inspection, and the packet was deposited in custody of the defendant Simpson, who kept the bank with Bowes. The plaintiff then, by his bill, further alleged that a negotiation then was entered into for compromising the bets, or of the transactions across the cards, and

TO THE DUKE OF MECKLENBURG STRELITZ
MARRIAGE OF THE PRINCESS AUGUSTA OF CAMBRIDGE

THE QUEEN'S PROCESSION.

church, at Kew Green, for the first time, which was much admired. About the centre of the road passing through the middle of the spacious green was erected a handsome triumphal arch, formed into three compartments, the whole being decorated with evergreens and exotics. On the green opposite was erected a number of marquees, and a stage for the use of the band of the Scotch Fusilier Guards, which was in attendance, from London. The houses of most of the inhabitants were also decorated with flowers and evergreens, encircling devices for the illumination in the evening. At one o'clock a royal salute of 21 guns was fired on the green opposite the principal marquee.

Amongst the amusements and rural sports which have taken place during the day have been the Grecian statues, Mons. Boai, the chin musician, and numerous fantoccini, jugglers Punchinellos, &c., climbing poles for legs of mutton, and other rural sports. Between one and two o'clock the workmen in the Royal and Botanical Gardens sat down at the different licensed houses in the village to an excellent dinner of old English cheer, consisting of roast beef and plum pudding, with ale, at the expense of the Duke of Cambridge, who had also provided a similar dinner for the men employed at his farm at Coombe Wood, near Kingston, for poor families in the parish of Kew, and also for the pauper inmates of the Richmond union, which comprises five parishes.

At dusk the illuminations commenced, and presented a most unique and magnificent appearance.

From an early hour of the evening the number of persons continued rapidly to increase—vehicles from all directions, arriving in rapid succession, until about eleven o'clock not less than 10,000 persons were congregated upon the green, who waited with anxious suspense the arrival of the royal and illustrious bride and bridegroom.

As twelve o'clock approached, the excitement amongst the assembled multitude became very great, and the noise of wheels approaching frequently occasioned a burst of cheers, although followed by disappointment. At twelve o'clock, the band of the Scotch Fusilier Guards took up a position on the south side of the triumphal arch.

About a quarter past twelve o'clock two carriages, containing the attendants, galloped over Kew-bridge, and drew up at Cambridge House, and precisely at twenty-five minutes past twelve o'clock the outrider preceding the royal carriage was perceived galloping towards the green. The immense multitude immediately burst out into a simultaneous cheer just as the carriage crossed the bridge and passed under the triumphal arch, the band playing "God save the Queen." The royal and illustrious pair were received throughout their course by reiterated cheering, and immediately on their alighting at Cambridge House a royal salute of twenty-one guns was fired.

A magnificent display of fireworks was then discharged, under the superintendence of Mrs. E. Jones, the daughter and successor of Madame Hengler. It consisted of almost every specimen of the pyrotechnic art, and occupied about an hour, the display concluding with a splendid device, a radiant star of the House of Brunswick, commencing with a true lover's knot in the centre. The star consisted of 72 columns, with rows of diamond lights in each column, surrounded by a chain of Saxon stars, surmounted by a motto, "Hail, Happy Pair," and ended with a brilliant lance motto of "God save the Queen." The discharge of fire-works did not conclude until nearly two o'clock, at which time the large assemblage of persons began to disperse.

OPENING OF THE NEW INFANT ORPHAN ASYLUM AT WANSTEAD—MEETING THE COMPANY AT THE GATE.

Tuesday was the day appointed for opening the new building just erected for the Infant Orphan Asylum in the village of Wanstead, about five miles from London; and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, who laid the first stone of the new structure on July 24, 1841, had graciously consented to be present also at the above ceremony. The Prince was, however, we regret to say, precluded from carrying his benevolent intentions into effect, by a severe attack of influenza, and the King of the Belgians very kindly officiated for his Royal Highness. His Majesty was received at Lea-bridge, which connects the counties of Middlesex and Essex, by a detachment of the West Essex Yeomanry Cavalry, under the command of Colonel Bulmer, who had the honour of escorting the King to the asylum at Wanstead, a distance of about three miles. At Whip's-cross the city marshals were in attendance, and immediately joined the procession. A large concourse of spectators lined the roads; the scene was gay and animating; the bells of the various churches rang merry peals; and the strong muster of "the gentler" sex proved the popularity of the cause.

On the arrival of the procession at the Asylum, which is situated near the large pond at Snaresbrook, and close to the Eagle Tavern, the band of the Coldstream Guards commenced playing the national anthem; and the King of the Belgians and his suite were immediately met by the stewards with their wands, the committee, the infant children, attended by their teachers, the Lord Mayor, the Sheriffs, and the clergy in their official robes, who preceded his Majesty to the building, and conducted him to the committee-room, where his Majesty was received by the nobility and gentry in attendance, and the various introductions took place.

The following personages honoured the ceremony with their presence, viz.:—The Marquis of Westminster, Earl Manvers, the young Earl of Coventry, Lord R. Grosvenor, M.P., the Hon. W. Ashley, Baron L. De Rothschild, the Hon. and Rev. Baptist W. Noel, M.A., the Rev. Dr. Croly, the Rev. T. Dale, the Rev. Dr. Keaney, the OPENING OF THE INFANT ORPHAN ASYLUM.

Rev. W. P. Wigram, the Rev. T. Stanton, Mr. G. Byng, M.P., Mr. Masterman, M.P., Mr. George Palmer, M.P., Colonel T. Wood, M.P., the Lord Mayor, M.P., Sir Charles Forbes, Mr. Sheriff Pilcher, Mr. B. B. Cabbell, Sir G. Carroll, Mr. J. Deacon (treasurer), Mr. J. F. Maubert, Captain Owen, Mr. Tucker, Mr. J. Masterman, jun., Mr. J. Labouchere, Mr. W. Kirby, Mr. T. Marriott, Mr. C. J. Brown, Mr. Arbuthnot, &c.

The following ladies acted as patronesses on the occasion, viz:—The Duchess of Northumberland, the Duchess of Sutherland, Countess Cowper, the Countess Dowager of Pembroke, Viscountess Sydney, Viscountess Beresford, Viscountess Canning, Viscountess Mahon, the Right Hon. Lady Charlotte Denison, Lady Ashburton, Lady Ashley, Lady Stanley, Lady Kerrison, the Hon. Mrs. Rushout, Miss Harley, Lady Watson, Lady Whitshed, the Lady Mayoress, and Mrs. G. Byng, but they were not all present.

The King of the Belgians, after the introductions had taken place, made the first entry in the visitors' book by affixing his autograph, after which the nobility and gentry present also entered their names. His Majesty then proceeded to inspect the various apartments of the institution.

At about a quarter to five o'clock, the company sat down to a very elegant déjeûner, served under the superintendence of Messrs. Staples and Co., of the Albion Tavern, his Majesty the King of the Belgians taking the presidential chair. The healths of the Queen and the Queen Dowager were drunk with all honours; and the King, on proposing that of Prince Albert, informed the company that Sir J. Clark had peremptorily forbidden his Royal Highness to leave his apartment that day, or otherwise he could not be responsible for the consequences that might ensue. The Prince, however, sent a donation of 100 guineas, to which he (the King of the Belgians) added £105.

After "Prosperity to the Infant Orphan Asylum" had been drunk, the children were introduced, and sang the national anthem. The King took one of them in his arms, and most kindly caressed the child. His Majesty and suite shortly afterwards took their departure, and were speedily followed by the rest of the company.

The Infant Orphan Asylum was instituted in 1827: its purpose is to board, clothe, nurse, and educate destitute children, who are received, if necessary, from the birth. The temporary establishment is situated at Dalston, and 187 orphans are now on the foundation. The new asylum at Wanstead has been erected from the designs of Messrs. Scott and Moffatt, and will accommodate 400 children; though a large sum is yet required for fitting and furnishing. The new building is in the Elizabethan or late Tudor style, and is of fine brick, fronted with stone, of which material also are the dressings throughout.

ORPHAN GIRL.

RAMBLES IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

Most epic poets plunge in medias res; and we are going to do so now, although not exactly in the way of epic poets. Perhaps we may be quite as sublime, however, and are nearly certain of being quite as ridiculous. Tant mieux. As the lady of ninety, when asked at what age woman left off loving, referred the inquirer to somebody more advanced in life than herself, so, in the same spirit of mature youthfulness, say we now,

Let other men of greater ages
Set up for being greater sages.

We are content with the honey of an easy temper, and the pleasant philosophy of a laugh. Ride on! the Muses are alive! What are the topics of the week? "What themes of import, high or low," shall fill the measure of confab between our illustrious readers and our illustrious selves? The toss of a halfpenny shall decide. There it is, spinning upon the table—whirring and whirling its dear little copper body round and round, like a small officer with a small partner in a very fast waltz—the two blending like the spokes of a rotatory wheel, and presenting no bodily presence to the eye—nothing but motion and rapidity. But our dear little halfpenny! Ah! he is getting giddy at last; his waltz is nearly over; but he has been a right royal waltzer, for he has turned the head of royalty. But he topples—chirps—shakes himself upon the table, and discloses dying music like the dying swan, as well as the harp of Old Ireland,

The harp that once thro' Tara's halls, &c.

Well, we pick up our little dead halfpenny—we bury him him in our pockets—where you shall find no change in him, and where he shall at least be secure from emigration into the funds of Repeal. There the harp of Ireland has found us a topic—the toss of a halfpenny has set us upon Repeal.

We believe it was Tommy Little (Moore betoken), no relation to Billy Little our publisher, who gave the following sublime advice to a particular episode of Irish scenery:—

Silent, oh Moyle, be the roar of thy water,
Break not ye breezes your chain of repose,
While murmuring mournfully Lir's lonely daughter,
Tells to the night-bird the tale of her woes.

Now, all that advice is discarded and the murder is out. Moyle is not silent, and the waters are roaring lustily, like Biscay billows in a storm. There has been a bit of a "breeze" too, which has entirely broken the "chain of repose," and which Dan says shall break all the other chains in the country, in spite of a London aspiration to the contrary from the neighbourhood of Fetter-lane.

The "lonely daughter" is lonely no longer—she is wedded to Repeal, and so are all her sons—making the matrimony rather hetegeneous. She tells the tale of her woes, however—not to "night-birds" only, though there are generally plenty of those in Ireland. She floods it all out in one hullabaloo, and its only echo is Repeal. All the Irish magistrates are resigning one sort of commission and taking another—taking commissions of war and resigning commissions of the peace. They have become military and have left off being civil. O'Connell, the "great gun" of the country, is firing away at the English, contrary, as we think, to the express conditions of canon law, and the congregation of patriots is so great that the land may be said to be in a general state of Pat-riot altogether. The boys have altered their habits too, entirely—their whisky is now all mental—their fire in the spirit—bodily, they are temperate upon water alone; in a word, they have left off drinking and taken to meeting; nothing less. Well, we hope there may be no row, that's all.

We would not have rebellion spoil
The lovely face of the shamrock soil,
Nor bloodspots stain her green trefoil,
Nor that same bugbear of Repeal
Upon her bosom make a meal
To please O'Connell or Tom Steele,
Or any other living man
That breathes 'twixt Bethsheba and Dan!

So, good luck to Ireland! and now for a journey upon some other road.

What, ho! Wednesday! Ha! this is the day of the coronation! the immortal coronation of the Queen and Tom Ingoldsby, celebrated in Westminster Abbey, and in verse, when

There were cakes and apples
In all the chapels,
And fine potownies and rich mellow pears.
Och! the Count Strong-strog-onoff,
Ah, he got prog enuff,
That sly ould divil underneath the stairs!

Well do we remember the "aldermanesses," and the "sweet peeresses," and that "female heiress, Miss Angele Coutts," and Sir Claudius Hunter.

When he did confront her,

(meaning her Majesty herself,)

And Sir Peter Laurie, looking mighty brave.

But Lord Brougham was missing,
And was gon a fishing,
Only crass Lord Eshex wouldn't give him lave.

Well, this eventful day is come over again:—

And still bells ring and cannons roar
Delight through all the nation;
And faster and faster, and more and more,
Swells on the great sensation
Which people feel when a gun and a peal
Proclaim the coronation!

But there is more royal sport to-day—a marriage with a princess royal of England—to a grand duke.

The lady is young,
With a dulcet tongue,
And a brow more light than lowry;
It is fair to see her
With £5000 a year
As this marry-time nation's dow'ry.

She goes to the shrine
Like a bride divine,
And, when they have fêted and fuss'd her,
This marriage so gay
Was augset you'll say,
And it might have been Augusta!

May she enjoy happy days, that same daughter of Cambridge! and, even though we miss her anon from the Opera, may her time be more felicitously whiled away at Kew, where she spends her honeymoon, than even in the halls of Lumley;—and the society of Mecklenburg Strelitz prove sweeter than Grisi's passion or Persiani's soul-fraught song.

What have they been doing in the Commons? Making a row about Rowland Hill and the postage appointments. Well, they are beginning to have some sympathy with men of letters at last. And Rowland Hill was a deserving fellow after all.

They shouldn't have bid his services sleep,
Nor his genius go to bed,
But have let him manage a public-house
With the sign of the Queen's Head!

He shouldn't have gone to the right about,
Like an idle drone or scamp,
When he knew that his fair reward should be
On a very different stamp!

His friends took note of his desperate plight,
A shame which they could but feel,
And under the circumstances thought it right
To go at once to a Peel!

Away they peppered to Parliament-house,
Where they mustered in a host,
And the chances now are that Rowland Hill
Will not go—without a Post!

He'll not go without a post, but still
His face will be tinged with strife,
For he's had enough up hill work with peace
To be pensive all his life!

And, sure, at whatever date he dies,
After the late exposure,
He'll be put in an envelope of black,
And buried in some enclosure!

Then if Fortune over his means have smiled,
In a way to have made him bend her,
The very last will of Rowland Hill
Will be one great money order!

An order made at the "crack of doom,"
When the limbs grow cold and shivery,
Put in at the office of Death's dark room,
And sent by life's last delivery!

* * * * * *

Talking of death, there is one good man, and boon companion, who has slipped away from us, and for whose memory we have sincere and honourable respect—poor old John Murray the publisher—absolute John! He was, by many days march, the best of all his craft, a gentleman in heart and soul, and a man grown remarkable by most remarkable associations. In his publishing capacity he was quite the king of modern literature, and kept its best and brightest genius burning about him with quite magician-like fascination. Scott, and Byron, and Moore, and Southey, and Lockhart, are but a few of the galaxy of his stars; and they all shone upon him with love. He was never the miser nor the bargainer with his writers, but always the fair, honest, liberal patron of the greatest living art—the art of exploring, developing, and enshrining mind. In hospitality he was princely—a free liver, and generous in his habits as in his heart. Even now our pen is longing to record familiar anecdotes of his career; but we reserve our tribute for another hour, and only now give utterance to the regret that he is gone. Next week we will introduce his memory to our readers, both in portraiture and in print.

* * * * * *

The world is getting dull, dull awfully, and fun seems at a discount. Even poor Lola Montez is down in the mouth at her secession from the only really flourishing establishment in London—her Majesty's Theatre. Under that roof, however, all is glory, and rank, and fashion, and flowers, and fine singing, and bravo, and ballet, and delight. There is as much ecstasy now to be had out of the Opera as ever was bottled up in the soul of a lover, and it makes a finer spread.

The Haymarket still, gives us Kean as the Dane,
But it's all up the country with Garden and Lane.

The Catch Club have held their annual festival with great glee, but with no great catch. Other clubs have been dining, and we have some idea of saying, "au revoir" to our readers until we shall have completed the same arrangement ourselves.

Heav'n help the author, saint or sinner,
Who's forced to write without his dinner.

THE FASHIONS.

PARIS, Rue Chaussée d'Antin, June 26.

Mon cher Monsieur,—Amongst the many pretty things which have emanated from the ateliers of our leading artistes, I do not know anything that is more pretty, more original, or more striking than the passementerie hats which are now so fashionable in Paris: they are to be met with everywhere, and are certainly the most successful innovation of the season; and perhaps next to them, in point of popularity, we may class the graceful mantelets à la Duchesse, which may be described as a mantelet richly trimmed with lace, having a double border embroidered in application. These, together with the mantelets Marie Antoinette in black tulle trimmed with two or three rows of deep lace; black mantillas in taffety or in mohair, with piped garnitures; white barège scarfs trimmed with long fringes at both ends, and others of a similar description in casimere, in embroidered mus in, and in black lace, may be said to constitute all the novelties that have appeared within these last few days. Perhaps I should except the mantelets à la bonne femme, which are rounded behind so gracefully, and which, leaving the arms open, and hiding the form of a fine bust only so far as to permit the general outline to be seen. As regards the general accessaries to our fashionable costumes, few modifications have as yet occurred to attract, or indeed deserve, any particular attention. Nevertheless our dead season has entirely paralyzed the imagination of our artists, as may be seen in some of their models, which have a charm of novelty always effective:—Perhaps we should point out to your readers some robes of India nankin for country dresses, which are really pretty and original. These are trimmed with ruches, with bouffants, with piping, or gathers. Morning robes are trimmed with frills, which descend no lower than the knees, or which are carried upwards towards the hips, following the shape of the wearer. Hats and bonnets still retain the shapes which we have pointed out in our former letters, the only difference being in the different arrangement of the ornaments which adorn them, and by that instinctive taste which teaches the fair Parisian to adopt those graceful modifications of the curve of her bonnet which agrees best with her particular contour. These it is almost impossible to describe, as they vary in every particular case; but still we now and then see something which, with little variation, would fit it for general adoption. Indeed, within the last few moments I have observed, passing my window, two or three models which would be considered remarkable anywhere. One of these is a bonnet, of open straw work, trimmed with a long flat plume of feathers, and with a ribbon crossed with the most graceful simplicity; and the other, a hat, in gros des Indes, trimmed only with a tress of ribbons, and a bunch of moss-roses. Now, although there is nothing that can be described particularly in either of these head-dresses, yet in the manner in which they are worn consists their principal charm and beauty. I regret that my letter this week should be so barren of intelligence: let us hope my next will be more valuable. Until then adieu.

HENRIETTE DE B.

(From Berger's Ladies Gazette of Fashion.)

The changes since last month have been more numerous than usual, and, generally speaking, in better taste. The following may be considered as decided upon:—

CAPOTES.—The materials for capotes and chapeaux continue to be very various, but those of the lightest kind are preferred. Silk is seldom employed except for drawn bonnets, or for those made with chip fronts. The linings consist of ribbon to correspond, and flowers of various hues. They are always in close plaits. Crape capotes are not in favour in half-dress: some are made close, but the majority moderately open. White lace is much in favour for capotes and chapeaux.

CAMAILS.—Camails and mantelets maintain their vogue: the camail Clementine is one of the prettiest. The mantelet à la duchesse increases in favour. They continue to be made either in white lace or organdy, and are lined with pink or blue crape.

SCARFS.—Barege scarfs are decidedly fashionable, and will no doubt continue to be so, although some summer shawls, made of the same material, but with cashmere patterns, have much their appearance.

ROBES.—Light materials for robes are decidedly in a majority, although silk, soie cancelean, and barege, are much in request. Tucks and deep flounces are much in favour for negligé or demi toilette; but deep flounces are preferred for the latter.

CAPS.—Caps, and head dresses of hair, are nearly equally fashionable; the latter are always ornamented in a very simple style. A wreath of flowers, or one formed of copse of a single kind, such as one side, or else a lace lappet, confined at each side by a rose or two or three small flowers, will, we have authority to state, be adopted by the most distinguished leaders of fashion.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

THE MUSE'S QUAIRE!

A FRAGMENT.

Periant qui ante nos nostra Exerunt.

Where la the field for Fancy now to glean.—
Where may her footsteps roam where none have been?
Are there no laurels, glorious in their kind,
Yet left to gather, and in garlands bind,
Like those which crown'd of old the Poet's brow
(His the great First, and first reputed now!)?
Does Helicon or old Parnassus still
Their inspiration-founts for bards distil?
Or is the Muse by tir'd Invention left
To plod a waste, of ev'ry flow'r bereft,
Alone—to ev'n the star of Genius lost,
On the bleak ocean of Discovery tost,
Without a bay—a creeklet—isle or shore—
To rest her barque where none have pass'd before,
And made a home exclusive for themselves?—
Where are her sylphs—her shapes of air and her elves,
That erst obeyed the mandate of her wand,
And could, at will, new worlds of thought command?
All vanish'd!—or their torches of the Sun
Held up as beacon-lights some laud to shun:
Pro-scribing shelter to her weary guest!
Give her another ruin'd Pleiad's rest,
And breath her own prolific hands will rise
As fair an orb as now adorns the skies—
Another Mind-Elysium as bright
As ever dawn'd from out primeval Night!
Alas! 'tis vain:—poor Muse thy course is run—
All that thou couldst, and nobly, hast thou done!—W.

SONGS OF A LOVELORN.—No. II.

Stay, passenger! my love lies here. I'll sing
Her requiem, an' thou wilt listen to't:—Old Play.

Hush! hush! let none but the robin be near her,
'Twas he that sang her to sleep;
And even to me no music is dearer
Than his, though it makes me weep!
Come here, little robin! come here and see
From her cold, cold grave she is smiling at thee!
Sing to her, robin! and I will strew
Many a little crumb for you;
Or give me your music, bird! and I
Will flee on your wings through the deep blue sky,
And sing my sweet love in her early tomb,
Gone like a flow'r in its break of bloom!—W.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

THE BALLET OF ONDINE.

Since the time when it was first reputed that angels became enamoured of the daughters of earth, "mortal with immortal mingling," has been looked upon by all poetical eyes as a vision, if not of truth, at least of such a praisemblance that it passed current for what it counterfeited, and, in our modern mythology, is as much revered as any broachings or introductions of Hesiod, the arch-arranger of all those things for credulous antiquity. There is a certain beauty in the notion that "minds of unearthly dower" will descend to the sympathies of mundane affection, which has been romantically told in Moore's "Loves of the Angels;" but perhaps, after all, it is something better to be witnessed than narrated, and as the eye claims the exclusive domain of satisfactory demonstration, the tableaux presented to its attention are generally more faithfully represented to the censorium than Sounds sweet but vague, that shadowless are nought.

The ballet of "Ondine" is in the highest degree poetical in its construction; the plot—the treatment is most artistical. We cannot forego the pleasure of transcribing a little prefix to the descriptive libretto of this charming ballet, which shows that the present lessee is a man of most excellent taste. It runs thus:—"The Greeks first peopled the river, the plain, and the mountain with the innumerable deities of rustic worship and rustic fear; and while the original creations of half-eastern people have been swept away with their poetic creed, their traces and memories may be followed throughout Europe, mingling a classic grace with popular superstition. To the German Naiade La Motte Fouqué first gave a permanent poetic being, making his Undine, from whom the "Ondine" of the ballet has been drawn, a wild, capricious, fairy-like being, as wilful and bright as the waves and waters of which she was the child." Of a verity there is a dash of poetry about this short introduction which leads us gracefully to the ballet itself, and charms us out of cold criticism. We have no words but those of congratulation for its production; the pantomime of music and the poetry of motion have never been more effectively used; in short, it is a struggle between all the expressive arts "of senses dumb and eloquent" to assert their individual claims to the eye, the ear, and to that resulting sense of their combined enjoyments—pleasure. Cerito, as Ondine, is unearthly; see her once, and "that fairy form is ne'er forgot." Guy Stephens had no avant-courier fame, but she is now fully established in favouritism, and most deservedly. If there had been more "talk" about her, she would have been considered at least the rival of la première danseuse now autocrating it.

We shall resume the subject of this ballet in our next, and enter into details, of which our present want of space deprives us.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

On Monday evening one of the largest assemblies that ever thronged a theatre was collected to attend the occasion of Mr. Stretton's benefit. The programme was certainly most inviting—namely, a scena from the second act of Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable," in which the parts of Alice and Bertram were most ably sustained by Miss Clara Novello and Herr Staudigl; the last two acts of Pacini's "Sappho," the part of Alcander performed by Stretton with great energy, Mrs. Shaw, who was most enthusiastically received, and Miss Novello, being honoured, as usual, in "Sweet tears." Next followed a concert, which, of course, was the chief attraction of the night, with Sivori as principal violinist; Madame Dulcken, pianist; Mr. Richardson as flautist; Madame Clara and Sibella Novello, Lucombe, Bassano, M. B. Hawes, Signor Maghiano, Herr Staudigl, and Mr. Manvers, vocalists. Nothing could exceed the applause of the audience, encoring being the system of the night—Miss M. B. Hawes in "The Sailor Boy," Miss G. Novello in "Bonnie Prince Charlie," Miss Lucombe in Auber's "Have pity on me," Herr Staudigl in Benedict's noble scena, "Rage thou angry storm," Mr. Richardson in his flute fantasia, and Camillo Sivori in "The Clochette" of Paganini, when he substituted "The Carnival of Venice."

One of the most interesting circumstances of the night was the novelty of having two violin solos by different performers. Though it was a bold thing to stand forth and play after Sivori's electrical efforts, yet our countryman Blagrove acquitted himself in the most masterly manner in Maurder's Op. 35, and the pure and classic style having been applauded in the most enthusiastic manner by an audience that had every reason to be proud of him, and who seemed glad of the opportunity of showing it. Mr. Stretton acted wisely and liberally in the construction of his programme, by giving his professional brethren an opportunity of so eminently distinguishing himself. The farce of "A Day after the Wedding" concluded the evening's performances; but almost every one thought it was a day after the fair, for after the concert but few exhibited any wish to "sit it out."

IRELAND.

Mr. O'Connell reached Galway on Sunday morning last, about nine o'clock, attended by his trades in procession, and accompanied by an immense assemblage of the counties of Mayo, Sligo, Galway, &c., &c. It is said that there could not have been less than between three and four hundred thousand persons in the train of the hon. and learned gentleman. Lord Fitzroy Somerset, the recently-dismissed magistrate, presided on the occasion, and resolutions declaratory of the necessity of repeal, and condemnatory of the union, having been proposed and adopted, Mr. O'Connell proceeded to address the meeting. The hon. and learned gentleman spoke at great length on the usual topics.

THE ANTI-REPEAL SQUADRON AT CORK.—The Southern Reporter states, that the squadron, whose stay at Cove diffused much pleasure (and a profit, too, we hear) amongst the good people of that locality, is departing and dispersing, going nobody knows whither, as nobody can tell for what they came. Not a shot was fired in anger since the first ship or steamer arrived; but it must be admitted that these ensigns, officers, and crews manifested considerable incaution and indiscretion in admitting so many persons on board, some of whom, at least, must have been Repealers, and of course very rebellious subjects of her Majesty. H. M. ship Madagascar sailed on Sunday, report says for Lisbon, and H. M. ship Tyne was towed up as guard-ship, until the arrival of the Inconstant. The Racer, Lynx, &c., were under orders to sail, but were countermanded.

REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—The usual weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place at the Corn Exchange, John Green, Esq., in the chair. The rent for the week amounted to £1236 9s. 5d. At the conclusion of the sitting it was moved that the society do adjourn until next day, at two o'clock, at which hour it was expected Mr. O'Connell would arrive in Dublin from Galway. Among the letters read was one signed "Thomas Doyle, Priest of Naas," addressed to Major Power, commanding the 85th depot in that town, complaining of the soldiers attending mass with their arms, and refusing to admit them on any other terms. He offered, however, that a priest should attend at the barracks on Sundays, and perform the service for them there—an offer which, it appears, by a reply from the Adjutant-General's Office, has been accepted of with the approbation of the Lieutenant General commanding.

A singer of Anti-Repeal ballads was checked in his vocation at Carlow last week, and taken before the authorities, by whom he was bound to the county gaol to be tried at the ensuing assizes. The following is a specimen of his minstrelsy:

"Then Luther's generation will take a speedy flight,
And go into Hanover in lands of sweet delight;
Our enemies must cut their sticks, and leave this fertile land,
For it was decreed that Luther's breed should not command.
Our clergymen they will attend while blood runs in their veins,
And Erin's sons, with pikes and guns, will chase them like the Danes."

NEW MAGISTRATES.—The Lord Chancellor, upon the recommendation of the Earl of Donoughmore, has appointed Mr. Joseph White a magistrate for the county of Tipperary. The Chancellor has also appointed Mr. J. S. Harry to be a magistrate for the same county. Warrants have, in addition, been signed for the appointment of the following gentlemen to the counties of—Sir R. J. Paul for Waterford, Mr. C. M. Garel for Antrim, Mr. J. Johnston for Fermanagh, Mr. J. Johnston for Donegal, and Mr. H. O'Reilly for Wicklow.

The Lord Lieutenant has appointed Mr. C. M. Vandeleur, colonel of the Clare Regiment of Militia, in the room of Lord Fitzgerald and Vesci, deceased.

THE YEOMANRY.—A morning paper, assumed to be the organ of the Irish Government, states, that the Lord Lieutenant has officially announced that neither the yeomanry nor the militia are to be embodied. The arms at present in the hands of the yeomanry are to be called in, and marked as required by the new Arms Bill. The militia arms, it is added, had been received back by the Ordnance Department many years ago.

GLASGOW.—PROSECUTION OF SURGEONS, CHEMISTS, AND DRUGGISTS.—We are informed that the prosecution of this class for the retail sale of spirits of wine in connexion with their own trade without a special license, which has been pretty extensively carried on in Glasgow, and some parts of Scotland, has been commenced in Glasgow, and that last week no fewer than twenty-four persons have been summoned to appear before the justices to answer for the offence. The hardships attending this system of prosecution to many poor men engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery, who have been mulcted of large penalties for what has hitherto been considered no offence at all in the eye of the law, but a necessary adjunct to a laborious and often miserably paid profession, are sufficiently apparent, and require no comment.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF LORD ROBERT KER.—It is with deep regret we have to announce the loss to Edinburgh of one of its most highly esteemed citizens, by the death of Lord Robert Ker, Assistant-Adjutant-General in Scotland, which melancholy event took place on Friday, at his lordship's residence in Moray-place, after a confinement to the house of somewhat less than a fortnight. Lord Robert Ker was a lieutenant-colonel in the army, and K.H. He served in Portugal under General Cuyler, in 1798, in Minorca, under General Fox, in 1799 and 1800; in Egypt, under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, in 1801, and was wounded in the leg at the battle of Alexandria, where the gallant general fell; and in the same year, at the surrender of Cairo, and siege and surrender of Alexandria, under General (afterwards Lord) Hutchinson. In 1802-3 Lord Robert served in Malta and Gibraltar, and in Ireland in 1804, where he was aide-de-camp to Lord Cathcart, Commander of the Forces there. From 1806 to 1809, Lord Robert was Military Secretary to the Commander of the Forces in Scotland; and from that latter year up to his death was Assistant-Adjutant-General on the North British staff. Lord Robert Ker was uncle to the earl, and great uncle to the present Marquess of Lothian. Lord Robert was sixty-three years of age, having been born in the year 1780.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Warspite, 50, Captain Lord John Hay, C.B., has gone into harbour to be taken into dock and ovehauled, and have her fore-yard, and some minor articles of equipment, replaced. The Warspite has been employed in the Channel, and has not been on a foreign station since 1838. The Vindictive, 50, Captain Hon. Frederick Grey, is also taken out of the harbour, and will be ready for sea in about a fortnight. She has nearly completed her crew. The Hawke, 16, has not yet arrived, although she is reported to have sailed from Gibraltar on the 7th instant. She is hourly expected. We have pleasure in announcing the promotion of Lieutenant W. H. Hall to the rank of commander, and his appointment to the royal steamyacht Victoria and Albert. It will be remembered that this officer commanded the Penelope war-steamer during the operations against the Chinese, in which he greatly distinguished himself, and rendered most valuable service. Ships in port: Sir. Vincent, Victory, Excellent, Royal George, Warspite, Inconstant, Conway, Dolphin, Narcissus, Hecate, Seahorse, Fearless steamer, and the Cornwall and Fairlie transports.

The increased half pay of the pursers of the navy is to commence from the 1st of July next.

An order in council has just been made, under which thirty pursers are to be permitted to retire on the half-pay of 8s. 6d. per diem. The Board of Admiralty will select those whose qualifications come up to the rule laid down by their lordships.

We are given to understand that the squadron assembled under the command of Rear-Admiral Bowles is to remain stationed in Ireland, and to consist of some small vessels and steamers. The report that has appeared in the Irish papers, that two three-deckers were expected to form part of it, is quite ridiculous.

DUTY MARTIAL. A court martial was held a few days since at the Infantry Barracks, at Windsor, to try private Howsley, of the Coldstream Guards, charged with having been guilty of using abusive language to his pay-sergeant. He was found guilty, and sentenced to receive 150 lashes. The man underwent his sentence at the Riding-school of the Cavalry Barracks, at Spital, on the morning of Monday last, and received the whole of the punishment. The man, who bears an extremely bad character in the regiment, had been previously tried, for various offences, before no less than nineteen courts martial.

A troop of the 4th Light Dragoons arrived in Bristol from Taunton on Thursday, in order to be ready to proceed, if required, to South Wales.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

The keel of a packet-ship, one hundred tons larger in size than the Liverpool, just launched in New York, has been laid down in one of the ship yards of that city.

The number of vessels which entered Liverpool in 1842 was 16,606, with a tonnage of 3,284,111, being an increase over the previous year of 168 vessels, and 19,958 tons.

MERCHANT SEAMEN'S CORPORATION.—On Tuesday the annual general court of the governors of this corporation, established for the relief and support of sick, maimed, and disabled seamen, and the widows and children of those who may have been slain in the service of their country, was held at the offices in Birchin-lane, J. C. Powell, Esq., in the chair, when the president and committee for the year ensuing were elected. The amount received during the past year from the seamen of London vessels, and from ships under the management of the corporation, amounted to £18,865, and the sums paid to London and out-port pensioners, and in temporary relief, including charges for management, amounted to £15,165, leaving a cash balance of £3700. The pensioners on the books of the corporation up to 31st December last, were 1435 men, 2353 widows, and 2475 children.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

PUSEYISM.—Puseyism observances have been introduced at Enfield-highway Chapel of Ease, by the Rev. T. Russell, but the inhabitants, unanimously, in auditing the churchwardens' accounts at the vestry on the 22nd, refused to pay one item, for candlesticks and candles, £22 9s. 9d., which was introduced by the parties by the way of carrying out their forms.

The Rev. Henry Erskine Head, rector of Feniton, Devon, has been, at the suit of the Bishop of Exeter, sentenced to three years' suspension from the office of the ministry, the loss of his living, and the costs of the action, for having published a letter, in which he maintained that the church catechism, the Order of Baptism, and the Order of Confirmation, in the Book of Common Prayer, contained erroneous doctrines.

OXFORD.—In a congregation holden on Monday last, John Whitlock Nichols Carne, of Jesus College, was admitted to the degree of Doctor in Civil Law. Mr. Thomas Augustus Parnell, scholar of St. John's College, was admitted an actual Fellow of that society; and Mr. Robinson Thornton and Mr. Edward Felix Foley, both from Merchant Taylors' School, were admitted scholars of the same. The Rev. Temple Hamilton Chase, B.A., Michel scholar of Queen's College, was admitted an actual Fellow of that society on the foundation of John Michel.—The subject announced for the Ellerton Theological Prize for 1844 is, "The Contrast of Scripture Prophecy with the Oracles and Divination of the Heathens." Candidates must have passed their examination for the degree of B.A., and not exceeded their 26th term. Essays to be sent in on or before Wednesday in the Easter week. Yesterday Mr. Charles Trimmer was elected a scholar of Corpus Christi College.

A scene of great confusion and excitement took place at this university on Wednesday last (Commemoration-day), on the occasion of the honorary degree of D.C.L. being bestowed on Mr. Everett, the American Minister. As it was impossible to hear whether there were any dissentient voices or not during the tremendous uproar which prevailed, his Excellency was admitted without a scrutiny. The objection is, that Mr. Everett has been formerly a Unitarian teacher. A protest had been lodged against the conduct of the Vice-chancellor.

DURHAM.—The following degrees have been conferred:—Bachelors of Arts—Rev. John Edmunds, John Henry Roberson Sumner, Walker Featherstonehaugh, Henry Parr Dearrity, George Williamson, Thomas Lexham, Walter Skene, Samuel Smith, Henry Robson, Henry Carter Lipscomb, John Robson. Masters of Arts—Charles Forster, Cyril Wood.

In the final examination in theology, Mr. Hartley's prize was divided between Mr. Robson and Mr. Simpson.

The annual prizes given by the Lord Bishop of Durham have been assigned as follows:—In Hebrew literature and Hellenistic Greek—To James Simpson, student in theology; second prize in ditto, to John Low Low, student in theology; Latin Essay—Hopkins Bradnell, student in arts; Latin Verse—Henry Thornton Holland, student in arts; second ditto, Joseph Waite, student in arts; Mathematical and Physical Science—John Fedder, engineer student; Hebrew prize for Junior Class—George Dundas, student in theology; Van Mildert Scholarships—Cyril Wood, B.A., and Samuel Smith, student in arts.

Notice has been given that the Warden and Fellows will proceed to the election of three Foundation Fellows on the 9th November, 1843. The Rev. Piers Calverley Claughton, M.A., of University College, Oxford, has been admitted to the same degree, ad eundem. The Rev. Charles Thomas Whitley, M.A., and the Rev. Stephen Saxby, B.A., have been nominated to the office of proctor for the ensuing year. The Professor of Mathematics has been appointed to the office of sub-warden.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed the Rev. William Rawlings, M.A., of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, vicar of Fritwell, to the rectory of Thenford, Northamptonshire, vacant by the death of the Rev. E. Stafford.

The Rev. Dr. Howard has been instituted to the rectory of Llanhaidr, Denbighshire, on the nomination of the Lord Bishop of Bangor.

The Rev. William Marsh, D.D., late rector of St. Thomas's, Birmingham, has been appointed to the incumbency of St. Mary's, Leamington.

The Archdeacon of Cleveland has presented the incumbency of Hilund, Yorkshire, to the Rev. Wm. Atkinson, M.A.

The Lord Chancellor has presented the Rev. George John Collinson, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, to the vicarage of Swanbourne, Bucks.

The Rev. William Pattman Jones, B.A., has been licensed by the Lord Bishop of Chester to the perpetual curacy of St. Thomas's Church, Preston.

Sir Richard Williams Bulkeley, Bart., has presented the Rev. Hugh Jones, M.A., perpetual curate of Llanfaes, to the rectory of Beaumaris, in the isle of Anglesey.

The Rev. J. Robinson, M.A., late rector of St. Dennis and Naburn, York, has been promoted to the vicarage of St. Lawrence, York, void by the decease of the Rev. W. W. Layng.

The Rev. Charles Verney Shuckburgh, M.A., has been instituted by the Lord Bishop of London to the vicarage of Ulting, Essex.

THE KING OF THE BELGIANS.

Leopold, King of the Belgians, accompanied by his august consort, is at present in this country to do honour to the marriage of the Princess Augusta of Cambridge. Eminent in rank, distinguished for his talents, and connected as his name is with a period of our history with which there are many brilliant, and some mournful, associations, a sketch of him at the present moment cannot but be acceptable to our readers.

If ever a work is written on the romance of monarchy, the name of Leopold will figure in its pages as one to whom the fates have dealt one of the most extraordinary careers on record. Born in the family of one of the smallest German princes, he arrived at the age of manhood only to see the patrimony of his race overwhelmed by the military deluge that, under the sway of Napoleon, "swept down empires in its flood;" and for years he had no resources or support but the profession of a soldier, and his pay as an officer in the Russian service. Yet was his brow doubly destined to be encircled by the diadems of the daughters of the most powerful sovereigns of Europe—England and France; has refused the throne of Greece, and accepted the crown of Belgium; and, as he governs with skill and moderation, it is more than probable that he will close his life as one of the royalties of the world, the fate of more than one prince of the houses of Bourbon and Stuart not being his—the misery of finding his days outlasting the ability to grasp the sceptre, or retain possession of the "seated throne." In looking back upon his past life, we cannot help thinking that he must regard himself as a man "quoted and marked" for destiny and distinction; he was born to them, as other men are said to be born to trouble—as naturally as the sparks fly upward. Success in love and policy—crowns and thrones and the daughters of kings fell in his way as abundantly as others find their path blocked up by toil and disappointment. Fortune must have wrapped him in her brightest purple, and cast him forth as one "that should be king hereafter," at all hazard; he seems to have done little, but let things take their course, and to have accepted greatness rather than struggled for it; he has not only thought with Macbeth,

If chance will have me king, why chance can crown me,
Without my stir.

But he has done better—he has acted upon it; and, as far as his actions are known, his regality is not linked with repentance, and he has become royal without a crime. Had he been a woman, he would have been called "Felix," in the sense of "successful," or, as we may render it, "Leopold the Lucky:" whether he has been happy, in the better and higher meaning of the word, is another question.

His Serene Highness Leopold George Christian Frederick, Duke of Saxe, Margrave of Meissen, Landgrave of Thuringen, and Prince of Coburg and Saa-feld, was born on the 16th of December, 1790, being the youngest child of a goodly family of seven, possessed by Duke Francis of Coburg, his father. If the reader inspects a pretty large map of Europe, he may happen to discover the duchy of Saxe-Coburg; but on a small one it is a great chance if he discover it at all; it is, in fact, one of the smallest of the principalities of Germany. The youngest son of a prince, whose whole revenue was but fifty thousand a year, may well be supposed to have early arrived at a conviction that it was necessary for him to push his way in the world, especially as the hereditary possessions were entirely in the power of the French; the house of Coburg having been among the more stubborn of the German princedoms, and resistance to his will being a thing that Napoleon always had strength enough to crush, and never generosity enough to forgive. A sister of Leopold was married to the brother of the Emperor Alexander, the Archduke Constantine, a brutal and sensual wretch, who treated her so shamefully that she was soon obliged to separate from him. A connection was, however, kept up between the families, and by this means young Leopold obtained a commission in the service of Russia. It is said, and it may be readily believed, that he soon showed decided talent for negotiation and the management of affairs, was steady, self-concentrated, free from those vices which the world glosses over with the gentle name of follies, calculating, and, as events have proved, possessed of more foresight than many born to better expectations, somewhat cold, perhaps, but shrewd and prudent. Such was Prince Leopold at the time the fall of Napoleon gave the emperors and kings of the world leave to make holiday, and to take less thought for the morrow than they had for some years been accustomed to do. Leopold's lucky star brought him to England, just at the time that the Prince Regent and the Ministry were using all their efforts to induce the Princess Charlotte to accept the hand of William Prince of Orange, the Stadtholder of Holland. He seems to have been a heavy, plodding, Dutch-built sort of a lover, worthy and honest enough, but ungainly in person, and destitute of the graces and accomplishments of mind that sometimes compensate for personal defects. Whatever the reasons, the princess most cordially disliked him. The Duchess of Oldenburg, a clever diplomatist, was then in London, and thinking, perhaps, there was a chance of success, contrived an interview between the princess and Leopold, the result of which is too well known to require repetition. The Dutchman returned to his dykes and his money-bags, and turned his attention to trade, the only example of a crowned head being "a trafficker of the earth" since the days of the Medici. This was the first time that Leopold had crossed his path: it was not destined to be the last. Leopold returned for a few months to the Continent, but, on the 20th of February, 1816, landed again at Dover, as the accepted suitor of the heiress of the crown of England, and, on the 20th of May following, was married to his royal bride with all the pomp and ceremonial that state and dignity demand.

PORTRAIT OF THE KING OF THE BELGIANS.

But the cypress had been twined with the marriage wreath, and the revolution of one short year brought death to the royal house; the princess was no more, and Leopold was a widower; the prospective dignity of king-consort of England, which in his hands would have been an important political station, vanished for ever. Nothing remained to him but the annuity of £50,000 a year, which Parliament had settled upon him; years went by, and little was heard of Prince Leopold, except that he lived frugally and carefully, as much, perhaps, from habit as inclination. Change was at work in the high places of the world, and Greece, being in want of a king and constitution, offered its throne to Leopold; but he "liked not the security," and respectfully declined. The revolution of 1830 threw France and the neighbouring countries into a ferment, and after a short interval, the Belgians followed the example of the French, and drove William of Orange, the Stadtholder, across his frontier into Holland, and offered the crown to his rival—once in love, and now in policy—to Prince Leopold. This time he did not refuse; he accepted the proffered dignity, but, with characteristic caution, would not renounce altogether his English annuity; he ceased to draw it, and has never drawn it from the time he ascended the throne; but greatness is mutable, and, if there should be a change in the opinions of les braves Belges, his English £50,000 a year is not a bad pis aller to fall back upon. Since his accession he has married a daughter of Louis Philippe, who has the reputation of possessing the longest purse and the longest head of all the sovereigns of Europe, unless he is rivalled in the last particular by his son-in-law, whose government has been marked by that moderation and knowledge of mankind which he acquired amid the adverse circumstances of his early life. And what a life it has been! As he stood on Wednesday evening amid the blaze and splendour of the marriage ceremonial, must not his thoughts have wandered away from all around him to another scene not less splendid, to another bride not less beautiful, beside whom he stood, not then a spectator, but as one about to be lifted by the fair hand he held from comparative obscurity to wealth and dignity and earthly power; and must he not have thought, too, how soon that hand was snatched from his by the stern divorcer, that cares not whom he puts asunder; and, as all this came back upon the worn and worldly heart of the statesman and the ruler, could any one be surprised, could any one blame him, if perchance a tear was shed amid the blaze and revelry of the present, as a tribute to the dim and half-faded memories of the past?

GRAND FLORAL FETE AT GLAZENWOOD.

On Friday, the 23rd ult., the annual fête was held in the gardens at Glazenwood, and proved a delightful treat to thousands of visitors. For the information of those who have not visited Glazenwood we may state that it is situated about 43 miles from the metropolis, and two miles from Braintree, and the grounds are the most extensive of the kind in the county of Essex. They are the property of Mr. S. Curtis, descended from the celebrated botanist, who issued from this spot his many-volumed "Botanical Magazine." The grounds are kept up by subscription: they comprise about 100 acres, tastefully laid out in flower-beds, shrubberies, groves, and walks; and nearly in the centre is placed Mr. Curtis's mansion, luxuriantly clothed with the choicest floral beauties. Here climb, according to the Essex Herald, the splendid blue Wistaria consequana, extending 70 yards in length by 30 feet high; the lovely trumpet-shaped red and orange blossoms of the bignonia capreolata; several varieties of magnolia, amongst which magnolia grandiflora towers to a height of 30 feet; a perfectly unique specimen of the double yellow China or magnolia rose, the Banksia noisette, Lady Tankerville's and the blush Boursalt roses, and a beautiful mixture of the dark red and white China roses; one of the finest specimens in the kingdom of photinia serrulata; a splendid specimen of that rare and curious plant the Salisburia adiantifolia or maiden hair-tree; the new climbing fuschia, from the Brazils; the double-blossomed pomegranate, almost covered by the splendid foliage of the aristolochia sypho, &c., besides a magnolia grandiflora, 30 feet high. To the left are the conservatories, containing far too great an assemblage of plants for us to enumerate. A flycatcher's nest in a splendid specimen of the cactus excited much attention on Friday; and the geraniums (especially one of Mr. Curtis's seedlings), were splendid. The kalmias cannot be equalled in this kingdom, and they are mixed up with the greatest possible variety of andromeda, vaccinium, ledum, gaultheria, magnolia, menziesia, calycanthus, and hundreds of others, extending over a space of several acres. Passing round Mr. Curtis's residence, a path through filbert and fruit trees leads to the Hermitage, and to the Grove, or, as it is called, "Australia," for here the different tribes of rhododendron, azaleas, and other rare Australian plants flourish with native vigour: among them is an unique specimen of the eucalyptus, or gum-tree, of New South Wales, promising to equal the gigantic red gum.

GLAZENWOOD HOUSE FLOWER SHOW.

In grounds thus laid out, with the trees in all their summer foliage, and the walks skirted with flowers—not forgetting a bed of roses, nearly two hundred yards long by fifty feet wide, containing 1200 varieties—were assembled by the afternoon nearly 4000 persons, including—

Lord and Lady Rayleigh and party; General Sir William Rustace, Lady and family; Lord Western; Archdeacon Barney and family; Mrs. E. G. Barnard; the Rev. R. R. and the Hon. Mrs. Drummond; the Rev. J. Halward and party; Captain Rooke and family; the Rev. J. C. B. Warren, Mrs. Warren, and party; J. Walford, Esq., and family; the Rev. J. F. Wood and party; the Rev. Edward Bull and family; Captain Ede, R.M.; the Rev. H. Du Cane, Miss Du Cane, and party; J. B. Rosonquet, Esq.; —— Hall, Esq.; the Rev. Foote Gower; Richard Marriott, Esq., Mrs. Marriott, and party; Captain Mac Hardy, R.N.; the Rev. Guy Bryan, Miss Bryan, and party; the Rev. Mr. Cathrop, Miss Cathrop, Captain Pattisson, Mrs. Pattisson, and family; Isaac Way, Esq., Charles Way, Esq., and the Misses Way, Mrs. John Wright and family; the Rev. P. J. Honywood, W. Honywood, Esq., the officers of the Scots Greys, the Rev. B. D. Hawkins and family, Mrs. J. J. Tuffnell and Miss Tuffnell, the Rev. J. Greenwood, D.D., and the Misses Greenwood, the Rev. —— Hume and Mrs. Hume; the Misses Du Cane; J. Heard, Esq., and family, George Round, Esq., and party, the Rev. J. Alder and Miss Alder, J. J. Pattisson, Esq., &c.

In an adjoining field had been erected canvas stabling for 500 or 600 horses, and refreshment booths, with all the appurtenances of a village fair, for the servants and rustic folks, who made a holiday on the occasion.

The gardens presented an enchanting, fairy-like scene. Here might be seen groups of elegantly-dressed women pausing over some floral wonders that, touched by their fair dalliance, gladlier grew;

then their gay morning costume might be seen gleaming through the green branches, and in the vistas of the walks; whilst in many a shady nook and corner were mirthful pic-nic parties, who began to feel that sentiment is not the staple of life. Gay as was the scene in its natural beauty, it was heightened by enchanting music; for, in addition to the Braintree band, the band of the Coldstream Guards was stationed in front of Mr. Curtis's residence, and performed the most popular pieces of the season; whilst Mr. Curtis's doors were hospitably thrown open to his friends. And thus the gay scene continued until sun-down, soon after which Glazenwood had resumed its character of rural quiet.

The great charm of this fête appears to have been in its naturalness. The company had not to view the plants raised upon shelves of artificial green, but they were seen in all their glory of growth and natural splendour. It was altogether a most delightful al-fresco affair, and gave universal satisfaction.

AUSTRALIAN GARDEN, GLAZENWOOD.

NEWCASTLE GRAND STAND.

THE NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE RACES.

These races commenced on Monday last, and were extended over three days. The stewards present were F. A. Milbanke, Esq., and A. Johnstone, Esq., the Marquis of Normanby having been detained in Italy by ill-health. The plate entries presented a favourable contrast with past seasons, which was at once observable both in the number and character of the horses entered. The gold cup has long been the leading feature in the proceedings, and the committee of management sanctioned the selection of a more costly article than usual, the cup this year being worth about one hundred and fifty pounds. It has been manufactured by Messrs. Reid and Sons, of Newcastle, in the same elegance of style and correctness of figure which have long characterised the manufacture of that old and respectable firm. The design was selected by the Marquis of Normanby. The cup stands upon a base nearly forty inches in circumference, and about four inches high, the upper surface of which is rich frosted work in imitation of turf. The stem, which is about four inches in circumference, and about eleven inches in length, rises from the centre of the base, and is elegantly and elaborately ornamented in resemblance of vine foliage. Around the stem, and resting on the base, are the figures of a horse and a foal standing, and of a mare reclining, exquisitely formed, and grouped with great artistical effect, exhibiting "the points" in striking accordancy with nature. The stem is surmounted by a beautiful Grecian vase, with vine handles and border, the entire height being about twenty-two inches.

THE CUP.

The following are the days' proceedings :—

MONDAY.

The Craven Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 20 added.
Mr. Johnstone's Charles XII., aged .. .. .. (Marston) 1
Mr. Meiklam's br c by Agreeable d by Sam, four yrs 2
No betting, both horses being in the same stable. Won by a length and a half.

The Produce Stakes of 50 sovs each.
Lord Eglinton's Eridis (allowed 3lb) .. .. walked over
The Hunters' Stakes of 10 sovs each, h ft, with 20 added.
Mr. F. A. Milbanke's Robinson, aged .. (Captain H. Morrett) 1
Mr. W. Branding named William le Gros, four years 2
Betting—7 to 4 agst Willara le Gros, 3 to 1 agst Robinson, 3 to 1 agst Recorder, 4 to 1 agst Man Friday, 5 to 1 agst Flaggon. William le Gros made the running to the distance, where Robinson took it up, and won cleverly by a length.

The Maiden Plate of £50.
Mr. Harrison's Hippona, three yrs .. .. .. (Joy) 4 1 1
Mr. Brown's Drops of Brandy, six yrs 1 3 2
Won easy.

Northumberland Plate Betting—Even on the Pompey and the Era agst the field, 2 to 1 agst Era, and 100 to 8 agst Queen of the Tyne.

TUESDAY.

The Cricket Club Stakes of 10 sovs each, h. ft., with 80 added by the Northumberland Cricket Club.
Colonel Charrilie's Gorhambury, 3 yrs .. .. .. (Nat) 1
Mr. Brown's A British Yeoman, 3 yrs .. .. .. (Oates) 2
6 to 4 agst Gorhambury, and 7 to 4 agst British Yeoman. Gorhambury made the running till about half-way between the distance-post and the stand; he was then headed by the Yeoman, but resumed his lead in an instant, and won by three parts of a length.

The Tyro Stakes of 25 sovs each, with 25 added.
Lord Normanby's Lorimer, by the Saddler .. .. .. (Nat) 1
Mr. Metcalfe's Spinster, by Memnon Junior 2
2 to 1 agst Beaufront, 2 to 1 agst Lorimer, and 7 to 2 agst Telemachus. Lorimer and Sister to Martingale made play to the Morpeth turn, where they were joined by Beaufront and Spinster. Sister to Martingale resigned at the distance, and Spinster challenged Lorimer, but without effect, the colt running a good race home by a length.

The North Derby Stakes of 25 sovs each, with 100 added.
Mr. D. Cooke's Trueboy .. .. (Noble) 1
Mr. Bell's Blackdrop .. .. (Marston) 2
5 to 4 agst Blackdrop, 3 to 1 agst Whist, 4 and 5 to 1 agst Trueboy, 5 to agst Silkworm filly, and 5 to 1 agst Shaftoe's colt. Judex took the lead to the Newcastle turn, where What headed him, and carried on the running to the distance; Blackdrop and Trueboy then went in front, the latter winning, after an interesting race, by three lengths.

Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas.
Mr. Plummer's Alice Hawthorn, 5 yrs .. .. .. (Templeman) 1
Col. Cradock's Peggy, 3 yrs .. .. (Oates) 2
6 to 5 agst Alice, and 10 to 4 agst Peggy. Robinson cut out the work to the Morpeth turn, Alice Hawthorn then took it up, defeated Peggy's attempt, and won by four lengths. Sleight of Hand was only started for the Goodwood Cup allowance.

THEATRICAL PORTRAITS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

SIGNOR DOMENICO CONTI AS ALAMIRO, IN THE OPERA OF BELISARIO.

Powerful and preponderating as the double merits of Fornasari, as singer and actor, most assuredly are, we must not overlook altogether the claims of other stars, which,

The' bright from nature, sometimes are eclipsed.

Conti, the subject of our illustration, has not had a fair proportion of public consideration. He came here with a doubtful continental celebrity; but all candid judges readily admitted, on hearing him, that his reputation was fairly and artistically earned, and that he only needed frequent and fitting opportunity to be better known in order to be appreciated as a leading artiste of the first order. Non omnia possumus omnes is as true in the region of the Italian Opera, we believe, as elsewhere; for every primo tenore cannot have everything his own way, even in that arena of struggle for popularity. The consequence is that Conti, with some half-judges, is deemed "niente," because he does not get all the good parts, which would be unjust to his talented rival Mario, and has received but indifferent applause when labouring by his skill and taste to elevate a rôle of minor importance. Nevertheless he is a singer who can fill the first parts with credit to himself and pleasure to his auditors, if he only have opportunity of so doing. His Alamiro in "Belisario" is an instance of this our opinion, which we trust is founded on liberality and fair play to all.

THEATRE ROYAL, HAYMARKET.

MR. CHARLES KEAN AS RICHARD III.

Aut Cæsar aut nihil has been an axiom too literally used on many occasions, but never with more injustice than when it was paraphrased into the unkind and ill-founded assertion, some time in vogue, that because the elder Kean was the greatest histrionic hero of his time, his scion, the present son, should be held as nothing beyond a physical relation to his great father. The public are becoming more wise; for now their universal voice is raised in favour of this most worthy offspring of paternal genius; and if sometimes he closely resemble his extraordinary sire, should we not be glad to see a portrait, which so vividly recalls the spirit of the departed original, that we find ourselves in a dilemma of distinguishing between the copy of the one and the identity of the other? But this is saying too little for Mr. Charles Kean per se; he cannot help the physical resemblances which are detected between him and his great predecessor; it is but justice to him and his individual genius to say that his meritorious claims to be one of the first Shaksperian actors of the day rest not upon such accidental foundation; but even if he do indulge in following occasionally in the wake of his precursor, and fall into some "glorious fault," it is on the principle that he would rather err with Cicero than be wise with a thousand others.

His personation of Richard the Third, notwithstanding all due laudations that have been bestowed upon his Hamlet, we think his greatest triumph; for in it he comes to more immediate juxtaposition or contrast with the "worthies gone before him," and, "nothing seathed, comes victor from the field." We do not say that he is the greatest Richard that we ever witnessed; but his performance of that character gratifies, nay delights us, for the present, and leaves but little to regret for the past. His scene with Lady Anne is most admirably seductive. When we see ordinary actors attempt it we become disgusted with the Ephesian phancy of the fair one; when either of the Keans (for they are Arcades ambo in the complimentary sense) enacts it, we should be surprised if the consequence did not naturally ensue as Richard "wood for and won." Young Kean, moreover, is a diligent student, and the consequences of his reflection are vindications, not obfuscations—expositions, not confoundings of his author's meaning; and be it said to his praise that he is greatest in the personification of the characters drawn by the first of all dramatic writers, and may fairly inherit the proud plural uttered by the great Edmund, "WE WHO PLAY SHAKSPERE!" without fear of being challenged for his motto by any competitor. Who can say that the drama is on the decline when we see the miracle of the Swan of Avon singing upwards of two hundred years after its death, as it now does under the resuscitating influence of a great actor and liberal manager?

Let poetry once more be heard,
And stalking prose for aye deferr'd!

ENGLAND AND FRANCE;

OR

THE SISTERS.

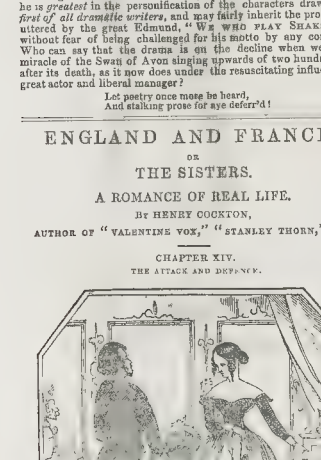
A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

By HENRY COCKTON,

AUTHOR OF "VALENTINE VOX," "STANLEY THORN," ETC.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE ATTACK AND DEFENCE.



Y dear," said Caroline, addressing Sir Arthur with a smile, having deferred the matter as long as she conveniently could, "I wish you would give me a cheque this morning, will you?

"Certainly, my love; oh, certainly; but—let me see—didn't I give you one on Tuesday?"

"Yes; but—certain demands which I did not exactly anticipate—"

"Oh, you had not received the whole of the bank-notes from Coutts!"

"Why, I want one for two hundred pounds!"

"Two hundred! The additional demands are very heavy, my dear. What are they for?"

"Is it not sufficient for you to know that that sum is required to meet them? If not, you had better at once take the domestic arrangements into your own hands entirely!"

"Nay, my dear, I only wished to know."

"You should not be so inquisitive. It is, indeed, but seldom that I ask you for an additional cheque, and I am sure it is no pleasurable task, for you invariably give it with reluctance. You used not to treat me in this way; I used to consider you one of the most generous creatures alive! but you are sadly changed of late."

"Not at all, my dear; not at all; not in the slightest degree changed; but surely it cannot be unreasonable for a man—"

"It is unreasonable; most unreasonable to expect me to come to you, like a servant, and say, 'I require, I want so much for this thing, and such a sum for that.'

"My dear, I expect nothing of the kind."

"But here is a proof that you do! What is this sum for? Dear me, how enormous! Oh! what an amount! Do you think that I ought to endure it in silence?"

"I think that you ought not to be passionate, my love; I do think that. However let us say no more about it. Here is the cheque."

"If I have nothing to do with it! I should even touch it! If your confidence in me is so utterly lost, manage every thing in future yourself."

"Why, why will you be so unreasonable?"

"It is you that are unreasonable."

"How, my dear? I merely said—"

"And in saying that, by implication proved that you believe me to be unworthy of your confidence.

"Well, if you will go on so without cause, I can't help it."

"I have cause.—ample cause to speak. Is it not enough that you compel me to come to you for every shilling I have without subjecting me to the additional humiliation of having every shilling I want doled out with reluctance?"

"My dear!—will you hear me?"

"I have not been accustomed to such treatment: nor will I endure it."

"Will you hear me?"

"You used to be kind and generous, but now you are growing old and stingy."

"If you know," said Sir Arthur, as the tears suddenly sprang into his eyes, "if you know how much you afflict me, Caroline, you would not, I am certain, pursue this course. But I will not reproach you: I will not wound your feelings, although you would mine. I do not think you know me very deeply I love you. I do not indeed; if you did, you would not say such bitter things, I'm sure."

"Why do you provoke me to say that which you know I do not mean?"

"Do you provoke me? And did you not mean what you said?

"Well," he added, pleasing the cheque in her bosom, "I do not think you would wound me wilfully, but you are so warm—so amazingly warm—like tinder you ignite in a moment."

"I beg that I may not be compared to any thing so filthy.

"Gunpowder, then: you are like gunpowder: blow the whole house up in an instant! But let me explain. I need not—I feel that I need not assure you that I never intended to breathe a single syllable which could lead you to imagine for one moment that my confidence in you was not unbounded. It is but I did un fortunately measure what the charge was for, but it was done inadvertently—without a single thought. I am sure you will acquit me of all intention to subject you to anything like humiliation, because that, as you are my pride, would humiliate me, unconsciously of putting me to the heart. No, my dear, that is quite out of the question.

"Then I wish you would be a little more guarded in your expressions. You will admit that I was justified in putting that construction upon the question you asked?

"Why, yes, perhaps you were, it was a forced construction, certainly it was not—for—I, still I can not deny that the question would bear it; but that I did not mean you may think, I do hope you'll believe.

"If, then, I am to believe that you did not mean that, let me ask you calmly, what you did mean?"

"Will you hear me calmly?"

"Do I ever refuse to hear you.."

"Why, certainly, sometimes I'm not allowed to say much! But we'll not dwell upon that. I'll explain what my feelings were at the moment. I was thinking, my love, that of late, we have been rather extravagant."

"I have not been extravagant."

"I had not say you, my dear; but we; and all I meant by that was, that our expenses are increased."

"Do they exceed the income? I speak now with reference to our common expenses."

"Why, perhaps not."

"Then, of what have you to complain? Do you allude to the cost of those presents which you have recently made me?"

"My dear, dear girl, you'll drive me mad! No!—certainly not!"

"To what, then, do you allude?"

"I must give it up, I see."

"Nay, nay, go on; I am perfectly calm!"

"Yes, you are calm, my dear; but very teasing."

"Then I'm sure I'll not stop any longer to tease you."

"Then you are again, my love! Really, I cannot say a word without giving offence."

"Well, what do you really wish to say?"

"Why, I was speaking of our expenses."

"I perceive you wish to have them reduced. Well, my dear, that can be easily managed! I can, for instance, put down my chariot and pony phaeton, and discharge my own servants; and in order to pay the tradesmen's bills for a time without calling upon you, there are my jewels; I can of course dispose of them."

"It's of no use I see," exclaimed Sir Arthur, in despair; "No use—no use at all."

"It is of no use to tease me, my dear, about those odious money matters, I confess, for in my case my abhorrence. You have assured me that our income is ample, and so you have also assured me that our expenditure does not exceed that income, I cannot for the life of me conceive what you have to complain of. Really you are getting very touchy, my dear!"

"Not at all! not at all! but there are limits!"

"Do I exceed those limits?"

"I don't say that you do."

"Why do you complain of me, then?"

"Now, have I complained? Now, really, I appeal to you, have I ever uttered a single word of complaint against you? I never met with so sensitive a creature. However I am to get you through the world I can't imagine. But let us say no more about it. It's all over: come, now let us make it up."

"And give a party only once a year."

Sir Arthur smiled, and kissed her.

"Caroline," said he, still pressing her hand, "don't you think that we should get on as well, and be equally happy, without these little quarrels?"

"Do you think so?"

"I do, indeed."

"Then why do you provoke them?"

"Why do I provoke them? Well! that is about the very richest thing I've heard. Oh, Lady Cleveland! Lady Cleveland! You are a tiresome rogue, Lady Cleveland and that's the last word I'll say upon the subject.

That Caroline was conscious of having no cause for the employment of these sharp expressions is a fact to which scarcely any allusion need be made; but having proved by experience that she had but to appear angry to obtain whatever sum she might demand, she, in order to avoid all "impertinent" questions, invariably had recourse to the practice which most annoyed him, namely, that of dreaming upon how generous he was once! Nothing galled him so much as the idea of his being supposed that he had in this respect changed, and this she knew but to touch this chord to cause him to open his cheque book with fo. Having thus secured the object of her wishes, which in perhaps the most difficult reputation to acquire, and decidedly the most expensive for a married man to sustain at home.

Three days had now elapsed since Caroline had either seen or heard of Darnley; for that person conceived that the success of his design would be power.ully promoted by his temporary absence; but while taking her usual drive that morning, she perceived him and his mother coming towards her, and instantly prepared for the meeting. They approached, and he endeavoured to appear as much embarrassed as possible and raised his hat coldly, but with grace, as they were passing, without however interrupting their walk, and his mother requested him to do so, when as Caroline, perceiving this movement, at the same time stopped, he turned and placed his gig by the side of her phaeton. The latter then entered into chat, but Darnley himself remained silent; nor would he have uttered a word, had he not been appealed to by his mother to decide a certain point; and even then, his answer was brief and faint.

"I really don't know what is the matter with Vincent," observed Mrs. Darnley, "but he has become so excessively dull, that it's really quite distressing."

"That will do," thought Darnley.

"Change of scene has great influence over the mind, observed Caroline.

"Well, I suppose that's the cause in this instance," replied Mrs Darnley, "and yet it ought not to be."

Caroline instantly changed the subject, and after making a few additional observations they parted, Darnley raising his hat coldly, as before.

He, however, believed that that his object would be attained, and hence conceiving that the fact of his having met her that morning formed an excellent prelude to another communication he, on reaching home lost no time in addressing and despatching the following note:—

"MY DEAR LADY CLEVELAND,—

"I cannot live without hope. I know that I have no claim upon your esteem: I know that I have no claim upon your sympathy; but although I have not the smallest right to expect you either to feel for me, or to consider the agony I endure, the knowledge of your possessing a kind, generous heart again prompts me to presume to address her who alone has the power to save me from despair.

"I have tried—heaven only knows how anxiously I have tried—to forget you; but your beauteous form haunts me still; still like celestial music your voice enchants my soul, at once rendering forgetfulness impossible, and torturing me with the conviction that I am still without hope. Hope, I therefore, again beg of you. I ask nothing but hope. Sustain me—bright angel!—give me hope."

"VINCENT DARNLEY."

Caroline received this in the presence of Sir Arthur. Had it not been for that, she knowing the superscription to have been written by Darnley, would have returned it unopened; but as he was present, and as her servant delivered it as a note from Mrs. Darnley, to whom no answer was required, she broke the seal, and having read it without any perceptible emotion, wrote the following note in return:—

"Lady Cleveland presents her compliments to Mr. Darnley, and begs to inform him that his note has been received, and that if he will call to-morrow morning at twelve, he shall have a verbal answer."

"Mrs. Darnley going to the opera party, my dear?" inquired Sir Arthur, when the servant had quitted the room.

"No, I believe not; but I met her this morning."

"Nice woman, that Mrs. Darnley?"

"She is indeed, a very affectionate creature."

"Delicate—delicate. Can't live long. No stamina. No constitution. Fine fellow that son of hers."—very fine fellow? I like him: something like Charles a splendid fellow."

"An agreeable person."

"Very. But Charles can beat him hollow!—in argument, science, anything. I never yet met with a man who could beat Charles. Had he been a blacksmith, Charles would have been a great man. Still, young Darnley is a very fine fellow. I like that young man very much."

The subject then dropped, and Caroline dwelt upon the step she had taken. The course she had pursued, however, had not been adopted without due consideration. She had previously conceived it to be probable that Darnley would address her again, and had made up her mind, if he should, to return his letter unopened, and desire him to call. The first part of her plan had been frustrated by the presence of Sir Arthur, but as the interview had been, notwithstanding, appointed, her principal object had been attained.

But why had that interview been appointed? Darnley was puzzled at first to conjecture. Did she intend to play him any humiliating trick? How could he believe it? Did he not believe that she loved him? How, then, could he believe that she had appointed that interview for any other purpose than that of acknowledging the love of her heart? The first part of his plan had been frustrated by the presence of Sir Arthur; but as the interview had been, notwithstanding, appointed, her principal object had been attained.

But why had that interview been appointed? Darnley was puzzled at first to conjecture. Did she intend to play him any humiliating trick? How could he believe it? Did he not believe that she loved him? How, then, could he believe that she had appointed that interview for any other purpose than that of acknowledging the love of her heart? The first part of his plan had been frustrated by the presence of Sir Arthur; but as the interview had been, notwithstanding, appointed, her principal object had been attained.

In the morning he rose early and dressed himself with unusual care, and almost counted the minutes which intervened between that and the hour appointed by Caroline to receive him, as he imagined, with open arms.

The clock struck eleven, and soon after this, he left the house on foot with the view of attracting as little notice as possible. He had then nearly two miles to walk, but he very soon accomplished the distance, and having done so, paced a lane in the immediate vicinity of the lodge, unseen, he saw, to his horror, Sir Arthur on horseback approaching.

What was to be done? How was he to escape observation? It would never do to suffer himself to be seen. Feeling that not a single moment was to be lost, he sprang over the hedge in an instant, and crouched behind the low fence.

Sir Arthur drew near, and Darnley trembled. If discovered, what excuse could he make? He might have been seen to leap the bank, and if he had been seen, he felt that nothing would be excused. He wished he had not taken that fatality step, which conscious guilt had prompted; he wished that he had met Sir Arthur boldly; but there he was, and it was then too late to move; nor did he move, he scarcely breathed, until Sir Arthur had actually passed him.

He felt, of course, that this was not very auspicious, although of one thing he was then quite certain, namely, that Caroline had resolved on having an interview with him alone. He therefore impatiently awaited his dress, which had been summoned, and having banished his fears, proceeded coolly towards the lodge.

It was then twelve o'clock, and when he rang at the gate, Caroline, who knew that he would be punctual, hurried to receive him.

He enquired for Sir Arthur, of course; and on being informed that Sir Arthur was from home, he sent up his card to Lady Cleveland, who immediately sent the servant to show him up.

The moment the long-expected, anxiously looked for moment—had now arrived, and his feelings on ascending the stairs were indescribable. How could he express his rapture on beholding her? Should he at once drop her to his feet?

The servant ushered him into the drawing-room, when Caroline rose, and with a dignified air of dignity, waved her hand in silence towards a chair.

He had meant all his fond hopes vanished; he felt perfectly paralyzed; but on recovering himself somewhat, he approached her and offered his hand.

"Mr. Darnley," said Caroline, without receiving that hand, "I beg you will be seated."

"Mr. Darnley," she continued after a pause, during which he felt excessively awkward, "You have sent me two letters, one of which I have answered, the other I have to answer now; but before I do this, Mr. Darnley, I have to ask what you propose?"

"Really, Lady Cleveland," said Darnley, who did not anticipate anything of this kind, nor did he know at all how to explain what he proposed—"really, I was not prepared for this!"

"What then, Sir, were you prepared for?"

"Upon my honour," said he, with an extremely faltering voice, for he felt inexpressibly confused, "I—really—I was prepared to receive, as you stated, an answer to my letter."

"But before I give you an answer, it will be necessary for me to know what it is you propose?"

"Is not the letter itself sufficiently explicit?"

"No, Mr. Darnley; and if it were, my question is simple:—what is it you propose?"

"To love you for ever! With all my heart, with all my soul to love you! On my knee I swear."

"Sir," exclaimed Caroline, rising, "I beg that you will continue to be seated. If," she added, on resuming her chair, "if your object be to love me, and no oath is required in this case!—my answer is short, it being simply that as love is free to cause love in return of all, you are of course at perfect liberty to entertain it. But is that your only object?"

"It is, and ever will be the object of my life."

"Then address me on the subject? I have no control whatever over your feelings! If I had, why then indeed you might with reason address me, and in that case I should cause you to love me no more. But have you no latent object? Will you be candid, Mr. Darnley? You speak of hope: you assure me that you cannot live without hope. That assurance was unnecessary; no man can. You are not without hope; you have proved that you are not; for to be without hope were to be without an object, and no object you admit that you have. What is the hope then involved in that object? Will you be candid with me? Do you hope to compass my dishonour?"

Darnley was silent. The firmness of her voice, the intensity of her expression, her earnest penetrating gaze, and the general dignity of her presence, combined with the consciousness of that being indeed the hope he had cherished, inspired him with awe.

"I speak," resumed Caroline, after a pause, during which she kept her eyes fixed firmly upon him, "I speak as a woman, conscious of her strength, as one not prone to fly into any tragic passion when assailed, but prepared to meet her assailant, and by reason to repel him. I now therefore say to you at once, that if that be your object, and I fear there can be no doubt, Mr. Darnley that it is, that object will never be attained."

"Lady Cleveland, 'said Darnley, with comparative calmness, "that is not my object. I confess to you with shame that it was—it is useless I perceive to attempt to conceal it—that it as my object, but is not now.

"Then I am glad that this course was pursued—glad, indeed—for your sake that I appointed this interview."

"I now begin to feel, Lady Cleveland, that you must despise me."

"Do not press that point. But how would you pretend to love one whose mora. destruction you sought to compass? I say how could you pretend to love, feel, or could have been but pretence; for he who really loves, seeks to guard the object of his love, not to involve her in irretrievable ruin."

"This is not what I sought. My object was to protect her, to cherish her, to promote her felicity, by all the means at my command, to love, honour, adore her, and by devotion to render her the happiest of the happy."

"Would you clip the eagle's wings, that he might take a higher flight, or pluck out his eyes that he might not see the sun more clearly, or pierce his heart that it might throb with more rapture? No!—you would say that the pursuit of such a course for the attainment of such objects were madness!—and yet you would decourse for the attainment of such objects were madness!—and yet you would decourse for the attainment of such objects were madness!—and yet you would decourse distressing in the extreme. The Broadsfields Colliery is a very extensive one, and a great number of persons are employed on the works. The colliery is in the hands of lessees, the principal of whom are W. T. Copeland, Esq., M.P., of the firm of Copeland and Garrett, Lincoln's Inn-fields, and W. Baker, Esq. The accident is supposed to have been occasioned by an imprudent order given by Smith, the overman, to a workman, named Dawson, to close a door before the other men had left the pit and extinguished their candles, whereby the current of air was diverted from its proper course, and forced a reverse of it for the road by which five of the party were at the time proceeding to the shaft. This is concluded to be the case from the localities in which the bodies were found.

WORCESTER.—At the Midsummer Sessions, held at Worcester, on Monday last, a proposition for disbanding the county constabulary force, made by Mr. Ley, a magistrate, was negatived by a majority of 34 to 13.

THE RIOTS IN SOUTH WALES.—The country is quiet. During the day time appears perfectly quiescent. At night, however, the small farmers on the hills assemble together and appear perfectly organised for any mischief. On Sunday the Earl of Cawdor and Colonel Powell, chief lessees of the county of Pembroke, arrived at Carmarthen at the request of the Government. On Saturday the troop of 4th Dragoons marched to Newcastle. One of the troops was unfortunately drowned whilst bathing in company with five others on Sunday evening. In the meantime, every day brings fresh accounts of gates being thrown down. On Friday night four were pulled down within two miles of Cardigan, and on Saturday three near Abergwilly. In fact, a general feeling of approbation prevails that the destruction of private property will follow the present toll-bar outrages. A lessee of a toll-bars on the Cardigan trust states, that 10 of them have been thrown down.

RIOTS IN SOUTH WALES.—(From a Correspondent of the Standard.)—On Sunday last orders were given for the immediate departure from Carmarthen of the dragoons for Newcastle Emlyn, where the rioters had assembled, with their numbers augmented to 15,000 or 20,000. The men were so well armed and ready for action, that the dragoons could not enter the town until Monday morning, and the conflict that took place at Newcastlebridge is beyond description. The soldiers were thrown of their horses, their arms taken from them, and were afterwards thrown into the river Tivy, when one of the men, named Kearns, the rough-rider, met a watery grave, and the others are so bruised from having fallen on the rocks below the bridge parapet, that they are no more fit for service. The union workhouse has also been entirely destroyed by fire, and it is feared that a great many gentlemen's houses will be destroyed in the course of the night. The mob, to the present moment, are in possession of the town, but a detachment of the 73d Regiment of Infantry, under the command of Col. Love, are expected to arrive this evening: they may retake the town, but it is generally believed that a great number must be slain on both sides before the termination of the conflict.

DEATH OF MR. MURRAY, THE PUBLISHER.—We regret to state that Mr. Murray, the eminent publisher, died on Thursday evening, at his Albemarle-street. We understand that Mr. Murray had for some time past been poorly, but that indisposition did not assume an alarming character until Friday week.

BETHLEM HOSPITAL.—A quarterly general court of the governors of Bethlem Hospital was held on Monday, in the great hall at Bridewell, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, by the treasurer, Mr. Tuesday Thatcher, and about 50 other governors were present, including Sir Peter Laurie, the president, who occupied the chair. The report of the special committee, recommending various alterations and ameliorations in the treatment of the inmates of Bethlem, was read seriatim on the motion for confirming the report.—Much debate ensued on the proposition of the committee, "That a billiard-table should be hired in order to promote the exercise and amusement of the inmates."—Mr. Anderton expressed his surprise at such a recommendation, and was of opinion that a person who was capable of playing at games of chance was not fit person to remain in a lunatic asylum; and if it were intended to introduce all those comforts and luxuries the patients would ere long wish to leave. He thought billiards would lead to excitement, and, by promoting a contest of gambling, have an injurious effect, and would, therefore, move that the paragraph commencing "That a billiard-table be supplied" in the report.—Dr. Webster stated that, from his experience of lunatic asylums on the Continent, in Scotland, as well as the country, such amusements as recommended were highly conducive to cure, and he would therefore support their adoption.—Sir C. Price supported Mr. Anderton's motion.—The Earl of Shaftesbury briefly supported the recommendation of the committee, as he thought that, under the physicians, it would be productive of much rational and useful amusement to the patients; many of whom, from their previous station and habits of life, had been accustomed to such amusements.—After some further discussion on that and the question, and on a division, the numbers were—For introducing billiards, &c., 29; against it, 30; it was consequently lost by a majority of 10.—After a long discussion a proposition for purchasing a piano and other musical instruments for the use of the patients was carried—the numbers being 35 for, and 23 against.—The remaining business having been disposed of, the court broke up.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE.—Although we have had a continuance of fine weather for the growing crops, there has been, on the whole, a steady demand for most kinds of English wheat, owing to the limited state of the stocks of that article, and prices have been supported. Very little wheat has reached us from abroad, yet the sales of foreign have been dull, and has proved extensive. For prime qualities the sale has been steady, at full currencies; but, in other samples, a decline has been noted. Barley and malt, of which very little has come fresh to hand, have sold freely, at previous rates. Oats, beans, peas, and flour have been in request, and fully maintain the annexed currencies:

ENGLISH.—Red Wheat, 44s to 47s; Barley, 30s; Oats, 18s; Malt, 47s quarters; Flour, 44s to 46s per sack. Irish Oats, 7s 2d per quarter. Foreign. Wheat, 39s to 40s; Barley, 26s per qr.

English.—Wheat, fine qualities, 48s to 50s; inferior ditto, 42s to 46s per quarter; Suffolk, red, 48s to 50s; ditto, white, 46s to 48s; rye, 34s to 38s; grinding barley, 27s to 29s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 52s to 54s; ditto, brown ditto, 50s to 52s; Kingston and Ware, 56s to 62s; Chevalier, 58s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire ditto, 54s to 56s; Scotch ditto, 52s; Dublin and Cork, black, 17s to 18s, ditto white, 19s to 20s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 36s to 38s; ditto, new, 30s; maple, 33s to 34s; white, 30s to 32s; boilers, 32s to 37s per quarter. Town-made flour, 45s to 48s; Suffolk, 38s to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 37s to 38s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s; oats, new, 15s to 17s; ditto, old, 14s to 16s; beans, 30s to 32s; peas, 32s to 33s per quarter. Flour, American, 22s to 24s. Baltic, 22s per barrel.

Liverpool Market.—Less inquiry has existed for all kinds of seed this week than for some time past, and our prices remain almost nominal.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 54s to 60s, Baltic, crushing, 42s to 44s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s; Calcutta, 44s to 46s per quarter; coarse, 10s to 12s per cwt; brown mustard seed, 10s to 11s; white ditto, 10s to 16s 6d, Dutch, 7s to 8s per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £20 to £21 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 to £10 10s; ditto foreign, £7 to £7 10s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Linseed oil, 25s to 26s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6½d for the 4lb. loaf.

Imported Weekly Average.—Wheat, 49s 8d; barley, 27s 7d; oats, 18s 5d; rye, 31s 2d; beans, 29s 9d, peas, 30s 1d.

Imported Averages of the Week which govern Duty.—Wheat, 45s 4d; barley, 27s 5d; oats, 18s 9d; rye, 32s 2d; beans, 27s 11d; peas, 29s 6d per quarter.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s.; Barley, 9s; Oats, 5s; Rye, 11s 6d, Beans, 11s 6d; peas, 11s 6d.

Tea.—Since our last no further public sales have taken place, and we have to report a very slow enquiry for all descriptions, by private contract, and late rates are nominally supported.

Sugar.—Although there has been less inclination manifested on the part of the dealers to purchase sugar this week, the holders have remained firm, and though the transactions have been only to a moderate extent, previous rates have been supported. The value of refined lumps is now 70s per cwt.

Coffee.—The demand for all kinds of coffee continues limited, the dealers not feeling disposed to hold more than sufficient to meet their wants.

Rice.—We see no better enquiry for this article at full prices. At auction, nearly 300tc bags Bengal have sold at 10s 6d to 11s for middling white, being the full value.

Spirits.—Rum.—Since our last few buyers, yet prices cannot be noted lower Brandy is in good request, at full quotations.

Oils.—Linseed oil has declined 2l per ton; but, in the value of other kinds of oil we have no variations to notice

Tallow.—The stock of tallow is now nearly 19,000 casks. Russia tallow is very heavy, at 34s 9d to 41s per cwt. For forward delivery little is doing.

Saltpetre.—The demand, for rough, is good, and prices are supported.

Wool.—The current sales have been brought to a conclusion. At these auctions about 18,000 bales have sold. We consider all middling and low qualities were, on the close, from 1d to 1½d per lb. lower.

Hops.—The market has ruled excessively dull, and the prices have again fallen fully 3s per cwt. The accounts from the plantations are more favourable, while the duty is not heavier.

Potatoes.—In old potatoes there is scarcely anything doing; but new ones are selling freely, at from 12s to 16s per cwt.

Coals.—Ashby, 15s 6d. Chester Main, 15s; West Hartley, 15s; Tanfield Moor Butes, 14s; West Tanfield, 12s 6d; West Wylam, 13s; Killingworth, 17s; Lambton, 20s; Stewart's, 21s 3d per ton.

Smithfield.—Notwithstanding the supplies of fat stock on offer here, this week, have been extensive, the demand has ruled firm, at, in some cases, an advance of 2d per 8 lbs., and clearances have been effected. Beef, from 3 to 4 4d to 5s, mutton, 3s to 4s 4d, lamb, 5s to 6s; veal, 3s 6d to 4s 6d, and pork, 3s to 4s per 8 lbs., to sink the offal.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—Our markets have been steadily firm for each kind of meat, since our last report, on the following terms:—Beef, from 2s 8d to 3s 8d; mutton, 3s to 4s; lamb, 4s to 5s 2d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; and pork, 3s to 4s per 8 lbs., to the carcass.

ROBERT HASLEY.

COMMERCE AND MONEY.

The great alteration for the better which has occurred in the state of the weather continues favourable to influence the operations in the money market. Confidence is improving amongst the monied classes, and the lately entertained fears that money would be wanted for the payment of large foreign supplies of food are gradually passing away. The English Stock Exchange in particular, the amount of business transacted in the Consols, since our last publication, has been considerable. Exchequer Bills likewise command this week a higher rate of premium than they have done since the annual issue on them was reduced. These securities, however, are chiefly resorted to for the investment of trust money, and therefore they are not always a just criterion of public opinion In the Discount market the capitalist, at present, however, finds but little employment for his property, and that little is not extremely profitable. The cheap rates of agricultural produce, and of commodities of all descriptions, render the amount of merchants, bankers, and of tradesmen's acceptances in the market, for discount, unusually small, and to enlarge them into money, at a moderate rate of interest, is not, at present, an operation of much difficulty; in fact we have much more capital, at the present moment, than can be profitably employed, and this capital continues to be wisely augmented by the state of our foreign commerce. The rates of the Foreign Exchanges still continue in favour of further importations of the precious metals into the United Kingdom, indeed on the two last foreign post days a further rise has occurred in the rates of exchange on all the banking towns in Europe. We now draw a much greater value on Europe than we remit to her, and this is a single proof that we forward goods of greater value to Europe than is the value of the goods which we import from her. The foreign commerce, therefore, is, at the present moment, in a most satisfactory position; and as larger quantities of goods than ever before have been exported during the last ten or twelve years are now under the process of manufacture for the German national fairs, a further influx of money from the Continent may be reasonably looked for during the remainder of this year.

In all the manufacturing districts the increasing demand for British manufactures for Europe and for the United States of North America, added to the unusually large quantities now required for the consumption of our colonies and foreign possessions of the East Indies, South America, and of China, is therefore causing increased activity, and all the producing districts continue, accordingly, to be still employed, at fair rates of wages, considering the extremely low prices to which all descriptions of agricultural products are now reduced. If the home markets for the consumption of manufactured goods did only improve in an equal degree as the foreign markets have latterly done, we should speedily experience a revival of a degree of prosperity previously unequalled in the whole history of commerce. But this consummation cannot be attained until confidence be again restored in the corn trade, of which, at present, there exists at all events a fair prospect, for the present prices of grain are considerably under the expenses of its production, and therefore a speedy and considerable amendment in the value of all sorts of agriculture, products is now very confidently anticipated by those who possess the best sources of information on this all-important subject.

On the foreign Stock Exchange the business transacted during this week has again been neither extensive nor interesting. Spanish bonds, as usual, are the favourites of the speculators, and a small improvement has occurred in their prices since our last report. Should the Government of the Regent be put down, it is not possible to anticipate the figure to which they may decline; while, on the contrary, on the suppression of the existing disturbances in that unfortunate kingdom must eventually confer great benefit on her British public creditors. Some transactions have occurred in Colombian, and also in Mexican bonds, at wretchedly low prices, whilst those of Chili and Brazil continue in fair demand, at tolerably equitable prices. In Belgian and Dutch stocks not much business is at present doing, but each of these national securities continues to maintain its former high value

BRITISH FUNDS.—(CLOSING PRICES.)—FRIDAY.

Bank Stock, 130½	Irish Bonds, 6s
3 per Cent Reduced, 94¾	Ditto Bonds, 6s
3 per Cent Consols,	Ditto Old Annuities,
3½ per Cent Reduced, 101¾	Ditto New Annuities,
New 3½ per Cents,	Exchequer Bills, £6000, 1½d., 6s
New 5 per Cent,	Ditto £6000, 6s
Long Annuities to expire	Ditto Small, 6s
Jan. 1860, 13 11-16	Bank Stock for Opening,
Oct. 1859,	India Stock for Account,
Jan. 1860,	Consols for Account,

FOREIGN FUNDS.

Belgian, 3 per cent,	Spanish Deferred,
Chilian, 6 per cent,	Dutch, 2½ per cent, 54¾
Spanish, 5 per cent, 18¾	Ditto, 5 per cent, 100¾

SHARES.

Bristol and Exeter (paid),	London and Brighton (50 paid) 33¾
Cheltenham and Great Western (pd),	Ditto Loan Notes (10 paid)
Eastern Counties (23 paid),	London and Birmingham (130 paid)
Ditto New (paid)	Ditto New Shares (7 paid),
Ditto Debentures (paid),	Manchester and Birmingham
Great Western (65 paid),	South [illegible] paid)
Ditto New Shares (paid)	Ditto [illegible] paid,
Ditto Extra [illegible]	[illegible] paid,
London and South Western £12 paid (	New Shares paid,

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JUNE 27.

INSOLVENTS.—B. BEAUMONT, New Bailey, Yorkshire, labourer.—A. BENJAMIN, Lemon-street, Goodman's-fields, watchmaker.—G. BLACKIN [illegible], Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, [illegible].—J. C. BOWEN, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, attorney's clerk.—H. [illegible], Bristol, [illegible].—J. W. COOPER, Hedsley, [illegible].—J. [illegible], Finsbury, [illegible].—J. [illegible], Finsbury, chemist and druggist.—T. [illegible], Finsbury, chemist and druggist.—T. [illegible], Finsbury, chemist and druggist.—T

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Madame GRISI respectfully informs the Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public, that her BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY next, July 6, when will be performed Donizetti's new Opera of DON PASQUALE (produced with the greatest success at the Italian Opera, Paris) Norma, Mdme. Grisi; Ernesto, Sigr. Mario; Dr. Malatesta, Sigr. Fornasari; Notary, Sigr. Galli; Don Pasquale, Sigr. Lablache.—After which will be presented the Second Act of Bellini's Opera of IL PIRATA, by Mdme. Persiani, Sigrs. Fornasari and Mario.—To be followed by the last scene of Don Giovanni Opera of ANNA BOLENA, by Mdme. Grisi To conclude with the new Grand Ballet of Nobility, Nancy Page, with much new Scenery, Decorations, &c., &c., called ONDINE; or, LA NAIADE. The scenery by Mr. William Grieve. Principal characters: Ondine, Mlle. Cerito; Hydrois, Mdme. Copere; Master (a young fisherman), M. Perrot; Theresa (his mother), Mdme. Caroline Guichard; an orphan betrothed to Matteo), Mdlle Guy Stephan. Villagers, Peasant Girls, Oadines, Naiades, &c. Dancers Mdlle Cerito, Wyndlles, Camille, Rheiller, Pasquet, Renard, Gailey, Chevalier Ducie, and Mdlle. Guy Stephan; M. St. Leon, and M. Perrot.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera-colonnade. Doors open at Seven, to commence at Half-past Seven o'clock.

EXHIBITION of Sir GEORGE HATTER'S GREAT PICTURE of the HOUSE of COMMONS, painted on 170 square feet of canvass, and contains Portraits of all the Members of Parliament, also a Portrait of her Majesty Queen Victoria, and various other works, forming a collection of more than eight hundred portraits of eminent personages of the present day. OPEN from Ten till dusk. At the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.—Admission, 1s.

THE GRAND MODEL of the BASILICA of ST. PETER'S at Rome.—Under the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty QUEEN VICTORIA, and likewise all the Crowned Heads of Europe. Executed by ANDREA GAMBASSINI, of Tuscany. The model is 21 feet in length and 12 feet in height, covered in oriental woods with statues elegantly carved in ivory, being reduced to one-hundredth part of its original size. By its construction the internal scenes are exhibited to the spectator, the construction of which occupied the aforesaid artist fourteen years. Open daily, at 12), Pall-mall, from ten to eight. Admission, 1s.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.—ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION A LECTURE on this subject, illustrated by Models of several kinds, which elevate themselves by mechanical force alone, is delivered at Two o'clock daily, and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings, at Eight o'clock. The exhibition of the Colossal Electrical Machine, the Diver, Diving Bell, New Dissolving Views, and the other varied and attractive objects of the Institution, continues as usual. The original Crayon Drawings from the Cartoons at Hampton Court, by the late Mr. Holloway, with numerous other Works of Art, have recently been placed in the Gallery.—Admission, One Shilling. Schools, Half-price. Open Mornings and Evenings, except Saturday Evening.

WILSON'S SCOTTISH ENTERTAINMENTS, Music-Hall, Store street.—On MONDAY EVENING, July 3, at Eight o'clock, Mr. WILSON will give ANITHER...NIGHT wi' BURNS.—Pianoforte, Mr. Land Songs "Here awa, there awa, Wandering Willie"—"O whistle, and I'll come to ye my lad"—"My Nannie"—"Last May a braw wooer cam down the lang glen" "O, this is no my ain lassie" —"Green grow the rashes O." Part Second: "There was a lass, and she was fair"—"My tocher's the jewel"—"O poortith cauld"—"The battle o' Sherra-muir"—"Wilt thou be my dearie?"—"Husband, husband, cease your strife" "Here around the ingle blazing." Mr. Wilson will recite the poem of "Tam o' Shanter."

ONLY ONE IN THE WORLD.

GLACIARIUM and FROZEN LAKE.—The Artificial Ice, at the Baker-street Bazaar, seems to increase with the summer temperature its virtue of attracting vast numbers of distinguished visitors to witness the process of skating on the Frozen Lake, with the beautiful Panorama of Lucerne, which, when lighted, as it is in the evening, and enlivened with chaste music, is indeed a delightful cool resort, and the admittance of 1s. very moderate.

THE CHINESE COLLECTION, HYDE PARK CORNER.—This unique Collection consists of objects exclusively Chinese, and surpasses in extent and grandeur any similar display in the known world. The spacious saloon is 80 feet in length, and is crowded with rare and interesting specimens of native art. This Collection embraces upwards of sixty figures as large as life, portraits from nature, appropriately stirred in their native costume; from the mandarin of the highest rank to the wandering mendicant; also many thousand specimens in natural history and manufactures, exemplifying the whole illustrating the appearance, manners, and customs, and social life of more than three hundred millions Chinese.—Open from Ten till Ten.—Admittance, 2s. 6d.; Children under Twelve Years, 1s.

On the 8th of July will be published, price 18s., the SECOND VOLUME of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, containing the Numbers for the Half Year ending June 24, elegantly bound in cloth, gilt edges, and lettered, uniformly with Volume I.—Subscribers are informed that COVERS, made expressly for binding the Second Volume, may be had by order of all Newsmen and Booksellers, price 3s. each. Volume I. is reprinted, price One Guinea.

This day, price one shilling, Part 54,

TYAS' ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE, with numerous Designs by KENNY MEADOWS.—. This beautiful Edition will be completed on the 1st of August. Subscribers are recommended to make up their sets immediately, as many of the Parts are nearly out of print.—R. TYAS, 8, Paternoster-row.

On the 5th of July will be ready, and may be had of all Booksellers and at the Libraries, in post 8vo., price 10s. 6d.,

CHANGE FOR THE AMERICAN NOTES: in LETTERS from LONDON to NEW YORK. "Look here upon this picture and on this."—London: WILEY and PUTNAM, Stationers'-court. Edinburgh: A. and C. Black. Dublin: W. CURRY and Co.

SACRED MUSIC

This day is published, and to be continued in Monthly Parts, price 1s. each, Part I. of THE PEOPLE'S BOOK, consisting of Psalm-Tunes, Songs, Duets, Trios, Glees, &c., principally arranged for four voices, with an accompaniment for the Organ or Pianoforte. By JAMES TURLE, Esq., Organist of Westminster Abbey, and REVAH TAYLOR, Esq., Graduate of Cambridge.

London: GEORGE VIRTUE, 26, Ivy-lane; and sold by all Booksellers.

DOMESTIC HAND-BOOKS FOR INVALIDS.—

1s. each; by post, 1s. 6d.

On INDIGESTION, NERVOUSNESS, and DIET, with Diet Tables for all invalids, By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., Member of the Royal College of Surgeons.

Also, by the Same Author,

On CONSTIPATION and HÆMORRHOIDS, with twenty-six engravings.

BURNWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARPALDO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

SUPERIOR SCHOOL BOOKS

BUTTER'S ETYMOLOGICAL SPELLING-BOOK and EXPOSITOR, an Introduction to the Spelling, Pronunciation, and Derivation of the English Language: containing, besides several other new and improvements, extensive Tables of Words deduced from their Greek and Latin Roots. Sixty-fourth Edition, 2s. 6d. bound.

BUTTER'S GRADATIONS in READING and SPELLING, upon an entirely original plan; by which Dissyllables are rendered as easy as Monosyllables, by numerous entertaining and instructive Reading Lessons in Prose and Verse, and Spelling-Tables leading to a knowledge of Grammar and Derivation. Twenty-fifth Edition, 1s. 6d. bound.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; WHITTAKER and Co; LONGMAN and Co.; HAMILTON and Co., London. OLIVER and BOYD, Edinburgh.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—No. 10, Chatham-place, Blackfriars, London.—Established January, 1819.

PRESIDENT—SIR JAMES HIXETT CARNAC, Bart., Rook Cliff, Lymington.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—JOHN FORBES, Esq., 9, Hanover-square—With Twelve Directors.

FACILITIES are offered by this long-established Society to suit the views and the means of every class of Insurers. Premiums received yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly, and also an increasing or decreasing scale. The insured for life participate sensationally in the profits realised. A liberal commission is allowed to Solicitors and Agents.

DAVID FOGO, Secretary.

N.B.—Agents are wanted in towns where none have been yet appointed.

DANCING TAUGHT in the most fashionable style by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private lessons at all hours to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age, under the strictest privacy and on the most reasonable terms. Schools attended on Mondays and Fridays. A Juvenile Academy on Wednesdays and Saturdays. LESSONS in the VALSE & DEUX TEMPS every day.—A card of terms may be had on application as above.

A WATCH, AS A GIFT, from its particular properties, is the best expression of the truth and constancy of friendship: it is always with the owner, and always doing him service—J. JONES, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, Watchmaker to the Admiralty, has on sale a great variety of Watches, suitable for all classes. The elegant gold horizontal watches, at 4l. each, are suitable for ladies and gentlemen.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watch Work, sent free for a 24. stamp.

WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty, established 132 years, 3, Birchin-lane.—The largest assortment of fine Second-hand Watches of any house in London, by the most eminent makers, many nearly equal to new, and at little above half their original cost, all of which W. and Son warrant. They consist of four repeaters, duplex lever and horizontal escapements, all of superior manufacture. New Watches of the most elegant patterns upon the principle of their chronometers, to which the Government awarded the prizes three years in succession, with compensation balances to counteract the variations of temperature; also a large assortment of lever and elegant horizontal Watches for ladies and gentlemen, at considerably reduced prices. Old Watches taken in exchange. The most experienced workmen are employed on the premises in the repairing department.

WEBSTER and SON, 3, Birchin-lane, Cornhill.

TABLE-GLASS and CHINA.—APSLEY PELLATT, Falcon Glass Works, Holland-street, Blackfriars-road, respectfully solicits an inspection of his show-rooms for Chandeliers, Lamps, plain, cut, and engraved Table-glass of every description; new variegated table-ornaments; China, Parian, and Earthenware; bath cucumber Tubes, and other Glass for Horticultural purposes; Illuminators, for admitting light into vaults and cellars; Crystal Horticultural Glass, &c. Printed lists may be had on application. Days for viewing the manufactory Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

FIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY and BOOK ESTABLISHMENT, 65, Quadrant, corner of Air-street.—Postage envelopes, 1s. per dozen; envelopes, 2d., 3d., 5d., and 1s. per hundred; letter paper, 3d., 4d., and 6d., per quire; note paper, 1d., 2d., and 4d. per quire; foolscap, 6d. per quire; blotting cases, 6d., 1s., and 1s. 6d.; ditto, with locks, 2s., 3s., and 4s. each; pamphlet boxes from 3s.; best sealing wax, 6d. sticks 1s.; Victoria stationery cabinets, containing note paper, wax, and envelopes, 1s. each. the celebrated magnum bonum steel pens, 6d. per doz., copy books, 4d. each, self-lighting wax, 1s. per box.; office inkstands, from 6d.; blotting pads, 1s. each; royal note paper, 1s. 6d. per packet of five quires; newly-invented pencil case, containing twelve useful articles, 3s. 6d.; Cumberland lead pencils, 6d. per dozen; Bibles, 3s.; Prayers, 1s. 6d.; Testaments, 6d., church services complete, 4s.; music cases, with locks, 2s.

. Just published, a list of standard books, at very reduced prices; forwarded postage free.

THAMES REGATTA.—The Nobility, Gentry, and Public are requested to take notice that neither carriages or horses can be permitted to stop on or obstruct the passage over Fulham and Putney Bridge, on MONDAY and TUESDAY next, the days of this Regatta.

Fulham-bridge, June 29, 1843.

A FAVOURABLE OPPORTUNITY for a YOUNG MAN wishing to commence BUSINESS.

TO BE DISPOSED OF, the LEASE of a HOUSE and SHOP in the SILVERMITH and JEWELLERY line, in one of the greatest thoroughfares in the City. Coming in very moderate; the present proprietor relinquishing business in consequence of ill health. Particulars apply at GEO. PEACKE'S pianoforte warehouse, No. 72, Bishopsgate-street-within.

A LE of very superior quality, brewed entirely from the very best Malt and Hops, and in such proportions as persons of nice palate will be sure to appreciate. Sold in casks of eighteen and nine gallons each, at 1s. per gallon. Sent to any part of town carriage free. Orders by post punctually attended to. Address to the John Bull brewery office, 30, Philpot-lane, City.

BACON.—J. CRAFT, Philpot-lane, City, offers to the Public Bacon of excellent quality, which he receives weekly from a farmer in Wiltshire, who attends to the feeding and rearing of his pigs in such a way as to make the Bacon of a most delicious flavour, and which will be sure to suit the most delicate stomach.—Sold by the side or half side, 6d. per lb.—Sent to any part of town carriage free.

FURTHER REDUCTION IN TEA.—The East India Tea Company have agreed to reduce the price of the poor man's tea: that which was 3s. per lb may now be obtained at 2s. 11d.—or 17s. 6d. for the 6-lb. bag; other sorts, 3s. 4d. and 3s. 10d., 4s. 2d. and 4s. 6d.—No. 8, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street.

CEREVISIA ANGLICANA; or, English Diet Drink, as prepared by Dr. J. WEBSTER, for the cure of Asthma, Incipient Consumption, Nervous Debility, Scrofula, &c., being a sure Purifier of Blood. Sold by SUTH and Co., High-street, Borough, where the public may be convinced of its efficacy, by testimonials of recent cures, and by referring to Aberneth p. 1.—Sold by all Venders in town and country, in bottles, 14s., 7s. 6d., and 4s. Books of cases gratis.

GINGER BRANDY.—This invaluable Liqueur continues to be manufactured by VINCENT and PUGH, the original Proprietors, at their Distillery, 5, New Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, Borough, and may be obtained of all the principal retail dealers in the metropolis, in bottles neatly sealed and labelled.

TO CONNOISSEURS IN BRANDY.—They have also fully succeeded in bringing public notice the most perfect article ever yet offered, possessing the delicacy of character and richness of bouquet natural to Cognac, they being supported in their assertion by the opinion of both French growers, and the keenest judges in the English market.

The PALE BRANDY is particularly recommended as something extremely curious.

CHASTON'S PATENT INDIAN-RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLASTERS are now generally admitted to be the most unique and best to eradicate either HARD or SOFT CORNS. From their elastic quality they can be worn with perfect ease, however tight the boot or shoe fits the foot. Invented and prepared by B. CHASTON, Chemist, Watton, Norfolk, and sold in Boxes 1s. 1½d. each. N.B.—On receipt of Thirteen Stamps (free) a box will be forwarded (also free) to any part of the kingdom.

MOULD CANDLES TO BURN WITHOUT SNUFFING.—KEMPTON'S PATENT.—These Candles do not require snuffing; they burn longer, and give more than double the light of those usually burned. No metallic or deleterious matter is used in the manufacture. Price, 8d. per lb. Sold by G. F. Parish, Agent for Kempton, 19, Bread-street, City, and by Sindden and Stocking, 1, High-street, Marylebone; W. Gethen, Broadley-terrace, Blandford-square; W. Evans, Italian Warehouse, Greenwich; George Hawley, grocer, Pitfield-street, Hoxton; John Hawkins, grocer, High-street, Whitechapel; S. Gange, Fish-street-hill; J. Pain, grocer, Bethnal-green-road; G. H. Hudson, 223, Blackfriars-road; C. H. Nicholas, 19, Bolsoverrow, Walworth; and all respectable Tradesmen.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, FIRE-PROOF SAFES, CASH-BOXES, &c.

CHUBB'S NEW PATENT DETECTOR LOCKS give perfect security from false keys, and also detect any attempt to open them. They are made to all sizes, and for every purpose to which locks are applied. These locks are strong, secure, simple, and durable. The Patent Fire-proof Safes and Boxes form a complete preservation for deeds, plate, books, &c., from fire and thieves. Cash Boxes and Japan Boxes of all sizes fitted with the New Patent Locks. A large assortment of the above on sale, by C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, London.

PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS BAZAAR, 58, BAKER-STREET, PORTMAN-SQUARE.—Wholesale and Retail for the sale of GENERAL FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, Tea, Copper, and Iron Cooking Utensils, Table Cutlery, best Sheffield Plate, German Silver, Paper Mâché Tea Trays, Tea and Coffee Urns, Stoves, Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders and Fire Irons, with Baths of all kinds, shower, hot, cold, vapour, pleasure, and medicated. Ornamental Iron and Wire Work, for Conservatories, Lawns, &c., and Garden Engines. All articles are of the very best description, and offered at exceedingly low prices, for cash only; the price of each article being marked in plain figures.

This day, price 6d.,

EASE and COMFORT in SHAVING.—MESSRS. B. and S. COWAN'S invaluable CANTON STROP, or Quadrilateral Chinese Razor Sharpener, renders the operation of shaving no longer painful to the most tender skin. By a very simple process, the keenest edge can be speedily given to the hardest razor made. Messrs. B. and S. Cowan's peculiarly tempered Razors and Shaving Powder. Specimens of the Strops are now exhibiting at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, and the Royal Adelaide Gallery, Lowther-arcade, Strand, where these valuable articles have been sent, which may be seen at the inventors', 3, and 8, Cowan, No. 154, Fenchurch-street, where the Strops, &c., may be obtained, price 4s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 14s. 6d. Also may be had in the United Kingdom, price 3s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 9s. 6d. Also may be had, Cowan's Canton Razor Strop Paste, at 6d. and 1s. per packet. Shaving Powder, 1s. 6d. per box.—Caution: None are genuine except those inscribed and spelt B. and S. COWAN.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is universally acknowledged to be the only article that will effectually produce and restore hair, prevent it from falling off or turning grey, free it from scurf and dandriff, and will render it delightfully soft and flexible. It will also render coiffure in the head attractive and graceful assemblies.

CAUTION.—Ask for ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, and see that those words are on the Wrapper; all others are gross impositions.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s. family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

Sold at 20, Hatton-garden, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

SEVENTH EMIGRANT SHIP for the CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Clears out on the 30th JUNE, and Sails on the 5th JULY, for ALGOA BAY, direct, to follow the "ROWAN or BERKSHAM," the very fast-sailing first-class Ship ABBOTSFORD, A.1, 400 tons burthen, Alexander Commander, 850 tons burthen, under judicious, liberal, and punctual management of the previous ships. Each ship carries an experienced Surgeon. Superior accommodation, and height between decks six feet. LOADING IN THE LONDON DOCK.

DIVERSY OF MR. JOSEPH CHRISTOPHER'S SHIPS.—Steerage Passengers [to be in Messes of Six or more, as the captain or surgeon may arrange, and Victualled according to the following scale, for One Adult:—Total per week: Best second Bread, 7lb.; prime mess Beef, 5lb.; prime mess Pork, 1½lb.; preserved Meat, 1½lb.; Fish, 1lb.; Flour, 3½lb.; Oatmeal, 1½lb.; Raisins, 3½lb.; Suet, 3 oz.; Peas, 1 pint; Rice, 1½lb.; preserved Potatoes, 3½lb.; Tea, 1 oz.; Coffee, 1½ oz.; Sugar, 1½lb.; Butter or Cheese, 6 oz.; Pickled Cabbage, 4 pint; Salt, 7 oz.; Mustard, ½ oz.; Vinegar, ½ pint; Water, 3 quarts.—INTERMEDIATE PASSENGERS.—The same scale applies to intermediate passengers, with the addition of one pint of Ale or Porter, and half-pint of Wine, or quarter-pint of Spirits per day. Intermediate Passengers provide their own Beds, but are found in Earthenware and Table-linen, and have Inclosed Berths. For Steerage, new Beds and Bedding (Mattress, Bolster, two Blankets, and Rug), provided free of charge for Steerage Passengers.—All Emigrants should be vaccinated, all Married Couples carry certificates of marriage, and, having children, possess certificates of baptism. Supernumeraries desirable: with them letters are granted, pronouring friends on arrival. Women receive the same rations as Men. Children receive rations in proportion under twelve years of age to no rations. The first and Second Cabins supplied till passed the Downs, and as opportunities offer.—Daily Meals as follows: Breakfast, Tea or Coffee, and Sugar. Dinner, according to the above scale; Supper, Tea or Coffee, and Sugar. The Preserved Potatoes, being a nutritious vegetable, and imlaing throughout the longest voyage, supplied to all the passengers.

MEDICAL COMFORTS provided in the following proportions.—On every One Hundred passengers: 7 lb. Arrowroot; 32 lb. Preserved Beef, 100 pints Lemon-juice, and sugar to mix with it; 40 lb. Sea-biscuit; 12 bottles Port Wine; 12 do. Sherry Wine; 100 gal. Water; 20 do. Rum; 10 do. Brandy. In case of illness Barley served out; and, if required, Molasses per week substituted for 6 oz. Sugar, and half-pint Oatmeal per day for the Rice and Potatoes. Medicines issued free at the surgeon's discretion, proper. Women wet-nursing to have a pint of stout per day, if advised by the surgeon.

To respectable Steerage Emigrants to this prosperous Colony Mr. Joseph Christophers is willing to advance part of the passage-money, on receiving promissory notes. The passage averages from 16 guineas, according to age, as per Agreement. The Government allows 20 tons of coastal, but to show that they are no 2a. a day will be paid each passenger, if detained beyond the day above named. Passages in the Cabin, £36; Intermediate, £24; Steerage, £12 10s. each. Apply for Agreement of the Ship and Agent, to Mr. Joseph Christophers, 1, Bucklersbury, London.—All the Emigrants by the Orator, Guardian, Ann, and Margaret, Hardy arrived safe, and obtained immediate employment, only serving to increase the demand.—The Eighth Ship to follow in August.

BIOGRAPHICAL Sketch of RICHARD TOTHILL, Esq., of Heavitree, near Exeter, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and a Licentiate of the Apothecaries' Company, London, &c., &c., and the successful introducer of the Hygeian system of medicine, and the fallacy of the contradictory theories pursued by the faculty at the present day Mr. Tothill is the son of the Rev. John Tothill, of Cheriton Bishop, rector of Hillsleigh, in the county of Devon, and was born at Cheriton Bishop, in the year 1803. He received the first part of his medical education with William Collins, Esq., surgeon, of Kenton, Devon; he ultimately concluded his studies at Saint Bartholomew's Hospital, London, and was examined for his diploma at the College of Surgeons, by the late John Abernethy, Esq. The following is extracted from Mr. Tothill's case as published by him in 1835 "In Mr. Morson's own words, I had passed an illness of 12 months, during which time I took upwards of 12 bottles of wine per week, and from my boyhood I had passed a life of disease, paynical misery, and woe I began to run the gauntlet of all the remedies then in vogue in the habit of prescribing—nothing had any effect in giving me ease. Thus I continued year after year, struggling with disease. My speedy dissolution was often looked for, my meridian of life passed, the powers and energies of life fast subsiding. My faculties lingering—I was at descending into the grave. The slightest meal gave me all the horrors of indigestion that few languid days or nights could pass over me without vomiting, sleeplessness, my joints stiff, and my feet filled with excruciating pains, so that I could scarcely walk. Such was I on my thirtieth year, and from six years' occasional use of Mr. Morson's medicines, on and off, for weeks and months at a time, I have arrived at a state of perfect health. I now only require occasional doses of them during the year to keep me in that state. My family have experienced the same benefit, and by a few doses are kept in continual health. Can I, therefore, with such irrefragable proofs before my eyes, pursue the exercise of those fallacious theories which, as a medical man, I acquired in the medical schools?—Surely not. Heaven and earth cry against it!"—In consequence of the misrepresentations which have appeared in the medical papers and other channels respecting Mr. Tothill, we feel ourselves called upon to lay the above before the public.—(Signed) MORISON and MOAT.—Britain College of Health, Hamilton-place, New-road, London, June 9th, 1843.

CHURCHES OF THE METROPOLIS.—No. XXXII.

ALLHALLOWS, LONDON-WALL.

This church, dedicated to All-Saints, stands adjoining to the line of old London-wall, to the west of Broad-street, and from this circumstance had its second title to distinguish it from other churches also dedicated to All-Saints. In digging for a grave in the churchyard, in the year 1830, a mass of masonry, believed to be a portion of the London-wall, was uncovered behind the east end of the church, at about four feet from the present north wall of the yard.

There is no record of the foundation of Allhallows. The old church, in the pointed style, with a low timber tower, was taken down about 1764, and the present church erected on its site, at a cost of £2941. Mr. Dance, jun., was the architect. The first stone was laid July 10, 1765; the church was consecrated September 8, 1767. The exterior is of brick, and perfectly plain, except the tower, which is of stone, and surmounted by a small Corinthian temple. The tower itself is ill proportioned, and disfigured by an unsightly doorway.

Mr. Godwin describes the interior of the church as "a monument of bad taste, being not merely inappropriate, but of itself ill-designed, and very ugly. Attached columns, of the Ionic order, at the sides of the building, support a frieze instead of an entablature, from which rises a camerated ceiling, divided into a number of small panels, all absurdly overlaid with leaves and flowers, by way of ornament. A niche-headed recess serves for the chancel: the upper part of this is also formed into sunk panels, each containing a flower. Light is admitted to the church from small windows on either of the camerated ceiling. The pulpit is attached to the north wall, and is approached by a flight of steps from the vestry-room. A gallery at the west end of the church contains a diminutive organ. Over the communion table is a copy of Cortona's picture of 'Ananias restoring Paul to sight,' executed by Nathaniel Dance (afterwards knighted), and presented by him to the church. In the chancel is buried the Rev. W. Belce, M.A., twenty years rector of this parish." Mr. Belcer was an erudite classical scholar, and was one of the librarians of the British Museum. He once lived in the house in Brompton-row which was formerly occupied by Count Rumford, and subsequently, for a time, by Sir Richard Phillips. Dr. Davys, the present Bishop of Peterborough, and tutor to her Majesty, was formerly rector of Allhallows.

According to the parish books (which commence in 1455), an "ancker," or hermit, resided near the church, and appears to have been a benefactor to it; but it is difficult at this time to imagine the residence of a lonely man in the parish of Allhallows, London-wall.

CHESS.

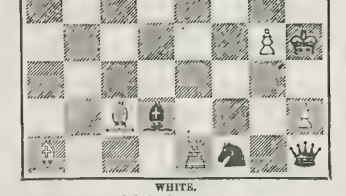
Solution to problem No. 28.

WHITE.	BLACK.
R to K 7th disc. ch.	K to K 4t one
R to K 8th ch.	K to K B 2nd
R to K B 8th ch.	K to K 3rd
R takes P at K B 6th ch.	K to Q 4th
R to Q 6th ch.	K to K 5th
R to Q 4th ch.	K to K B 6th
R to K 4th ch.	K to K 7th
R to K B 2nd ch.	K to Q 6th
B to his own square ch.	K to K 5th
R to K B 4th ch.	K to Q 4th
R to Q 4th ch.	K to K 3rd
R to K 4th ch.	K to K B 2nd
R to K B 6th ch.	K to K 1st
R to K B 8th ch.	K to R 2nd
R to K R 8th checkmate.

PROBLEM, No. 29.

White to mate with the Knight's Pawn in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

Solution in our next.

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of PALMER and CLAYTON), 10, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and published by WILLIAM LITTON, at 198, Strand, where all communications are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, July 1, 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 62.—Vol. III.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

THE VICE OF DUELLING.

The dreadful tragedy which has been enacted since we last had the honour to address our readers, while it has made a marked and absorbing impression upon the public mind, has spoken almost as with a voice from heaven to the Christian spirit of the community, and has, in a fearful form of moral warning, pointed to the great truth that the law of God is to be vindicated before the false pride and shame of that cruel human vanity which sets life upon its wicked hazard, and stains its brutal victory with blood. It will be felt at once that we allude to that dreadful fatal duel which is everywhere the theme of conversation and reflection, a melancholy story told again and again in every corner of society, and sounding the echoes of its sorrow in every saddened home. The death of Colonel Fawcett by the hand of the duellist has created a far-spread sensation of horror, of which the army, the Government, and the public opinion of the country should, with firm determination, take quick and grasping hold, for the purpose of crushing, now and for ever, the vast enormity of that social atrocity which has carried the gallant soldier to an early and dishonourable grave. All the details of the circumstance group themselves into a wretched and affecting picture.

Two officers are bound, not only by profession but almost by relationship, in ties of brotherhood; they are married to two sisters, and are thus drawn closer in the social circle than other men. One of them is in the strength of young manhood; he has attained rapid distinction, and, covered with the glory of the soldier, is the pride and hope of a loving and relying wife—that wife a joyful mother too. The other is a beaten soldier, one who worked his way to the rank which this duel has dishonoured—the father of older children than his friend's—the husband of a wife chosen out of the same home. The two men had blended their worldly families and their worldly affairs; a momentary brawl ensues—the quarrel of an instant, quick, hot, decided, over as soon as begun—but its result is Death. The cruelty of the world's pride steps in—the mockery of honour calls for its false vengeance—and the home-brawl of the moment becomes a horrible encounter of murder and cold blood. The distinguished young soldier is laid low, in the very prime of life and happiness, and almost by a brother's hand. His wife, watches his ebbing spirit in hopeless but devoted misery, until her love and glory have passed away with his being; and then rushes to the home of her orphan, and plunges her heart into the gloomy distraction of despair. Her sister may not console her there—she is the wife of the slayer of her husband, and she too may yet have to encounter the heart-rending spectacle of that husband's degradation under the accusation of murder at the criminal's bar. Sunshine has passed out of the two homes of trouble, and only from religion now can any light be gathered into their darkened rooms. And this shocking consummation of crime and wretchedness has been worked out in the name of honour, and under a mockery of social justice—false, merciless, and depraved.

Now does not humanity call aloud to us, as it were, to interpret the will of God, and vindicate the holiness of Christianity by making this crisis of human affliction the crisis also of the crime which gave it birth? Wipe away the stigma of duelling from the world's escutcheon, and let the sin perish from the bosom of the land. Let the press and the pulpit assist the people to put it down. Let all human eloquence and virtue and power have a voice for its extinction for evermore. Let the Government legislate to make the duel not only what it is—a murder—but a fatal and withering disgrace. Set it up peremptorily as the sign of banishment from the navy and army of the country; make it the bane of character, the curse of honour, the scorn and contumely of manhood, so that courage may no more be disgraced under its name. In the temples of God let the voices of the people's pastors discourse impressively of its folly in the sight of virtue; its desecration of the spirit of religion, its defiance of the commandments of Heaven. Let families spurn its false principle, and all the affections be arrayed against it wherever women would go unwidowed, or children dread the desolation of the orphan's fate. There is a text in the past week's catastrophe for the preaching of philosophy and Christianity all the nation through. The bitter tears and prayers of much affliction will hallow it, and the moral will engrave itself indelibly upon the country's heart. Now, too, let it test the sincerity of that noble association to the formation of which we sometime back awarded such hearty encouragement. We remember that it enrols within its ranks noblemen, statesmen, clergy, soldiers, sailors, and civilians of unimpeachable character and exalted rank devoted to the utter extinction of the duel; and now is the favourable moment when, with warm and timely exertion, that triumph may be achieved. Let these philanthropists then concentrate all their influence upon the point; the occasion, though melancholy, is indeed worthy of the struggle. In these remarks we are asking only for action upon enlarged principles for the future annihilation of the crime, and that this last deed of blood may set the crimson flat upon its doom. But with the individual features of the case we do not meddle, since Justice is not dead in England, and the public can feel no personal vengeance that should be stronger than the social law. Whatever result may eventuate, we know what lasting and poignant misery the implicated survivors of Colonel Fawcett must endure. The men who performed the wanton office of seconds, and mixed in a quarrel in which they had no sympathy that was not dishonourable—no pretence that was not false—could hardly have their punishment heightened even by the disgrace which we presume the Government, through the head of the Army, will visit upon their crime. Theirs is now the agony of spirit which is a retribution from Heaven—the remorse which rends the soul; they may escape the law, but not the haunting power of conscience refusing to be lulled. Most of all must he feel torture who has worked out the fatal deed. If God ever bestowed upon him a heart, the strong worm of an agonising and eternal sorrow must be gnawing bitterly at its core: the law may disgrace, destroy, or release him, but it cannot give him rest; the blood that is upon him can only be wiped away in Heaven.

EXHIBITION OF THE CARTOONS IN WESTMINSTER HALL.—See p. 34.

We cannot conclude the comments which we have felt it our duty to make upon the horrible occurrence that has transpired without most fervent aspirations that the spirit from which they receive vitality may work its pure purpose out; that humane and Christian feelings of cordial love for the human race—of cordial hate for the crime which alloys its brotherhood—may swell into a broad, bright, and beautiful river of benevolence that may roll its waters with fair majestic grandeur over the dark iniquity of the duel, so that no trace of its barbarism be left behind to sully the character of the nation, outrage the home-affections of the people, and conquer that moral courage of virtue which is the right arm of true honour and its fair unspotted shield.

EXHIBITION OF CARTOONS IN WESTMINSTER HALL.

On the 25th of April, 1842, the Commissioners appointed by the Queen—for the purpose of inquiring—first, whether, on the rebuilding the Houses of Parliament, advantage might not be taken of the opportunity thereby afforded of promoting and encouraging the Fine Arts; and, secondly, in what manner an object of such importance might be most effectually promoted,—resolved, that it would be expedient for the furthering of the object of their inquiry that means should, in the first place, be taken to ascertain whether fresco-painting might be applied with advantage to the decoration of the Houses of Parliament. With this view, and with the especial purpose of ascertaining the capabilities of British Artists for the performance of great historical works, they gave notice that three premiums of £300 each, three premiums of £200 each and five premiums of £100 each, would be given to the artists who should furnish cartoons which should respectively be deemed worthy of one or other of the said premiums by judges to be appointed to decide on the relative merit of the works. The drawings were to be executed in chalk or charcoal, but without colours; the size was to be not less than ten nor more than fifteen feet in their longest dimension; the figures not less than the size of life. Each artist to be at liberty to select his subject from the British history, or from the works of Spenser, Shakspere, or Milton.

This notice spoke trumpet-tongued to the dormant genius of the country; it was heralded in continuous proclamation for a period of twelve months, and at the time appointed one hundred and forty-two cartoons were delivered in. Some of these were sketches only; and these works the commissioners have made their award, and the entire collection was on Monday last thrown open to public view.

The exhibition is in every respect one of the grandest description. The principal works are nobly conceived and magnificently treated; and their united effect at once fills the spectator with a sense of delightful surprise and exulting sympathy. These feelings are in no small degree aided by the recollection which strikes every one that these great works have been rapidly produced in answer to the sudden and unexpected summons of the Government; and that notwithstanding the haste with which they have been produced, and the adventurous character of all the circumstances connected with them, they furnish unanswerable evidence that the country of Chaucer, Shakspere, and Milton, need not fear the artistic supremacy of that land which gluries in the names of Vinci, Michael Angelo, and Raffaelle. The number and character of the contributing artists is also felt to be a gratifying circumstance, for it is understood that upwards of one hundred persons have been engaged upon the drawings, and that the great majority of them are believed to be men "to fame unknown." There are of course many works of an ordinary description, and many that fail from the impossible character of the subjects chosen; but even in these there is a noble daring which reveals the existence of a spirit that only needs to be put in a right direction to produce works of a more worthy character. The prize cartoons are—

I. PREMIUMS OF THREE HUNDRED POUNDS.

61. "Cæsar's First Invasion of Britain." Edward Armitage, 13, George-street, Adelphi; and Prebury Mansion, Cheltenham.—Cæsar's galley is shown in the act of being dragged to shore by the united exertion of a number of Roman soldiers, while the naked barbarians opposed to the landing are urging their horses into the waves, and, by their gestures and shouts, bidding defiance to the invaders. In the conduct of this difficult subject the artist has followed the style of composition pursued by Le Brun, in his battles of Alexander; but with more feeling for his author, and a deeper discernment of character in the delineation of the heroes of the scene. The bustle, the pomp and circumstance of battle so happily rendered by the vivacious Frenchman, are here; but the tremendous passions of the conflict, which were things beyond the compass of his art, are given with a power and skil which, in England and elsewhere, we believe to be unparalleled. The Romans are evidently terrified,—their solemn pride and pageantry has given place to a desperate enthusiasm; and that ferocious, dogged, headlong resolution to pitch themselves on shore, which was so finely epitomized in the leap of the standard bearer, seems to be on the point of instant accomplishment. Meanwhile their gaunt opponents, the lean and painted savages, each one obeying the impulses of his own wild nature, are either dancing with passion, or simulating wrath by feints of desperate valour. The effect of these incidents is startling and grand in the extreme; and while they lead us to sympathise with the patriot chiefs, and, we may add, unbeaten defenders of our native land, they are no less direct in exciting us to sympathy with the painter in the potent magic of his art. The execution of this cartoon deserves great praise: a firm and singularly decided outline bounds the whole of the figures, the anatomy, with some exceptions, is appropriately [illegible] and the figures only want assist the main action being powerfully touched; and the physiognomy and expression of the various heads boldly and emphatically drawn.

84. "Caractacus led in Triumph through the Streets of Rome." George Frederick Watts, 41, Robert-street, Hampstead-road. In this grand design we are presented with the imperative British chief, his family, and his followers, walking in procession to meet the victorious Claudius. On that melancholy occasion, we are informed by Tacitus, that Caractacus alone was superior to misfortune. "With a countenance still unaltered, not a symptom of fear appearing, no sorrow, no condescension, he advanced with dignity even in ruin." All this is fairly told by the painter—the grand old man, firm as a riven rock, and in his barbaric pride, as grim and as unconquerable as a mastiff, strides through the crowded streets with more the air of victor than of vanquished. Nevertheless, it may be seen the iron has entered into his soul; the affections of the parent are revealed in the tightening grasp he takes of his trembling daughters; and the anguish of the captive Briton, as he surveys the wondrous power and magnificence of imperial Rome, is visible in the convulsed, the bewildered—the almost spectral expression of his wounds and eyes. The style of this cartoon seems to be founded on the combined excellencies of the old school of the Caraccis; and it may be taken to be a very exact exponent of the admirable principles on which it is understood the judges made their award, viz., "precision of drawing, a treatment of drapery uniting the imitation of nature with a reference to form, action and composition; and a style of composition less dependant on light and shade than on effective arrangement." In its general treatment the subject has, perhaps, lost a little of its power by a fastidious refinement, and by an evident predisposition in the mind of the artist to do mighty things in a graceful manner.

105. "First Trial by Jury." Charles West Cope, Hyde Parkgate, Kensington-gore. This picture represents twelve Saxon men, of good report, sitting in inquest on the body of a murdered man in the presence of the murderer himself. The subject is most happily chosen, and, as a subject, it will be seen on the 7 Alfred," which we shall presently notice, the only one of the prizes we should wish to see painted indelibly on the walls of the legislature. It is dear to us as a representation of the primitive constitution of our most ancient judicial court, and one, too, from which no small portion of our existing liberties have proceeded. The drawing is pure and forcible; the expression of the heads—Saxon -that is, if a certain air of homely, healthful, honest wisdom, may be taken to indicate the guileless physiognomy of that venerated people; and the varying attitudes are most descriptive and appropriate.

2. PREMIUMS OF TWO HUNDRED POUNDS.

10. "St Augustine Preaching to Ethelbert, and Bertha, his Christian Queen." John Callcott Horsley, 1, High-row, Kensington Gravel Pits. In this picture the artist seems to have allowed his modesty to suffocate his power, and to have permitted his care, in great measure, to check the darings of his genius. His work is highly meritorious, but it betrays a hand which might have carried it to a point of greater excellence.

124. "The Cardinal Bourchier urging the Dowager Queen of Edward IV. to give up the Sanctuary of York." John L. Bell, School of Design, Manchester. This is in our estimation the finest work of genuine English history that the country has yet produced. Simple and natural in its character, unexaggerated in its action, true in its costume, touching in its poetry, it captivates the judgment while it gratifies the taste and charms the affections. It is drawn in a broad, grand, and decisive manner, and displays in its most trifling details the hand of a great and original genius. We cannot praise it too highly.

128. "The Fight for the Beacon." Henry J. Townsend, Blandford Cottage, Old Brompton. In this subject the artist has represented an attack upon a party of men who had erected and fired a beacon on the seacoast with the intention of extinguishing the light, and by doing perhaps the vengeance is intended to convey from being communicated. This is a highly picturesque subject, and the artist has treated it with wonderful power and effect. A bold, adventurous spirit, full of grand thoughts, and an enterprising hand, rich in original resources, are apparent in the whole composition. The drawing is generally good. In massing the picture, the proportionate action of the figures has been lost, and a corresponding obscurity in the story has been induced. We should like to see this gentleman take up a subject of genuine English history, some point on which the liberties of the country have turned. We should be sure of a grand result.

3. PREMIUMS OF ONE HUNDRED POUNDS.

10. "Una alarmed by the Fauns and Satyrs." W. C. Frost, 48, Poland-street.—Here we find the virgin > doolful, desolate,

> With ruffled raiments, and disorder'd face,
> As her outrageous foe had left her late.

The "wyld wood-gods," pitying her unhappy state, and astonished at her beauty—> all prostrate upon the lowly playne,

> Doe kisse her feete, and fawne on her with countenance fayne.

This subject, however much it may affect us in a poem, is, in this age at least, beyond the province of a picture. The "salvage nation" and the "frowning forelands," "rough bounces," and "rustick horror" of its members, are scarcely tolerable in Titian; in Poussin they are unsupportable; and here, notwithstanding the admirable skull of the artist, they give no pleasure and excite no interest.

70. "Joseph of Arimathea converting the Britons." E. F. Paris, 17, Grafton-street, Bond-street.—A fable can hardly be permitted to range with the facts of English history; yet, here we have an exploded legend, "lying like Truth!" How is this? Is it that tradition and the fictions are in vogue again? If so, why not have chosen a more racy specimen of their "vain imaginations?" One traditional Joseph is as good as another; and if they be admitted at all in the decoration of our "Houses," we submit that Joseph of Glastonbury, converting his thousands by the unfathomable eloquence of a thorn stick, would be a more eligible piece of excellence be measured by the falsehood and absurdity of the first corrupters of our church, a more instructive subject. But we are forgetting Mr. Paris, whose cartoon, apart from the little judgment he has shown in the selection of his subject, is the least effective of the prize cartoons, in our opinion, by many degrees behind the merit of less fortunate exhibitors.

78. "Boadicea haranguing the Iceni." H. C. Selous, 5, Camden-street, Camden-town. This, although a very beautiful cartoon, is more remarkable for the quality of prettiness than for grandeur. It is very carefully and delicately executed, and has a fine effect when is displayed by any other work in the exhibition; but with all this it fails in producing the great impressions of the recorded history. The manner in which the passion of revenge is made to germinate in the breasts of the differently constituted hearers is very fine; but even this capital excellence is, as it were, a light under a bushel, being lost in the sameness of the figures and their features.

104. "Alfred submitting his Code of Laws for the approval of the Witan." John Bridges, 13, Charles-street, Berners-street.—This, like the "Trial by Jury," strikes us as being the kind of subject required in the decoration of our Parliamentary halls. It belongs to our universal history, and affects the living generation as much as it influenced the original actors. Mr. Bridges's cartoon is a very noble picture, full of sterling excellencies, and evincing great knowlege and great familiarity in the use of the pencil. We regret that our limits do not permit us to notice his labours more in detail.

111. "Eleanor saves the Life of her Husband (afterwards Edward I.), by sucking the poison from the wound in his arm, given him by a Saracen assassin, in the Holy Land." Joseph Severn, 21, James-street, Buckingham-gate.—This picture is remarkable for its invention, and for its wonderful sweetness and purity of drawing. Had the composition been a little more condensed, it would, in our opinion, have taken the first rank in the competition. His beautiful picture of Angelica in the present exhibition of the Royal Academy filled us with vast expectations of his future greatness; and we are happy to say that his present work confirms the justness of our anticipation.

Next week we shall resume the subject in a concluding notice, when we hope to present the public with a finely engraved copy of the "Trial by Jury."

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, July 4.—The position of Espartero is daily becoming more critical, and it cannot be denied that the insurrection is spreading in all parts of the kingdom, yet I am firmly of opinion that his cause is not so desperate as made out by the French journals, and that, should he succeed in either entering Valencia or driving the insurrectionary army before him, the National Guards and decided regular troops would return to his standard. We are told that the insurgents possess 21 provinces, represented by 155 deputies, and having 135,585 National Guards; whilst Espartero has but 14 provinces, with 80 deputies, and 75,000 National Guards; and further, that the insurgents have 60 battalions of regular troops, thus stationed—28 in Catalonia, 8 in Andalusia, 8 in Burgos, and the remainder in Navarre and Galicia. There is little doubt that this statement is greatly exaggerated, but, even were it true, I still repeat that the cause of order and tranquillity is far from being lost. It is a well-known fact that positive instructions had been sent to the different Captain-Generals, that sooner than fire on the people to put themselves at the head of the rising, so that by this means not only will they continue in command of their troops, but, in the event of a success by Espartero, be able to return to him. Many of the battalions stand in this position, and cannot be depended on by the insurgents. Besides, Spain has upwards of eleven millions of inhabitants, and, surely, it cannot be for a moment entertained that 140,000 undisciplined National Guards, and 60 battalions of deserters, are to govern the country and depose the Executive at their will and pleasure. The great majority of the people are either Carlists or Esparteristas, and take no part, except by force or intimidation, in the present movement. The insurgents work on their feelings in spreading reports the most infamous, but fortunately without much effect. Will it be credited that a body of men calling themselves honest patriots would publish the following declaration:—"That the Dictator had quitted Madrid to drown the liberties of the Spanish people in Spanish blood, but that his pride would be lowered, for that the last hour of his tyrannical power had tolled!" And yet they have done so, and gone still further, for General Serrano, constituting himself a real dictator, has declared Espartero deprived of his rights as Regent. Who are the people who drown the liberties of the Spanish people in Spanish blood? The insurgents! for they took up arms to combat a constitutional act of Espartero! Who exercised tyrannical power? The insurgents! for, by intimidation and violence openly, they, at the point of the bayonet, endeavour to impose on the nation a ministry, if not obnoxious, certainly unknown to it! Who is the real dictator? General Serrano! the insurgent! who, without consulting any regularly constituted assembly, deprives Espartero of the regency! And by whom is the insurrection got up? By the immoral coalition of the partisans of Christina, called Moderados, with men from Spain because they were considered ultra-liberals, opposing the liberal projects of Espartero; and the ultra-liberals of the day, men who declared that Espartero is not sufficiently liberal! Can such opposite elements, however for a moment all principles may be thrown aside, ultimately succeed? And should they succeed, can they give to Spain permanent tranquility? Never! It is morally impossible; for, of this be assured, that within six months, of all events before the majority of the Queen, the same Moderates and Liberals would strive to get possession of the Government, and again deluge unhappy Spain in blood!

But the question of the highest importance presents itself and demands imperatively the immediate attention of the British Government, and I trust the subject, without loss of time, will be brought before Parliament. I allude to the conduct of the French Government. Let not Lord Aberdeen pretend that he cannot act unless some overt act be committed by France. I will furnish him with one. All the Spanish generals attached to the cause of Christina, and who were expelled from Spain by Espartero, or who fled from the country, having been condemned by a court-martial, are permitted to traverse France and pass the frontier with a French passport, and let loose the sian of he Spanish counsels! Let a foreigner of any description present himself at the office of the police, and he is told that, before the French can viser the passport, it must bear the signature of their consul or ambassador. Let a Christina general present himself, and, although it is known that he is the chief of the insurrection in Andalusia? Narvaez, Concha, and Pezuela, the decided partisans of Christina, the deadly enemies to Espartero? These, and many others of the same description, quit Paris with passports, en règle, without the signature of the Spanish consul! Now, listen to what says Le Journal du Commerce of this morning:—"It is well known that Christina lives in the Rue Rivoli-Bourg, Rue de Concelles. The whole of that part of the town was in consequence filled with Spanish refugees, attached to her cause. At the present moment not a single person of that party is to be found there: all are now left for Catalonia, Andalusia, and Valencia. MONEY, ARMS, AND AMMUNITION ARE CONTINUALLY BEING FORWARDED. On the other hand, the Minister of War has communicated to the Chambers that his staff is with the military divisions of the Pyrenées." Surely all this borders closely on an intervention, at all events an indirect intervention. And yet England remains quiet and the French Government has not even thanked for it. No! we are accused of not interfering on the coast of Spain, being desirous during the troubles of smuggling great quantities of goods into the country!

Such conduct should be taken of the extraordinary conduct of the French press, which with unbushing effrontery declared that the insurrection in Spain is directed against England—against Espartero, as being the friend of England. Our French friends are strange beings: they lately accused Guizot with being a friend to England; they called him Lord Guizot; they denounced him as acting under the instructions of Lord Aberdeen; and yet not a word or a look out upon him from the departments remained quiet; M. Guizot remains minister. Ay, but says the French, it is different in Spain; we may permit Guizot to be an English minister in France, because it does not suit our purpose to expose ourselves to a civil war; but a war in Spain cannot hurt us, and, therefore, "Hatred to England!" as said the Courrier Français yesterday -Espartero shall not be a friend to England! This conduct would show a great deal of prudence, but adds not to the known valour of the most civilized na tion in Europe.

The great majority of the Spanish people are greatly attached to England; and well they may. Who saved the independence of the country, and drove the French from Spain? England, and having done so retired! Who aided most in driving Don Carlos from Spain? England. The conduct of France was shuffling and vacillating. Who religiously, to her own detriment, fulfilled every article of the quadruple alliance? England. France evaded every stipulation! Is it therefore to be wondered at that Spain is more attached to England than France? Can it for a moment be doubted that the Spaniards have forgotten the famous offer made by Louis Philippe to the regency of Cadiz, or his conduct as to Catalonia? No; Spaniards reflect and forget not, and ultimately order, tranquility, and good faith must triumph.

The last accounts state that Espartero, on the 28th, still remained at Albacete, which place he entered on the 25th. It is supposed that he is collecting a considerable force before he commences a decided movement.

The French accounts from Catalonia state that there is much desertion from the ranks of Zurbano. This may be true or not, but this is positive that the insurgents cannot depend on the troops of Prim de Reuss, and that a great many of them have been enrolled in the foreign legion, and will be sent to Algiers. Zurbano still possesses several fortified towns in Catalonia, amongst others Lerida, Seo, and Tortosa, and from the impunity of the French Government that the Priest Gill, a Carlist, a particular friend of Marot'o, who has been residing for some time in Aire, in the department of the Landes, at the head of a band of insurgents, has suddenly received orders to remove himself into the interior; the French ministers are probably afraid that he may disturb the tranquility of the Basque provinces.

The Marengo French man-of-war has arrived on the Spanish coast. Several ships of the line and large frigates are fitting out for the same destination. I forgot to mention that a person of some standing in French diplomacy, in conversation with me on Spanish affairs, observed, "C'est le pouvoir de Colon et non de principes."

The Duke d'Aumale reached Paris yesterday; he was most enthusiastically received along the road.

The chapel of St. Ferdinand, situated on the road of Revolt, at Sablonville, the spot where the late lamented Duke of Orleans died, will be inaugurated on the 11th; M. Cordier, the person from whom the land was taken, has been named the guardian of the chapel. On the 13th, the anniversary of the fatal event, the Royal Family proceed to Dreux, where a funeral service will be performed.

M. Ivan has been cast on most of our fashionable saloons by the sudden death, in a bath, of the eldest son and private secretary of M. Lacave Laplatane, the Minister of Finance, and that of the beautiful and accomplished daughter of M. Barrot, the leader of the opposition. Miss Marie Barrot was eighteen years of age, and the idol of all those acquainted with her.

Trade of every description is very bad in France. The Echo du Nord observes, that at the same time last year, 1842, a great deal of France carried on a brisk trade with Spain, but that, at the present moment, not a single bale was sent across the Pyrenées. Owing to the late bad weather, the price of corn has greatly risen in many parts of the country, and the harvest will be very bad. On the 25th of June the department of Lot and Garonne was visited with a most dreadful hailstorm; all the corn and hemp is totally destroyed, the tobacco nearly so, and all the plums have been knocked off the trees."

Madame Geerzel de Sepoteria has obtained the gold medal for her paintings exhibited in the Louvre this year. The King has purchased her portrait of Prince Miloseh for the Gallery of Portraits at Versailles.

The celebrated Doctor Samuel Hahnemann, the originator of the homœopathic system, died on Sunday morning in Paris. The doctor was born at Meersen, in Germany, on the 10th of April, 1755.

The young and talented violoncellist Jacques Offenbach leaves Paris on Friday next for Douai, to assist at the musical festival. It is the intention of M. Offenbach to continue on his route to his native country, Germany, and give several concerts. This truly astonishing and melodious artiste will visit London next season. Meyerbeer is expected in Paris on the 24th; he brings with him his celebrated "Requiem," composed by him in Berlin. The Spanish pianist M 70, accompanied by Signora Jenni Lezard, after giving a series of concerts at Cadiz, leaves for London. The opera of "Saul," the music by Bouzzi, has been most enthusiastically received at Ferrara.

MISS FANNY OLIVIER has met with great success at Rome in "Norma." It is supposed that there will be upwards of 30.0 singers at the musical festival of Zurich, which takes place the latter end of the m nth

The following list of Rossini's works I think will be found interesting. Rossini was born at Pesaro on the 29th of February, 1792. In the month of August, 1808, he composed, "Il Pianto d'Armonia," and the following year the opera "Demetrio e Polibio." In 1810 was represented, at Venice, his "Cambiale di Matrimonio," 1811, at Bologna, his "L'Equivoco Stravagante;" 1812, at Rome, "Demetrio e Polibio;" 1812, at Venice, "Ciro-genno Felice;" 1813, at Ferrara, "Ciro in Babilonia;" 1813, at Venice, "La Scala di Seta;" 1812, at Milan, "La Pietra del Paragone;" 1812, at Venice, "L'Occasione fa il Ladro;" 1813, at Venice, "Il Figlio per Azzardo;" 1813, at Venice, "Tancredi;" 18 3 at Venice, "Italiana in Algeri;" 1814, at Milan, "Aureliano in Palm ra;" 1814, at Milan, "Il Turco in Italia;" 1815, at Naples, "Elisabetta;" 1815, at Venice, "Sig smondo;" 1816, at Rome, "Torvaldo e Dorliska;" 1816, at Rome, "Il Barbiere di Siviglia;" 1816, at Naples, "La Gazzetta;" 1816, at Naples, "Otello;" 1817, at Rome, "La Cenerentola," 1817, at Milan, "La Gazza Ladra;" 1817, at Naples, "Armida;" 1819, at Rome, "Adelaide di Borgogna;" 1818, at Naples "Mosè in Egitto" 1818, at Naples, "Ricc rdo e Zoraide;" 1819, at Naples, "Ermione;" 1819, at Venice, "Ed ardo e Cristina;" 1819 at Naples, "Donna del Lago;" 1819, at Milan, "Bianca e Falliero;" 1814, at Naples, "Maometto Secondo;" 1821, at Rome, "Matilde di Shebran," 1822, at Naples, "Zelmira;" 1823, at Venice, "Semiramide;" 1825, at Paris, "Il Viaggio a Reims;" 1826, at Paris, "Le Siege de Corinthe;" 1827, at Paris "Moise;" 1828, at Paris, "Le Comte Ory;" 1829, at Paris, "Guillaume Tell." Thus Rossini wrote thirty-eight operas in twenty years, and was forty-seven years of age when he brought out "Guillaume Tell."

THE Prince and Princess Elie Dagorousky reached Paris on Saturday last. Two Persian princes named Mirza-Khan have landed at Marseilles from on board the Rhamses

The Tarbes races commence on the 16th and end on the 27th of August.

The following is a statement of the receipts of two of the principal railways in Paris for the month of June:—Versailles (rive Droche), 135 022 passengers; Saint Germains, 126.479 passengers. Total for the month for Versailles, 111,848 francs; for Saint Germains, 145 557 francs. Corbeil line, 74,620 passengers; Orleans line, 50,339 passengers. Amount received for the two, 434,922 francs.

Arrangements have been made for transporting the 8th from Dieppe by van to Rouen, and from thence by railway to Paris, so that the 8th brought into Dieppe during the night will be in Paris the next morning by ten o'clock. The fish contractors now pay for horses to Paris 310 francs; by this arrangement with the railway it will only cost them 114 francs.

The fine residence of Millie Lecomard, the celebrated fortune-teller, took place on the 28th, at the church of Saint Jacques-des-Haut Pas, Rue d'Enfer? The inside of the church was lined with white drapery. The body was afterwards taken to Père Lachaise followed by a great many of her scholars.

Louis Philippe was born on the 6th of October, 1773, and will be 70 years of age on the 6th of October next. He is the first of the race of Orleans that has attained so great an age. The average age of the seventy kings who have reigned in France, since the foundation of monarchy, is about thirty years

The Government has ordered a medal to be struck in honour of M. Leseps, of Barcelona notoriety. On one side is engraven, "To Ferdinand de Lesseps, Consul-General at Barcelona, the French nation grateful;" and on the other side, "The events of Barcelona in November 1842."

Within the last few days we have had most sultry weather in Paris, and, though long expected, summer has come at last.

It is said that immediately after the session of Parliament the King in person will plant the national flag on the fortifications of Paris.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

INDIA.

We have received our files of papers from India and China, brought by the Overland Mail, which reached Paris on Friday last. The former bring news of the 20th of May, and the latter of the 28th of March. As the principal contents of these journals, which we subjoin, will be found highly interesting:—

SUMMARY.—The approach of the monsoon requiring the steamer to be despatched ten days earlier than usual, cuts a fourth off the time over which our monthly intelligence usually extends. The past twenty days, besides, have been barren in events of moment, and our present paper is, in consequence, comparatively unimportant. Her Majesty's 22nd have arrived in Bombay, the Grenadiers having been detained at Kurrachee. General Nasper being without Europeans at Hyderabad, Major Outram has been succeeded to join him on the 3rd; the wing of the 2nd Bombay European regiment having been ordered to take its place at Kurrachee, whitherward as is the Black Squadron of Her Majesty's 78th Highlanders have been despatched. Ali Moorad, to whom Khyrpoor was made over, is said to have played the traitor to us. Shere Mahomed is collecting troops at a strong post about five miles from Hyderabad, where the hill tribes were expected to join, and were flocking to his standard. His force is already said to exceed in numbers any Scindian army we have yet encountered. Sir C. Napier, it was understood, proceeded against them so soon as the state of the troops concentration and arrival of reinforcements would permit, so that we may have, by our next, to recount the particulars of another battle as fierce and bloody as those of Meeanee and Hallalee. The insurrection at Kuytul has been completely suppressed, and the country quieted at once. Insurrection continues but a little abated in Bundlecund. Our Chinese advices extend to the 28th of March. Colonel Malcolm had arrived on the 16th with the treaty, in the ratification of which the death of Eleepoo was likely to occasion great delay; the Secretary of Legation is understood to be about to return to Pekin, and to bring out with him when he comes back a new governor to Sir Henry Pottinger, the plenip tentiary having earnestly solicited permission to retire. The general aspect of matters in China continued unsuspicious throughout India, with the exceptions already enumerated, tranquility continues to reign. All is peaceful in the Sikh territory, though it seems likely this may not long endure. Shere Singh has had a stroke of palsy. We are nearly devoid of interest from Afghanistan.

SCINDE.—Our intelligence from Hyderabad, which in our last extended to the 19th of April, now comes down to the 10th of May. Sir C. Napier, from the former to the latter of these dates, continued to occupy the entrenched camp on the Indus, four miles from Hyderabad. The following is the disposition of the troops:—The 6th and 20th, and wing of the 15th, and Blood's Battery, are about to start from Sukkur to Schwan; in the fort of Hyderabad are the 8th, 12th, and a detachment of the 6th, and Hutt's Battery; in a village close to Hyderabad, the 21st; in the breastwork around the late Residency are Leslie's troop of Horse Artillery, Whittle's battery of 9-pounders, the Bengal 9th Cavalry, and Bombay 3rd Cavalry; across the river, in a grove near the village of Koiree, is the 25th Regiment. We stated in our last that her Majesty's 22nd and the 1st Grenadiers had both left Bombay, and that the latter was about to return to Kurrachee, extended The Royal Regiment has arrived at the Presidency, but the Grenadiers remain behind at Kurrachee. Her Majesty's 22nd suffered so severely from sickness on board at Scinde last year, as to surround such troops as these in the bait es of the 17 h Feb and 24th March, that it was deemed expedient to permit them to return to India, and their departure had left but one European regiment, her Majesty's 25th, on the whole line of the Indus. This was ordered from Kurrachee, whence it marched on the 3rd of May, on its way overland to Hyderabad, the baggage and attendants being sent by the river. Sir Charles Napier's animosities that are, are also not few, and fired in Scinde appeared anything but likely to be realised. Shere Mahomed had been safe to make his way across the river, and into the mountains of the country to the west westward, where he immediately began to raise the tribes These having flocked in great numbers to his standard, he returned to Scinde, and took up his head-quarters at the strong post of Sukkurud on the Indus, betwixt Sukkur and Hyderabad, fifty miles from the latter. Ali Moorad, at all times known as a stirrer up of strife, and latterly a traitor, is understood to have played us false, and to have put the entire possession of the artillery and ammunition into Shere's hands. The rumour is unauthenticated, but nothing can be more probable. The force assembled is stated by a Hyderabad correspondent at from 30,000 to 40,000 men, with 50 guns: this we should suppose to be exaggerated, though we see no improbability in a larger army assembling once more to try their strength, then any of the two we have yet encoun ered. The season, meanwhile, rapidly approaches when the movement of troops in the interior is impeded by the inundations of the river, and the heat while for three months all communication by sea is cut off by the monsoon. On these grounds it became of the utmost importance to despatch European reinforcements without delay. The 78th Highlanders, from Bombay, were put in orders, but apprehensions being entertained that by the time they should arrive at Sukkur would be too heavy to permit their land ng, the left wing of the 2nd European Regiment, quartered at Colabah, was despatched on the 8th. The right wing of the same regiment, which had just before been ordered to return from Poona, was directed to remain where it was. From the storm which now seemed gathering on the northward, the force appeared inadequate, and the Highlanders were once more put in orders. The latter wing, 400 strong, left Bombay on the 15th and 17th, on board the steamers Semiramis and Cockatiel. Should they be found impossible to disembark at Kurrachee, they will return to the Presidency Meanwhile every effort is being made to keep open the communication with Bhooj by the line of the desert. The 11th Native Infantry, stationed at Colabah, was despatched to the latter post from A mednabad, having occupied twenty days on the march; while Captain Davidson, with 200 men, had crossed the Runn to Deypla in Scinde; another detachment of 100 men had been dispatched to Bhuj. On the 28th of April Captain Foljett, and 50 men of the 25th Native Infantry, were despatched from Hyderabad in a steamer, to sink, burn, and destroy the whole river craft, by which the Beloochees from the westward might cross. Serious apprehensions for the health of the troops during the ensuing sickly season began to be entertained. A report, believed for a time to be authentic, which reached Bombay from Scinde, to the effect that some of the ladies of the Zenana were residing in camp in the tents of the officers, and in consequence became the subject of severe animadversion, turned out to be wholly groundless. The Bombay Times, in whose columns it first appeared, took the earliest opportunity of contradicting it on the information procured at the fa tory. The ladies of the Zenana had been treated with all care, and the conduct of the army has been throughout most exemplary. The Jam, or Chief of the Jokias, from whose depredations around Kurrachee so much annoyance had been experienced, had made submission, and agreed to live at peace with us. It was this tribe that cut off our communications, and robbed the mails proceeding into the interior. Until the arrival of the Europeans from Bombay the force at Kurrachee, subsequent to the departure of her Majesty's 28th, was reduced to two native regiments. It is understood that hereafter no Bombay troops will be sent higher up the Indus than Hyderabad, and that Sukkur, and the posts adjoining, will be occupied by a Bengal brigade. This arrangement seems judicious. Our latest news from Sukkur comes to 5th May. The force consisting at the former post would seem to be that already enumerated, consisting of the Camel Battery, Blood's Battery, Cormick's Company of Artillery, the right wing of the 9th Regiment, and the whole of the 25th Regt. The 8th and 20th, and a wing of the 7th Bengalese N.I.; Boileau's troop of the 4th Cavalry, and a Horse, and Mosse's Company of Artillery, were ordered up. The spears, swords, and matchlocks of Cornet Bertoli and Lieut Lewis's troop of Irregular Cavalry are on the left; they were expected to arrive at head-quarters on the 10th May. Their Brigadier is—Mesers. Cocke, Riddell, and Le Bas—had ordered to Delhi. The Scinde army, the Bengal Army, all save one, proceed this afternoon, under charge of an escort of the Poonah troops, to Decrah Sassoor, a fort of the Peishwa, betwixt Poonah and Sattara, having been selected them as a place of residence. The Meer Dasod has been sent to Surat, under charge of Lieutenant Lavie, to be confined, we presume for life, in the castle. He is suspected to have had some cognizance of, or connection with, the parties implicated in the murder of Lieutenant Ennis, the principal of whom has already been executed. None of the ladies of the Zenana attended or followed the Ameers—the statement that they did so tarnishing out unfounded. The principal part of the prize property found at Hyderabad, consisting of jewelled weapons, matchlocks, golden and enamelled saddles, with valuable jewellery and precious stones, is to be exposed for sale at Bombay, some time in November next. It is probable that by our next number positive battle will have been fought, although the tidings are unlikely to have reached us by the 19 h of June. So completely shut up against us are all parts of the country, and so thoroughly and effectually does the insurrectionary spirit prevail, that despatches can only be sent from one station to another by an armed escort, or strong military escort. The collectors we have appointed will require a brigade to escort them on the execution of their duties. Were once we have exterminated the Belo chees, however, this state of affairs will probably improve; The Hindoo serfs, who till the soil, ever anxious for a change of masters, have received us in the most friendly manner. We have not reason at any time to fear their enmity, nor much to regard their friendship. Fifty lacs of treasure, half a million sterling, is on its way to Hyderabad, to pay the troops. This amounts to about eighteen months' revenue of the whole of Scinde!

THE PUNJAUB.—A storm seems brewing on the Satlej, not unlikely to burst forth on the Punjaub. Shere Singh, faithful to us in our adversity since we have extermina ed the Belo chees, however, this state of affairs will probably improve; The Hindoo serfs, who till the soil, ever anxious for a change of masters, have received us in the most friendly manner. We have not reason at any time to fear their enmity, nor much to regard their friendship. Fifty lacs of treasure, half a million sterling, is on its way to Hyderabad, to pay the troops. This amounts to about eighteen months' revenue of the whole of Scinde!

THE PUNJAUB.—A storm seems brewing on the Satlej, not unlikely to burst forth on the Punjaub. Shere Singh, faithful to us in our adversity since we have exterminated the Belo chees, however, this state of affairs will probably improve; The Hindoo serfs, who till the soil, ever anxious for a change of masters, have received us in the most friendly manner. We have not reason at any time to fear their enmity, nor much to regard their friendship. Fifty lacs of treasure, half a million sterling, is on its way to Hyderabad, to pay the troops. This amounts to about eighteen months' revenue of the whole of Scinde!

AFFGHANISTAN.—Fresh troubles seem arising in Affghanistan Persian influence is said to be on the ascendant at Candahar, from which, indeed Mahomed Beg, being reported to have got possession of the city The Kuzzilbashes are said to be supreme at Cabul. Both rumours are to be received with caution, information from beyond the passes being in the last degree uncertain. Dost Mahomed is still at Peshawur, waiting the conclusion of Mahomed Ukbar's negotiations at Jellalabad. The Khyberries, with whom he is said to be ready to treat, refuse to take less than 20,000 for the use of the passes, a sum which the Ameer and his son are little likely to raise at present!

BUNDLECUND.—The disorders in this quarter still continue, though upon a somewhat more limited scale than formerly. About the beginning of April Sir Richmond Shakespere went out with two companies of sepoys, and a resaldh of irregular horse, to endeavour to recover a plunder which was known would be attempted, the Boondelas having assembled for that purpose. On the 3rd the insurgents burnt the village of Gowah, and on the 5th they attacked and plundered that of Jalanah. Three men were wounded, but none killed: the whole property of the villagers was destroyed or carried off. Major Lech has exchanged the peaceful and profitable duty of escorting the gates to the restored temple of Somnauth for that of driving rebels to their fastnesses. He started on the scent of some proscribed chiefs about the 10th of April, with seven troopers and twenty sepoys—a detachment hazardously small for such a service. On the 13th a party of insurgents attacked the troops stationed at Bughors, where the gallant affair of Brigadier Young occurred about six months since. The assailants were driven off, but not until after four sepoys had been killed and three wounded. The latest news is much more favourable. Tej Singh, the chief rebel, who was lately at the head of 5000 or 6000 men, had been captured, and his followers dispersed with scarce any resistance, it is what, ever. Our latest letter is of the 29th ult., from Nagong, which station was described as flourishing, and rising rapidly into importance. The Jeypore Rajah was still at urge, and the rebels had once or twice attacked the outposts, which were considered to be too numerous.

MISCELLANEOUS.—Lord Ellenborough continues for the present at Agra, and so do the gates. A portion of the latter has been sent to the cosmos of the Asiatic Society for examination, and is said to be monumental, being of wood but pure. The Governor-General, it is reported, means to visit Scinde during the cold season

Some calumnies have appeared against the conduct of the 1st Grenadiers in a Bombay daily newspaper. They seem utterly groundless: the conduct of this fine regiment is admitted by all who were present, when they are said to have misconducted themselves, to have been most excellent.

It has been resolved to erect a monument to the late Sir W. Macnaghten, whose remains have arrived at, and been buried at Calcutta. Numerous earthquakes of small moment have prevailed over the month. The American case-ship has not yet appeared.

CHINA.

China papers have been received to the 28th of March. Colonel Malcolm had arrived on the 16th from Bombay, with the treaty of Pekin. Ching Hiepoo survived, this would have been ratified on the part of the Chinese Government within a few days of its arrival; as it was, a couple of months' delay was feared would ensue, during which time no progress could be made in forwarding commercial arrangements. Sir Henry Pottinger had been disabled from proceeding to the northward, in case of missing the Chinese Emperor at his way southward to Canton. The Chinese commenced of an attack on Captain Cecil, of the French frigate Erigone, which still undergoing punishment. The Mandarins seemed anxiously and sedulously to keep from the knowledge of the Emperor who had hitherto held aloof. The local authorities were about to take active measures for the suppression of piracy, but had respectfully declined our co-operation. Sir H. Pottinger considered it proper that they should be left to themselves, so long as there appeared any probability of their exertions being successful. The hostile feeling of the citizens of Canton appeared to be wearing away.

Lieut. Gordon, of the Royal Engineers, had left Amoy for Ningpo, on his way to England, a reference about some details requiring to be made. Sir H. Pottinger has pleaded so hard to be permitted to retire, that it is supposed his successor will come out with the Secretary of Legation on his return.

IRELAND.

The most extraordinary popular demonstration ever witnessed in the city of Dublin took place on Monday last, on the occasion of the meeting of the tradesmen of Dublin to petition for a repeal of the legislative union. From the early hour of eight o'clock the streets were thronged by multitudes anxious to witness the various trades p oceeding to the place of rendezvous, the beautiful village of Phibsborough, to the northern suburbs. Each of the trades, headed by its temperance band, marched two and two, under their some instances, four abreast, with the utmost precision and regularity, the bands playing "Patrick's Day," "Garryowen," "God save the Queen." "See the Conquering Hero comes," and other popular airs. In one man conducting the trade processions were generally comfortably dressed, and exhibited a very cleanly and creditable appearance. One very numerous procession, that of the coal porters, all dressed in the full suit of coal frocks, but preceded at once to the place of meeting, the celebrated fair-green of Donnybrook, which they entered about seven o'clock, headed by a band of forty musicians. About half past seven all the various lines of movement from Phibsborough commenced, and the trades, with their various bands playing, proceeded to Merrion-square. The procession passed on to the south side of the square, and after going up in good order as the pressure of the multitude would allow, oppo ite the residence of Mr. O'Connell. Here the scene was really a most extraordinary manifestation of enthusiasm. Mr. O'Connell, accompanied by the ladies and other members of his family, appeared on the balcony in front, whilst the bands struck up "See the Conquering Hero comes," and the multitude cheered with a degree of animation and heart new which was never equalled on any popular exhibition. The Evening Mail estimates the numbers at "considerably over one hundred thousand persons;" but other calculations make it double that number. There was a great number of horsemen, farmers, and others from the neighbouring counties. The fair-green, containing about fifteen acres, was crowded, as well as the road adjacent, and part of the village. The multitude, notwithstanding its immense extent, was perfectly tranquil and orderly throughout the proceedings. It is needless to say that the usual amount of speechifying took place on the occasion. On Tuesday, the usual weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place at the Corn Exchange-rooms, when Mr. O'Connell announced the "rent" for the week to be 2798 14s.

DISMISSAL OF MAGISTRATES.—The following magistrates have been struck off the list:—Lynch, Esqs. borough of Galway; Peter A. Daly, Esq., county of Galway; Alexander Sherlock, Esq., borough of Waterford; Richard Duckett, Esq., county of Waterford; Thomas A. Joyce, Esq., county of Galway, the latter at his own request

SHOCKING ACCIDENT AT THE THEATRE ROYAL.—On Monday evening, while the tragedy of Macbeth was in course of representation, for the benefit of Mr. Anderson, a young man, appeared about 20 years of age, rather tall, and of slender frame a bottle, such as is used for containing pickles, from the gallery at Mr. Calcraft, and threw recklessly exclaimed, "Down you oh! Calcraft, Calcraft, Calcraft; villain, villain, villain." He then threw himself into a menacing attitude, brandishing a huge pocket-knife, the blade of which resembled a dagger, and, still looking towards the stage, uttered in a violent and incoherent manner other expressions of a similar character. Policeman 39 B, throughout the house, and Thomas M'Cabe, who sat in an opposite direction to the same gallery, seized the young man by the wrist of the right hand to secure the knife, and in the course of a hard struggle the desperate overturned and dropped on his feet in the middle gallery, where, without a moment's hesitation, he sprung into the pit, and fell outside the orchestra. He was removed on a stretcher, procured at College street Police office, to Mercer's Hospital, where he breathed his last after an interval of a few hours. No cause has been assigned for the unfortunate man's conduct.

BALLOON ASCENT.—Mr. Gypson, the aeronaut, made an ascent in his balloon from Dublin on Thursday last, and from the direction of the prevailing wind he was carried seaward, and was obliged to descend in the water near Braybead. He was fortunately rescued from his perilous situation by Captain Deane, of the Coast Guard Station, who directed the efforts of some fishermen.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

The Commerce states, that from amongst a number of pigeons brought from Antwerp, and released at Paris on Sunday last, seven performed the first accomplished the distance from Paris to Antwerp in two hours and twenty minutes, the seventh in five hours and fifty minutes.——A man, named Hawtry, who was trolling, a short time since in the Thames, at Clewer, near Windsor, hooked a pike which weighed upwards of 30lbs., and is three feet seven inches and a half in length.——On Saturday last, the Rose Peel Estate of half-yearly audit was held at Tamworth, when 10 per cent. was returned to the whole of the tenantry. This substantial mark of consideration on the part of their landlord gave uniform satisfaction.——On Tuesday afternoon Mr. A. B. Bryer, one of the guardians of the poor of the parish of St. Mary Newington, Surrey (at his sole expense), gave an entertainment to the children belonging to the workhouse of that parish, both boys and girls, sixty in number, at the Surrey Zoological Gardens.——Mr. Macready embarks in the autumn for New York, and it is expected that he will remain in the United States until the commencement of the ensuing summer. Until he takes his departure, we understand that he means to endeavour to recruit his health by a total abstinence from professional labour.——Accounts from Guadaloupe, of the 16th May, state that the Governor had been busied in getting the hospital and public edifices rebuilt, but was obliged to suspend the works in consequence of a smart shock of an earthquake which was felt on the 11th.——The daughter of M. Odilon Barrot has died suddenly, and left that gentleman's family in great affliction.——The Poor-law Commissioners have delegated the powers of the commission for the management of the Irish department of the Poor-law to their Assistant-Commissioners, Edward Gulson and Alfred Power, Esqrs.——It was reported in Madrid that Mr. Henry Bulwer was to replace Mr. Aston.——The Turkish Government is making extraordinary efforts to assemble an army of 200,000 men for the encampments at Constantinople and Adrianople.——The Government has at present under consideration plans for quickening the intercourse between England and Ireland, by forming a railway from Chester to Liverpool, on the plan proposed by Mr. George Stephenson.——According to the last census of the Russian empire, the total number of inhabitants who can write and read was 4,167,995, or the proportion to the whole population as one to twelve.——Letters from Rome state that the Pope is anxious to revive the ancient ceremony of washing the feet of twelve poor pilgrims, and we have no doubt the result will be beneficial.——The British and North American royal mail steamer the Caledonia, Captain Lott, sailed on Tuesday from Liverpool for Halifax and Boston. She carried between 70 and 80 passengers. Various additional approprate arrangements have been made by command of her Majesty in connection with the performance of divine worship at the royal private chapels at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.——The Duke of Cambridge will be present at the meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society, at Derby, on Monday next.——The erection of seats near Hammersmith-bridge, which were let out for the purpose of seeing the regatta, is likely, it is said, to lead to litigation.——In future the mails to Colchester, Ipswich, Norwich, and Yarmouth, will be conveyed by the Eastern Counties Railway.——At the General Post-office, and the Charing-cross, Old Cavendish-street, and Lombard-street branch offices, provision has been made for the purpose of stamping notices of objection, claims, &c., in accordance with the recent amended Registration Act.——During the past ten days a great many meetings for thanksgiving have been held in the various dissenting chapels of the metropolis, consequent upon the abandonment of Sir James Graham's factory education scheme. These meetings have been chiefly of a devotional character, and largely attended.——Abdé Wilson, who built the Roman Catholic church of Spa-fields, has been consecrated bishop at Rome, and is going to Van Diemen's Land on a mission from the Pope.——An impostor was detected at St. Alban's a few days since who turned out to be a young female in male attire. She represented herself to be a son of Sir Robert Peel, and attracted great notice in consequence.——The celebrated Field-Marshal Count Wittgenstein died at St. Petersburg on the 16th ult., at the advanced age of 87. He was, as will be remembered, commander-in-chief of the Russian armies during nearly the whole of the last war, and enjoyed the confidence of the late Emperor Alexander, perhaps, in a greater degree than any other of that monarch's generals or warriors. The Emperor, upon being informed of it, gave immediate orders that the whole Russian army should wear mourning for three days.

MR. MINASI, THE PEN-AND-INK DRAWING MASTER.—The last performance of this artist—a portrait of her Majesty's two eldest children, is, indeed, a very choice production, and the likenesses have been described as perfect by Sir William Ross and Mr. Edwin Landseer, as well as by other eminent artists of the present day. It must be borne in mind that Mr. Minasi excels in originality, and does not confine his talents to copying. Some of his portraits are perfect gems. In almost all the varied walks of life the affliction of poverty has fallen upon the eminent. It is greatly to be regretted that in his declining years Mr. Minasi should also find himself in pecuniary embarrassments, and it is hoped that the hand of patronage will be extended to so highly-talented and worthy a man that he may not be suffered to drag out the remainder of his life in want.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.—DREADFUL CONFLAGRATION.—One of the largest fires which has occurred in the north of England for many years, broke forth from the timber-yard of Messrs. Robert Todd and Co., Pandon Dean, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on Saturday night, shortly after eleven o'clock, which not only destroyed their premises, but those of Messrs. Atkinson and Turner (spirit dealers), Mr. Pringle's dwelling (the manager clerk to Messrs. Todd), and seventeen other dwelling-houses, tenanted principally by poor families, covering altogether an area of one acre of ground. The reflection of this awful fire was seen for miles round, and at one time not less than 14,000 persons were assembled on the spot to see its progress. The firemen of the town were scarcely in time to subdue the flames, but the firemen, borough police, and the soldiers connected with the 37th Regiment, exerted themselves nobly in cutting off the premises adjoining to those on fire. The rain were burning fiercely when our information left on Sunday evening, and the property destroyed will amount to several thousands. Several persons were supposed to be lost when the ruins fell in, and, worst of all, it is supposed that this dreadful calamity is the work of an incendiary.

PORTRAIT OF OTHO, KING OF GREECE.

This ill-conditioned Sovereign has just sent a candid exposé of his financial affairs to Prince Metternich, requesting him to use his bons offices with the three allied powers to give him time to liquidate the interest of his different loans. This intelligence has been received at Trieste, by a steamer just arrived from Athens. Possibly, the Sovereigns may relax in their determination; if not, poor Otho's case will be as hopeless as that of another insolvent king, whose regal style and monetary difficulties are inscribed upon the same stone in one of our metropolitan churchyards. At all events, the present is a fit opportunity for introducing to the reader the "head and front" of the bankrupt ruler of the Greek land of promise.

Otho, the present King of Greece, is the second son of the King of Bavaria, and was born on the 1st of June, 1815. He was elected King of the new kingdom of Greece on the 7th of May, 1832, by the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Russia; these three powers having entered into an alliance for the settlement of the affairs arising out of the Greek Revolution, by a convention signed in London on the 6th of July, 1827. The King of Bavaria ratified the treaty of the 7th of May, 1832, on the 27th of same month; King Otho formally accepting the crown on the 5th of October following. He reached Greece, accompanied by a regency and Bavarian troops, on the 6th of February, 1833, and his majority having been fixed for the 1st of June, 1835, he assumed the reins of Government on that day.

The public character of King Otho has been portrayed in many of the political publications of Europe, as affording little to admire or respect. Indeed, a series of unexpected circumstances having enabled him to rule the people committed to his care, as an absolute monarch, the result has been, at the end of ten years, that Greece, under the most favourable circumstances of internal and external tranquillity, is now in a most precarious position of public bankruptcy and general demoralization. The ruling feature of King Otho's character is the desire that nothing, however trifling, should be done without his consent, while he is without the necessary firmness to enable him to decide on any step, however insignificant, until necessity compels him to do so. Impatient of all advice and control, no person, with any feeling of self-respect, will consent to serve as his nominal adviser; and the only responsible ministry, that under Mavrocordato, which it has been attempted to form in Greece, since King Otho's accession, lasted but a few weeks.

THE NEW ROYAL PALACE AT ATHENS.

Of King Otho's personal appearance we are enabled to offer a correct representation in the engraving we this day lay before our readers, and which we have obtained direct from Athens. The costume in which he is represented is that of the Greek military chiefs, and was adopted by his Majesty in 1835, since which time he has continued to wear this dress. King Otho was married on the 22nd of November, 1836, to Amelia, daughter of the reigning Grand Duke of Oldenburg, by whom at present he has no children.

Annexed is a view of the new royal palace at Athens, which has been built by King Otho, of marble brought from Mount Pentelicus; the foundation-stone having been laid by his Majesty in March 1834. The building is of immense dimensions, being larger than Buckingham Palace. It is not yet occupied, owing to the internal decorations not being finished; and, with the present exchequer before us, we fear there is but a poor prospect of their completion. In its present state, however, the new royal palace is decidedly the modern wonder of Athens.

HARROW SCHOOL.

Wednesday was the second public speech day at this excellent foundation, when the orators elicited the warm applause of a discriminating audience. Public speeches were substituted in the mastership of Dr. Heath (1771), for the custom of shooting with the bow for a silver arrow. The change was made in consequence of the necessary practice infringing upon the time that should have been devoted to study, and the attraction of sharpers and other loose characters from the metropolis to witness the trials. The buts for archery were situated on a beautiful and remarkable spot on the left of the London road as you enter the town; the last silver arrow was contended for in 1771, that which was prepared for the following year is now preserved at the school.

The school-house, a venerable brick building, stands on the same eminence as the church, and is contiguous to the churchyard; it has little architectural pretension, but, as the nursery of intellect—where such men as Parr, Bennett, Jones, Sheridan, Byron, Percival, and Peel were educated, it must be regarded with veneration. Many illustrious names are rudely carved on the panels of the school premises; and here we may mention that a short time since, in removing some panel-work in the church, was found the autograph of Lord Byron, in pencil; it is now kept with reverential care, as one of the curiosities of the place. But the part of the school buildings most worthy of notice, at the present day, is the new school, including the speech room; the former addition made under the auspices of Dr. Butler, and the latter built solely by the subscriptions of old Harrovians, at a cost exceeding £10,000: both are in the old English style, a lofty bay window being the principal ornamental feature.

BYRON'S AUTOGRAPH.

HARROW NEW SCHOOL AND SPEECH ROOM.

The old school-house was not built until some years after John Lyon, the founder, in 1571 obtained the royal charter; nor were the statutes promulgated by Lyon until within two years of his death, in 1590. Exclusive of these statutes, Mr. Lyon prepared a body of rules for the better management of the school, in which it is ordered that prayers are to be distinctly said by one of the scholars whenever they assemble for instruction, and again on their departure; and this rule has always been strictly observed. The books to be read are pointed out, as are also the amusements, limited to "driving a top, tossing a hand-ball, running, shooting, and no other." In 1809 a committee of the parishioners of Harrow applied to the Court of Chancery for the correction of what they considered abuses in the management of the school; but, in 1810, the Master of the Rolls, Sir W. Grant, pronounced judgment in favour of the school as at present constituted. The revenues of the Lyon estates have increased considerably of late years, a large portion of land in Marylebone having been let on building leases; but the school derives only a small benefit from this increased value, as, by the will of the founder, the rents of those lands were to be appropriated to the repair of roads, and charitable purposes. The amount of the funds, a short time since, was estimated under £1000. The governors are noblemen and gentlemen, either residents or possessors of property in Harrow or its neighbourhood. The number of scholars on the foundation at any one time averages 14 or 15; the number of oppidans is fluctuating from 150 to 300; average, 200. The management of the school and system of education are closely assimilated with the regulations at Eton College, while many of the standard books from the Eton press are used; and these are the best elementary books for classical instruction, notwithstanding the educational quackery of the day. Attached to the foundation are six exhibitions, each of the value of £50, for the term of eight years; and there is likewise a scholarship founded by the Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel. Besides the eminent Harrovians already mentioned, are Baxter, the philologist; Bruce, the traveller; Orme, the historian of Indostan; Dennis, the poet and critic; Bland, translator from the Greek anthologies; Colonel Ponsonby, who fell at Waterloo; the late Marquises of Wellesley and Hastings; the Earls of Elgin, Ripon, Harrowby, Clare, Spencer, and Aberdeen; Viscounts Palmerston and Bolingbroke (late); Lord Cottenham, the Bishops of Lichfield (Ryder) and Rochester (Murray); the judges, Sir John Richardson and Sir E. H. East; Hon. W. Spencer, the Rev. Thomas Gisborne, and Dr. Benjamin H. Malkin; and Sotheby, the poet. Lord Byron and Sir Robert Peel were contemporaries at Harrow; and Mr. Moore relates an anecdote of Byron offering to share some punishment from a tyrant who claimed a right to fag "little Peel." Byron, too, describes himself to have shone in the Harrow speeches.

Strolling into the churchyard, on a rail at the east end, may be traced these lines, said to have been written by Byron, when at school:—

There is a time when the green trees shall fall,
And Isaac Greentree rise above them all.

Lord Byron, by the way, must have been fond of cutting and writing in strange places. He has even carved it upon one of the columns in the dungeon of Chillon, immortalised in his verse. The favourite resting-place of the young poet was an altar-tomb on the opposite side of the church to that shown in the engraving: here he would lie for hours, enjoying the glorious western view, with "Windsor's heights," and drinking inspiration from its sublimity and wondrous beauty. The church is the crowning glory of "lofty Harrow;" and its prominent celebrity once called up the ready wit of Charles II., who, when some divines were disputing about the visible church, drew their attention to that of Harrow-on-the-Hill, which has since been proverbial as "the visible church." It consists of a nave, chancel, two aisles, and two transepts; and at the west end is a square embattled tower, from which rises the spire, covered with lead. The architecture is between pure and florid pointed, late in the 14th century; but a portion remains of the original Anglo-Norman church, built by Archbishop Lanfranc, the dominant favourite of William I. and II., and consecrated by Anselm: these fragments are the circular columns dividing the aisles from the nave, and the lower part of the tower, in which is a fine circular-headed doorway.

HARROW CHURCH.

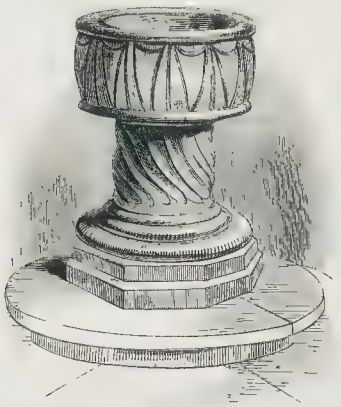
Within the church are several ancient as well as interesting tablets and brasses; in the chancel, a figure of Sir John Flamburd, one of Edward the Third's knights, of the best age of chivalry, as his helmet, mail gorget, and guardian dog attest. The brass figures of two rectors of Harrow of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries (one with his wife and five children), and of John Lyon, the founder of the school, must not be missed; nor Parr's classical inscription on the tomb of Dr. Sumner, an exquisite piece of Latinity. In the churchyard, too, masters of the school and old Harrovians lie sleeping.

The restorative taste of the times has lately led to this very curious font being reinstated in the church. For many years it lay neglected, and, if we remember rightly, overgrown with briars and brambles, but it has just been judiciously restored; it is a fine Anglo-Norman work, belonging to the earliest age of the church, and its restoration reflects high credit upon the tasteful liberality of all concerned in this labour of love.



THE FONT, HARROW CHURCH.

Annexed is the programme of Wednesday's speeches.—

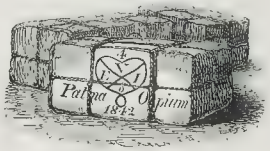
Calthorpe	Galgacus ad Milites	Tacitus.
Curror	Medea	Euripides.
Spottiswoode	On Economical Reform	Burke.
Galborne	Uriel	Milton.
Chitty	Cardinal Wolsey to Cromwell	Shakspere.
	Hon. P. Smythe.—Greek Iambics.
Lewis	Ulysses to Achilles	Shakspere.
Lloyds	Chorus, Troasuarum Mulierum	Euripides.
Leech	Henry IV. to Prince Harry	Shakspere.
	Hon. P. Smythe.—Greek Prose Translation.
Whittaker	Caractacus	Mason.
Nicholson	Hanno	Livius.
Marshall, sen.	Richard II.	Shakspere.
	Grant, sen.—Latin Essay for Peel Medal.
Mr Smythe	Description of Rome and Athens	Milton.
Sheriffe	To the Electors of Bristol	Burke.
Bushby	On Employment of Indians in American War	Lord Chatham.
Grant, sen.	The Character of the Happy Warrior	The Poet Laureate.
Sosmes	On the Remonstrances of the French Republic	Pitt.

The speeches were excellently delivered, especially those recited by Whittaker, Nicholson, and Marshall. The "Character of the happy Warrior" was well recited by Grant, sen.

Among the company present we noticed Viscount Strangford, Lord H. Leigh, Lord Palmerston, the Bishops of Norwich and St. David's, Mr. B. Pollen, Mr. E. Dewing, with many old Harrovians.

THE OPIUM TRADE.

The Turkish opium is made into flat cakes, and was at one time the only kind of the drug in use. The Indian opium is of two descriptions—the Bengal and the Malwa. The former is cultivated and manufactured by the East India Company, and is much esteemed for its taste by the Chinese. About two pounds of pure opium is rolled up by the hands into a ball, and covered with from ten to fifteen layers of the poppy-leaf, till it is the size of a thirty-two pound shot. These balls are then packed in a chest two feet eight inches in length, nineteen inches in breadth, and fifteen inches deep. There are two tiers or layers of balls placed between divisions of wood, and every interstice is filled up with the dried leaves of the poppy. The chest is then caulked up air-tight, and water-tight, and covered with a green hide, which is sewed on all over it. Coarse canvas is next bound round it, and the whole secured by rope lashings; the Company's distinguishing mark is then conspicuously affixed—the letters signifying the United East India Company. It is now sold by the government authorities to the merchants at public auctions.



OPIUM PACKAGES.

The Malwa opium is grown in the native states, and is packed in chests containing 140 lb., done up in lumps or cakes about the size of a small roll.

At what period it was first introduced into China cannot now be correctly ascertained, but it is upon record that up to the year 1780 the Portuguese (who had gained a permanent footing at Macao) were the chief if not the only suppliers of this article to the Celestial Empire. About that time (1780), however, the English commenced the sale of the drug, by establishing a depôt to the southward of Macao, and only 200 or 300 chests were annually imported, paying a duty of about 20s. per chest, besides a packing charge amounting to about 16s. 9d. per chest; but there can be no doubt that even thus early opium smuggling—though not to any very great extent—was carried on by the officers of the company's ships, as well as the ships of private merchants: it was reserved for later times to man and arm a small fleet especially adapted to the purpose.

Whether there is anything peculiar in the physical or intellectual organisation of the Chinese, so as to render them more than any other nation attached to the smoking of opium, is not relevant here, but certainly as the intoxicating influences of the drug became more generally known, so in proportion did the demand for it increase, till, in the course of a few years, instead of 200 or 300 chests, the annual importation amounted to several thousand chests.

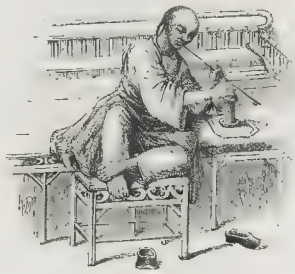
The baneful effects produced upon the human constitution by an immoderate indulgence in smoking this drug aroused the attention of some of the better-disposed amongst the Chinese authorities, and about the year 1796 the importation of opium was not only entirely prohibited, but a severe punishment was ordered to be inflicted upon all who were detected in smoking it. But the traffic had now as a pecuniary matter become of considerable national importance, for, as the Chinese made us pay for all our teas in hard cash, so also, in return, the opium-dealers received back that money in payment for opium.

The decree was certainly issued, and war-junks were fitted out to put a stop to smuggling; but the high prices caused by prohibition, and the determination of the people themselves to indulge in this pernicious luxury, enabled the smugglers to give large bribes to the mandarins and officers of customs; so that the trade, instead of decreasing, became every succeeding year more and more extensive and lucrative, as the following statement will testify:—In 1798 the quantity imported was about 4200 chests, which fluctuated for the next ten years, but during the whole interval the prices had actually trebled. In 1808 the number of chests imported was 4208. In 1818 the prices had more than quadrupled, and the quantity was rather less, but in 1828 the quantity had nearly doubled, for in that year the number of chests was 7700, and so rapidly did it continue to increase that in 1832 no less than 10,638 chests were imported. In 1833 the number was 12,223; in 1834 it was 12,977; in 1835 it had increased to 14,745; and so went on progressing till the time of the open rupture, when the importation for that year, it is said, would have amounted to 40,000 chests, valued at upwards of four millions in money. The above calculations (excepting the last) are for Calcutta alone, but there was also a considerable quantity exported to China from Bombay and Damaun. The number of Chinese addicted to the habit has been variously estimated, but may, on a moderate computation, be taken at three millions, though in all probability that amount is greatly exceeded in reality.

The poppy was principally reared in the fertile districts of Bengal, Behar, and Benares, at first by private individuals; but, as the trade grew into greater importance, the East India Company took it into their own hands, by farming the whole of the produce. It was afterwards discovered that it would grow luxuriantly in Malwa and Central India, and the company, to preserve a monopoly, negotiated with the native chiefs of those districts to prevent the manufacture of opium; but the practice was not checked, and ultimately they conceded the point, and granted passes at rather high rates for the transit of the Malwa opium to Bombay, where it was shipped for China.

Under the company's management, and within their dominion, every ryot (cultivator of the soil) was compelled to set apart a portion of his best land for the produce of opium, which he was bound to deliver in a proper state. The collectors and inspectors were but poorly paid, and hence arose great aggression, extortion, and fraud; in fact, the whole system was one of iniquity from the commencement to the end, and is still carried on in the same reckless manner.

We now come to the mode employed in forcing the opium into China. As the trade attained an extent which made it particularly valuable, a number of remarkably fine vessels were built expressly for the purpose, having, with great beauty and symmetry, the more essential quality of excellent sailers, which gained for them the name of opium-clippers. They were well manned, and, in some instances, not badly armed. The largest are barque-rigged, resembling the illustration which we give below; some are brigs, and a few are schooners. Since the peace naval officers of known merit in the service have at times commanded one or another of them, and a rivalry has always existed to render them perfect pictures to the practised eye of seamen. At the outset there were only two or three; at present the number is fourteen or fifteen; and of these the Water Witch, a lovely barque, of about 360 tons, manned with a crew of seventy men, and well armed, is considered the crack craft. Next to her is the Red Rover, another barque, with sixty men. There are also, the Mohr, the Rob Roy, the Cowages Family, the Poppy, the Sylph, the Syren, the Tyne, the Malmaison, the John Brightmore (new), and others, whose names we do not at this moment recollect. These take in their cargoes at Bombay and Calcutta, and work up along shore, from Singapore to Lintin, an island in the mouth of Canton river (at no very great distance from Macao), where the merchants have placed receiving ships, for the purpose of selling the drug. The traffic is carried on through the agency of persons on shore, at Canton, who sell the opium; and payment being first made, a boat or boats (called by the natives "fast-crabs and scrambling dragons") go down to the receiving ships at Lintin with an order for the quantity purchased. They are swift vessels propelled by a great number of oars, and a sail, made of split rattan or bamboo, when the wind is fair. The mandarin boats are constantly on the watch—or rather pretend to be so; but the smugglers, who are a daring set of fellows, being well armed, set them at defiance; and though engagements (generally sham ones, to save appearances) now and then take place, yet very little harm is done, for the naval officers, as well as every one else connected with the customs, make more money by conniving at the trade than they can possibly get by trying to suppress it: in fact, the mandarins' boats smuggle as much as those who get their living by it. The illustration represents an opium-clipper getting under way, with her headsails braced aback for casting; a smuggling boat, upon her oars, near to her; and a war-vessel in the distance.



AN OPIUM SMOKER.

We have seen that the prohibition, with severe punishments annexed to it, had no effect whatever to check the trade. Opium continued to be sold openly in all parts of China, and the shops were as plentiful in every town of the empire as gin-palaces in England. A bamboo screen suspended at the door was a sure sign to the opium-smoker that he could gratify his fatal propensity within. All classes of persons, of every grade, might be seen entering these places to indulge in the deadly gratification—nothing deterred them; and at length the evil grew to be so enormous that the Chinese authorities, who were averse to it, either from principle, or through not sharing in the spoil, resolved to act with decision, and consequently seized 20,882 chests, and had they rested at that, their conduct would have been perfectly justifiable, but they proceeded to acts of aggression by confiscating the property, and inflicting punishment on the innocent as well as the guilty. Want of space will preclude our entering upon the war which followed, but has now terminated. Opium smuggling is still carried on, and most probably would be continued, even should the legislature of England pass enactments against it; and such is the infatuation of the Chinese, that they will endeavour to procure the drug at all hazards; and as it is paid for in cash or silver exceeding the amount we give for our teas, it naturally follows that there must be a great drain of dollars and silver from the empire.

The mode of using the drug, which is to dip the end of a fine wire into the prepared drug, reduced to the consistency of molasses, and it is then held over a lamp and inserted into the small aperture of the bowl of the pipe, which is held in an inverted position. The smoke is inhaled and retained by swallowing as long as possible.

OPIUM SMUGGLING.

A startling fact is forced upon us from actual knowledge that the use of this drug in a liquid state is fast gaining ground amongst the working population in the manufacturing districts of England, to allay the pangs of hunger. Thus an insatiable craving is induced till the swallowing of it becomes a confirmed habit; and we have known mothers to deprive their children of the food which they ought to have, in order to satisfy this inordinate longing. It is a well-attested fact amongst the retailers of medicines in manufacturing towns, that many working people will swallow not less than sixpennyworth of laudanum in a day. Surely this subject is well worthy of the attention and investigation of the philanthropist, if not of the Legislature of the kingdom.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 16th.

SUNDAY, July 9.—Fourth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 10.
TUESDAY, 11.
WEDNESDAY, 12.—Erasmus died, 1553.
THURSDAY, 13.—Parliament at Nottingham, 1334.
FRIDAY, 14.—Mrs. Siddons born, 1728.
SATURDAY, 15.—St. Swithin.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending July 15.

Monday.		Tuesday		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
9 51	0 33	1 23	1 50	2 14	2 39	3 1	3 21	3 41	4 0	4 20	4 36

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. D., a Subscriber," should first examine it at the Lord's-commons, and, if the property be left as he supposes, then apply to a respectable solicitor or.
"C. T. E. S."—Twelve. The drawing shall be returned, the subject being too "political," though a well-merited tribute.
"G. C. H." will find several papers on "the smoke nuisance" in the Mechanics' Magazine for the last twelve years; indeed, in almost every work on mechanical science published during that period.
"G. S. D." Kingsclere, is thanked for his well-timed suggestion.
"T."—1. "God save the Queen." 3. M dame, by courtesy. The other reputes in our next.
"J. B S." Poole, will, perhaps, favour us by sending the sketch.
"J. W.," Enfield-wash.—We cannot, at present, avail ourselves of his friendly hint.
"S. G."—We do not recollect. See Hazlitt's edition of Defoe.
"T. E. B.," Brighton.—Magna Charta has been lithographed by Mr. Netherclift, King William street, Strand.
"Londinus" will find a reply in the gratuitous Supplement published with our present number.
"J. H." Devizes.—We cannot undertake to furnish the information required.
"Public" companies should themselves report progress.
"T. P." Romsgate.—His "old friends" may re appear anon.
"J. T.," Hatton.—Declined.
"An Admirer." Manchester, is thanked. We shall remain silent.
"J. W.," Cambridge.—Our correspondent's letter did not reach us in time. We will inquire.
"A Constant Subscriber."—The spires will doubtless be added to the new Catholic church at Islington, to complete the design, which should have been mentioned in our last.
"R. J. C."—No.
"B. B. G.," Lokenham, is thanked. We had not room for the sketch of the Parhelia, and our correspondent's paper reached us subsequently to the accounts printed in our No. 60.
"B. St. B.," Littleout House, is received. Thanks.
"J. L. J."—The interest of the sketch has passed.
"J. G.," Barnstaple.—The late Mr. Day left a large sum of money to found an institution for the blind; but, owing to "the law's delay," his benevolent intention has not been carried into effect.
"E. C.," Brompton.—"Rebecca and her Daughters" have already figured in our Journal, No. 41
"M. J.," Watercrampton.—Yes.
"Captain W." We have no further cause.
"A Wet Blanket" is fastidious.
Lowther Castle has been received.
"A Subscriber."—We shall inquire.
"C. A. H."—He was one of the society sometime ago, but he has changed.
"W. C."—All the numbers for the year would make the volume too thick and unwieldy.
"Decimus"—Apply by letter to the office of the Secretary of State
"A Subscriber," Southampton, should order the Saturday night's edition. The engraving omitted will appear soon.
"J. Buckman" Hampton-court Palace is open daily, Fridays excepted. The Thames Tunnel is open on Sundays.
We object to give opinions of public companies. "Will he" is correct.
"A. B." will find the Court Circular in the morning newspapers.
CHESS.—"Omega" is desirous of playing a friendly game of chess by post. Address, G. F. Q., post office, Sheffield.
"J. G. N."—In the situation sent the king cannot take the bishop, as by so doing he would go into check himself.
"Blue Jacket."—We must again refer our correspondent to our solution of Problem No. 25 which we contend is correct. If, as you say, white at the 3rd move plays thus,

White.	Black.
3rd Q to B 7th check's	K to R 5th
4th Q takes R P checks	Q interposes

how can you immediately mate in 6 moves?
"Pawn" is quite correct.
"G. D."—Thanks for the contribution. Your wishes shall be attended to. See the chess article this week.

This day is published, price 18s., the Second Volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, containing the numbers for the half year ending June 24, 1843, splendidly bound in cloth, gilt edges, uniformly with volume one. Subscribers are informed that Covers, made expressly for binding the second volume, may be had by order of all newsmen and booksellers, price 3s. each. All the back numbers are reprinted, and Subscribers can complete their sets.

COMPLETION OF VOLUME II.—TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.—We have the pleasure of presenting, GRATIS, with the present paper, containing a Title-page, Preface, and a complete Index to Vol. II., with a Chronology of the Events of the last Six Months.

A SUPPLEMENT,

BOOKS RECEIVED.—"Change for the American Notes;" "Brief Account of the Fleet Prison;" "History of Ancient America;" "The Tyrian Era," by George Jones, M.R.S.I., &c.;" Maurer's "Musical Times," Vol. I; "Le Journal Scolastique," Part I.; "Family Herald," Parts I. and II.. Also, the following Periodicals for July:—"Martin Chuzzlewit." "Polytechnic Journal." "Illuminated Magazine." "Artizan," "Dublin University," "Fraser's," and the "Foreign and Colonial Quarterly Review," No. 3.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1843.

It would seem, from the altered tone of many distinguished public men, and of the leading journals of the party in power, that a sort of general dissatisfaction is growing up—and that into a very strong feeling—at the palpable supineness of the Government in the great work of just and wholesome legislation, whether for England or Ireland, or, indeed, for any portion of the Empire. The Times has directed a strong battery of sarcastic reproach and censure openly against the Ministry; and the Post of the next day has taken the uncommon course of printing in its own columns the leading article of its contemporary, with a recommendation to its perusal, and a strong coincidence in its proclaimed opinion, expressed in no measured terms. The Post and the Times have been chief supporters of the Government from which they seem in a moment to have fallen away. Of course the Opposition journals are not weak in their attacks upon the Administration at a moment when its own friends find reason for abandoning it; and there is, therefore, a strong tide set in against it, which it may find it difficult to control, with a moral influence at all equal to its physical strength.

Now we are not partisans, nor do we oppose ourselves, as a journal, to any government, for the sake of abstract political principles. We would, upon the broad ground of national welfare, support any ministry that we found active in doing good in a popular spirit, and in accordance with fair and moderate—we would never countenance extreme—views. The stakes we play for are measures, not men—and we care not for the mere colour of political doctrine, so long as some pure nourishing and vital essence spring out of it. With regard to the Peel administration, we might have felt well inclined towards it (if it had displayed, or were now displaying, a proper activity and energy in the public behalf), on account of its obvious strength—of its large numerical majorities in Parliament, and, consequently, of its certainty of carrying any great boon that it might seek to grant to the people.

It is always better that a Government which is governing well should be a strong Government. Good intentions and weak means are of small avail; but good intentions with strong means may be brought vigorously to secure the happiness of a nation. On the other hand, if a Government have great power, and use it only for its own maintenance—by the victories of office, without exerting it for the general benefit—then the strength of such an administration would be more mischievous than its weakness, and the people would naturally seek to reduce it until its pride should be humbled, and the giant that would do no good labour, laid prostrate in an idleness as unvirtuous as it would be unfair.

It is with sincere regret that we find the supineness and indifference of recent legislation provoking this kind of feeling against the present Ministry, but our regret is nevertheless more for the culpable cause of the excitement than for the spirit of the excitement itself. We hold it honourable to the people that they should awaken to their interests when they find a Government tardy—that they should not treat times of crisis with nonchalance; and we deem it most honourable to find the press giving the initiative of warning, when it discovers dereliction of duty in the management of national affairs, more particularly when that management is in the hands of a party which that press has been accustomed conscientiously to support. There is a chivalrous justice in telling truth in spite of prejudice, and against those whom, in the right, we might beat love to honour, but whom, in the wrong, we will not degrade ourselves to defend. There is, therefore, great significance in the tone which our contemporaries have thus taken against what we will call "the Government of inaction"—inaction which produces disappointment, and chills even sanguine spirits out of reliance and almost out of hope. Hear the Times:—

> The Government seems ambitious of exhibiting in the face of the world the union of absolute inefficiency with absolute power. With a degree of parliamentary strength unprecedented of late years, they are about to close a session, the legislation of which, for all important purposes, will be an absolute blank. Two measures only, proceeding to any largeness of contents, did they introduce the Factories Education Bill, and the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill. Both these measures have undergone, in their passage through the House of Commons (not yet completed), such reverses, curtailments, and transmutations, as scarcely any Whig measure ever experienced, even at the lowest period of Whig decline. Their fundamental principles discarded, every provision which made them objects of public interest stripped away, they now remain mere cenia mortua, laughing-stocks of the whole country. Yet these are all, absolutely all, the fruits of the united wisdom of the Conservative cabinet, with its majority of 100, which the present year has seen. For the rest, so utterly barren has been the campaign, that the Liberal opposition is reduced, in very despair for something to oppose, to spend thirteen nights in fighting a bill, the first twelve clauses of which are only as yet agreed to, for the mere continuance (under circumstances which made them unusually necessary) of powers which have been granted to every government in Ireland since the beginning of the century, and to Whig governments without dispute.

Without referring to the last sentence, which has an application to the Irish Arms Bill, to the spirit of which we do not literally accede, we must yet acknowledge the justice of the previous observations, and show at once how readily they have been accepted by the Post. The Post says:—

> The zeal and sincerity of our Conservatism has led us for several months to take the liberty of finding fault with the present Administration, which, in so many instances, seems to have forfeited the character which it ought to have maintained. We have not taken this course without much pain, and the more so because we were taunted with overweening estimat on of our own opinion. We, however, acted upon principle, and we felt confident that the tone and temper of Government, and the modes of procedure which seemed to us so unworthy, could not for any length of time retain the favour of the British public. That we were only a little in advance of others in our views will appear from the able article, which we take from yesterday's Times, a journal which is supposed to feel the pulse of the public, and to pitch its note accordingly with very remarkable skill.

The last remark is a true one. The Times does pitch its note to public feeling with remarkable skill; and, therefore, the inference from its article is, that it conceives public feeling to be dissatisfied with the Peel Administration.

For ourselves, we are rather showing the bearings of the question than embarking in it ourselves. But we know of one oppression, the Income-tax, which the community has had to bear, and of no particular alleviation of its more crying grievances. The Poor-law is where it was—the destitution of the lower classes spreads—Wales is in a riot—Ireland unlegislated for—the Education question retarded; and, in a word, the whole country without any great practical results and benefits from a Ministry which is stronger to produce them than any which has governed this country for years. We do hope, therefore, that the warning which has been thrown out by the two leading journals of its own party may not be without its effect; but that the Government will rouse itself to the necessity of active exertion, and, before just complaint growls louder, bestir itself in the work of some manifest and practical good.

A learned and legal society, entitled the "Benchers of the Inner Temple," have, we perceive, by the observations of a contemporary, determined on closing the Temple-gardens on Sundays in future, thus preventing the inconsistent spectacle of amusement and frivolity, on the part of an ambulatory multitude, within the vicinity of the scene of their grave and solemn lucubrations. A Sabbath meditation on Coke on Littleton shall no longer be disturbed by the profane sound of vulgar hilarity, and the joyous laugh of childhood or girlhood wafted on the breeze shall no longer scare the spirit of Blackstone from the abode of seriousness and cogitation over which it loves to brood. Philanthropy and law, it may be safely assumed, are not convertible terms, and to their contrariety alone can the resolution of these benevolent benchers be ascribed. There is no accounting for taste. One would have supposed that the prospect of a considerable number of their fellow-creatures enjoying a cessation from labour one day in the week, and elated with the luxury of enjoying a stroll through their parterre, and round a patch of velvet turf, with which, in humble life, metropolitan eyes are seldom treated, would have given a tone of serenity and satisfaction salutary to their stomachs, and added a zest to the enjoyment of their port. But, alas! a bencher cannot luxuriate unless in lonely magnificence, at least his vision cannot comprise with comfort the less sumptuous enjoyments of an humble grade of society. This proceeding on the part of the wise men of the Temple is too much in accordance with the spirit of grudging and denial with which the poor man's comforts are considered in this utilitarian age by those in higher station; and we regret to find a class of men so intelligent and influential set up so bad an example of active encroachment on the few cost-less gratifications of the poor, and which go far to render their existence tolerable. It is only a few days since that the notable scheme of enclosing Hampstead-heath, which so long has feasted the Sunday rusticator from the counting-house or the hovel with the fresh breeze of the spreading landscape, was abandoned, at least for the present session. If the poor man be doomed to suffer the pinchings of penury, let him not at the same time be shut out from the grass plot and the free breeze of heaven. Let the air be to him in reality what it has been imaginatively designated, a "chartered libertine," but, above all, let not a body of men so sagacious and "deeply pondering" as the benchers of the Temple persist in recklessly diminishing the recreations of the poor. It is bad enough when some hard-hearted agent or spendthrift proprietor, driven by extravagance into rapaciousness, proceeds to enclose and "steal the common from the goose," but we hope, and somewhat confidently too, that the body to whom we have alluded will not persist in acting in so ungenerous and reprehensible a spirit.

RAMBLES IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

The world runs on—and it is a cold, merry world after all, and never very particular on the score of its sympathies. It never wears anything but court mourning for any of its griefs—and, with the impatience of a pretty woman who does not look well in black, it shortens the duration even of that. Then its next impulse is outrageous gaiety, and it gets up a wedding garment of white satin to wear over its bombazines. It can laugh under the ribs of death. It mourns today a melancholy death or a fatal duel, as one of its oldest or best friends have passed away from it—but to-morrow it is arrayed in smiles at court. In a word, it is a shameful sycophant, that same world. Poor Fawcett dies in a duel (is murdered, the papers should be), and all his kindred army is strong in the expression of its sorrow; but the melancholy fact does not detract from the number or brilliancy of the uniforms at the drawing-room—neither does it spoil the Putney Regatta. We mix the grave, the gay, the lively, and severe very recklessly together. Society is compounded of odd materials—it is a tureen of spring soup.

Well, what have we going on? Ireland continues as furious as ever, and the row there, as John Reeve would have said, if he had lived to say anything, continues particularly jolly. The work of repeal is as well done as any work in the empire, and there is no particular progress made in stopping its way. The cloth seems to be ready—and, if somebody doesn't look out, the coat will be soon made. Whether or not England will be induced to wear it is another question. Meanwhile

> There's O'Connell at home with all his nous,
> And Smith O'Brien in Parliament House,
> Giving Lord Eliot quite a souse
> In the great political pool of strife,
> Cutting him up with a carving-knife,
> And spoiling all the peace of his life,
> By swearing that he's not a governing man,
> In fact, that he can't rule, while he swears he can.
> He says all right, they say all wrong;
> He's very bumptious, and they very strong;
> While this of the upshot's the short and the long,
> That, among such a number of eminent hands,
> It's a very nice quarrel now just as it stands;
> And all parties are cutting a beautiful figure,
> While Dan plays the game of Sir Lucius O'Trigger.
> Oh, how many wish with no powder or ball
> That he play'd it without any Power at all;
> And how many more in the elegant ring
> Of repealers just now don't wish any such thing!

Never mind, let them go on; the wind can't blow long without the world knowing its direction.

So the Times on Thursday turned point blank against Ministers: the thunderer came out with a flash of lightning, and struck Peel all of a heap. It was, in slang terms, a great walk into the minister; but there was much plain reason and sound sense in it after all. It lamented, in round English, that there was not a Whig Lyndhurst in the House of Lords, to tell the Cabinet what a "quantity of nothing" it had done; it mourned over the change in the spirit of Broughams, and offered him a premium of encouragement for a minister-al castigation. It told how old Melbourne—a dear, decent boy when he was in office, and in the palace decent and more decent still—used to catch it for his weakness when he could accomplish nothing; and wished the Tories might catch it for their strength when they could accomplish everything and do nothing at all. In fact, it seemed to look upon the Government as a sort of promissory note which the nation had allowed to come due and had dishonoured, but for which the Times solicited payment in terms nearly as pungent as an attorney's letter. It was a great turn-out of snuff political scribble, and there was something plucky about it, as there generally is in all the Times says and does. We do not think, however, that it will ever get a testimonial for turning out Peel; but he ought to look about him with as much energy as when,

> Summoned on wings of speed to hasten home,
> The cotton spinner's son arrived from Rome.

The Times thinks he is shilly-shallying with Ireland, and is nearly certain that he is flirting either with Rebecca or her daughters, which it is very naughty of him to do, as he is a married man. Apropos of Rebecca. Here is the "Tear of the 'Pike-man,' a nice moist pearl for our readers, and better than the "Soldier's Tear," any day:—

SONG—THE 'PIKE-MAN'S TEAR.

> Beside the road he stood,
> To take a last fond look
> Of the toll-house and the fastened gate,
> And the lodge within the nook.
> He heard Rebecca's voice,
> So familiar to his ear;
> And the 'pike-man took his tickets out
> And wiped away a tear.

Beside that 'pike-house gate
Was Beccy and her "gals;"
She waved aloft a blood-red "wipe,"
And flushed it to her pals.
She cried aloud—"We'll have
No toll-bars like this here."
So he raised his apron to his eye,
And wiped away a tear.

He turned to leave the spot:
Ah! do not harshly speak,
He used to keep that 'pike-house once
For eighteen bob a week.
Go watch upon the hill,
You'll see him pale with fear,
And when Rebecca's smashed the crib
He'll wipe away a tear.

John Parry has been singing the above ditty in all parts of Wales with a combination of enthusiasm and applause. At Carnarvon it was encored by the echoes of the empty soup tureens in the workhouse, as well as from the wash-hand-basins in the barracks.

It is considered to evince much resignation on the part of the unhappy individual whose woes it celebrates. When he dies it will be said of him, as Hood, in varied fashion, said of the sexton—

Poor 'pike-man, brought up at the bar,
He did his duty well,
And, as he toll'd the people, so
The people toll'd the bell.

But, after all, this Rebecca must be put down. She is a lady of tremendous strength and great masculine resolve, but we can't have her at any price. At all events there is no occasion for her to go on at the same gate.

From the tollhouse pass we to a hut of another description—Hutt, M.P., who has been asking questions about the levy of certain duties by the King of Hanover—deeming it one of his own uncertain duties so to do. He got no more satisfaction, however, than the glazier who was shut up in the pillories—or through them, which is worse. Meanwhile, the King of Hanover dined, on Thursday, at Inner Temple Hall, and was not much hurt by the accident.

In the House of Uncommons Mr. Blewitt also blew it a little strong about the Duke of Wellington. Who was he, what was his position in the Ministry? To which Sir Robert Peel replied that he was the Duke of Wellington, and that he believed his position was rather good: we should think so too.

The most disinterested affair of the week was Mr. Hume's moving for some returns of the Greek loan, or something of that sort.

And the members of Parliament turned up their eyes,
For the matter created a little surprise,
That dear Joey Hume should have had so much cheek
As ever to meddle with anything Greek;
And as for returning, it quite made 'em groan,
For they thought he would rather have left it a loan!

Lablache, who has been picking up notes in Don Pasquale, is a better actor than Joey Hume, and so is Lumley; their business is very taking, but they make no returns.

In that same world of acting, by the way, what is doing? Why Macready has packed up his testimonial and is going to America. It has been sarcastically said that he is carrying his plate with him and leaving his silver behind; but, on the other hand, if he has lost silver, perhaps he is going to make gold. There, that last sentence is as accommodating as if he had been plucked ready made out of the Observer's "Theatrical Intelligence;" which, to judge by its want of spirit, ought to be taken by the Temperance Society. Still, to Mr. Macready we say "Bon voyage."

Her Majesty has plunged into the drawing-room season, as our entrée already shows; in fact, we may be said to have cut right into it ourselves.

In a dress of the court,
Which is not much our forte,
We went, and were honoured with capital sport.

With buckles and lace,
In that beautiful place,
We daren't show our backs, but we did show our face.

While her Majesty's smile
Had a grace all the while
That made us rejoice she was Queen of the Isle;

And took a bow out of us such as no noddy
Could ever bestow with a bend of his body,
But one which a gentleman, smart and serene,
Might very politely award to a Queen.

Prince Albert was slightly dumbfounded, and Lord Delaware, as Lord Chamberlain, desired us to present his compliments to our readers, and convey to them her Majesty's pleasure that they should all be presented at the next flare-up. Of course, as it is, they have been all re-presented by the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

THE REVENUE.—We lay before our readers the Quarterly Official Revenue Returns, made up to Wednesday last, and in order to make the complicated calculations more easily intelligible, offer the following analysis of their principal features. The total revenue of the year, ending Wednesday, exceeds that of the year ending July 5, 1842, in the ratio of..... £47,780 342
To.. 45,337,400

Excess in course of the last twelve months..... £2,442,942
The Quarter ending Wednesday exceeds the corresponding quarter of 1842, by.. .. .. £3,539,748
To.. 11,487,748

Favourable excess..... £1,701,532

(There is an excess of more than £3,000,000—£13,539,280 to £10,469,477—in the revenue for the quarter over that of the three months ended on the 5th of April last; but it ought to be stated that the spring quarter is usually the least productive one of the whole year.) The excess on the yearly revenue arises from the large sum received on account of the Income-tax, as we much regret to perceive that in Customs, Excise, and other great branches of ordinary revenue (the condition of which has been generally looked on as a test of the condition of the people) the twelvemouth's accounts, as compared with those made up to July, 1842, exhibit a falling off. But it is consolatory to notice that, notwithstanding this position of the yearly balance, the comparison of the corresponding quarters of the two years presents, with respect to these particular articles, a discrepancy favourable to 1843. On the year there is an increase, consisting of the whole income-tax, £2,317,997; from Post-office, £39,000; Miscellaneous, £1,080,314: Repayments of advances, £42,257. And a decrease in—Customs, £514 929; Excise, £13,858; Stamps, £203,717; Taxes, £249,033; Crown Lands, £60,000; Import and other moneys, £302 234. On this quarter, as compared with the corresponding quarter of last year, there is an increase from Customs, £135 015; Excise, £140,013; Income-tax, £861,709; Crown lands, £3,500; Miscellanies, £849,767; Repayments of advances, £35,655. And a decrease from Stamps, £39 969; Taxes, £74,408; Post-office, £9,000; Imprest and other moneys, £200,350.

HER MAJESTY'S DRAWING-ROOM.—Her Majesty held a Drawing-room on Thursday, at St. James's Palace; and, it being the day appointed for celebrating the birth of our beloved Sovereign, a more than usual interest prevailed at the west end of the town. As early as twelve o'clock St. James's Park was crowded, and every minute the crowd increased. Before one o'clock the Foreign Ministers and Ambassadors, the nobility, great officers of state and household, arrived in rapid succession. The line of carriages of those who had not the privilege of the entrée extended the whole length of St. James's-street, and a considerable distance in Piccadilly. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the court, left Buckingham Palace shortly before two o'clock in several carriages. The royal cortège was escorted by a detachment of the Horse Guards. The Queen and her illustrious Consort were loudly cheered. The morning was ushered in with ringing the bells of the metropolitan churches, and the other usual demonstrations of loyalty were manifested. At one o'clock the Park and Tower guns were fired. The Speaker of the House of Commons went in full state, accompanied by the principal officers of the house. The different theatres, club-houses, and homes of the tradesmen of her Majesty, were brilliantly illuminated at night.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Queen and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the royal suite and the household attended divine service on Sunday morning, in the chapel royal, Buckingham Palace. The Bishop of Winchester preached the sermon, taking his text from St. John, chap. xix., verses 26 and 27. The prayers were read by the Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay.—Sir Robert Peel had an audience of the Queen. Their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, attended by the Countess Vilain XIV., visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, at Clarence House, St. James's.

On Monday, the Queen and Prince Albert took an airing in an open carriage and four, the equerries in waiting attending on horseback.—The Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty.—The Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz left Kew at half-past ten o'clock on Monday morning for the Continent.

On Tuesday, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians, and remained to lunch with the august party at Buckingham Palace.—The Queen and Prince Albert, and the King and Queen of the Belgians, attended by the Viscountess Jocelyn, the Countess Vilain XIV., Viscount Sydney, M. de Moerkerke, Major-General Wemyss, and Colonel Bouverie, honoured the Italian Opera House with their presence on Tuesday evening.—A Cabinet Council was held on Tuesday afternoon at the Foreign Office. It was attended by Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Stanley, Sir James Graham, the Earl of Ripon, Sir H. Hardinge, and other Ministers. The Council sat two hours.

On Wednesday the Queen gave audience at Buckingham Palace to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex (Messrs. Hooper and Jeremiah Pilcher), accompanied by the City Remembrancer, who took her Majesty's pleasure relative to the reception of an Address of Congratulation from the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the city of London, on the auspicious birth of a Princess (Alice). The Queen was graciously pleased to appoint Saturday, the 8th inst., at one o'clock, for the reception of the Address from the Corporation. There was a Royal dinner party, an evening party, and a concert at the Palace during the evening.

HER MAJESTY'S BIRTHDAY.—Thursday being appointed for the celebration of the anniversary of her Majesty's birthday, at an early hour in the morning the west end of the town was in a state of more than ordinary excitement, owing to the active preparations which were being carried on to do honour to the auspicious event so cherished in the hearts of her Majesty's loving subjects. All the clubs and public buildings, as well as the various establishments of the royal tradesmen, were decorated with tasteful devices preparatory to an illumination in the evening. An inspection of the household troops was announced to take place in St. James's Park, and at ten o'clock the 1st Regiment of Life Horse Guards, and Scotch Fusilier Foot Guards, and the Coldstream Guards were drawn up on the parade ground of the Horse Guards, accompanied by their respective bands, the band of the Life Guards being dressed in their state uniforms. An immense crowd was congregated in the Park on foot, in carriages, and on horseback round the circle formed by the sentries, whilst those who were fortunate enough to obtain passes were permitted to occupy an excellent position near the Horse Guards. The balcony of this as well as the Admiralty and the surrounding buildings were crowded with spectators. Shortly after ten o'clock a numerous cavalcade was seen approaching, in the direction of Buckingham Palace, which proved to be the popular Consort of our gracious Sovereign, and the royal and illustrious personages at present on a visit with her Majesty, and the renowned Commander-in-Chief of the British army. Foremost rode his Royal Highness Prince Albert, dressed in a field marshal's uniform, and close to his Royal Highness were the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Cambridge, the King of Hanover, and a numerous and brilliant staff, including several foreign officers. The illustrious party was much cheered by the bystanders. The bands immediately struck up the national anthem, and the troops gave a military salute. A variety of evolutions were then performed with beautiful precision, and by eleven o'clock the animating spectacle was concluded, and his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the other distinguished personages returned in the same order in which they had arrived. The vast concourse of spectators soon after separated.

The King of Hanover met with an accident on Friday afternoon at Kew, by stumbling over a stone step. In the fall his Majesty bruised his arm and side very much. His Majesty went to town in the evening. The Queen and Prince Albert and the Queen Dowager sent to learn the state of the King.

THE KING OF HANOVER'S VISIT TO THE TEMPLE.—On Wednesday evening his Majesty the King of Hanover honoured Sir Charles Wetherell, Queen's counsel, and bencher of the Inner Temple, with his company at a sumptuous entertainment at the hall of Inner Temple. The Duke of Wellington, who was invited to meet his Majesty, was prevented from dining with the circle by public business. Sir Charles Wetherell presided, his royal guest sitting on his right hand; and at the tables were the Lord Chancellor, Duke of Buckingham, Duke of Beaufort, Marquis of Londonderry, Earl of Eldon, Earl Delaware, Earl of Rosslyn, Viscount Strangford, Bishop of Rochester, Lord Brougham, Lord Denman, Lord Kenyon, Lord Lowther, Attorney General Sir Frederick Pollock, Solicitor General Sir William Follett, Right Hon. C. S. Law, the Recorder, Right Hon. Sir George Rose, Right Hon. Sir John Beckett, Mr. Thesiger, Mr. Pemberton Leigh, Right Hon. John Wilson Croker, Colonel Percival, Sir Frederick Watson, Dr. Jeff, Captain Wyke, and his Excellency Count Kalkreuzegge, the Hanoverian minister; Baron Falke, Baron Malortie, and Baron de Reitzenstein, attachés to the King of Hanover. The banquet was served up in a style of princely splendour, and the small hall was shown off to the best advantage by the display of the magnificent plate, Baron Malortie, and Baron de Reitzenstein, attachés to the King of Hanover. The banquet was served up in a style of princely splendour, and the small hall was shown off to the best advantage by the display of the magnificent plate, of some antique ornamental plate. In the centre of the hall was an enormous bouquet of the choicest flowers, in a vase. It was half-past ten before the party broke up; the King taking a cordial farewell of Sir Charles on his departure for St. James's.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—We regret to say the Queen Dowager continues in very indifferent health. For the last night little sleep, and her cough is troublesome. Sir David Davies has been in attendance at Marlborough-house, where the inquiries of the Queen and Royal Family and many of the nobility are exceedingly numerous.

WITLEY COURT.—We understand this romantic seat is in a state of preparation for the reception of her Majesty the Queen Dowager, who is expected to arrive at the end of the month from Marlborough-house. Her Majesty, through Earl Howe, has employed Worcester tradespeople in the decorations of the mansion. Some of her Majesty's effects arrived at the Worcester station on Saturday on Gloucester Railway.

THE ROYAL BRIDE AND BRIDEGROOM.—On Monday, at nine o'clock, the Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, accompanied by the Baron Knesebeck, arrived at Worthington's (royal) Hotel, Dover, where they slept for the night, and at two o'clock on Tuesday embarked on board her Majesty's Post-office packet Ariel, L. Smithett, commander, for Calais, on their way to their dominions. Their Royal Highnesses were attended on their embarkation by Major Eyre, and a guard of honour of the 19th Regiment from the Castle, who lined the streets from the hotel to the naval yard, where they stepped on board. The Duke and Duchess saluted arm-in-arm from the hotel, and during their progress bowed most condescendingly to the spectators. A royal salute was fired from the Grand Redoubt as the vessel left her moorings; and the people who thronged the quays and piers continued to cheer the Duke and Duchess until they got beyond the harbour's mouth. The day was exceedingly fine, and the Channel was as smooth as a mill-pond, so that the passage must have been uncommonly pleasant.

EARL GREY.—We are happy to be able to state that the noble earl is so much better that he is able to leave his bed-room for a short time at intervals during the day.

CAMBRIDGE.—The Rev. Geo. Adam Brown, Vice Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, died at his rooms in college on Monday last. He was chaplain to the late Duke of Sussex, and his death is attributed to a cold which he caught attending the Royal Duke's funeral. He was acting P.G.M. of the order of Freemasons of Calcobridge.

Last week two new churches in Lancashire, viz., All Saints, Elton, and St. George's, Unsworth, were consecrated by the Lord Bishop of the diocese.

THE DRAWING ROOM.

We have this week devoted a large share of our pictorial department to the illustration of one of those brilliant reunions of the Court which ever excite an interest among the people, and form the personal links of the chain that binds the Sovereign to her nobility in that stately intercourse of ceremony which is so aristocratic in its nature, and so dazzling in its display, and which the nomenclature of palaces has chosen to characterise as, par excellence, the Drawing Room.

Each Court Drawing Room in England is truly a little epoch in the season, to which it gives life and light; and far more splendid are these high audiences of an English Sovereign to those held at any other of the world's potentates:—more especially when a Queen graces the throne, as reigning monarch, and when that Queen is herself young and lovely—blending the charm of beauty with a regal dignity—do the blood and rank, and modern chivalry of aristocratic England gather eagerly around the throne, and win their personal pride in the smiles of royalty, that cannot but confess the grandeur of its retinue, and wonder at the magnificence of its train.

A drawing-room at St. James's is a sort of watchword of fashion. For weeks before its appointed hour it stirs the whole spirit of the world of ton. Fond anxious aspirations of fair girls longing to take their first bound into the delirious circle of pleasure, as it were, from the footstool of the throne—to have their first introduction to their Sovereign—to wear their first trousseau at the Court—to be in a word, the beautiful débutantes of a palace, flutter the young hearts of our fairest aristocracy with tremulous excitements, not so deep, but almost as distrubful as those of darling Cupid himself. Fond mothers, too, dwelling on their pride of their daughters—the best pride of nature—seek perhaps too anxiously to lead them into a circle whose graces so well accord with the splendour of their beauty, where their charms are companioned but not outvied, and where their loveliness becomes the Sovereign's admiration, and the Cynosure of every gaze.

The accomplished Peeress, too, who has passed the ordeal of introduction, and now goes to patronise and to present—who is farther into life's summer, and wears the rose of beauty in its fullest blowing and its deepest blush—who commands—impresses—fixes with her lofty bearing, her fine haughty self-possession, and seems to realize the noblest creation of aristocratic pride,—this high creature of the Court makes the drawing-room a darling rendezvous, and is a constellation there. Nay, the old Dowager will not give up the long-loved privilege of Court attendance, and many a stately plume is waved over faded graces, that will still be found with what is bright and lustrous, though they themselves may never shine again. Nor are the men less moved into activity by the pulsations of drawing-room life. See how lofty nobles fly to their ribbons, their orders, and their stars—what a blaze of "uniform" splendour is prepared by yon naval and military heroes—your old soldiers or young ambitious aspirants after fame and glory—and how now, as the milliners have been thrown into a panic by the ladies of the haut-monde, do the gentlemen drive their tailors mad. What a flash of sashes, epaulettes, and sword-knots—of cap, feather, and gold lace! Is not trade too thus stirred and spirited on? Do not your manufacturers of all orders of finery rejoice in their hearts when the word "drawing-room" is sounded to their listening delight? and they feast on confirmation from the columns of the Morning Post, in the shape of a notice from the Board of Green Cloth, giving instructions how carriages are to be set down!

We repeat, all the life of London is stirred, excited, and made gay by that "Seventh Heaven"—a drawing-room at Court.

And is it not a picturesque and glittering piece of pageantry? The avenues to the palace of St. James's become gala-spots for the people; they put on their own holiday finery, and rush in crowds to see the stately carriages rolling on with their noble freightage to the home of royalty. Here are their warriors, their statesmen, their prelates, their judges, and their peers, all wearing their distinctions of class and rank. Here burst upon their astonished gaze the superb attirings of a hundred "ladies fair"—the flashing of bright eyes—the waving of plumes—the blaze of diamonds and the glittering of costly robes. Magnificent trappings make gay the equipages, but much greater the magnificence of those who sit within. Of course the crowning scene of pomp and ceremony is within the palace itself, and thither let our illustrations take our readers, until such of them as are aspirant after the presence of royalty can "mingle in the throng themselves," and rejoice in a court suit and a presentation of their own.

For the purposes of court pageantry, St. James's Palace is reputed to contain the most convenient, if not the most elegant, suite of rooms in Europe. These state apartments look towards St. James's Park; and this side of the palace, though certainly not imposing, cannot be pronounced mean; it is of one story, and has a regular appearance not to be found in other parts of the building; the windows are large and lofty, and the entire range has enough stateliness to remind the stroller in the park of the brilliant and courtly scenes that have been enacted within these walls.

The ceremonial of a drawing-room is essentially the same as that of a levee, minutely yet graphically sketched by one who witnessed all that he has described, in the 49th number of our journal. There is an entrée drawing-room as well as an entrée levee. The carriage of her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert enters by the garden-gate in St. James's Park, and the carriages of the royal family from the park by the Colour Court. The carriages of the ambassadors and all who have the entrée (as the phrase is) pass down Constitution Hill, and "set down" in the Ambassadors' Court, on the west side of the palace. This regulation is observed in order to diminish the crowd of the carriages of the general company in St. James's-street, as well as to approach the palace by a more select route. The engravings in the first of the annexed pages will convey an accurate idea of this portion of the court pageant; representing the carriage of her Majesty, with the royal escort; the carriages of the ambassadors (those of Prince Esterhazy and the Turkish Ambassador being most prominent), the Duke of Wellington, and the nobility, en route; the scene in the Ambassadors' Court; and the military band, in their state dresses, with the arrival of the general company by the Colour gate, at the corridor of the great quadrangle, or Colour Court. The several corridors of the palace, at which the respective ranks of company enter, are crowded by respectable persons, who are admitted by tickets to gaze at the royal family, the nobility, and others, as they alight from their carriages and are passing up to the state apartments.

Having ascended the grand staircase, the company pass through the Guard Room, the walls of which are decorated with daggers, swords, and muskets, in various devices; and next, the country gentlemen's throng through the Tapestry Chamber, by Queen Anne's Room (the first of the four great state apartments towards the Park), to the Presence Chamber. Throughout this line are posted a party of the yeomen of the guard, and their usher, to keep the passage clear. The usher is posted at the head of the room, close by the door leading into the Presence Chamber; and to him, when persons of a certain distinction enter from the stairs, the lowermost yeoman, next to the entrance of the chamber, calls aloud, "Yeoman usher!" to apprize him of such approach. To this the usher makes answer, by audibly crying "Stand by!" to warn all indifferent persons to leave the pass clear. These are called the honours of the Guard Chamber, which are conferred on peers and peeresses of the three kingdoms, on privy councillors, knights of the several orders, on ambassadors, and chargés d'affaires, on the great officers of state, and on the captain and lieutenant of the band.

The Tapestry Room sits a gentleman whose duty it is to write down the names, as they are declared aloud by the usher, of all persons passing to the drawing-room.

The suite of state apartments may be briefly noticed. The first and second have the walls covered with crimson damask, and draperies of the same material; the gilt cornices and mouldings being very broad and massive, and the sofas, ottomans, and stools covered with crimson velvet, trimmed with gold lace. The pier-glasses, reaching from the ceiling to the floor, the lustres, and candelabra are very superb. The paintings in each room consist of portrait and two battle-pieces. Adjoining the Presence Chamber is her Majesty's closet, in which she gives audience, receives the members of her own family, foreign Ambassadors, Cabinet Ministers, and officers of state.

The Presence Chamber, in which the drawing-room is held, in gorgeous decoration far exceeds the preceding rooms, although the style is somewhat similar. The throne is covered with rich crimson Genoa velvet, thickly trimmed with gold lace, and is surmounted by a canopy of the same materials, on the inside of which is a star embroidered in gold; and the state chair and footstool are of exquisite workmanship. Over the fire-place is a full-length portrait of George IV. in his coronation robes, by Lawrence; and on each side are paintings of the battles of Vittoria and Waterloo. The piers of the room are entirely filled with plate-glass; the window-curtains are of crimson satin, trimmed with gold-coloured fringe and lace; and the cornices, &c., are richly gilt; the floor superbly carpeted, and the appointments throughout of the most costly description. In this truly regal apartment the presentation takes place, in the form shown in our engraving; the Gentleman-at-Arms keeping the pass in the room, and standing to their arms when any of the royal family pass. It is altogether one of the most brilliant scenes that can be witnessed, as brilliant, indeed, as the great wealth of England, lavished in the richest profusion on the persons of the fairest of their women, and of their high and honourable men, can make; and this in nowise diminished, but increased by that borrowed splendour which the presence of the representatives of the greatest and richest nations of Europe adds to the general effect. It is a dazzling pageant. The East contributes its gems; Africa its snow-white, lofty, and nodding plumes; the shops of Europe furnish the wardrobe, and her arts mingle the colours, determine the forms, and fix the relative position of all the parts of this moving diorama.

AMBASSADORS' CARRIAGES.

HER MAJESTY.

AMBASSADORS' CARRIAGES.

AMBASSADORS' COURT.

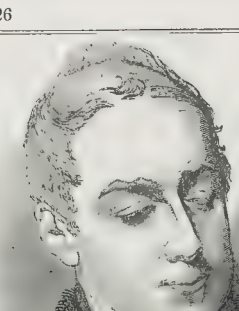
COLOUR COURT.

GUARD ROOM.

GRAND STAIRCASE.

TAPESTRY CHAMBER.

THE PRESENTATION.



PORTRAIT OF THE LATE MR. JOHN MURRAY.

We redeem our promise of giving a portrait of poor John Murray, introducing it with some remarks founded upon our own knowledge of the man, and adding something like a biographical accompaniment.

The fame of John Murray has been spread upon the wings of the genius he fostered, more than that of any other man of his calling; it is far and well known, associated with pleasant recollections, and in itself a sort of synonym with liberality and enterprise. About the pages of Byron—we mean those cheerful prose pages which are so full of sport, vivacity, and spirited commentary upon men and things—John Murray flits like a bird of grace here taking a high flight of speculation; there perching to pick up a copyright, with his beak—now scattering gold from his feathers —gold to make the eyes of authors glisten; and now singing in familiar concert with all the great literary spirits of the day. Byron, indeed, completely petted him, and talked of and to him in a tone of affection which was creditable to poet and publisher alike; Scott did the same; and the general testimony of all the intellectual giants of the day awarded Murray the credit of being as good a creature as ever lived. He must have passed a very happy existence, for while he enjoyed the richest treats of social intercourse, and felt honourably honoured by the friendship of the men he gathered round him, he also found that prosperity made her appearance in the same happy company—he had the success to make, and the delight of dispensing fortunes while he was following out the enjoyments of life. And he did blend the double advantage, for if his shelves were laden with the mental treasures of his time, his table was not the less a little throne of hospitality, and those whom he welcomed at the one he was ever ready to pay for the other. No man has given or received so much for books, or exchanged so large an amount of mutual kindness with authors; and everybody that knew him had a word of praise for Absolute John. Admitted to the circles of the nobility and high gentry—and himself liberally entertaining them—he became emphatically the publisher of the Aristocracy, and had acquired an easy and gentlemanly manner which was unconstrained without assurance, quiet without sycophancy, and pleasantly humorous without the boisterous intrusion of a vulgar buoyancy. He was an admirable anecdotist; and, therefore, an amusing companion. In his profession, although he published for men of such lofty fame—for Scott, Giffard, Campbell, Crabbe, Southey, and all the train of the Court of Genius—yet for many years his chief reliance in literary affairs was upon the judgment of his friend Lockhart—his editor of the "Quarterly Review." He deserved some praise from his party, and no small gratitude for the establishment of that highly influential publication. But John Murray was a hearty Tory, and stuck lustily to his colours to the last. He did not, however, make much of his daily paper, but rather sacrificed money without doing any political or literary good. He was often obliged to change his editors: one of the best known, though not perhaps most attentive, of whom was the late Dr. Maginn, to whom, as to others, he was always a most liberal patron. Murray was a great convivialist—he fed with enjoyment, imbibed jollily, and loved society from his heart. He was personally, too, often the subject as well as the retailer of anecdote; and one, par exemple, which falling within our memory we can give upon our own experience. We, on the occasion alluded to, formed one of a small literary party; Murray was present, with Jerdan, the editor of the Literary Gazette; Kennedy the poet, Laman Blanchard, poor George Penson (the best English Leporello of his day), and more men of mark in books, the arts, or theatres; and, parmi les autres, Robert Montgomery, the author of the "Omnipresence of the Deity," whose religious extravaganzies were then all the rage, although a good deal attacked by the critics of the day, and sneered down in literary circles. To this gentleman John Murray was presented, and, soon getting into a quiet confab, they sipped their wine most cosily together until Mr. Jerdan, either in a spirit of waggery or because he believed that no great publisher and notorious poet could talk so earnestly together without meaning business, got up and "rejoiced to inform the company that Mr. Murray had just concluded the purchase of the copyright of Mr. Robert Montgomery's next poem." The company appearing to receive this with becoming gravity, a fableau speedily formed itself which soon convulsed the room. There was Jerdan looking gravely sensible of the advantage of such an arrangement; there was Robert Montgomery's astonishment blending with "a wish-that-he-might-get-it sort of expression;" there were a few eager, credulous gazers, and among them John Murray, literally stupified with horror. He publish for Robert Montgomery!—the lion of a dissecting party who had long been taken for another man—the carped-at victim of every shrewd critic of the moment—the . . . . . But no, the passionate sense of such a degradation of such a publisher, as absolute discriminating John Murray, was far, far too much for utterance. So with disconcerted torture he yielded himself back in despairful agony to his seat, and we should think would never have spoken again but for the roars of laughter which his face-repudiation of the libel instinctive evoked from those who knew the real position of affairs. It was a capital joke indeed.

But we must be content to pause over our memorials of the kinld old man who is gone, no more, without borrowing from our contemporary, the Athenæum, some interesting details of his career:—

> His father was a bookseller of good circumstances and repute in Fleet-street, where John, the only son of a second marriage, was born on the 22nd of November, 1778.
>
> Mr. Murray's father died in 1793, when his son was in his fifteenth year, an age far too young to conduct the business unaided. He soon, however, started on his own account, and began a career of publication unrivalled in the history of letters. D'Israeli's "Curiosities of Literature," and Strutt's "Queenhoo Hall" were among his first publications. In 1807 he added "The Art of Cookery," by Mrs. Randell, to his list; in 1809 the "Quarterly Review," and in 1812 "Childe Harold." His name was now known beyond the sound of St. Dunstan's clock; all feared and read the "Quarterly Review," all read and admired Lord Byron. The "Quarterly" was a work suggested by himself to counterbalance the effects of the "Edinburgh Review" (his letter to Canning on the subject is still in existence); and "Childe Harold" was a poem of his own seeking, for he had been one of the first to foresee the budding genius of Lord Byron. He was a proud man, we have heard him say, when Dallas put the MS. of "Childe Harold" into his hands. He had been a poet's publisher before, for he had a share in "Marmion."
>
> In 1826 he married a Miss Elliot, the daughter of Mr. Elliot, the bookseller in Edinburgh, and in 1812 he bought the stock-in-trade, the good-will, and house of Miller, removing at the same time from No. 32, Fleet-street, to the well-known No. 50, in Albemarle-street. His enterprising spirit was at all times remarkable, and from this period his career was one of triumph. The list of authors for whom he published embraces the whole catalogue of eminent men, and a bare list of his publications would make a volume of itself. Mr. Murray's career as a publisher is one continued history of princely payments. An anecdote of his liberality of spirit we shall allow him to relate in his own words:—
>
> "Albemarle-street, June 8, 1829.
>
> "My dear Sir, Mr. Lockhart has this moment communicated your letter respecting my fourth share of the copyright of 'Marmion.' I have already been applied to by Messrs Constable and by Messrs. Longman, who offer me what I should not think above fair, but, highly do I estimate the honour of being, even in so small a degree, the publisher of the poet's publisher before, for he had a share in 'Marmion.'
>
> In 1816 he married a Miss Elliot, the daughter of Mr. Elliot, the bookseller in Edinburgh, and in 1812 he bought the stock-in-trade, the good-will, and house of Miller, removing at the same time from No. 32, Fleet-street, to the well-known No. 50, in Albemarle-street. His enterprising spirit was at all times remarkable, and from this period his career was one of triumph. The list of authors for whom he published embraces the whole catalogue of eminent men, and a bare list of his publications would make a volume of itself. Mr. Murray's career as a publisher is one continued history of princely payments. An anecdote of his liberality of spirit we shall allow him to relate in his own words:—
>
> "Albemarle-street, June 8, 1829.
>
> "My dear Sir, Mr. Lockhart has this moment communicated your letter respecting my fourth share of the copyright of 'Marmion.' I have already been applied to by Messrs Constable and by Messrs. Longman, who offer me what I should not think above fair, but, highly do I estimate the honour of being, even in so small a degree, the publisher of the poet's publisher before, for he had a share in 'Marmion.'
>
> "But there is a consideration of another kind, which until now I was not aware of, which would make it painful, for me if I were to receive a money agent. I mean the knowledge of its being required by the author, into whose hands it was spontaneously resigned in the same instant that I read his request.
>
> "Thus share has been profitable to me fifty-fold beyond what either publisher or author could have entertained, and, therefore, my returning it to such an occasion you will, I trust, do me the favour to consider in no other light than as a mere act of grateful acknowledgment for benefits already received by, my dear sir, your obliged and faithful servant,
>
> "To Sir Walter Scott." "JOHN MURRAY."

Mr. Murray left few good things, in literature, escape him, and his two last works, the Journals of Lord Eyre and Lady Sale, were rash, in the language of the trade, a lucky hit. He might have said, it is true, "The Bridgewater Treatises," but he made a mistake with "The Reviled Addresses." "I could have had 'The Rejected Addresses' for ten pounds, as far as to her ear of the author, but I never go by an idea of the moment. Now I repent. I was determined to pay for my neglect, and I bought the remainder of the copyright for 140 guineas." His daily paper was another mistake, for which he paid a more serious and lasting way. But let us hear his "Navy List," and other publications, thus referred to by Lord Byron:—

> "Along thy spruce-set bookshelves some
> The works thou deemest most divine,
> The 'Art of Cookery,' and mine,
> My Murray.
>
> "Tours, Travels, Essays, too, I wot,
> And Sermons to thy mind bring grist,
> And then thou hast the 'Navy List,'
> My Murray.

He said once to the present writer: "Lord Byron used to come to my shop, in Fleet-street, from Angelo's and Jackson's. His great amusement was making threats with his stick, in fencer's fashion, at the spruce books as he called them, which I had arranged upon my counter. He declared a row for me in a short time, always sitting in the middle of the hacknied set for the exercise of his skill." He added, with a laugh, "I was sometimes as you will guess, glad to get rid of him."

Let us illustrate his sagacity in vicariously by an anecdote which will be new to many of our readers. Constable published a little "History of England" in one small volume, which, as it were, fell with open arms. Murray perceived its merits, bought Constable's share, and baptised his little purchase by the name of "Mrs. Markham's History of England," a name it still enjoys. The work flourished in his hands, and is, to this day, retaining a large share.

Mr Murray has left a widow, three daughters, and a son, the editor of the Continental Handbooks, a series of publications which have attained a great popularity. Several years ago John Murray's name has been connected, in an eminent degree, with all that is tasteful and elegant in literature, we have now a third John Murray, to whom we wish all the success he so well merits.

POST-SCRIPT.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON'S BALL. On Thursday the Duke of Wellington gave a full dress ball at Apsley House, in celebration of her Majesty's birth-day. The officers of the household regiments, and the Grenadier and Coldstream guards were invited with their wives. Those of the Grenadier Guards all wearing mourning for the late gallant Colonel Ellison. One thousand two hundred personages of rank and distinction participated in the festivities of the evening.

Sir Robert Peel gave a full dress dinner in celebration of her Majesty's birth day, at his residence in Whitehall-gardens.

On Thursday last Dr. Augustus Baines, Vicar Apostol c of the Western District, was found dead in his bed at his residence in Bath. The deceased prelate was in his 59th year. His decease is attributed to an attack of apoplexy, to which he had been formerly been subject. Dr. Baines was consecrated bishop the 1st of May, 1823.

In the Queen's Bench, on Tuesday an action for libel was brought against the proprietors of the Standard newspaper by Captain Boldero, late President at Tangiers. Defendants did not justify, and a verdict for the plaintiff was taken by consent—Damages, 40*s*.

A stout built young man named John Hilson, was committed from Clerkenwell Court on Tuesday, to a month's hard labour, for an attempt to stab with a knife constable Gadd, 143 E, who interfered to prevent his injuring a female in Museum street, Bloomsbury.

FOREIGN.

SPAIN.—The Moniteur of Thursday publishes the following telegraphic dispatch:—

Bayonne, July 5.—Bilboa declared itself yesterday. Six Spanish Trincadores and a cutter in the roadstead of St. Sebastian pronounced themselves on the 3rd. One of the Trincadores and brought from Bilboa 20,000 dollars, destined for the payment of the troops.

Barcelona, July 3. Colonel Letosa has been appointed Chief of the Staff of the army of Catalonia. General Concha embarked at Valencia on the 29th ult., in the Isabella II. steamer, to assume the command of the troops at Alicant and Carthagena. The Regent is still at Alicante. Our Saragossa letter of the 1st instant states that on the preceding day a large meeting of the officers of the National Guard and the principal inhabitants was held, at which strong resolutions in favour of the Regent were adopted. General Zurbano still keeps the mountains in advance of Lerida. Tarragona closely besieged by the Regent's troops.

The Journal des Debats announces that General Narvaez was to march on the 29th ult. with 4000 men to relieve the insurgent force besieged in Teruel, and that another column would leave in a few days to attack the Regent. The provisional government of Barcelona decreed, on the 30th ult., that all acts done by the government of Regnero after that date should be considered null and void. Madrid was perfectly tranquil on the afternoon of the 1st inst.

AMERICA.—The packet ship Rochester arrived at Liverpool on Thursday night, with New York papers of two days' later date than those received by the Acadia. These journals do not contain any news of importance. The Irish repeal meeting continued to excite the attention of the New Yorkers; but, from all we can learn, American sympathy is not likely to be of long duration. A riot respecting wages had broken out in Canada, when several lives were lost.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The house went into committee on the Scotch Church Bill.—Lord CAMPBELL moved an amendment, the object which was to limit the objection to an instrument in matters of importance, to cases where such objection was taken.—The EARL of ABERDEEN opposed the amendment as unnecessary.—Lord BROUGHAM then addressed their lordships, and said that if the Church was to be armed with this enormous power of veto, it was time to see how it was exercised, and not by declaratory law; and let the house not avoid insulting the judgment and judges in the Auchterarder case.—The Lord CHANCELLOR said it was of the utmost importance that the judgment of their lordships' house should be maintained and respected; and he should therefore say nothing whatever calculated to impeach the judgment delivered by his noble friends (Lords Brougham and Cottenham), a judgment which was sound in its principle in every instance. The present bill was not in accordance with the decision in the Auchterarder case, in which decision he concurred. The bill was only declaratory upon one point, which was never questioned, as upon the Auchterarder case—namely, the right to the objects, not the right to decide, and therefore by no means could avert all the decisions in the Auchterarder case.—Lord COTTENHAM opposed the bill. The Earl of GALLOWAY and the EARL of LEICESTER supported the bill. Lord DENMAN contended that it was not right, by a political majority of their lordships, to overrule a solemn decision of the house in its judicial character, upon one of the most important cases which had ever come before it. In common with every judge in the kingdom, from the Lord Chancellor down to the person exercising the lowest judicial functions, he felt the deepest alarm at the course their lordships appeared to be disposed to pursue.—The amendment of Lord CAMPBELL was negatived by 42 to 12. the amendment of Lord CAMPBELL was negatived by a majority of 42 to 12.

—On their return to the gallery we found Lord BROUGHAM contending that they were about to declare that to be law which there was no existing power to carry out. If their lordships supported the bill in the shape it now assumed, they would stultify themselves more than any assembly in the world had stultified themselves before; they would be declaring that to be law which there was no power to enforce. The noble lord moved an amendment, the object of which was to make the bill an enactment instead of being declaratory.—After some conversation their lordships divided, and Lord Brougham's amendment was defeated by a majority of 38 to 10. The house soon after wards resumed, and the chairman reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again.—The bills on the table were then forwarded a stage, after which their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House of Commons resolved itself for an early hour into committee on the Arms (Ireland) Bill, but not before Lord CLEMENTS had vindicated his motives for offering such a decided opposition to the bill, under the feeling that every hour's obstruction of its progress was an additional hour of liberty to Ireland.—The ninth clause, which had been postponed on the ground of ambiguous phraseology, was now brought forward in an altered shape.—Lord J. RUSSELL, Mr. M. O'FERRALL, and other hon. members on the opposition side, contended that the total reconstruction which had taken place in this clause proved that the bill had been clumsily constructed, and fully justified the persevering opposition which had been hitherto given to its progress.—Some discussion then took place on the clause, as amended, and it was carried by a majority of 128 to 60.—The discussion of the next three clauses occupied the remainder of the night, and after disposing of the other orders of the day the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Buccleuch, and Lord Wharncliffe gave the royal assent, as Lords Commissioners, at a few minutes to four, to the Sugar Duties Bill, the Catholic Oath (Ireland) Bill, the Monckton Railway Bill, the Northampton and Peterborough Railway Bill, the Croydon Railway Bill, the Southampton Docks Bill, the Southampton Cemetery Bill, the Isle of Ely Drainage Bill, the Leighton Buzzard Inclosure Bill, and the Topcham Improvement Bill.—The Duke of Buckingham presented a number of petitions from various parts of the country against the Canada Corn Bill.

The Archbishop of DUBLIN presented a petition, praying the house to take measures to remedy the evils occasioned by the want of a church government for the United Church of England and Ireland; and took occasion to call attention to the anomalous position of the Church in relation with the civil Legislature. His object was to urge the necessity of constituting some legislative body which should have the power of settling those points on which members of the Church differed in opinion, but without altering the established litanies or formularies. He recommended the subject to the especial notice of the English prelates, who were permanent members of their lordships' house.—The Bishop of SALISBURY also expressed his opinion that some power of self-regulation should be possessed by the Church, to enable it to accommodate itself to those changes which take place in society. He felt satisfied that there could be no permanent security for the Church unless it were permitted to adapt itself to the changing circumstances of the times, and to make those alterations which should be found necessary.—The Lord Chancellor read a letter from Sir Hugh Gough, thanking their lordships for the vote of approbation passed on his conduct, and that of the officers and men who served under his command during the late operations in China. The letter was ordered to be inserted in the journals of the house.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE withdrew his motion respecting Scinde, as he understood the information he had required was in course of being presented to Parliament.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE moved that the house should resolve itself into committee on the Canadian Wheat and Flour Bill. The noble lord entered at some length into the provisions of the bill, with wh the public are already sufficiently familiar.—Lord BROUGHAM seconded the motion, as being quite in accordance with the views of her Majesty's Government, and because, also, it would remove an anomaly in legislation.—Earl STANHOPE opposed the bill, contending that it would be the means of admitting into this country a very large importation of American corn. The noble earl moved, as an amendment, that it be committed that day three months.—The Duke of RICHMOND could not give his assent to this measure, for he would not consent to reduce any further that protection to agriculture which has been already far too much reduced. Millions of property were invested in agriculture, and it could not afford to be thus tampered with continually. The Government should speak as decidedly upon the question of repealing the Corn laws as they had already done upon the repeal of the union. The Earl of DEVON and Lord BEAUMONT opposed the bill, and Lord WHARNCLIFFE said, he believed, in his conscience, that the measures of the Government would be the salvation of the agricultural interest. A reduction of the amount of protection was inevitable, and he believed that every reasonable agriculturist felt satisfied at the amount of protection given by the existing law. Lord MONTEAGLE said, one of his chief reasons for supporting the bill was, because it recognised the principle of a fixed duty, and he firmly believed it would lead to a very large amount of importation.—Lord ASHBURTON looked upon the bill as a measure of favour, concession, and service to Canada, without being in the smallest degree injurious to the agricultural interests of this country.—Lord TEYNHAM supported the amendment, for he could not consent to establish a Corn-law in Canada.—The Duke of BUCKINGHAM opposed the bill on the ground that it would lead to extensive smuggling, to the injury of the agriculturist at home. He also objected to it because it established the precedent of a fixed duty.—their lordships then divided, and the motion for going into committee was carried by a majority of 57 to 35.—Some bills on the table were then forwarded a stage, and their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY

The SPEAKER communicated to the house that he had received a letter from Sir Hugh Gough, acknowledging and thanking the house for the vote of thanks passed by the house, on the 20th of February last, to the army in China, for their operations in that country, and expressing the gratification of himself and the officers and army under his command at the high flattering and valuable a distinction. The letter, having been read, was ordered to be entered on the journals of the house.—Mr. WILLIAM S O'BRIEN then moved the following resolution:—"That the House will resolve itself into a committee, for the purpose of taking into consideration the causes of the discontent at present prevailing in Ireland, with a view to the redress of grievances and to the establishment of a just and impartial government in that part of the United Kingdom." The honourable gentleman contended, that the present organisation going on in Ireland perfectly justified his motion, and it was rendered further necessary by the deep-rooted conviction which seemed to pervade all classes, that the Parliament of the empire did not do its duty by Ireland, and that they could look for redress of grievances to a tribunal of legislature alone. He was no advocate for a repeal of the union, but he believed that the people of Ireland looked to it in utter despair of any other remedy for their wrongs.—Mr. WYSE seconded the motion, and, in so doing, gave a sketch of the history of Ireland as connected with the tenure of the soil, enumerated its injuries, followed by concessions, down to the period of Catholic Emancipation, and contended that all the Irish asked, was to be governed by the same laws as were passed for England.—Lord ELIOT defended the course the Government had pursued, and said, the great proportion of Protestants to Catholics in office arose from the circumstance that Government could not compel people to go into politics, and amongst these nearly the whole of the Catholics might be ranged. He was surprised that the repeal of the union should be advocated by any reasonable person, but as it was the intention to resist the repeal as long as they could, nothing less than a dismemberment of the empire. With respect to the question of "fixity of tenure," which Mr. S. O'Brien rather avoided, he would say that he at once admitted the principle, and he did so as well as the rights, but they were moral duties not easily made legal by consonable. He resisted the motion as being an impeachment of the Government, calculated to hold them up as not performing their duty to Ireland particularly.—Mr. C. WOOD and Mr. E. BULLER supported the motion, and resisted with the Government, and he hoped the session would not pass over without some means being adopted to restore tranquility to that country. Lord JOHN RUSSELL, however, left the house precisely when the debate he had addressed the house.—Mr. B. COCHRANE then moved the adjournme. of the debate, which was agreed to.—The house, having disposed of some other business, adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY.

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

MR. T. DUNCOMBE complained of a libel on proceedings contained in the Standard of last Saturday. The leading article in that paper, in commenting on Friday night's debate on the last Nottingham election, asserted that Mr. Duncombe had confessed himself guilty, in the course of discussion, to having been, in connection with Mr Gisborne, a suborner of perjury. This libel was so unfounded, and so malignant in its character, that he felt it necessary to move that the printer attending the bar of the house.—Mr. G. PEEL said the libel was most unjustifiable, but with respect to the motion for calling the printer to the bar, he would recommend the honourable member to rest satisfied with what he had stated. If he (Sir R. Peel) were thus to notice similar attacks upon himself, there was not a day upon which he would not have to make such motions as that of the hon. member.—Mr. DUNCOMBE did not think the speech of Sir R. Peel satisfactory.—Lord J. RUSSELL said the libel was a false and malignant one, but he thought the hon. member had already attained his object without calling the printer to the bar.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE accordingly withdrawn.—Lord WORSLEY moved that the house should resolve itself into committee on the Coroners' bill.—Mr. PARINGTON moved as an amendment, that the bill should be committed that day six months.—After a short discussion the house divided, and the amendment was negatived by a majority of 134 to 41. The house then went into committee, and the various clauses were then discussed.—On the motion of Mr. HUME, seconded by Mr. M. GIBSON, the schedules were postponed, and the further discussion of the bill adjourned till Wednesday next, Sir R. Peel having previously expressed his willingness to give the adjourned debate on the redress of grievances (Ireland) precedence to the debate on the Arms Bill on Friday next.—Lord WORSLEY then moved that the Commons Encumbered Estates Bill should be referred to a select committee, upon which Mr. HUME moved the adjournment of the debate, when, after some few remarks, it was accordingly adjourned until Wednesday next.—The other orders of the day were then agreed to, and the house adjourned.

THURSDAY.

Neither House of Parliament sat this day.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

Their lordships sat at half-past five o'clock this morning. The judges were in attendance, and the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas read a long and elaborate opinion of their lordships, in the case of "The Queen v. Millis," which involves a question relating to mixed marriages in Ireland. The judges were unanimous in their opinion that the marriage of Millis was not a valid marriage, as no recognised priest was present at the ceremony, and that was required by the law of the United Kingdom. The opinion of judges was ordered to be printed. Their lordships met again at five o'clock. The Canada Corn Bill was read a third time and passed; as was also the Salmon Fisheries Bill. The next stage of the Church of Scotland Bill was postponed from Monday to Tuesday next. A petition was presented by the Bishop of Salisbury, from the Archdeaconry of Salisbury, praying for the establishment of a bishopric at Manchester.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

After a good deal of conversation between Sir R. PEEL, Sir J. GRAHAM, and others, having charge of the public business, and several members on the Opposition side of the house, with regard to the order in which a number of measures are to be discussed in future, the debate on the redress of grievances in Ireland was resumed by Mr. S. CROMPTON.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

FATAL DUEL AT CAMDEN-TOWN.—On Saturday last a shocking and revolting occurrence, called "an affair of honour," took place at Camden-town, when Lieutenant-Colonel Fawcett, a gallant officer and highly-esteemed British officer, lately returned from China, where he commanded a wing of the 55th Regiment of Foot, and, in consequence of his heroic conduct throughout the campaign, received the investiture of the Order of the Bath, was slain by the hand of Lieutenant Munro, of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), his own brother-in-law, in a duel arising out of some unhappy family difference. The following are the circumstances of this melancholy occurrence, as far as they have yet transpired:—It appears that about a quarter-past five o'clock on Saturday morning, police-constable 130 S, who was on duty near the Camden-road Villas, as also the keeper of the toll gate facing the Brecknock Arms, observed two cabs, the first containing two gentlemen inside, and the second three gentlemen, pass down Mandeu-line, in the direction of Highgate. In about ten minutes after they were alarmed by hearing a single shot fired, and presently after the two cabs returned at a very speedy rate with but three out of the five gentlemen, and drove in the direction of the Regent's Park. This circumstance excited great suspicion, and immediately after several labourers, who had just come to commence their labours in haymaking in the adjoining field, gave information that a gentleman was lying in the field adjoining who had been shot. On hastening to the spot the police found a gentleman, who gave his name as Lieutenant-Colonel Fawcett, and his address 188, Sloane-street, lying on the grass, bleeding from a wound in the right side, and another gentleman, who gave his name as George Gulliver, and who stated himself to be the surgeon of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), standing by the wounded gentleman's side. On the police inquiring what had happened, Colonel Fawcett replied, "What is that to you? It is an accident." Under the direction of Mr. Gulliver a shutter was procured, and the unfortunate gentleman, Colonel Fawcett, was in the first instance conveyed to the Brecknock Arms Tavern, but was refused admittance. He was then conveyed to the Camden Arms, Randolph street, Camden Town, where accommodation was afforded. At the request of Colonel Fawcett his lady was at once sent for, and on her arrival the colonel confessed that he had been fighting a duel with Lieutenant Munro, of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue). Mr. Sandys, surgeon of Kentish Town, was then sent for, who declined to advisable, from the dangerous state of the wound, to call in Sir Benjamin Brodie and Mr. Liston, who arrived about eight o'clock. The result of their consultation was that they discovered the ball had entered the body on the right side, passed through the right lung, and had dropped into the intestines, in a similar manner to that in the case of the late Mr. Drummond. On a consultation it was the opinion of both medical gentlemen that to extract the ball at present was impossible. Information was forwarded to Inspector Aggs, of the S division, who lost no time in endeavouring to trace out the parties, and from his inquiries it was ascertained that, in a chaise to the other principal, Lieut. Munro, the name of one of these proved to be Mr. Grant, a lieutenant in the Guards, but the name of the fifth individual had not been ascertained. The field on which the occurrence took place is immediately adjoining the ride ground belonging to the Brecknock Arms Tavern. Mr. Gulliver was taken into custody during the course of Saturday, and brought before Mr. Long, the magistrate at Marylebone police court, when he declined to answer any questions put to him, and was held to bail, himself in £500, and two sureties in £250 each, to appear again on Wednesday. Colonel Richardson and Captain Oliver, both of the Horse Guards (Blue), entered into the required recognisance, and all quitted the court together.—At an early hour on Sunday morning another consultation between Colonel Fawcett's medical advisers took place, when Mr. Sandys reported that the patient had passed a quiet and comparatively comfortable night; that there had been no external hemorrhage, and that he was able to articulate very freely. An examination was made, with a view of ascertaining the direction which the ball had taken, and was so far successful as to leave but little, if any, doubt, that it had passed from the lower part of the right side, where it had entered in an oblique direction, towards the groin on the left side, a black mark indicating its course. This circumstance led to a belief on the part of the medical men that the ball was lodged at no great depth from the surface, and that in all probability its removal might be ultimately safely effected; but as the evening advanced all hopes vanished, and at seven o'clock strong symptoms of delirium were manifest. It was then evident to Mr. Sandys that a change for the worse had taken place. At twelve o'clock the unfortunate sufferer was quite unconscious of what was passing, and short y afterwards Mr. Liston, who had been specially sent for, arrived. Mr. Liston immediately gave his opinion that no hopes now remained, and a consultation was accordingly had from the effects of which the gallant officer obtained some sleep at intervals until death put an end to his sufferings at ten minutes past six o'clock on Monday morning.

THE INQUEST.—At half-past eight o'clock on Monday evening Mr. Wakley, coroner, together with a jury of fourteen inhabitants of Camden-town, assembled at the Camden Arms Tavern, to investigate the circumstances connected with the death of Lieutenant-Colonel Lyttar Fawcett, and on the court being opened the medical witnesses were severally examined as to the cause of death, after which the police constable and other witnesses deposed to the facts a nearly detailed above; but as there was no one present who could identify the parties, the inquiry was adjourned until Thursday. The adjourned inquest on the late unfortunate and lamented Colonel Fawcett, was resumed on Thursday at ten o'clock, at the Camden Arms Tavern, Camden Town, before Mr. Wakley, M.P. The witnesses examined were for the most part the same as were produced at the Marylebone Police-office on the previous day, consequently nothing new was elicited. Mr. Gulliver Bake, brother-in-law to the deceased and assistant surgeon in the 8th Hussars, identified the body. The jury then adjourned until Thursday morning next at ten o'clock.

In a conversation held by Mr. Sandys with the deceased, the former expressed his astonishment that the gallant lieutenant-colonel should not have stood upon his character and his known courage, instead of accepting Lieut. Munro's challenge; to whom Lieut.-Col. Fawcett replied that he thought Lieutenant Munro was bully-ing him, and this notion led to the fatal rencontre. During Sunday Colonel Fawcett once or twice referred to the rencontre which had taken place between himself and Lieut. Munro. He stated to Mr. Sandys that he received Munro's fire, when he was instantly "doubled up," and fell; and he positively asserted that he did not fire himself at all, although he had raised his right arm with the intention of firing in the air. From the nature of the wound, in the opinion of the medical men, it is evident that Col. Fawcett had his arm raised, as if to fire at the time he received it. On examining the coat and shirt of the unfortunate deceased, the former had a hole exactly corresponding with the wound, but the shirt was perforated in two places, which is accounted for by the fact that it was doubled over just at the very spot where the ball entered. A short time before the unfavourable change took place in the gallant officer, he exclaimed, in reference to what Mr. Sandys had before remarked about his refusing the challenge, "I wish now that I had not accepted the challenge, but stood upon my own ground." After this declaration he became delirious. About an hour prior to the death of Colonel Fawcett, Mr. Sandys deemed it advisable to acquaint his lady with his approaching dissolution, and also sent for Major Daubeney, of the 55th Regiment, his personal friend. From the moment that Mrs. Fawcett became acquainted with the fact of her husband's approaching death, she was perfectly frantic, and after that sad event had taken place, it was with the utmost difficulty that Major Daubeney, who had arrived just subsequent to it, and Mr. Sandys, could remove her from the body. She was then conveyed by Major Daubeney in his carriage to her own residence, No. 188, Sloane-street, where she remained throughout the day absorbed in grief at her melancholy and sudden bereavement. Colonel Fawcett was stationed in India for some years past with his regiment; and on being ordered to China, about two years since, Mrs. Fawcett returned to England with her two children, one of which is only recently dead. After serving through the previous events of the late war in China, Colonel Fawcett, whose health had become seriously affected by an attack of the yellow fever, obtained leave of absence to visit his native country, and arrived in England, in company with Major Daubeney, of the 55th Regiment, on the 15th of last month, taking up his residence in private lodgings at 188, Sloane-street. The history of his antagonist, Lieut. Munro, discloses an instance rarely met with in the English army, at the same time reflecting the highest credit on the discipline which allows, and the industry which merits, so extraordinary a result. Nineteen years since Lieut. Munro, a young Scotchman, entered the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) as a private soldier. A very short time elapsed before his superior attainments were observed by his commanding officers, and he was soon raised to the rank of corporal depute. The various grades of a full corporal, and a corporal-major were successively passed through by Mr. Munro, and in 1826 he was promoted to the rank of sub-lieutenant of the regiment. It appears that Lieut.-Col. Fawcett and Lieut. Munro married two sisters, daughters of the chief medical officer of Jamaica, and the former has one daughter, about four years of age, and the latter five children. The cause of the duel appears to be this:—Lieutenant Munro was on a visit on Friday evening at Col. Fawcett's, No. 188, Sloane-street, and made use of some offensive expressions regarding family property, which he repeated in the course of the evening twice or thrice. Upon the last occasion of his giving utterance to the objectionable expression (the exact nature of which has not transpired, Lieut.-Col. Fawcett rang the bell, and desired his servant to order Lieut. Munro's carriage. This was done, and Lieut. Munro quitted the house in a state of considerable excitement. He immediately proceeded to his barracks at Knightsbridge, and sent Lieut. Grant, of the same regiment, to demand satisfaction of Col. Fawcett. The latter officer referred Lieut. Grant to a friend, and the result was that a meeting was fixed to take place at five o'clock, at the spot where the calamitous rencontre happened. Lieut. Munro slept in barracks on Friday night, instead of going home, as was his custom, and on the following morning procured the assistance of Mr. Gulliver, the surgeon of the regiment. The body of the unfortunate colonel was removed in a shell from the Camden Arms to the residence of the undertaker, in Upper Montague-street, Montague-square.

Mr. Gulliver was again brought before the presiding magistrate at the Mary ebone Police-office on Wednesday, when the coachmen who drove the parties to the field were examined, but nothing was elicited to show who were the seconds, or by whose hand Colonel Fawcett fell. In the course of his examination, Mr. Samuel Sandys, the surgeon, of 4, Francis-terrace, Kentish-town, who proved the death of Colonel Fawcett from the effects of a bullet wound, said that the colonel had never mentioned who he went out with, with whom he had fought, or where. He made one or two exclamations, such as "I wish I had died in action," &c. Mr. Isadore Black, of 188, Sloane-street, assistant-surgeon of the 8th Hussars, and Lady Fawcett, the late Colonel Fawcett, identified the body. Mr. Gulliver was then held to bail to appear on Wednesday next, himself in £1000, and four sureties of £250 each, the latter being the Earl of March, Sir W. W. Wynn, Colonel Richardson, and Captain Oliver.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

"Who would toil and sweat?" asks the Prince of Denmark. "No one," we answer in the spirit of a more worthy philosophy. "Who could take half pleasure—even perspire?" The myriads who did so during the present week, with the thermometer at "freezing" (in the shade), within a radius of twenty miles around this metropolis, would defy a calculator of a hundred Cocker power. During its three days' regatta the Thames was dangerously awoken by contributions from brows that dropp'd pearls into her stream—

"as far as trees of Arnby
Their mel'ninable gums."

Some one has said that a life of pleasure is the most laborious a man can pursue, and was, very probably, professional coxswain to an amateur "eight," thirsty of aquatic fame; prone to regattas and wager-rowing. However, of this has been disposed of elsewhere. Above Putney-bridge and under old steam-presses, come we to speak of racing and betting, and folks who toil and sweat, perhaps, as much as your jolly young waterman, though they don't work their skulls exactly in the same way. The turf during the present season ought to boast but of one meeting of caste—that common to the month of July at Newmarket—"The Middle Meeting," as the inhabitants call it. To speak of its sport would be a piece of satire too cruel for our columns. Merriment was voted "low" a century ago, when people (great people) enjoyed themselves in pas de deux, called minuets or cances of death, and took their pleasure at assemblies where the guests were stuck against the walls like figures in fresco hence the term "melancholy and gentlemanlike." Very fine company is still, the public dismal, even but the best visit Newmarket for its July races; the deduction, therefore, is easily made. To speak of the events possessing any interest arising from it, the July and Chesterfield Stakes, although they introduce us to a person of the south-country two-year-old stock, whatever the issues of those first appearances, they rarely lead to any results of importance. The Derby betting—the touchstone of interest—cannot be said to commence in earnest before Goodwood, seldom till after Doncaster. Liverpool meeting, which commences on Wednesday next, is not rich in two-year-old races; indeed, it has but one, the Sheriff Stakes, to which there are fifteen nominations, and nearly all of them dark. Daedman, that was so good a favourite at Chester, where he turned out a screw, is in them, and may redeem his laurels. It will, however, be a famous place in the matter of sport of temporary interest—the finest in the kingdom. For the cup the best horses in England are entered, and will run; some at weight (if they can), others to earn a better chance for the Goodwood cup, for which five pounds allowances are given to all horses starting at the Liverpool July races. Moreover, for the better preservation of honour on the banks of the Mersey, the following order is to be strictly enacted:—

"No persons who are in default for either forfeits or bets will be allowed to enter the stand or its inclosure during the races, and if any such person shall obtain admission he will be expelled on satisfactory proof of his default being given to the stewards, and will forfeit his admission money. The stewards request that parties who have claims will notify the same to Mr. Ellis, the lessee, prior to the races." This notice will, we trust, intimate who is to "bell the cat;" we hope not poor Ely, for the sake of his family and kindred. There was not any betting during the week worth quoting.

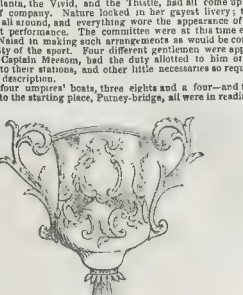
THAMES GRAND REGATTA.

The numerous matches, both with sculls and oars, for the splendid gold and silver cups, and other prizes, given by the committee of management appointed by the subscribers to this celebrated regatta, were this week commenced on Monday last, and continued for three days. The annexed plate is an accurate representation of the appearance of the river at the point selected by the artist, and illustrates very happily a scene which, without such graphic illustration, it would be almost impossible to describe in words. This scene shows the importance, not to say absolute necessity, of uniting the results of one with the labours of another, to convey a proper idea to the spectators and the readers of a popular journal, of what is taking place in the world, and being transacted around them, though without the sphere of their immediate action. Never did Father Thames, on any occasion, within the memory of living men or within the traditions of written records, witness a scene so full of entertainment, excitement, and rational recreation as this regatta. It is true that hundreds of regattas, of town-regattas, and of sailing-matches have taken place on the broad bosom of this patriarch of rivers; that pageants of royalty and of city munificence and grandeur have often been enacted, and will, we hope, be often again enacted on the waves of this noble stream—that kings and queens have been borne along the waters of the peaceful Thames to witness the launch of the ships of our national defences, or honour with their presence the stately edifices in which the gallant veterans of the naval and military services find refuge and retreat through the liberality of a grateful country. All this is perfectly true, but yet we may very properly affirm that such a fête, as took place on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday last, was never before witnessed on the Thames or on any English river. From twelve or one o'clock on each day of the regatta the wharfs and places of embarkation on both sides of the river were crowded with multitudes of people, waiting in anxious expectation the steamers which were to convey them to the scene of sport, viz. to Putney, to Hammersmith, or to Chiswick Ait, for at each of these places were clustered the larger number of spectators. Hundreds of smaller craft, of all shapes and "builds," from the state-barge of the trades-man at the "Pool" to the elegant and delicately-formed, and, apparently, to inexperienced eyes, the fragile galleys and skiffs formed by the hands of the artificers or artizans in the boatyard of the justly-celebrated Searle, whose knowledge of aquatic architecture, as it exceeds the knowledge of an other builders, so also exceeds all praise that we can bestow upon it, might be seen cutting through the water—some with the velocity of arrows, and some, it must be owned, with much more dignity than speed, some manned and carrying no passengers but the athletic youths or the coxswains, whose menaces rejoice in the noble exercise of "pulling," others freighted with passengers, of both sexes, to the water's edge, and propelled through the stream by hired watermen or burly mechanics; yet all exhibiting the height of good humour, and enjoying themselves, after their own way, in eating, drinking, laughing, laughing, making merry, and yet, perhaps, with occasional accession to their humours and their means. Putney-bridge was crowded with spectators, on foot; by a very proper regulation, no horsemen or carriages were allowed to remain on the bridge. Hammersmith-bridge was furnished with seats for spectators; and at the Bell Tavern, the Bear and Garter, and the other large taverns at Putney, the windows were all filled with spectators; booths were erected for half a mile along the Barnes Elms bank. The church flag was hoisted, the house-tops were decorated with banners and pennons; flag-staffs exhibited the colours of various nations, and thousands upon thousands were congregated on the shore. On the Fulham side the scene was somewhat similar. The ancient Gothic house, Earl's-court, was decorated with standards, and many more such decorations flaunted gaily in the wind from other residences. The steamers and larger vessels were moored on either side, some of them covered with the flags of various nations—the Prussian, French, Dutch, Belgic, American, &c. The Union Jack, the Blue Peter, and the standard of England,—that flag that has so often "braved the battle and the breeze," swung gallantly from the masts and rigging of the committee's yacht, and made a glorious addition to this grand spectacle. The arrangements were admirable, twelve well-manned police cutters kept the course clear, prevented an confusion, and rendered the occurrence of accidents almost impossible. The whole is reflective of the greatest honour to those by whom it was planned and carried out. It was a national fete in every sense of the words, and one which we and every body else hope may be annually repeated.

FIRST DAY.

As the hour for the start approached the tide brought up with it an immense number of boats, filled with first-rate company. Amongst these were several of the gentlemen who had entered to contend, with others of the aquatic clubs who were not on the list of competition. The stands however, brilliantly set out with elegantly attired females, were not filled, which in some measure may be accounted for by the number of craft moored in the Thames, which was thickly peopled, independently of which the vast extent of embankment, from the starting-point to the winning-post, afforded a promenade for some thousands to witness the races. The coup d'œil was, however, imposing in the extreme. The Richmond steam-boat, chartered by Mr. Searle, for the accommodation of the committee, the Laurel, the Sylph, the Atalanta, the Vivid, and the Thistle, had all come up with a goodly share of company. Nature looked in her gayest livery; the sun shed its lustre all around, and everything wore the appearance of an approaching great performance. The committee were at this time engaged on board the Naiad in making such arrangements as would be conducive to the regularity of the sport. Four different gentlemen were appointed, one of whom, Captain Meesom, had the duty allotted to him of seeing the gentlemen to their stations, and other little necessaries so requisite in matters of this description.

There were four umpires' boats, three eights and a four—and the first having moved to the starting place, Putney-bridge, all were in readiness for the start.



THE SILVER £40 CUP.

The Silver Cup, value £40, a pair-oared-race by Gentlemen. From Putney bridge to Hammersmith-bridge. To become the absolute property of the winners.

First Heat.—Messrs. Halkinson and Bailey (pink), Messrs. Dalgleish and Wallace (red).

Red went off a tride with the lead, but it was so very slight as to be scarcely worth notice. Pink then came level, and both were at full work, when one of the gentlemen in pink fouled his oar; red went away, and won by ten boat-lengths.

Second Heat.—Messrs. Julius and Bompstead, green; Messrs. Jeffrey and Jackson, white and red; Messrs. Chipman and Earnshaw, orange; Hon. L. Denman and Ritchie, Esq., light blue.

Green and white and red formed a very pretty picture, and went away together, at first one and then the other green went away in advance of his opponents. They maintained their advance throughout, and won by about four boats, orange being second about a similar distance in advance of white and red. The Hon. L. Denman and Mr. Ritchie, the other pair in the race, were withdrawn.

THE SILVER CHALLENGE CUP—80 GUINEAS.

Scullers' Race by Watermen, for £30.

This prize was won by John Phelps of Fulham, aged 21.

Four oared race by Gentlemen for a silver Challenge Cup, value 80 guineas. The cup to become the property of the holders for three successive years; the distance being from Putney Bridge to Chiswick Ait.

First Heat.

St. George's Club (white and red).—Messrs. Bompstead (stroke), Collier, Hodden, Jeffreys, Johnson (steerer).

Leander Club (red).—Messrs. Dalgleish (stroke), Julius, Wallace, Soames, Shepherd (steerer).

The Leander, immediately after starting, began to draw from her adversary, but was very shortly pressed. She, however, still held her own, went up the reach to the chain-bridge half a length in advance, and increased her lead by about the same tride at the winning post.

THE GOLD CHALLENGE CUP—150 GUINEAS.

THE THAMES REGATTA—FULHAM BRIDGE.

Second Heat.

Royal Academy Club (green).—Messrs. Atkinson (stroke), Cooper, Ruell, Carpenter, Jameson (steerer).

Trinity Club, (light blue). Messrs. Ritchie (stroke), Richardson, Sharpe, Brooks, and Minister (steerer).

Guy's Club (orange).—Messrs. D. Headley (stroke), W. B. Fergusson, C. Lloyd, H. Grogging, T. E. Winter (steerer).

Won by the Royal Academy's and Guy's, the latter being just enough ahead to be called first.

Pair oars, by Watermen, for £50. Distance, from Putney Bridge to Hammersmith Bridge.

Won by Doubledee, Lambeth, and H. Campbell, Lambeth (light blue).

Eight-oared Race, by Gentlemen, for the Gold Challenge Cup, value 150 guineas. Distance, from Putney-bridge to Chiswick-ait.

First Heat.

Civil Engineers' Club (orange).—Messrs. Arnold (stroke), Harritt, Cooke, T. Hume, E. Bell, C. H. Brown, T. Scott, W. Harritt; T. Stedman (steerer).

Oxford Aquatic Club (blue and white).—Messrs. Maberly (stroke), Welsh, Pocock, Reynell, Lovesay, Lempriere, Rodgers, Stewart; Churchill (steerer).

The two boats made an admirable race. The Oxford Aquatic won by a length or so.

Second Heat.

Leander Club (red).—Messrs. Daigleish (stroke), Jeffreys, Wallace, Julius, Hodding, Bumpstead, Newman, Soames; Shepherd (steerer).

Cambridge Subscription Rooms Club (light blue).—Messrs. C. Vialls (stroke), Hon. L. Denman, W. Jones, R. Cobbold, T. Ridley, Brooks, A. Shadwell, W. Yeatman; W. Johnson (steerer).

Oxford University Club (purple).—Messrs. Hughes (stroke), Lowndes, Cox, Bourne; Brewster, Royds, R. Menzies, Stapylton; Shadwell (steerer).

It was a magnificent start, the Leander picking their boat up rather sharply at first. In passing through Hammersmith-bridge the Oxford drew upon the other two boats, and won with the Leander.

SECOND DAY.

There were eleven races on the list.

Four-oared Race, by Landsmen, for a Sweepstakes of £2 each, with £20 added.

Red and purple were abreast of each other, and green was running away with the lead, which he maintained, and won by two or three lengths, purple being second.

In the second heat yellow went away with the lead, light blue being second, and black and white laying well up. Light blue rowed up to the oars of the first boat, and a desperate struggle ensued. Black won cleverly.

Four-oared Race, by Gentlemen.

Final Heat.

Leander Club (red): Messrs. Daigleish (stroke), Julius, Wallace, Soames, and Shepherd (coxswain). Guy's Club (orange): Messrs. Hedley (stroke), Fergusson, E. Lloyd, Grogan, and Fenton (coxswain). Royal Academy Club: Messrs. Atkinson (stroke), Cooper, Reid, Carpenter, and Cameron (coxswain).

Red dashed right away, rowed in the most beautiful way, and won the heat. The winners had been the favourites at 5 to 4 on starting.

Scullers' Race, by Watermen.—First Heat.

T. Coombes, white, Millbank; Pocock, green, Lambeth; Newell, purple, Battle-bridge-stairs; Phelps, stripes, Fulham.

This was the grand heat in the sculler wager, and a considerable sum of money depended on the issue. Newell, who rowed for the championship last year, was backed at 5 to 4 on the field; and Pocock stood next in the estimation of good judges. Phelps and young Coombes had their favourites, but they could not be considered in that light in the ordinary run of betting.

The start was very beautiful, and taken at the same instant on all hands. Immediately afterwards Pocock made play, and got the first place. Newell was smiling and beginning to work; and Coombes and Phelps, with their stems up to the thwart of Newell, were rowing a desperate race to obtain a leading position. Newell laid down to his work, went by Pocock, and had it all his own way, winning easily by about a boat's length; Coombes third, four lengths astern of him; and Phelps in about the same position.

Eight-oared Race, by Gentlemen.—Grand Heat.

Oxford University Club (purple): Messrs. Hughes (stroke), Lowndes, Cox, Bourn, Brewster, Royels, R. Menzies, Stepylton, and Shadwell (coxswain). Oxford Aquatic Club (blue and white): Messrs. Maberly (stroke), Welch, Pocock, Meynell, Lovesey, Lampreve, Rogers, Stuart, and Churchill (coxswain).

THIRD DAY.

On Wednesday the sport at Putney was brought to a close, and although the attendance was not so numerous as on the second day, certainly a very first-rate assemblage promenaded the banks of the river, or took up a position at the numerous taverns and stands with which this locality abounded. The principal race, and indeed the most attractive one, was that amongst the gentlemen amateur scullers, and to this, independently of the minor races, was added an eight-oared race amongst gentlemen amateurs, drawn by lot, and a four-oared race amongst the most celebrated watermen on the river. As regards the latter, it will be remembered that amongst the prizes originally announced was one of 50 guineas, for four-oared boats, but it was found impossible to get up the crews, and the idea of the race was for the time abandoned. In the eleventh hour it was determined that the men should be drawn by lot, a course which ought to have been adopted in the first, as it would have given an opportunity for speculation on the merits of the men, which was not afforded by their drawing an hour before the race, and which was otherwise inconvenient, inasmuch as the thousands congregated had no chance of learning the names of the respective crews.

The regatta commenced with a match amongst apprentices in the seventh year of their time, who plyed between London-bridge and Teddington-lock, and was for a coat and badge, presented by Evan Morris, Esq., and the freedom of the river.

HAMMERSMITH SUSPENSION BRIDGE.

Four-oared Race, by Watermen, drawn by Lottery.

Blue—Messrs. Jones, Brummell, Williams, C. Maynard, and Masterman. Yellow—Messrs. Neville, Maxwell, Jones, Carter, and Wilson. White—Messrs. J. Castle, Dodd, Sage, Jones, and Maynard. Red—Messrs. Harris, Maynard, Gowin, Green, and Campbell. Red and White—Messrs. Power, Jones, Placey, Shepherd, and Maynard. Green—Messrs. Brantwaite, Shaw, Leach, Procent, and Foudrey.

Yellow, blue, red, and white formed a pretty picture. White then drew, yellow being a good second, and green making play with much effect. Yellow won by a length; red being second, half a boat in advance of white, which was third.

Amateur Scullers.

Final Heat. Mr. Chapman took the lead, pressed by Mr. Kennedy; the other two in the heat bowing abreast of each other. Mr. Chapman continued to lead, and beat Mr. Jeffreys, who was second, by about two lengths. Mr. Kennedy was third.

Apprentices' Match.

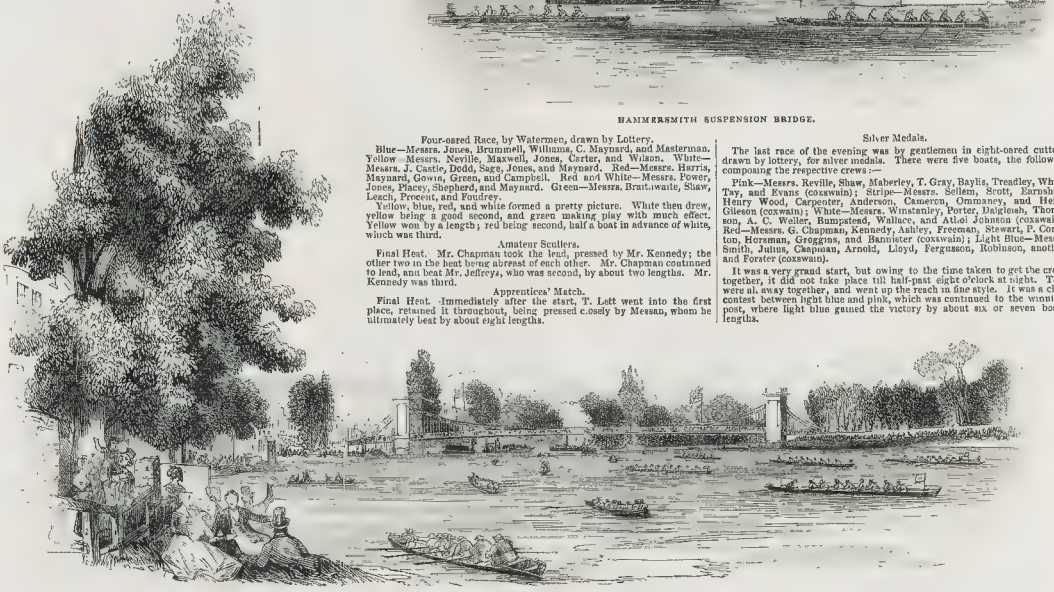
Final Heat. Immediately after the start, T. Lott went into the first place, retained it throughout, being pressed closely by Messan, whom he ultimately beat by about eight lengths.

Silver Medals.

The last race of the evening was by gentlemen in eight-oared cutters, drawn by lottery, for silver medals. There were five boats, the following composing the respective crews:—

Pink—Messrs. Reville, Shaw, Maberley, T. Gray, Baylis, Treadley, White, Tey, and Evans (coxswain); Stripe—Messrs. Sellen, Scott, Earnshaw, Henry Wood, Carpenter, Anderson, Cameron, Ommaney, and Henry Gileson (coxswain); White—Messrs. Winstanley, Porter, Daigleish, Thompson, A. C. Waller, Bumpstead, Wallace, and Athol Johnston (coxswain); Red—Messrs. G. Chapman, Kennedy, Ashley, Freeman, Stewart, P. Compton, Horsman, Groggins, and Bannister (coxswain); Light Blue—Messrs. Smith, Julius, Chapman, Arnold, Lloyd, Fergusson, Robinson, another, and Forster (coxswain).

It was a very grand start, but owing to the time taken to get the crews together, it did not take place till half-past eight o'clock at night. They were all away together, and went up the reach in fine style. It was a close contest between light blue and pink, which was continued to the winning post, where light blue gained the victory by about six or seven boats' lengths.



THE THAMES REGATTA.

THE GARDEN IN "DON PASQUALE."

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" was produced here on the 30th ult. on the occasion of Lablache's benefit. Its brilliant reputation in Paris drew an unusually crowded audience, whose expectations were raised to a high pitch.

The ascent of the curtain, after a very pleasing overture, at once introduces us to the hero, Don Pasquale (Lablache), a warm old bachelor, the impersonation of good humour; but he is not so good-humoured as he looks. His nephew, Ernesto (Mario), has refused a match of his own choosing, and therefore, though he numbers three score and ten years, he resolves to take to himself a wife, and to turn out of doors a relative who has dared to think for himself. His consultation with the physician, Dr. Malatesta (Fornasari), on the subject of this scheme, introduces the first piece in the opera—a duet, a very pleasing, quiet melody, beautifully sung by Fornasari. The stage being left by the Doctor, we have another duet, arising from the entrance of Ernesto, to whom Pasquale reveals his intention. Mario sang in his sweet plaintive style, whilst the wicked old Don was convulsed with mirth, and soared his laughter through the melody. The scene changing brings us to the house of Norina (Grisi), a young widow to whom Ernesto is attached. Grisi enters, reading a romance, and trilling a very lively air, with great delicacy and neatness in the lighter passages, though her voice was not always equal in the fuller and more sustained notes. Malatesta visits her, to tell her all Pasquale's schemes, and to ask her to represent the sister, whose charms he has been describing. The merry widow readily agrees to the plan, and she and the Doctor come to an understanding in a characteristic and comic duet, in which she apes the simple girl, and he is in ecstasy at her talent. This duet brings the act to a very lively conclusion.

The troubles of the devoted Pasquale begin in the second act. He is awaiting the arrival of Malatesta and his incomparable sister. The Doctor and Norina enter—the lady veiled. Every action on her part shows the utmost timidity, while every look of Pasquale betokens admiration and eagerness. At last Malatesta prevails on the pretended sister to remove the veil, and poor Pasquale is literally shot through the heart, by the contemplation of such charms. A notary is instantly sent for, the marriage takes place, Ernesto entering as the contract is signed, and learning from Malatesta that the whole affair is a trick. Norina then throws off her assumed bashfulness, and astounds Pasquale with the sudden change, for she now appears as imperious as she before seemed modest. The act closes with his consternation.

The curtain rises on new miseries. A host of milliners, maid-servants, &c., occupy the stage, and Pasquale is at a table absorbed in the unpleasing perusal of a number of tradesmen's bills. An altercation with his wife is the subject of an exceedingly clever duet, which proceeds in a lively strain till she boxes his ears, and then it suddenly takes a melancholy turn, as the distress of Pasquale now borders on the pathetic. Rushing off the stage, she drops a note. The note purports to be from some unknown lover, and Pasquale goes off in an agony of jealousy. A duet follows between Pasquale and Malatesta, in which both resolve to go to the garden and waylay the lover who would dishonour the family. The garden scene opens with an air, the gem of the opera, a serenade of a simple character, delightfully sung by Mario behind the scenes. It was unanimously encored. The entrance of Norina introduced another piece of scarcely less beauty—a duet by Mario and Grisi, sung to perfection. Pasquale enters to entrap the lovers, not knowing that his nephew is the delinquent, and tells his disobedient wife that a rival lady shall inhabit the house, for that Ernesto shall have his consent to marry Norina. Of course the pretended Sofronia now reveals the fact that she herself is Norina; the marriage is declared to have been a sham one; the young lovers are united; and Pasquale thanks his stars that he has escaped the trammels of matrimony. A very pretty finale, the solo part of which is sung by Grisi, concludes the piece.

"Don Pasquale" is studded with more musical beauties, and bears more marks of originality, than the generality of Donizetti's works. Of his versatility there can be no doubt; but with the power to be great in any style, perhaps his penchant is towards buffa writing. His "Elisir" and "Pasquale" (a more parlante music than the other) are sufficient proofs of this. But Donizetti is a maestro of varied and prodigious powers. If he would but deliberate a little more, write one quarter of what he does, he would produce things more likely to make lasting impressions; and yet it would be difficult to cut him down. A vine bearing such fruit on every branch, it were hard, and perhaps dangerous to prune.

PRESENTATION OF CHRIST'S HOSPITAL SCHOLARS TO HER MAJESTY.

One of the episodal scenes of her Majesty's drawing-room on Thursday week, and by no means the least interesting ceremony of the day, was the presentation of certain scholars of Christ's Hospital to the notice of the Sovereign. For this high honour are annually selected forty of the "mathematical boys" of the foundation, who on the first drawing-room day of the season are conveyed in couches to St. James's Palace, and are there presented to her Majesty, when, attended by the president and other officers of the school, they exhibit their charts to the Sovereign, with feelings which can be better imagined than described. They are then presented with the gratuity of eight guineas from the regal purse, which sum is divided among the ten boys who leave the school in the year; and formerly, to this amount, other members of the Royal Family added smaller sums. On the illness of George the Third these presentations were discontinued; but the governors of the hospital, nevertheless, paid £1 3s., the ordinary amount received by each, to every boy on quitting; and the total exceeds the amount now received by about £2 10s. The practice of receiving the children was revived by the late King William IV., who, from his predilection for the sea, examined the charts presented by the boys, and bestowed a passing note of commendation wherever he recognised merit. Her present Majesty, too, is known to take especial interest in the welfare of this magnificent foundation, and has recently presented to the Treasury the sum of £1000.

The mathematical school is but a "ward" of Christ's Hospital; though it is an important integer of "the noblest institution in the world." It was the first addition to the foundation after the Great Fire. It originated with Sir Robert Clayton, then Lord Mayor, and who had himself been a considerable benefactor; and at whose suggestion King Charles II., on the 19th of August, 1676, granted a second charter, allowing £1000 a year for seven years, to establish a mathematical school for forty boys, and an annuity of £370 10s., payable at the Exchequer, for the especial purpose of educating and placing out yearly ten boys in the sea service. But the worthy Lord Mayor liberally followed up the King's munificence, for in 1675 he rebuilt the south front of the ward at a cost of £7000. It was again rebuilt in 1832, from the designs of the architect of the hospital, the late Mr. Shaw: it is comprised in the same edifice with the grammar school, and both make an elegant structure, adorned with statues of Charles II. and Edward VI. Lest this mathematical school should fail for want of boys properly qualified to supply it, one Mr. Stone, a governor, left a legacy to maintain a subordinate mathematical school of twelve boys: this is called "Stone's School," and here the younglings are prepared for reception into the King's ward, as the upper school is called. Previous to his leaving the latter school, each boy is examined by a board of the Trinity House, having passed which, and received testimonials of his good conduct, he is presented with a watch, as a reward, worth from £9 to £13, in addition to an outfit of clothes, books, mathematical instruments, a Gunter's scale, quadrant, and sea chest.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE;
OR
THE SISTERS.
A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

By HENRY COCKTON,

AUTHOR OF "VALENTINE VOX," "STANLEY THORN," ETC.

CHAPTER XV.

NEWS FROM VERDUN.

HAT the College with which Darnley quitted the lodge were not strictly speaking to these with which he had entered may be easily conceived, still they were not those of absolute departure. He had been fairly defeated at his trade, but, although the part, whether design he had conducted had most signally failed, he was ... sisted by the hope that at no distant period Caroline would ...

It must not, however, be for a moment imagined that even then that hope sprang from pure love. He esteemed her certainly more than ever: he admired her more than ever as a beautiful and highly accomplished woman, but in his view there was one consideration more brilliant, more attractive than all, and that was the wealth she would possess as a widow.

That she loved him—if he ever entertained a doubt upon the subject—no doubt existed then. She had, in his judgment, proved it to demonstration.

Caroline, however, up to that time had never entertained for him any other feeling than that of sympathy. She believed that he was passionately fond of her, and pitied him: she believed that his love for her had prompted him thoughtlessly to seek her dishonour, and forgave him: but the contingency of which we had never dreamed until intimated by him, opened a new field for contemplation. Now now it that he might cherish as honourable hope—that he might with propriety entertain a love for her—that he might cultivate that ... without feelings of shame, and, even breathe it to her without violating virtue.

She could, however, scarcely bear to think, because thought seemed with hope, and hope to unveil the vilest feelings that can harass human nature. With the most sincere ..., although she reproached herself sincerely, and wished to bury all in oblivion.

But, notwithstanding her dissatisfaction to think of that event which, Darnley's presence ... partially suggested, she felt unspeakable pleasure in his society. She could scarcely ... account for it. In marriage, it is true, was in her view more elegant, his appearance more ... prepossessing, his voice more rich, his conversation more refined, but she could not account for ... peculiar pleasure his presence never failed to induce, because on no occasion did he ever breathe a syllable having reference either to hope or to love. She did not know exactly ... how her scent was affected, she in fact scarcely thought of that at all; but she always felt ... delighted when he was near, and as Sir Arthur himself regarded him as one of the most agreeable young fellows he ever met with, he was certainly invited to the lodge.

Nor did the fact of their coming to town for the season interrupt at all these mutually pleasurable visits, for Darnley immediately came to town, and for the first three months ... were even more intimate than ever.

At the expiration of that period, how ... Lady Grange—who had never forgiven either Sir Arthur, Charles, Caroline, Geo ... perceiving that an express understanding existed between Caroline and Dar ... break the spell which bound Sir Arthur, and therefore to have his revenge she therefore suddenly became extremely amiable and kind—visiting Caroline constantly, lavishing upon her the most affectionate endearments, and inducing the belief that she still fondly loved her—concealing that on a moment of confidence Caroline might be tempted to acknowledge that there existed between Darnley and herself feelings of a more tender nature than those of mere friendship.

While, however, Lady Grange was thus spreading her net, Sir Arthur received a letter from France, which affected him deeply. It was dated "Verdun," and came from Charles, who informed him, that in consequence of the cowardice and treachery of a certain Spanish general, who abruptly abandoned a secure position, in which, unhappily, Sir Arthur Welles ... had placed the British wounded under his protection, both he and Fred. had been taken prisoners; that he might have escaped in one of the waggons, but would not leave Fred. who, having received a dangerous wound, from which, however, he was then fast recovering, could not be then removed with safety; that he could not write until he had reached Verdun, to which they had been treated with great consideration by the French; that they had been parole; that Laurence, who had just returned from Paris with a son, was an angel; that she studied ... assiduously to animate them with hope; and that he did hope, despite the sombre prospect ... before him, that ere long Napoleon's fate would restore them to liberty.

This was the substance of the letter, and no one was lost by Sir Arthur in preparing to communicate its contents to all concerned. He despatched servants for Greville, Dr. Hawtree, and Major Palgrave immediately, and, having done so, hastened down to the banker's ... himself, and, with tears in his eyes, made arrangements for supplying the prisoners with whatever money they might require, without limit.

He then hastened back, and on his return found the friends whom he had sent for wondering what the extraordinary summons could mean, for the servants had been ordered to bring them without a moment's loss of time, and as Caroline was from home they could obtain no clue. They therefore attended him the moment he entered, but without even attempting to ... ask he grasped their hands, trembling at the same time with violence, and, having motioned ... on to bring their chairs close to his, opened the letter.

He was too much affected, however, to read it. He could get no further than "My dear Uncle," for the tears gushed forth and compelled him to hand it over to Greville, who ... proceeded to read it aloud:

"Verdun," said Greville commencing without the slightest emotion.

"Verdun!" exclaimed the Major, "Verdun—Who is that from?"

"Pardon," replied Sir Arthur

"Charles at Verdun! He's a prisoner: he's a prisoner That's the chief depôt. Proceed, Greville, proceed."

And Greville did proceed: he read the letter from beginning to end, without making a single remark by the way: but, the moment he had finished, the Major exclaimed, "The villain! I heard of the movement! I heard of the thief! The fact is, the Spaniards are a set of scoundrels—treacherous, unskilful, strike scoundrels—commune them! I would not trust any one of them. Wellesley ought to have known better. It was a fine position, an excellent position, a position which ought to have been maintained, and which might have been maintained with the utmost ease; but the fact is, they are not worth powder and shot. However, there the poor fellows are, and I hope they'll be happy!"

"They are not then actually confined in a prison?" observed Greville.

"Oh! no, no, no on parole—on parole! They may be happy enough if they will: all they have to do is to keep their minds at ease."

"What sort of a place is it:—very small?"

"Small! No, a fine old town on the Meuse, about a hundred and forty miles east by north from Paris. The fact is, it contains ten thousand inhabitants, plenty of fortifications, plenty of churches and plenty of quality too if you have plenty of money."

"And that they can—have," said Sir Arthur; "I'll ask more of that."

"Well, things must take their course," observed Greville; "it's quite clear, things must take their course."

During the whole of this time Dr. Hawtree had not uttered a word. He had been thinking of Alice, and the effect which the intelligence would have upon her, and was just about to beg of his friends not to suffer a syllable on the subject to escape them in her presence, when the carriage drove up to the door, and the next moment Alice, who knew that her father had been summoned by Sir Arthur, in a state of agitation, alighted with a letter in her hand.

Throughout below" exclaimed the Doctor, who saw her alight, "he has written to her" and he instantly left the room.

"Oh, papa!" exclaimed Alice, as she flew to him in tears, and threw her arms round his neck, "such dreadful news... Oh! dreadful!"

"What has happened, my girl? Come, come, be calm! what has happened?"

"This letter. I have just received this dreadful letter from Frederick"

"Well, well—let us see what it contains."

He then led her into a room, and, having seated himself on a sofa beside her, opened the letter, and was much pleased to find that Fred had written in good spirits. But his object in writing to her direct was to relieve her from whatever anxiety any indirect account of the affair might have induced; and that he was anxious to assure her that he was then quite well, and happy in the conviction that he should soon have the joy of again pressing her to his heart.

"Why, my girl," said the Doctor, with a smile, "there is nothing very dreadful in this"

"Not dreadful! not dreadful to be a prisoner, papa? not dreadful to be wounded? What must he have suffered!"

"But that is all over now! you perceive he states here that he has recovered"

"He says that he is well, because he is too kind to let us know the truth."

"Alice! do you imagine that he would descend to falsehood?"

"No, dear papa, but he knows the truth would more deeply affect me."

"Then let me remove every doubt on that point. I know what he has stated to be the truth. I have just seen a letter from Charles which confirms it. But come, let us speak to Sir Arthur on the subject. The Major and Greville are with him: come."

"Not now, papa. I do not feel well."

"Oh, you'll feel better after having seen them. You'll know more about it."

He then returned to the drawing-room with Alice on his arm, and, and playfully as he entered, "Here's another letter on the most marvellous affair! Really one might almost be induced to imagine that greatness of war were pleasureable!"

The Major, who took the cue, instantly laughed very heartily at this, and, on taking the hand of Alice, said, "Allow me to congratulate you, Miss Hawtree."

"Congratulate me" exclaimed Alice.

"I replied the Major, "on that desperate fellow Fred having been placed beyond the reach of further harm. That is, I supposed, ample cause for congratulation! Nothing can touch him now. He's out of all danger—safe as you are at this moment, and among a lot of fine high spirited fellows who have nothing on earth to do but to amuse themselves, laugh and be happy"

"I fear they cannot be very happy," observed Alice

"Bless your little innocent heart! You should hear those who have been there talk of them. Besides, what in these times are prisoners of war? We read of two or three hundred being taken almost daily, and think nothing of them"

"We think but little of them in the aggregate," said Alice, "but the capture of each affects some heart; and, when connected with us, even the lightest case becomes heavy"

The fact is that's true; but this is a mere nothing! There he is in a fine large town in one of the most delightful parts of France, with all the luxuries of life at his command, and plenty of splendid fellows to keep him company. The only hardship to the case is that the Frenchmen are so excessively fond of his society, that they'll not at present allow him to leave them even for the purpose of coming home! But he'll very soon be with us again. The war will not last many longer"

"And when it has ceased—he will return"

"Of course he will: immediately! and so much improved by the climate you'll scarcely know him"

This to Alice was some consolation, and when, in conjunction with this, she reflected upon the fact of his being out of all further danger, she became much more calm, and continued to converse with the Major on the subject until Caroline returned, when another scene of excitement was expected.

Caro one, however, having been prepared by the Major, for he was held to be the man to manage the matter, was not much affected. She expressed, indeed, amazement and concern, and felt exceedingly sorry for her brother and sister but by far the most interesting part of the letter was, in her judgment, that in which it was stated that Laurence had become a mother! "Oh!" she exclaimed, "how I should love to see the dear little baby"

"The fact is," said the Major, "I'd be bound that that boy's a fine fellow! He'll make a smart no doer"

"Sweet little dear! I do so long to kiss him. Then they are sure not to be kept there long, Major Palgrave"

"Oh! there'll be none again directly the war is over"

"Well," continued Caroline, "I shall rejoice in no worse. It might have been much worse," she added, addressing Alice, "especially, dear, for poor Fred. It is indeed a happy thing it has escaped"

Alice sighed. She felt that it certain y might have been worse, and she also felt that it was a happy thing that he had recovered, but she said but little, for her heart was still full, and shortly afterwards she left the room.

Sir Arthur then begged of the Major and Greville to stop and dine with him, and Caroline, who panted to communicate the intelligence to her friends, whom she had just before left, returned to her at once, and having sufficiently dwelt upon that which she considered to be the most interesting point, brought her ladyship back with her to dinner.

Of course, no sooner than the great subject was touched upon at table. The Major was amazingly eloquent. He entered at length, and with the ardour of an enthusiast, into any point which could be supposed to bear upon the capture of Charles and Fred.—announced the character ristic perfidy of the Spaniards—explained how Sir Arthur Wellesley ought to have acted—described how the prisoners were taken, how they were treated, and how removed declaring that he knew as well as if he had been actually on the spot at the time—and, having panegyrised the French without mercy or remorse, proved, in the most satisfactory manner possible, that if Fred. and the rest of the British army had been French, they could not have been more pampered.

Caroline and Lady Grange, however, retired early and proceeded to imagine the position of Laurence: even Lady Grange conceived that she might be happy, but Caroline considered her impossibility of her being otherwise, now that she had been blessed with a dear little boy.

Having no disposition to counteract this view of the case, and being anxious to slide from that, and the subject which it involved, as speedily as possible, Caroline, on the bosom of her sister, Lady Grange at once acknowledged that children were a blessing

"By the way, dear," she observed, having made this concession, "what a resemblance there is between Charles and Mr. Darnley"

"Sir Arthur has frequently made the same remark, but I really cannot perceive it"

"Why Mr Darnley is unfortunately more elegant and agreeable it is true, but in person, oh! he is the very image of Charles I am amazed that it never struck you. But then you look more at the mannerisms than at the features, and, as all the friends are he'd seem pretty much alike"

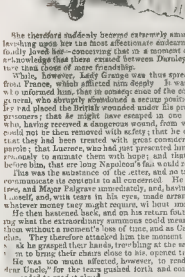
"Indeed! Of whom, do you imagine"

"Of whom can I imagine him to be enamoured, dear, but of her whom he appears absolutely to idolize?"

"Well, then, whom does he appear to idolize?"

"Why, you, dear, of course."

"O, ridiculous"



"I remember the time when you would not have thought it ridiculous, my dear I can remember the time when you would not have thought it more natural than for a young and ardent spirit to be in love with a person like yourself"

"My dear aunt," said Caroline, playfully, "I appreciate the compliment. Then do you really consider Darnley to be a love with me?"

"I have no doubt at all upon the subject, and, if I am not greatly mistaken, you entertain feelings towards him which are not those of positive hatred."

"In that you are perfectly correct: I would not endure the presence of a man whom I hate."

"Nor would you feel and manifest so much pleasure in the presence of a man whom you did not admire."

"I do not know that I either feel or manifest more pleasure in his presence than in that of any other agreeable person. That I admire him in common with all men of elegant manners is true"

"And is it not equal y true that you love him"

"My dear aunt, how can you entertain an idea so absurd? You talk to me precisely the same as you did before I went to France"

"Marriage gives us no additional command over our affections, my dear I have been, suffering from a fit of ague, you know Dear. A woman may love some one."

"And have I not a husband to love"

Here Lady Grange laughed very merrily, indeed "Forgive me," she observed at length; "I really cannot help it"

"Is it then so very extraordinary for a woman to love her husband"

"I can go back: I know that I am not bad, but do not think anything of it, you don't know"

"Oh, not at all! I like to see persons merry! you imagine, of course, that Sir Arthur is a man who can see no one"

"Why actually I can say, one does at times, by the side of such a man as Mr Darnley he would need to be clumsy with me. We can only of course judge by our own feelings you have perceived it was on the sofa, eet."

"I don't ... to argue with you"

"I am more convinced that you love Mr Darnley."

"Well, dear aunt, you are of course at liberty to feel convinced of whatever you please"

"But you ... Come, you can trust me: you know that your secret with me will be safe"

"I ... a secret to impart"

"I know better, my dear I consider Mr Darnley to be perfectly irresistible!"

"Then, of course, I am to infer from this, that you are in love with him"

"Why, tell you the truth—and I'll be much more candid then you are—I am. He is really the most charming fellow I ever met"

"Oh then you are jealous of his attentions to me"

"Not at all, my dear! on I not at all! the difference in point of age is as great almost between us as it is between you and Sir Arthur"

"And yet you think that I cannot love Sir Arthur"

"Certainly, my dear, but I do not doubt that Sir Arthur loves you. I love Mr. Darnley, but, as I now that it would be impertinent for Mr Darnley to love me I would not have him for the world! I should be just as jealous of him as Sir Arthur is if you."

"Sir Arthur jealous of me!—Je jeanais!. I do not believe that he knows what the feeling of jealousy is."

"You may not believe it, dear, certainly you may not believe it, but, if he be not jealous, then I never saw a man jealous yet."

"If he be not, the idea never occurred to me."

"Well I do not consider it to be monstrous"

"Do you then imagine——"

"No, my dear, you misunderstand me, I do not imagine that any consideration on earth could induce you to be unfaithful. I know you, too well... What I meant was that I do not conceive it to be monstrous, because I know how excessively amiable you are for an old man to be jealous of his young wife."

"Yes, some never more mistaken, be assured Sir Arthur is no more jealous of me than I am of him"

"Well, you have not much reason to be jealous of him to be sure."

"Has or any reason to be jealous of me?"

"Why, youth and beauty almost invariably constitute sufficient reason for an old man to be jealous. But, do you mean to say that you never even suspected that Sir Arthur was jealous, my dear?"

"I pon my word the idea never occurred to me."

"Well I shall, all I can say is, that you'll soon find it out."

"When I do, dear aunt, I'll let you know."

"Nay, nay, that you will not be correct: A wife ought to be the last in the world to proclaim the imperfections of her husband."

"I know it, but I, notwithstanding, promise that immediately I discover that he is jealous I'll tell you"

"But will you perform that promise?"

"I will."

The subject was then dropped; and, as the gentlemen soon after rejoined them, they passed the remainder of the evening in, apparently, the most agreeable manner.

THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.—Much interest has been excited for the last few days by the progress of the works at the Royal Exchange, men having been engaged in placing the capitals on the columns of the portico of the principal entrance facing the Mansion-house and Cheapside. This, with the a ivanced progress of the external walls of the building, begins to give the Exchange an attractive appearance, and the citizens some ground for hoping soon ago s to enjoy the convenience of possessing a suitable place wherein to meet and transact their affairs

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE.—We have again to report the arrival of a very scanty supply of English grain coastwise in Mark-lane for the past week, and the large attendance of buyers on each market-day, the demand for that article has ruled somewhat brisk, at an advance in the quotations noted in our last report of from 1s to 2s per quarter, and good clearances have been effected. From abroad the receipts of wheat have been scanty. In this description of produce a fair retail business has been transacted, at full currencies, but bonded sorts are commanded scarcely any attention. Barley and oats, but more particularly the former, have been in short supply, and ready inquiry, and previous rates have been steadily supported. The best oats have sold at an advance of 6d per quarter, whilst the value of other kinds, as well as that of beans and peas, has been well supported. Town-made flours are produced full prices, whilst ship sorts have risen 1s per 280 lbs.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 1580; Oats, 1170, and Malt, 3590 qrs.; Flour, 3040 sacks. IRISH: Barley, 770; and Oats, 27,560 qrs. Foreign: Wheat, 1400 qrs.

English Average.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, 2ds, 48s to 52s; ditto white, 52s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 44s to 50s; ditto, white, 48s to 58s; rye, 34s to 36s; grinding barley, 22s to 23s; malting ditto, 28s to 32s; Chevalier, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s; brown ditto, 50s to 54s; Kingston and Ware, 56s to 62s; Chevalier, 63s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 21s; potato ditto, 19s to 23s; Youghal and Cork, blacks, 17s to 19d; ditto white, 19s to 22s; Sligo beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 34s to 38s; grey peas, 36s to 38s; maple, 38s to 40s; white, 39s to 40s; boilers, 42s to 47s per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to 45s; Suffolk, 38s to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 52 to 58s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s; oats, new, 12s to 14s; old feed, 14s to 16s; beans, 28s to 30s; peas, 32s to 37s per quarter. Flour, American, 22s to 24s; Baltic, 23s per barrel.

Seed Market.—There has been a very moderate amount of business doing in seeds this week, and prices have undergone no alteration.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 38s to 40s, Baltic, crushing, 42s to 44s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s; refined, 44s to 46s per quarter, rapeseed, 18s to 18s per cwt., brown mustard seed, 10s to 11s., white ditto, 10s to 16s; tares, new, 30s to 32s; old, 34s to 36s; hempseed, 34s to 36s per quarter; linseed cakes, English, £10 to £10 10s; ditto foreign, £7 to £7 10s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 per ton; canary, 70s to 84s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread remain from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 6½d to 6¾d for the 4lb. loaf.

Provisions.—Weekly Average.—Wheat, 48s 8d; barley, 27s 10d; oats, 13s 7d; rye, 31s 6d; beans, 29s 1d; peas, 33s 3d.

Imperial Averages of the Weeks which govern Duties.—Wheat, 48s 8d; barley, 27s 8d; oats, 13s 7d; rye, 30s 2d; beans, 29s 4d; peas, 30s 2d per quarter.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s, barley, 8s; oats, 8s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 11s 6d; peas, 11s per quarter.

TEA.—Since our last the imports of tea have amounted to about 3800 chests. By private contract, we have to report a moderate business is doing, at late rates.

SUGAR.—This market, owing to the quantity of sugar on offer being extensive, is inactive, yet the quotations are mostly supported.

COFFEE.—The public sales were very little in the way, and prices have a downward tendency.

RICE.—A very large quantity of wool has been received from New South Wales this week, which is now pressing for sale. There are no public sales declared, yet the demand is, on the whole dull, at barely late rates.

POTATOES.—Very large sale sacks of potatoes have been imported from abroad this week, chiefly from Holland. Notwithstanding the supplies of such kind of stock on sale, here have been tolerably extensive, the demand has ruled steady, at the following quotations:—Beef, from 2s 10d to 3s 6d; mutton, 3s to 4s 4d; lamb, 4s to 5s 4d; veal, 3s to 4s 4d; pork, 3s to 4s per 8lbs. by the carcase.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—Prime best, mutton, and veal are selling freely, other kinds of meat slowly at but little variation in prices. Beef, from 2s 8d to 3s 8d; mutton, 3s to 4s; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 4s to 4s 10d; and pork, 3s to 4s 10d per 8lbs, by the carcase.

ROBERT HERBERT.

COMMERCIAL AND MONEY.

By the arrival of the First Indiaman, at the beginning of the week, the information from Bombay is to the 31st of May, and from the other commercial ports in our East ern possessions, the letters are of proportionate older dates. The news conveyed by them is, on the whole, favourable to the mercantile interest in the country. The demand for British manufactured goods, though perhaps not so great as the sanguinely disposed here desire, was increasing, and the sales of various articles was improving. From China the letters were veil by this mail are only a fortnight later than the last advices, and the commercial intelligence which they communicate is also satisfactory. A fair amount of business continued to be transacted, particularly in opium, which had again materially advanced in value, the tariff of duties, it was understood, at Hong Kong had been arranged, and the ratification of the treaty of peace on the part of the Emperor of China was the only thing necessary to infuse greater animation into the dealings of the Chinese merchants. This event, however, it was the general opinion would not occur, at the soonest, for two months after the date of the latest letters from Hong Kong received in this country. In the meantime of this week, also, a mail arrived from the West Indies, and from Mexico, in due course of post. In our colonies the crops promised to be abundant for the coming season, and generally nothing was complained of amongst the Colonists, with the exception of the scarcity of workmen, to which emigration from New York and from the coast of Africa must eventually apply a sure remedy. The usual amount of business continued to be transacted in these possessions, as valuable to the mother country. On the whole, the satisfactory nature of the intelligence received from the colonies has had a favourable influence in the manufacturing districts, and the Glasgow letters were beginning to exhibit more life in the sale of goods has been partly occasioned by the improving accounts from abroad. With the exception of iron, the demand for all the raw materials of manufacture is rather brisk than otherwise, and the artizans and workmen generally have no cause to complain of want of employment nor of bad remuneration for their labour.

In the early part of the week the operations on the English Stock Exchange did not attract, in any particular manner, the attention of the moneyed interest. Prices of English stock, however, on the whole were nearly maintained, the Consols being 89¾ ⅞. Exchequer Bills, 1pd. bearing a premium of 58s., and those of which the interest is only 1½d. commanding one of 18s. Bank Stock was done at about 180. India Bonds, at the Stock Exchange, until Wednesday, were unsettled, but the prices were equal y without interest. Some transactions occurred in French Five per Cents., Exchange, 5s. 8d. Dutch 2½ per Cents. were sold at 53¾ to 53⅝, and the Five at 99¾ to 100. Spanish Three per Cents. were done early in the half early in the week, but afterwards declined, and the Fives were as low as 18¾. In the Share Market little alteration appeared to have taken place in the week. A fair amount of business was done in those of the London and Birmingham railway association, at 21¼ to 21⅝ each. South Western, likewise, were saleable at about 6¾. For the shares of all other railways, with the exception, perhaps, of Great Western, a dull market continued. A considerable demand, at 75¾ to 78, and those of the Great Western remained at a premium of 5s. Edinburgh and Glasgow are nearly improving in value, and are quoted at a premium of from 2½ to 3 per cent. In the value of Consols, when the state of the public revenue, for the quarter ending on the 5th of the month was presented, there was very little change occurred. They declined, at first, a per cent., but when time was given for reflection on the actual state of the finance they recovered this small depression. The news received from Spain in the middle of week was considered by the moneyed interest exceedingly favourable to British connection with that kingdom, and the Spanish Three per Cent. Bonds fell nearly one and a half per cent., money remaining at the same time most abundant and unemployed.

On Friday a demand sprung up for Mexican Bonds, which have been for some time past almost entirely neglected, and caused an improvement of upwards of 1 per cent. in Lord Cochrane. Notwithstanding the day awaits condition of Spanish political affairs, rather extensive transactions were also entered into in Spanish National Securities on the same day, at the full advance in their value. Two periods has now elapsed since the general opinion now being that Spanish affairs cannot well be worse than they now are, but may be better.

BRITISH FUNDS.—(CLOSING PRICES.)—FRIDAY.

Bank Stock, 179	India Stock,
3 per Cent Reduced, 89⅞	Ditto Bonds
3 per Cent Consols, 89¾	Ditto Old Annuities,
3½ per Cent Reduced, 101¾	Ditto New Annuities,
New 3½ per Cent,	Exchequer Bills, £1000, 18d. 5s. pm.
New 5 per Cent,	Ditto £500, 8s pm.
Long Annuities to expire	Ditto Small, 8s pm.
Jan. 1860, 12 11-16	Bank Stock for Opening
Oct. 1885,	India Stock for Account,
Jan. 1860, 12⅝	Consols for Account,

FOREIGN FUNDS.

Belgian, 5 per cent,	Spanish Deferred,
Cailan, 5 per cent,	Dutch, 2½ per cent, 53¾
Spanish, 5 per cents, 18¾	Ditto, 5 per cent, 100¼

SHARES

Bristol and Exeter (paid),	Ditto Loan Notes (paid)
Cheltenham and Great Western (pd),	London and Birmingham ( )
Eastern Counties (paid),	Ditto New Shares (paid),
Ditto New (paid),	London and South Western ( )
Ditto Debentures	Manchester and Birmingham (paid),
Great Western (63 paid),	South Eastern and Dover (10 paid), 23½
Ditto New Shares (60 paid),	Ditto New (3 paid), 2½
Ditto Fifths (3 paid),	York and North Midland (5 paid)
Loudon and Brighton (50 paid)	Ditto New Shares (20 paid)

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JULY 4.

DOWNING-STREET, JULY 4. The Queen has been pleased to nominate and appoint Major-Gen. Sir C. J. Napier, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, to be a Knight Grand Cross of the said Order.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint the following officers, in her Majesty's service, to be Commanders of the said Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, viz.—Lieut.-Cols. J. L. Pennefather, J. Foote, Chas. Rose, C. M'Murdo, 17th Foot; Majors G. George, T. S. Conway, 23rd Foot.

Her Majesty has further been pleased to appoint the following officers, in the East India Company's Service, to be Companions of the said Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, viz.—Col. W. Parlby, 9th Bengal Cavalry; Lieut.-Cols. A. T. Reid, 12th Bombay, N.I.; C. Waddington, Bombay Eng. Sc.; Lieut.-Col. and Brevet-Col. T. Wilkinson, Bombay N.I.; W. J. Brooke, 8th Bombay N.I.; P. J. Story, 8th Bengal Cav.; A. Woodburn, 5th Bombay N.I.; J. Lacey, Bombay Artillery; J. Outram, 1st Bombay N.I.; A. Lemon, Bombay Artillery. Majors G. H. Bradshaw, 3rd Bombay Cav.; M. H. Willoughby, W. T. Welch, Bombay Artillery; G. Fisher, 12th Bombay N.I.; J. Jackson, 4th Bombay N.I.; A. Tucker, 5th Bengal Cavalry; N. J. Stevens, R. Green, 21st Bombay N.I.; W. B. J. Bonham, 5th Bombay N.I.

BANKRUPTCIES SUPERSEDED. J. WHEELER, Princes-street, Hanover-square, tailor and lodging-house-keeper.—W. H. H. and D. KING, Old-street road, and Horns-row, St. Leonard's Shoreditch, coach-builders.

BANKRUPTS. H. WEEB, Newington causeway, Surrey, tailor and draper. J. BOYD, Piccadilly, publican and late tap-house keeper. T. KENRICK, Oxford-street, horse dealer and livery stable keeper. J. CLINCH, King street, Hammersmith, coach-builder. S. POLAK, Newport, Monmouthshire, ironmonger and furniture manufacturer. A. HARRIS, Shrub's Hall-gate, Tower hill, shoemaker.—N. GARVIE, Rahere-street, St. Luke's, baker. T. HODGES, Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, stock lock-maker.—G. CLEVERLY, Cowes, Isle of Wight, builder.—J. BRITTON, Darlington, Durham, innkeeper. G. SHARRATT, Walsall, Staffordshire, saddlers' ironmonger.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS. SMITH, Nairn, surgeon. J. CLARK, Edinburgh, sport-dealer.—H. THOMSON, Paisley, ironmonger. W. ROSS, Kincardine, flesher and cattle-dealer.—J. HARDIE, Borrowstouness, Linlithgow, corn-merchant.—J. FUERVIS, Guadaloupe, ironmonger.

FRIDAY, JULY 7.

INSOLVENT. S. SIMONS, King's-arms, Gracechurch-road, watch manufacturer.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.—G. J. MARSHALL, Wood-street, Cheapside, woollen warehouseman.

BANKRUPTS. J. YOUNG, Shirley Heath builder.—W. BOULTON, jun., and W. F. PALMER, Stafford, builders. J. W. SLATTER, Turton street, Oxfordshire, boot and shoe maker.—W. HARTLEY, of Heckin, wheelwright.—J. and J. HODGES, Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, stock lock-makers.—G. CLEVERLY, Cowes, Isle of Wight, builder.—J. BRITTON, Darlington, Durham, innkeeper. G. SHARRATT, Walsall, Staffordshire, saddlers' ironmonger.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS. SMITH, Nairn, surgeon. J. CLARK, Edinburgh, sport-dealer.—H. THOMSON, Paisley, ironmonger. W. ROSS, Kincardine, flesher and cattle-dealer.—J. HARDIE, Borrowstouness, Linlithgow, corn-merchant.—J. FUERVIS, Guadaloupe, ironmonger.

TUESDAY, JULY 4.

INSOLVENT. S. SIMONS, King's-arms, Gracechurch-road, watch manufacturer.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.—G. J. MARSHALL, Wood-street, Cheapside, woollen warehouseman.

BANKRUPTS. J. YOUNG, Shirley Heath builder.—W. BOULTON, jun., and W. F. PALMER, Stafford, builders. J. W. SLATTER, Turton street, Oxfordshire, boot and shoe maker.—W. HARTLEY, of Heckin, wheelwright.—J. and J. HODGES, Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, stock lock-makers.—G. CLEVERLY, Cowes, Isle of Wight, builder.—J. BRITTON, Darlington, Durham, innkeeper. G. SHARRATT, Walsall, Staffordshire, saddlers' ironmonger.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS. SMITH, Nairn, surgeon. J. CLARK, Edinburgh, sport-dealer.—H. THOMSON, Paisley, ironmonger. W. ROSS, Kincardine, flesher and cattle-dealer.—J. HARDIE, Borrowstouness, Linlithgow, corn-merchant.—J. FUERVIS, Guadaloupe, ironmonger.

FRIDAY, JULY 7

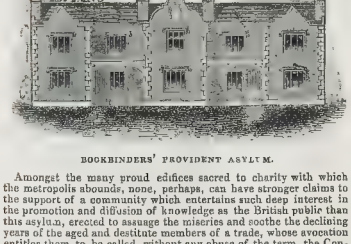
NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

NORHAM CASTLE.

The vignette represents the ruins of Norham Castle (anciently called Ubbanford), situated on the southern bank of the Tweed, and where that river is still the boundary between England and Scotland. The extent of the ruins as well as its historical importance show it to have been a place of magnificence as well as strength. Edward the First resided there when he was created umpire of the dispute concerning the Scottish succession. The castle was repeatedly taken and retaken during the wars between England and Scotland; indeed, scarcely any struggle happened in which it had not a principal share. It stands upon a steep bank, which overhangs the river, and facing it—to the north, across the stream, which is there both wide and deep—the eye rests upon the woody and rocky Scottish borders. To the east you have a distant view of the Lammermoor Hills, and the windings of the Tweed may be traced flowing through a rich and highly cultivated country, to the ancient town of Berwick, where it empties itself into the sea. To the west the view is still more interesting: you have lying at your feet the peaceful and picturesque village of Norham, with the ancient church and pretty vicarage embowered in a grove of lofty elms. This lovely valley extends many miles, till the far-famed Cheviots raise their lofty and majestic heads, and form a boundary to the scene. No spot in England affords a more beautiful, and, at the same time, a more interesting landscape, than is to be seen on all sides from the keep of this old border castle. Sir Walter Scott, in the opening of the poem of "Marmion," thus describes it:—

> Day set on Norham's Castle steep,
> And Tweed's fair river broad and deep,
> And Cheviot's mountains lone;
> The battled towers, the donjon keep,
> The loophole grates where captives weep,
> The flanking walls that round it sweep,
> In yellow lustre shone.

In the year 1121 the castle was completed by Bishop Flambard. In 1164 it was almost rebuilt by Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham, who added the huge keep or donjon (the only part now remaining); notwithstanding which, King Henry II., in 1174, took the castle from the bishop, and committed the keeping of it to William de Neville. After this period it seems to have been chiefly garrisoned by the king, and considered as a royal fortress. The castle being situated in the patrimony of St. Cuthbert, the property was in the see of Durham till the Reformation. After that period it passed through various hands. At the union of the crowns it was in the possession of Sir Robert Carey, afterwards Earl of Monmouth, for his own life and that of his two sons. After the accession of King James, Carey sold Norham Castle to George Home, Earl of Dunbar, for £6000. The present owner is Sir Francis Blake. H. T. D.



BOOKBINDERS' PROVIDENT ASYLUM.

Amongst the many proud edifices sacred to charity with which the metropolis abounds, none, perhaps, can have stronger claims to the support of a community which entertains such deep interest in the promotion and diffusion of knowledge as the British public than this asylum, erected to assuage the miseries and soothe the declining years of the aged and destitute members of a trade, whose avocation entitles them to be called, without any abuse of the term, the Conservatives of Literature. It always gives us the greatest satisfaction to contribute, in any way in our power, to the success of such institutions; and we trust that the accompanying engraving of the Asylum, together with the report of the interesting proceedings of the Society, may have the effect of directing the public attention to an undertaking which really deserves well of every class of the community. The building under our notice is now in progress of erection in the Bells Pond-road, Islington, and is expected to be completed about the month of October next. It was first projected by a committee of the Bookbinders' Pension Society in 1836, as a place of refuge for the aged and infirm members of the trade of both sexes, and in 1839 their exertions had been so far successful that they were enabled in that year to have the society established and enrolled. At the first annual general meeting of the society, which was held in October 1840, upwards of £350 was received; and notwithstanding the stagnation and depression of trade which has since prevailed, this spirited and benevolent scheme has continued to receive a steady and determined support. Like many other institutions, political and social, the mite of the masses has been found to supply the greatest and most permanent source of income; and, acting on this principle, a number of auxiliary societies have been formed throughout the metropolis, whose members (principally the operatives of the trade) subscribe one penny or upwards, according to their means, per week, and these have the privilege of electing a donor for every ten shillings so collected. It appears that the sum already collected amounts to £1726 14s. 6d., which, after paying all necessary expenses and a portion towards the building, leaves a balance in hand of £572 17s. 6d., being upwards of £300 short of the sum required to carry the immediate objects of the society into effect, but too insignificant, we trust, to stand in the way of the completion of so benevolent and excellent a design.

On Tuesday last the society held its anniversary festival at the White Conduit Tavern, Pentonville, on which occasion the chair was taken by Edward Tickner, Esq., late deputy alderman of the ward of Farringdon Without, and now a resident magistrate of Kent, supported by several of the most opulent and distinguished members of the trade. The large assembly-room of the tavern was filled with a respectably-dressed company, and the gallery, which was devoted to the accommodation of the females, presented an appearance of gentility and decorum that bespoke the results of intelligent, successful, and contented industry. An excellent musical band enlivened the science of gastronomy during the early part of the evening, and after the removal of the cloth a corps of effective glee singers, under the direction of Mr. Taylor, contributed generally to the entertainments. It would be unjust towards Mr. R. Rouse, the spirited and enterprising proprietor of this popular place of public resort, not to mention that the dinner was a fine substantial entertainment, comprising every good thing in season, and that it gave the utmost satisfaction. The health of the Queen and the other members of the royal family having been drank in the usual manner, the Secretary (Mr. England) proceeded to read the report of the society for the past year, which detailed the present condition of the asylum now in progress of erection, and stated the gratifying fact that it had been already roofed in, and that the inscription stone had been fixed that morning.

The Chairman then rose to propose the next toast, "Prosperity to the Bookbinders' Provident Asylum," and prefaced it with an eloquent and affecting appeal on behalf of the funds of the institution, which had the effect of producing immediate subscriptions to the amount of upwards of £100.

D. W. Wire, Esq., proposed the health of the chairman in his usual eloquent style, which was most enthusiastically responded to.

The Chairman returned thanks.

Mr. Charles Clarke next addressed the meeting at considerable length in support of the claims of the institution, and took an opportunity of paying a tribute of respect to the memory of his Royal Highness the late Duke of Sussex, who had been a patron and supporter of the society.

Mr. George Walker proposed the health of the trustees, bankers, solicitor, and architect of the society.

D. W. Wire, Esq., solicitor, returned thanks.

"The health of the ladies."

Mr. Akers returned thanks.

"Prosperity to the art of bookbinding."

Mr. J. Dunning spoke to this toast, and proposed "Success to the Bookbinders' Pension Society."

"The visitors."

Mr. Dulles returned thanks; and, after taking a review of the progress of the society since its commencement, when the project was first conceived by a few humble but enthusiastic members of the trade, congratulated the meeting on the glorious demonstration which they had that day witnessed, and which must ultimately lead to complete success.

Several other toasts were given and exchanged during the evening; but it is impossible for us to devote space to more than a mere outline of the proceedings. The company afterwards retired to enjoy the dramatic entertainments in the gardens. The ball-room was then lighted up for the amusement of the votaries of Terpsichore, who continued to pursue the graceful evolutions of the dance until an early hour in the morning.

THE FASHIONS.

Paris, Rue Chaussee d'Antin, July 3, 1843.

Mon cher Monsieur,—In the great dearth of novelty which is at this moment the reigning characteristic of Paris, perhaps it will be as well for me to say a few words on the subject of our town dresses, as being the only ones which now occupy attention, or which are of any importance whatever, with perhaps a very few exceptions, which become more rare every day. Let us then commence by describing a few of the rarities of one of our leading artistes, whose specimens attest at the same moment a great purity of imagination with singular good taste; and, in the first place, let us remark the exceedingly pretty redingottes of Milan, Sicilian, and Valencian taffety, coquettishly trimmed from the centre with puffings and bows à la vielle, as well as the pretty robe, in taffety Arab pekins, and in figured and crossed pekins open at the side; the corsage high; the sleeves plain to the wrist; the skirt, the corsage, and the biaises of the sleeve closed by a bow of tissue of suitable shades. As négligé dresses, muslin or batiste robes of a dark pattern are much worn; the corsage of these is gathered and frilled at the back, but quite plain in front, and closed by small agraffes and pelerines of the same material, trimmed with a taffety ribbon, à la vielle, and a skirt with three tucks. At another magazin we analysed four toilettes, and I hope I shall be able to give you a precise and complete idea of what appears to me to be new. In the first place let me mention a robe in rose-coloured barége, trimmed at the bottom of the skirt with three rows of rose taffety ribbon, ruched à la vielle, at a distance of their own width from each other. Corsage plain and high, brought to a rounded point, with a little pelerine, which forms a berthe; the sleeves are plain, with a ruche, forming jockeys. In the next is a robe of sea-green poult de soie, trimmed upon the front of the skirt by a passementerie in Venice point, very narrow at the point of the corsage, where it first commences, and descending to the bottom of the skirt, where it becomes enlarged in squares. The corsage is plain and high, trimmed with passementerie in a fan pattern, and with plain sleeves; thirdly, a robe in plaid taffety, trimmed on the bottom of the skirt with two broad biaises deeply scalloped, trimmed with a cut-off ruche. The corsage is made high, with a triple shape, and pointed, with a little pelerine, forming a sort of tucker, placed upon the corsage at the side, and falling upon the border of the sleeve, and rounded behind to the height of a berthe, trimmed with a ruche cut of all round, and with plain sleeves, with ruches forming jockeys; and lastly, a robe of sea-green poult de soie, trimmed in compartments with three rows of puffed frills, in ribbon of the same shade as the robe; corsage high, and brought to a rounded point, with three rows of frills, commencing at the epaulette, and diminishing by degrees towards the point of the robe. Oriental sleeves, bordered with a frilling of ribbon, with under sleeves en batiste, cut in three ornamental bows, embroidered, and terminated by one of those rich lace handkerchiefs for which our violard is so famous. For out-door wear I may, perhaps, be permitted to mention two or three things which have struck me as both becoming and remarkable. These are mantelets of black lace, trimmed all round if by a piece of lace, pleated à la vielle, and paletots of Italian lilac taffety, fitted to the shape and gathered on the shoulder and at the waist, open in front, with lining and collar squared and trimmed with black lace; the skirt, which is short, comes no lower than the knee, rounded in front and trimmed all round with black lace, which rises towards the height of the corsage; the sleeves are Oriental, close at top, but enlarging at the elbow, where they terminate by a fall of lace; a long sash of lilac taffety ribbon completes this very tasty affair. The weather here is just now insufferably hot, and Paris as yet produces little that is new. When we have anything you may depend on hearing from

HENRIETTE DE B.

FLORICULTURE.

MAXILLARIA STEELII (ORCHIDACEÆ).

Walking along the Strand a few days since our attention was arrested by the sight of a basket of flowers. They were not of that description which usually compose the cheap bouquets vended in the streets by the peripatetic florists. They were orchises, native orchises, the produce of some field in the neighbourhood of the metropolis, and the first we had ever seen offered for sale in its streets. May the speculator pocket many pence! for they were most refreshing to the senses of sight and smelling, as we progressed towards the unsanctified precincts of Holywell-street, through that locality which lies between the church of St. Clement Danes and the porch which leads to the dingy courts of the inn of Clement. They were suggestive of many pleasant recollections of hill-sides and green hedges far away, of rambles over "primrose meadow-paths with friends long lost, the distant and the dead." And amongst other things they brought to mind a promise made to our readers some months since, of giving them sketches of the most remarkable species of this curious family of plants. That promise we now proceed to redeem, and we shall spare no pains to present to our readers, not only the most remarkable plants of this class, but also those of the choicest and rarest that the wealth, enterprise, and skill of British cultivators have made the glory of our conservatories. And first of the Orchidaceæ. No tribe of flowering plants has more severely tried the patience, and exercised the skill and perseverance of horticulturists than this one. Some twenty years ago there were in this country, scarcely more than two or three collections of any note. To Mr. Cooper, at Earl Fitzwilliam's, at Wentworth House, and Mr. Perrin, at Mr. Harrison's of Aigburth, we owe the first impulse given in England to the cultivation of exotic orchidaceæ. As a commercial enterprise, Messrs. Loddiges, of Hackney, commenced a collection; to these gentlemen all praise is due for the ability and spirit with which that enterprise has been carried out, and they have reaped an abundant reward in its entire success. They now are the proprietors of the largest collection in the world. The Messrs. Rollisson, of Tooting, have also been very successful cultivators. In various parts of the country private collections have been formed from time to time; of these the best are the Duke of Devonshire's at Chatsworth, Mr. Buckin's at Wandsworth, Mr. Barker's at Birmingham, Mr. Bateman's at Kypersley, the Rev. Mr. Clowes's at Broughton, near Manchester, Mr. Brocklehurst's of the Fence, near Macclesfield, the Duke of Bedford's at Woburn, Mrs. Lawrence's at Ealing-park, the Earl of Derby's at Knowsley, and Mr. Bow's of Manchester. In these and in several less important instances we have ample proof that the difficulties which beset the early cultivators have been to a great extent, if not wholly, overcome. Of the mode of cultivation we shall next have to speak.

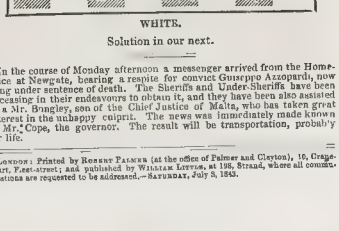
CHESS.

Solution to problem No. 29.

WHITE.	BLACK.
Kt to K 7th ch.	K to B sq.
Kt to Kt 6th ch.	K to Kt sq.
R to K 8th ch.	K to R 2nd
Kt to B 4th disc. ch.	K to R 3rd
Kt's P checkmates.

The mate in problem No. 28 may be deferred one move by interposing the rook at the 9th move of the black.

PROBLEM, No. 30.
(By G. D., Leeds.)
White to move and mate in four moves.
BLACK.



WHITE.

Solution in our next.

In the course of Monday afternoon a messenger arrived from the Home-office at Newgate, bearing a respite for convict Giuseppe Azzopardi, now lying under sentence of death. The Sheriffs and Under-Sheriffs have been unceasing in their endeavours to obtain it, and they have been also assisted by a Mr. Bingley, son of the Chief Justice of Malta, who has taken great interest in the unhappy culprit. The news was immediately made known by Mr. Cope, the governor. The result will be transportation, probably for life.

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 16, Craigcourt, Fleet-street; and published by WILLIAM LITTLER, at 198, Strand, where all communications are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, July 8, 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 63.—Vol. III.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 15, 1843. [Sixpence.

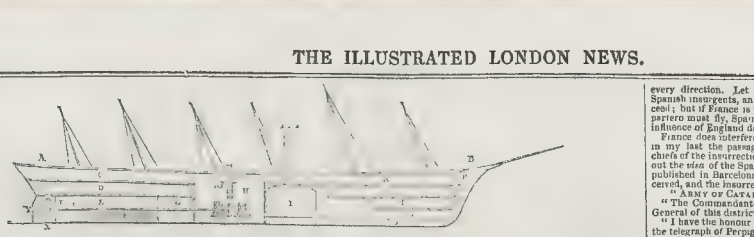
OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

DERBY AGRICULTURAL MEETING.

Amid the conflicts of party and the strife of political commotion—Welsh riots, Irish turmoil, and English distress—it is refreshing to find the refining spirit of civilization devoting some of its energies to the fairer arts of peace; and it is pleasant to know that an industrial pursuit of improvement, in some of the best and noblest sources of a country's prosperity, is ardently followed by a large, influential, and active body of the community, without reference to the bias of political opinion or the disturbing influences of party war. Commerce is a fluctuating creature, who doubtless best prospers in the lap of social quiet, and amid the repose of nations; but who will, nevertheless, in the heart of dire convulsions and revolutions, often spread her vigorous wings and thrive; but to Art and Science is required a milder atmosphere, and Agriculture is essentially the child—and one of the most beautiful children—of Peace. About the pursuit of agriculture then there can be but one opinion, that which confesses its golden advantages, recognises its national importance, perceives its healthfulness and beauty, and bends to it as to a spirit which weds the poetry of nature to the wisdom and intelligence of man under the canopy of heaven, and upon the altar of a treasure-yielding earth. We repeat, then, that it pleases and refreshes the eye and heart of Philosophy to find it, like its oak emblem, growing and flourishing even in the midst of storm—not crushed by the winds of party, nor lost in a wild chaos of politics, but wearing a fair and flowering presence among us, an exterior of gracefulness and plenty, the pride of many, the admired of all, and encircled by fostering and trusting friends. And that such is unquestionably the position of agriculture in this country, such anniversaries as that which we this week celebrate indubitably prove. We know that it has its drawbacks and depressions; that it sometimes shrinks alarmed at the strides of science, and before the advances of manufacturing pride; that it views timidly the encroachments of the earth-produce of other lands; and that, like the rest of creation, it can sometimes wake murmurs of disappointment, and set up grievances and wrongs: but take it for all and all, it is still of giant prowess, and one of the most stalwart arms of the might and majesty of our glorious native land. Yes, the Agriculture of England is a thing of which to speak in glowing terms of pride. It is all upon our country's soil—within our country's heart—part of her vital essence—and one of the best elements of her prosperity in peace and her renown in war. Beautiful crops, noble animals, and men and women the flower of the world, have been all its produce; and in the hour of need and refreshment it has presented us alternately with the flask of Bacchus, the horn of Ceres, and the sword of Mars.

There are few annual celebrations, therefore, which give us more true and untainted gratification than those great agricultural meetings which discard political warfare and are assembled only for the common good—which must be founded in motives of purity, and will not admit strife—which combine something like a Christianizing feeling of active brotherhood in a very noble work with a healthy manliness of thought and purpose in unison with the whole hearty spirit of our national character. The men who assemble at these fêtes want no "wars or rumours of wars." The agitation of repeal in Ireland—the disturbed spirit of Parliament at home—none, in fact, of the turmoil-topics which stir the frame of general society have any communion with their great though innocent design—that design the cultivation of the resources of nature, and the improvement of the implements of peace. Yet there are men of all parties among them—men of active thought, decided predilections—good political champions of every class and creed; but they are wise enough to think it sound patriotism on such celebrations to banish all questions of controversy, even those which most affect the pocket interests of agriculturists, although not, perhaps, the vital principle of the improvement of agriculture itself. Thus while the Royal Agricultural Society of England congregates its members, the mission of civilization is performed in harmony, and such men as the Earls of Hardwicke or Spencer, the Duke of Richmond, and the Earl of Stanhope set to the farmers and country gentlemen of England the example which they are as proud to imitate as glad to praise. What a splendid and happy and useful subject to contemplate is the meeting of such an array of hearty, healthy agricultural enthusiasts as that at Derby—one of the finest spots that all the country could have afforded for such a display. Derby itself is beautiful and picturesque, but there are local features beside which add greatly to the interest of many stages of the grand exhibition which is hardly yet gone by. Its magnificent railway station (one of the most magnificent in the world) turned into a sort of fair of men and cattle—a sight as gay as varied and busy; train after train bringing endless specimens of agricultural pride or promise—specimens of the English nobleman, the English farmer, the English yeoman, none better, or honester, or more glorious in the world; specimens of the English bull, cow, horse, ox, pig, with "white fleecy wonders in the shape of sheep;" specimens of dead stock, all that science and invention have done with wood, and steel, and iron, all that machinery has added to the store of husbandry; specimens, too, of the dry grain and the living fruits, and flowers, and vegetables, the thriving produce of the soil; in a word, a heterogeneous blending of picturesque materials, landed and grouped at the giant terminus, until gradually distributed and despatched for the head-quarters of the show. All this were a picture fraught with interest, and, a worthy preliminary to the more formal displays. Then for the magic doings at town-halls, and ploughing fields; then for arboretum and pavilion; then for banquets and feasts of reason, with some substantial condiments beside, and flowings of soul, with a little wine moreover, in the jolly spirit of old English joviality, the enjoyment with which comfortable John Bull is wont to crown public business in all departments of the state. Depend upon it there is a combination of exhilarating influences brought to bear upon all the company which one of England's counties that week assembles from the other forty; and that there are few spectacles at once more cheering and imposing, more good and grand than those which are presented at the anniversaries of the Agricultural Association. Best of all can we afford to encourage them when we know that their animation is driven to a virtuous end; that their sparkling triumphs are truly the triumphs of peace—born to no sorrow, tinged with no shame, made melancholy by no reproaches or regrets. Their rejoicings are in the advancement of human intelligence in gathering and perfecting the gifts of God; in the increase of the bounty of Heaven through the fertility of the earth; in improving the means of labour and the stock of food; in teaching science as it were to dig with a golden spade; in a word, in the movement of new springs of power, and health, and excellence; and fresh means of adding to the wealth of a mighty nation, and the happiness of its human race.

THE GREAT BRITAIN STEAM SHIP, TO BE LAUNCHED AT BRISTOL NEXT WEDNESDAY, JULY 19. (For description, see next page.)



SECTION OF THE GREAT BRITAIN STEAM-SHIP.

THE GREAT BRITAIN STEAM-SHIP.

This stupendous steam-ship will be launched at Bristol on Wednesday next. She is of unparalleled vastness, her actual tonnage being some hundreds of tons more than that of any ship ever built, which circumstance, conjoined with her peculiarities of material and construction, must render her completion an important event in the records of engineering and mechanical skill. We shall, therefore, proceed to describe this "mammoth" vessel as much in detail as our space will allow; and the reader who is anxious to estimate the importance of this new achievement in science will do well to make himself acquainted with the following leading constructive details, abridged from a very able description of the vessel, by Mr. J. R. Hill, C.E., in the "Year-book of Facts" for 1843, to the publisher of which useful work our acknowledgments are due for the loan of the accompanying explanatory outline engravings. We shall merely premise that the Great Britain is iron-built, and fitted with Mr. Smith's Archimedean screw-propeller instead of paddle-wheels:—

The cut represents a longitudinal vertical section of the entire vessel, showing the various compartments:—

A B. Surface line of upper deck.

C. Principal promenade saloon, length 110 feet, by 48 feet at the widest part; height, 7 feet; to be fitted up with twenty-four single berths on each side; two staircases at each end.

D D. First-class saloon, or dining-room: length, 100 feet; greatest width, 50 feet (which is about equal to the widest part of the Victory, celebrated in former days); height, 8 feet; stairs at each end.

E. The cargo deck, 65 feet long, by 9 feet high, running narrow towards the stern.

F. Is an iron fresh water tank, 18 feet wide towards midships, 7 towards stern (taking the form of the vessel); length, 40 feet; height, 6 feet.

G. A roo n 24 feet long, 15 feet high, by the width of the vessel; probably a coal store, and for engineers.

H. Elevation of engines.

I. Ditto of boiler.

J J. Iron deck over boiler, for cooking apparatus.

K. Fore, or second-class saloon, 84 feet long, 7 feet 9 inches high.

L. Lower fore saloon, length and height as above; 40 bed-places on each side of these saloons.

M and N. Iron-floored cargo decks.

O. Air-chamber from boiler to fore bulk-head, of the shape of the ship, about 4 feet high

P. Officers' berths, &c.

Q. Sailors' mess-room.

R. Sailors' berths; r, small water-tank.

S Water-closets.

T. Ship's stern-post, through which the screw passes, and to which the side-plates are riveted.

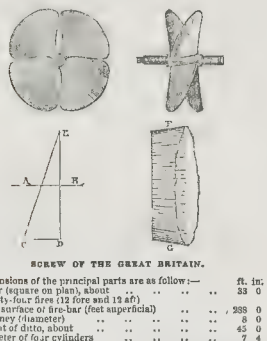
U. Shafts from engines to screw.

V. Diagonal stay from the ship's side to the stern-post.

W. Side view of screw stern-post, in which the end of the screw spindle revolves.

X. Keel under the screw, uniting the stern-post to the vessel.

Y. Hollow rudder post, and of such a thickness as to receive the stern-post, which forms its pivot.



SCREW OF THE GREAT BRITAIN.

The dimensions of the principal parts are as follow:—

	ft.	in.
Boiler (square on plan), about	33	0
Twenty-four fires (12 fore and 12 aft)
Total surface of fire-bar (feet superficial)	398	0
Chimney diameter	6	0
Height of ditto, about	45	0
Diameter of four cylinders	7	4
Stroke of piston	6	0
Diameter of two air-pumps	2	0
Two condensers (wrought-iron, 1 inch thick), length	19	0
Length of main wrought-iron shaft	15	9
Screw stern-post, 20 inches across the centre; rudder, 6 feet 6 inches wide at bottom.
Height for screw, about	15	0
Length of keel	289	0
Ditto from figure-head to taffrail	320	0
Beam	51	0
Total depth from under side of the upper deck to the keel	31	4
Draught of water when loaded	16	0
Tonnage per old measurement, about 3500 tons.
Displacement of water when drawing 16 feet, about 3000 tons.

The plates of the keel are from 2 inch thick in the middle to 1 inch at the ends; and all the plates under water are from 5-8ths to 4 inch at the bow except the upper plate, which is 5 8ths. She is counter-built, and double riveted throughout. Towards the extremities, and quite aloft, the thicknesses are reduced gradually to 7-16ths.

The ribs are framed of angle iron, 6 inches by 3½, by half inch thick at the bottom of the vessel, and 7-16ths thick at the top. The boiler platform is of plate-iron, supported upon ten iron kelsons, of which the centre ones are 3 feet 3 inches deep. The keelsons are formed like the floorings, of iron plates paced on edge. The hull is divided into five distinct compartments, by means of substantial water-tight iron bulkheads. The decks, which are of wood, consist of the cargo deck, two cabin decks, and the upper deck.

From the keel being mentioned as above, it would probably be inferred by most readers that it has an external projecting keel, similar to a timber-built ship, but such is not the case. The only external projection along the midships is the edges of the central plate, which lies flat naturally, and each edge of which the first rows of plates, forming the hull, are riveted. The ends of the central keel-plates are formed into long scarf joints and then riveted, and the first two or three longitudinal rows of plates have their laps, or external projecting edges pointing upwards, or clencher-built inverted, and above this the edges are downwards, in the ordinary manner, but, of which methods appear to be based on scientific reasons.

At the engine-room, for the purpose of giving greater strength than appears was originally intended, there are nine new additional intermediate double ribs introduced, and sixteen additional reverse ribs riveted to the original framing. She is not double riveted throughout, but in the longitudinal laps only.

Steam power of engines	1000	horses.
Stowage for coals	1100	tons.
Well accommodate	360	passengers.
Dining saloon accommodation for	320	ditto.
Crew which consist of	130	persons.

There are to be six masts, on which will be spread 1730 square yards of canvas in a set, which is to be only 9-tenths of that of a 46 gun frigate. As the length of the upper deck of the Great Britain is about 2 1-7th times, and deck surface 2½ times as much as the above-named frigate, though probably the area of the midship transverse section at the load line is very little more in the Great Britain than in that of the frigate. The displacement of the frigate fitted and fully equipped for foreign service, is not quite half that given of the Great Britain, which is rather more than a loaded 74.

The mould-lines of the Great Britain, and of her general construction, as well as the minutiæ and details of minor parts, appeared to be in beautiful proportions and harmony; and considering the materials used in construction, having to provide capacity and strength for powerful engines, and a form the most suitable for stern propulsion, as also to attain great speed, and other consequent circumstances, the symmetry and gracefulness reflect the greatest credit on the nautical draughtsman for having given the lines of construction for so elegant a piece of marine architecture as can be found in any part of the globe. At the same time Mr. Hill does not consider that this eulogium applies to the flatness of the sides from the engines for a considerable distance upwards, but thinks it probable that such a departure from a more graceful curve may have been decided on from an idea that the fullness (which appears a defect) may be the more efficacious in preventing rolling in a heavy sea, provided the centre of gravity of the whole mass, when equipped for a voyage, should be found to be in a favourable position. The entrance from the "fore foot" upwards is very fine, and calculated to displace the water easily, and the "run" very slim. The whole of the materials and workmanship, both of ship and machinery, appear to be of the first order.

The advocated degrees of "cod's-head and mackerel tail" of former days in ship building appears to be passed away. Certainly nothing remains of the cod's head, and but little of the mackerel tail, in the Great Britain. A fullness in the mid-bulk, for the peculiar construction of engine, was necessary; from this to the extreme point of the bows seems admirably adapted for cutting the waves and going easily through the water, and probably approaches as near the "least resistance" as possible, while, at the same time, a consideration of the vertical sections forward will show that there is little to be apprehended of its being a "wet ship." The bulk of displacement forward is very great, and the centre of gravity of the vessel, there will necessarily be much less disturbance by the waves, and a shorter voyage thereby to New York than by the "full bow," though in the same track.

The beams or joists for the support of the several decks, are bars of apparently 3-inch angle iron, with a joist bar of 5×3 inches riveted on the side—distance generally of the joists from 2 feet 4 inches to 2 feet. The deck planks are fastened to the angle iron by screws from below. To provide against the possibility of the entire structure springing or bending horizontally, there is placed between the angle iron bars and deck planks a series of diagonal flat tension bars, forming a continuous horizontal truss from end to end in each principal deck, riveted to the angle irons at the crossings and at the ends.

The Machinery.—The boiler presents a great quantity of surface to the action of the fire and heated air, and appears amply strong for condensing engines.

The Engines approach the patent plan of Sir Mark Brunel, at least in the position of the cylinders, except that instead of the cylinders making a right angle, or 90 degrees with each other, they stand at an angle of 60 degrees, or thereabouts.

The most extraordinary part of the whole machinery, and more particularly deserving notice than any other, is the wrought iron main shaft, made at the Mersey Iron Works, Liverpool. The whole of the work appears extremely well executed, the details to have been considered with great care and judgment, and the proportions, with some exceptions, are well maintained. When finished, and set to work, Mr. Hill has no doubt they will prove good engines.

And "last, though not least," but by far the greatest, comes the screw. In order that a vessel may be propelled ten miles an hour by the screw, it is found that the progressive velocity of the screw must be twelve miles an hour, or one-fifth forward faster than the vessel; and supposing such to be correct, or thereabouts, and that the screw makes 80 revolutions per minute, the pitch of the screw (or, perhaps, the base of the inclined plane will be an expression as well suited) must be $\left(\frac{5280 \times 12}{60 \times 80}\right)$—13 feet 2 inches, whether it be a complete one entire thread, similar to the first Archimedes, two half-threads, similar to the present Archimedes (which is 6 feet diameter by 5 feet long each), or similar to the Great Britain model, and shown in figs. 1 and 3, and it but slight ly affects the present inquiry. Allowing the diameter of the Great Britain screw to be 15 feet, the diameter of the circle of effect would be about 12 feet 6 inches, or 39 feet 6 inches circumference; therefore the mechanical contrivance, if developed to a straight wedge, would be represented by A B, fig. 3, line of axis; C D, distance passed over by one revolution (13 feet 2 inches); D E, circumference of circle of total effect; and C E, acting face of the screw. The amount of resistance caused by the friction or adhesion of the water on the face of the screw will very much depend on the smoothness of the surface; or, probably, a thin disc of water will be carried round with the screw, and the friction take place amongst the particles of water at some slight distance from the face. F G, fig. 4, shows the divergent lines of the cone of motion communicated to the water; and, if the above premises be correct, it appears to promise a greater effect than has generally been expected, inasmuch as the direction of impact of the screw does not make so great an angle from the line of the axis.

The Great Britain has been constructed in a dock excavation. The bottom of this dock is twelve feet below the surface of the water in the harbour, and, as her bottom stands a working height above the bottom of the dock, it is purposed to pump water to a higher level than the harbour, so as to remove the supports and allow her to drop and to be floated out.

Taking all circumstances into consideration, it does appear that if by the use of an equal weight of fuel the "duty" performance of the screw be nearly equal to that of the paddle-wheel, and that the whole of the machinery is so constructed as to be lasting, and not unpleasant to passengers, it has the most decided advantages from some serious inconveniences of the paddle-wheel, such as great topheaviness, opposition of the paddle-boxes to the wind, &c., and possesses these advantages besides, namely, that strength in the upper part of the ship is not required to support machinery, and that the deck is clear—a great comfort to passengers, and of great convenience in management of sails and working the ship.

It is the intention of the Great Britain to use no standing rigging, which appears admirably adapted for the purpose from its being less in size, and therefore presenting less surface when under "bare poles," from its being lighter than rope, whilst for strength, from its greater durability; for if oxydation be prevented there seems no limit to it, and from its maintaining nearly a permanent length, and not requiring frequent "setting up," as is the case with rope; and probably it is more particularly applicable to iron vessels than wooden ones, from the rigidity of the former not requiring the elasticity that may be serviceable in the latter.

We should add, that Mr. Hill's entire description of this steam leviathan fills a whole sheet of the Mechanics' Magazine, No. 996.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, July 11.—Read the French telegraphic despatches! Believe French reports, and the cause of Espartero is lost: the road by Gibraltar to England is the only one left open to him. That Espartero is in a desperate condition is positive, that the insurgents, backed by foreign intrigue, may succeed is more than probable, and yet Espartero is in a position to keep his ground, and with energy and activity restore peace and tranquillity to unhappy Spain. Compare Spain in 1843 with 1843, and it will be found that my expectations are well founded. Don Carlos entered the Basque provinces in 1834, and put himself at the head of not more than 500 mountaineers, badly armed, without cavalry, artillery, or ammunition, and having every town and fortress in Spain in the possession of his enemy; and yet Don Carlos without money, and having against him the quadruple alliance, stood his ground for nearly seven years, marched through the whole of Spain to the very gates of Madrid, and had it not been for the treachery of Maroto and his troops, and with energy and activity restore peace and tranquillity to unhappy Spain. Compare Spain in 1843 with 1843, and it will be found that my expectations are well founded. Don Carlos entered the Basque provinces in 1834, and put himself at the head of not more than 500 mountaineers, badly armed, without cavalry, artillery, or ammunition, and having every town and fortress in Spain in the possession of his enemy; and yet Don Carlos without money, and having against him the quadruple alliance, stood his ground for nearly seven years, marched through the whole of Spain to the very gates of Madrid, and had it not been for the treachery of Maroto and his troops, and with energy and activity Espartero is at the head of a considerable force, he has with him 5000 infantry, 900 cavalry, and 12 pieces of artillery. Zurbano and Seoane have 22 battalions of infantry, 2000 cavalry, and 24 pieces of artillery. General Van Halen commands at least 6000 regular troops. Cadiz, Ferol, Vigo, Santagosa, Saint Sebastian, Morella, Lerida, Puycerda, Seo d'Urgel, and numerous other fortresses and cities of consequence remain faithful to the constitution. Espartero has Madrid, the seat of Government, with him, and ought to have the protection of all the contracting parties to the quadruple alliance. Ought not, then, Espartero to be able to stand his ground and ultimately to succeed? Don Carlos, supported only by the people, having a regular, well organised and disciplined army against him, kept his powerful and numerous enemies in respect. Espartero ought to do the same: his position is far more advantageous. The majority of the nation are averse to the insurgents, and although the insurgents have succeeded in seducing a great part of the army, the soldiers are in a state of indiscipline difficult to describe; in short, completely disorganized; they no longer obey their commanders, ill-treat the people, and rob and pillage in every direction. Let Espartero have but fair play—let his opponents be Spanish insurgents, and not foreign intriguers, and he must ultimately succeed; but if France is permitted to aid the insurrection with impunity, Espartero must fly, Spain be delivered to anarchy and confusion, and the just influence of England destroyed for ever.

France does interfere, and that in a manner the most public. I noticed in my last the passage through France and across the Pyrenees of the chiefs of the insurrection, with passports signed by French authorities, without the visa of the Spanish Consul. I will now give you a copy of a bulletin published in Barcelona: it will be seen by what means the people are deceived, and the insurrection made to prosper:—

"ARMY OF CATALONIA.

"The Commandant-General of the 3rd Division informs the Captain-General of this district, under yesterday's date, as follows.—

"I have the honour to communicate to you news which I have received by the telegraph of Perpignan: it and other such means. General Van Halen has been disowned; his troops have abandoned him! Pampeluna and its citadel have declared. I have also learnt that the ancient governor of that city, the General Relsh and the son of Zurbano, who kept this province in a continual state of uneasiness, have left Perpignan for Saragossa.

"God save the country and the Queen.

"The Commandant-General,

"NARCISO ARNETTER."

Who placed the French telegraph at the disposition of the insurgent General Arnetter? Who promulgated the véridique intelligence of the desroute of Van Halen? In truth may it be said, "This is too bad!" By what road are money and ammunition sent into Catalonia? The valley of Aran—territory as much French and Spanish! The valley of Aran which the French telegraph informed us had declared against Espartero! Where were staid and the small fleet of frigates and sloops which deserted the Regent and joined the insurgents? At Pas-sages, on the frontiers of France! Everywhere evident proof of French interference! Again, has the French telegraph—provincial during the Spanish war for propagating false intelligence—given a single piece of news favourable to the Regent? No mention is made of several battalions having returned to their duty. Does it notice the imposing conduct of the deserters? No! Does it give the just complaints of the ill-treated inhabitants? No! The French telegraph and the Ministerial and Opposition press applaud the conduct of the insurgents with a shameful unanimity. On perusing the Journal des Débats it informs us that Generals O'Donnell and Urbistondo have crossed the frontier, to place themselves at the head of the movement, and that the son of Zurbano, who had sought refuge in France, had secretly entered Catalonia: so that the partisans of Espartero, who ought to be protected by France, are obliged to enter Spain secretly, whilst Narvaez, O'Donnell, Concha, Pezuela (Christine's present Ambassador), and Urbistondo, the friend of Maroto and traitor to Don Carlos, are not only permitted to cross the frontier with protection and publicity, but it is declared that they intend putting themselves at the head of the movement.

I repeat, although I do not wish it for a moment to be supposed that I do not consider the situation of Espartero as most desperate, that neither the French telegraph nor French press gives the news impartially. The following extract, which I received yesterday from the frontiers, will be found interesting; it is written by a French gentleman, well informed, and his information may be relied on:—

"BAYONNE, July 7, 1843.—We have again become the centre of intrigues and conspiracies; we have political clubs, and couriers and secret agents daily crossing the frontiers. Truly Spaniards are curious beings; their sang froid is astonishing. On the Place d'Armes, and under the arcades, may be daily seen the first noblemen of Spain, smoking their cigarittos, and, with the greatest calmness, listening to news seriously compromising their fortunes and their persons. They believe, or pretend to believe, that Espartero will yet triumph. I much doubt it. I consider the actual position of Spain as excessively critical. Society is shaken to its very centre; anarchy and confusion are in full power. A disorganized body of armed men have been let loose on the public; they are the sovereign masters in every town and village, and who can arrest their devastating career? Should the insurgents succeed, will they be able to restore the army to a state of discipline? Will the sergeants and corporals, the chiefs of the military revolt, be content to remain in a subaltern rank? Will they not demand epaulette, and will they not, at each moment, threaten the Government with a military insurrection? And the men, will they consent to remain for months without pay as they have been during the last five years? Will they return to their ranks and submit on all occasions! It is true, and this is against Espartero, that he was the first to use the army as a political body; this argument is now made use of by his opponents. Lately a Spanish officer met near to Bargos General Castanets flying from that city; 'What is the matter?' observed the officer, 'I see persons of distinction abandoning Burgos.' 'Oh,' said the general, 'it is only the fruit of the season.' 'General,' replied the officer, 'I permit me to say that you are only gathering the fruit you have planted.'

"Already have great dissensions arose amongst the chiefs of the insurrection. Prim will not acknowledge the authority of Narvaez, Concha, or O'Donnell, and I feel certain that one of the strongest arms in favour of Espartero will be the jealousies of his opponents.

"Santander, after three days of disorder, has declared itself against the Regent; that is, the troops and a small portion of ultra liberals. The men demand all their back pay, and the poor Junta is obliged to find the money. Bilbao has followed the movement; all the authorities retired. The provincial deputation, who were escorted by a body of Celadores, were literally stripped by those sent to protect them. The garrisons of Irun, Fontarabia, Tarazeu, and Valcarlos have declared in favour of the movement. Throughout the Basque provinces the people are opposed to the insurrection.

"General Ayerbe, Commandant-General of Navarre, crossed the frontiers into France on the 25th at Saint Jean Pied-de-Port.

"I will write to you from time to time, and keep you well informed with all that passes in the Basque provinces.

"I forgot to mention that my last letters from Madrid stated that the National Junta and majority of the population were determined on supporting Espartero to the last moment."

The news given last night by the telegraph is very important. Badajoz, with a garrison of 3000 men, and Jaen, have declared against the Regent. The loss of Badajoz, the strongest fortress in Spain, is most serious. The same telegraph, after stating that General Enna had been obliged to abandon the blockade of Pampeluna, adds, that two battalions and a squadron of cavalry had gone over to Narvaez. This part of the telegraphic news ought to be put in quarantine. Espartero was still at Albacete on the 5th.

The Spanish question is the only one which seems seriously to occupy the attention of M. Guizot. After seven months and a half of hard labour the Chamber of Deputies has closed its labours. The Chamber will, however, not be the dissolved until the end of July, to give the peers time to pass all the bills. Last night, at five o'clock, the Chapel Saint Ferdinand, at Sablonville, received its first consecration by the pious visit of the Duchess of Orleans. This morning it was consecrated by the Archbishop of Paris, in the presence of all the Royal Family now in France.

The Duke d'Aumale, whose age is 21 years and 6 months, has been promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general. Napoleon was 26 years of age when he held that rank in the army. Horace Vernet, the celebrated historical painter, has received orders to paint the taking of the Smala of Abd-el-Kader by the Duke d'Aumale. He is to occupy the whole of one side of the wall of the Algerian Gallery at Versailles.

Amongst the works of sculpture sent by the French pensioner from Rome are two groups, one representing a wounded Roman warrior, the other a warrior defending himself. They will, in all probability, be publicly exhibited in the month of September. Aslim Bey, first secretary to the Viceroy of Egypt, has reached Paris from London; he is in constant communicat on with M. Guizot.

For a few days we had very sultry weather, so much so that the bitumen in some parts of the Boulevard was a complete swamp; we have now heavy rains and very cold

Last week two ladies of respectability fought a duel at Uzerche; after firing two shots one of the ladies was seriously wounded. A love affair was the cause of the quarrel.

There are in France 25,000 deaf and dumb, that is, about 300 for each department: the greater portion of these afflicted beings are left in complete ignorance.

The races of St. Lô take place on the 21st and 23rd of July.

It may be useful to make public that, by a decision of the Cour Royale of Paris, a stranger, although divorced according to the laws of his country, cannot be married in France.

It is expected that the Princess Clementine and her illustrious husband will reach London on the 15th of July.

Donizetti is expected in Paris on the 20th. Immediately on his arrival will be brought out his last new opera, "Don Sebastian." The ineffatigable Auber is writing a new opera for next winter, the poem by Scribe. Adam's new opera will be presented in the month of January next year. Tenburini is not engaged for the Italian Opera at Marseilles: his terms are too high.

The Emperor of Austria has conferred on that truly talented singer, Eugène Tadolini, the title of "Singstress of the Imperial Chamber." A new opera, called "Les Martyrs de Corneille," by Donizetti, has been well received at Turin. The 30th of June Rossini's "Stabat" was produced at Genoa by 110 instrumental performers and 130 vocalists. Much notice is taken of colony, no slavery aggressions on the natives, or distinctions of creed or colour, being permitted. Colonel Cloete's amnesty is approved, and he is appointed the commissioner to arrange the land claims, &c. Mr. Wright, the able missionary to the Orquas, had died of putrid fever, universally regretted.

SPAIN. The accounts from Madrid to the 3rd inst. explain the refusal of the authorities of the Regent to allow the opposition journals to be sent to the provinces and abroad through the post-office.—The opposition press had for several days teemed with abuse of the Regent, and this false reports of the proceedings and intentions of the Government. The duty had improperly little effect, it was thought prudent, after much discussion between the Ministers who are now in Madrid, and the Political Chief, to abstain from any coercive proceedings not sanctioned by the law. It was thought, however, the opposition journals having all stated that a report was current of an intention of carrying off the young Queen, to hold her as a sort of hostage whilst Espartero should be stipulating terms with the Junta of Catalonia, and this announcement having excited a great sensation in the public mind generally, and particularly amongst the National Guards, the Political Chief of Madrid sent for the editors of the journals which had mentioned the report, and called upon them to declare its origin. When he could no longer doubt, from their answers, that the report had been invented as well as propagated by them, he stated in polite but positive terms, that he could no longer allow the post to be made the channel of such calumnies, and that under the peculiar circumstances of the case he felt himself authorised, as the guardian of public order, which was menaced by the licentiousness of the journals, to give instructions to that effect.

The Barcelona journals continue to publish accounts of defections from the army of Zurbano, and of the dispersion of that of Van Halen; but we already know from the accounts published by the Debate, which are the most suspected of any desire to publish news favourable to the Regent, that the desertions from Zurbano had not been numerous, and that Van Halen was still at the head of 4000 men. Another important fact mentioned by the Debate is, that the insurgents have not ventured to attack Zurbano, in consequence of his great superiority in cavalry. It is stated that great discord already exists amongst the insurgent chiefs, and that there is much irritation against the provisional government on account of its urgent demands for money from the inhabitants. We have no doubt of the truth of what we say as the differences between the leaders of the insurrection for the Constitucional of Barcelona has felt it necessary to recommend union until the common object of all parties—the downfal of Espartero—shall be accomplished. It will then be time, says the Constitucional, to compete about the posses-ion of power. In other words, the downfal of the Regent will be the signal of a long and dreadful struggle between the different factions who have coalesced against him.

SIEGE OF MONTE VIDEO.—By an arrival from the River Plate, at Liverpool, we have received Monte Video journals to the 15th of April. On the 6th of that month a public meeting of British subjects resident at Monte Video was held, to take into consideration a circular, addressed by General Oribe, the commander of the besieging forces, to the foreign consuls, declaring that he would spare neither the property nor persons of the subjects of other nations who might take part with those whom he styles the "infamous rebels, savages, and unitarians" It appears that Oribe's manifesto, instead of intimidating the foreigners in Monte Video, who are made to be such severe sufferers from the paralysation of trade, induced them to take a decided course. The whole mass has been moved, and the determination is now taken by the foreign population to employ the overwhelming power which their number gives them to crush the enemy of the country rather than to allow even the possibility of his executing his threat upon them by his obtaining posses-ion of the town. In spite of the opposition and objection of the French authorities, who must naturally be mortified at such a proof of mistrust in their power or willingness to defend their countrymen, upwards of 3000 French subjects have already enrolled themselves as volunteer troops. Merchants have thrown open their stores of arms and ammunition, and the numbers who are hereby joining the ranks are furnished with them. A spirit of enthusiasm has spread, and even the few persons whose personal connections inclined them in favour of Rosas have now repeated the cry of execration against the tyrant, and of liberty to the country. A great number of the Italians have entered into the same cause, and have placed themselves under the command of a countryman Garibaldi. The British had not generally followed the example, and the following reply of Commodore Purvis would probably render that course unnecessary.

"H.M.S. Alfred, off Monte Video, April 8th, 1843.

"Sir, I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th inst., inclosing the request of the several English residents of this city for protection, and, in reply, I have to desire that you will acquaint them that they may rest assured that both British life and property will be preserved by me so long as I command the force that shall cause it to be respected.—I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient, humble servant, (Signed) J. B. PURVIS, Commodore.

"To John Pownall Dale, Esq., her Majesty's Pro-consul General, &c."

General Oribe, who takes to himself the factitious title of Legal President of this republic, is recognised by Great Britain and France only as a "private individual," or as a general in the service of Buenos Ayres. His acts, therefore, to be legal, must be in conformity with the laws of that republic, and as regards British subjects in accordance with the terms of our treaty.

THE UNITED STATES, &c. The New York packet ship England, Captain Bartlett, arrived at Liverpool on Monday last, after a passage of twenty days; she brought the New York papers to the 20th, and specie to the amount of 80,000 dollars. By her we learn that the steam ship Columbus, which dates from Liverpool to the 8th inst., reached Boston on the 30th, and the Rosetus reached New York on the 21st. The papers do not contain any matter of especial interest from America. In those from Canada we find some particulars of the Beauharnois riots, but as these are given with strong party spirit by the several journals, they cannot be taken as representing the case in a manner to be depended on. In giving an account of the affair the New Liberal Herald contradicts the report that the soldiers fired blank cartridges at first. The riot act was read and the mob dispersed, when the military retired without firing a shot. In an hour afterwards the mob collected again, when the riot act was read the second time, and on their refusing to disperse, Mr. Laviolette said, "Major Campbell and Captain Jones, do your duty and disperse those men," which command resulted in the loss of three lives, five wounded and left on the ground. The fire was from the 71th Regiment and the Queen's Light Dragoons. The numbers of the rioters are doubtful, but it is supposed they are not over 500. We are glad to learn that at the request of Mr Crawford, Mr. Dunlop, one of the engineers on the Beauharnois canal, at the imminent risk of his life, succeeded in getting possession of 300 barrels and kegs of gunpowder, which he safely made his escape with, and are now in security, the rioters being then on the march to possess themselves of them —Another paper says that the number of men killed in the riot of Beauharnois was four. The order to fire, we are informed, was given by Mr. Laviolette, the stipendiary magistrate on the spot, and there is no doubt that it was necessary, in order to prevent a still greater sacrifice of life, as well as property. Before this the rioters had made an attempt to destroy the Seigniorial House, belonging to Mr. Ellice, which they attacked with shouts of "Repeal and O'Connell." Mr. Jones, the coroner, has proceeded to Beauharnois to hold an inquest n the bodies of the four men killed.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

The Lord Bishop of London has instituted the Rev. John Adeney, M.A., late curate of Ramsey, near Harwich, to the incumbency of Christ Church, Ipswich; patron, R. C. L. Bevan, Esq.

The Lord Bishop of Chichester has instituted the Rev. Felix Brown to the rectory of Stopham, Sussex, on the nomination of G. B. S. Bartelot, Esq., the patron.

The Rev. John Meade, M.A., of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, has been instituted to the united rectories of Newton Purcell with Shelswell, Oxfordshire.

The Lord Bishop of Lincoln has instituted the Rev. W. Nevins, M.A., to the rectory of Mumgrsby, in the county of Lincoln, on the nomination of the Right Hon. Lord Granville Somerset, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The Lord Bishop of Winchester has presented the Rev. D. Morgan, M.A., rector of Weeke, Hants, and curate of Amport, near Andover, the rectory of Ham, Wiltshire.

The Rev. Charles Verney Shuckburgh, M.A., has been instituted by the Lord Bishop of London to the vicarage of Ulting, Essex, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. J. Lupton.

His Grace the Duke of Argyll has appointed the Rev. Henry Cornelius Hart, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, to be his lordship's domestic chaplain.

The Rev. W. Mashiter, curate of Woodford, Cheshire, has been appointed to the perpetual curacy of St. Barnabas and Openshaw, Manchester, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. J. Whitley.

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol intends holding a course of confirmations throughout his diocese, in August, commencing at Gloucester Cathedral, on Monday, August 7, and finishing at Longbope and Newent, on Wednesday, August 30.

The following ordinations are appointed:—Sept. 24: Bishop of Durham, at Auckland Castle; Bishop of Hereford, at All Saints Church, Hereford (for the diocese of Lichfield); the Bishop of Lincoln, at Lincoln Cathedral; Bishop of Peterborough, at Peterborough Cathedral. Dec. 17: Bishop of Ripon, at Ripon Cathedral.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

ROYAL ARTILLERY, WOOLWICH.—Lieutenant-Colonel Colquhoun and Captain Story's companies of the royal artillery arrived at the Royal Arsenal, on Friday afternoon, from Quebec, and were inspected on Monday morning on the grand mounting parade by his lordship the commandant of the garrison. Lieutenant Colonel Cobbe has joined the garrison from Ireland, and being senior lieutenant-colonel has taken the command of the royal horse artillery in the room of Colonel Dyneley.

The funeral of Col. Ellison, whose sudden and lamented death we recorded a few days since, took place on Tuesday morning at an early hour. The deceased was interred in the Kensal-green Cemetery, with military honours. The whole battalion of the First Regiment of Grenadier Guards accompanied the funeral procession to the cemetery.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

NOTICE TO MARINERS.—The Ramsgate lighthouse having been rebuilt, a red light will in future be exhibited.

SOUTH SEA FISHERY.—The Hesper, arrived at Sydney on March 21, from the South Seas, with 600 barrels. The Anne arrived at Norfolk Island from the South Seas with 500 bls.

ESSINGER, JULY 7.—The Isabella, from Montevez to Riga, ran on a sea and sank in the North Sea on the 27th ult.; crew saved by the Arthur, arrived here.

STRAITS, NEW SOUTH WALES, March 28. The Mary is out at Lachlan Island; the master, first and third mate, doctor, and seven of the crew were drowned or died on the island.—23 Arrived her Majesty's ship Hazard from Norfolk Island.

MONTE VIDEO, APRIL 7.—Arriv d her Majesty's ship Fantome from Buenos Ayres.—13. Her Majesty's steamer Ardent from Ko.—Sailed her Majesty's ship Pollomel for Rio

In addition to the vessels reported on Saturday, the Triton and Neptune were driven ashore at Archange during the gale of the 18th ult., at the same time a lighter with goods from the Abas, was lost with nine loaded persons. The Mary was not driven ashore as stated. Of the vessels driven ashore some have been got off, and few have sustained much damage.

SURGES WHICH OF CARNE.—" Admiralty, July 10, 1843.—Sir,—I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to transmit to you for the information of the Committee for Managing the Affairs of Lord's a copy of a letter received from Capt. Washington, of her Majesty's ship Racer, reporting his having fallen in with the wreck of a vessel, on the 6th inst., while surveying off Cromer.—I am, sir, your most obedient servant, SIDNEY HERBERT. To William Dubam Esq. Secretary. L ord's."—Copy [—]" Her Majesty's ship Racer, off Wells, July 7.—Sir,—I have the honour to acquaint you that yesterday, while surveying off Cromer, we fell in with the wreck of a vessel lying in 12 fathoms water, Cromer lighthouse bearing S. by W. ½ W. (by compass), 14½ miles, Blakeney S. and by W. W. 13¾ miles, with her mast cuts just above water. As this wreck lies right in the track of colliers, I made a hawser fast to the mast and towed them away. From the appearance of the spars I should judge the vessel to have been of 600 tons burden, and from the pasenger's and quantity of oats on the fore-yard, and the letters F. and L. on the fore-lower cap, that she was probably English, but no name was found on any of the spars.—I am, &c. (Signed) JOHN WASHINGTON, Captain. To the Secretary, Admiralty. P.S. The masts may have been about six months in the water."

MIDDLESEX QUARTER SESSIONS.

(Before Mr. Walesby, Chairman.)

John Palmer, formerly an operative chemist, and said to be highly connected, who, it will be remembered, was examined at Worship-street, and committed for trial for obtaining 30s., under false pretences, from James Farmer, pleaded not guilty to an indictment founded on the following occurrence:—About eighteen months since, on seeing an advertisement in a book, called "Raphael's Prophetic Almanac," of which the prisoner was author, and who professed to cast nativities and to foretel the events which were to happen to any person who would apply to him, the prosecutor was struck with the foolish idea of having his sister's nativity cast, and wrote to Mr. Raphael, 17, Eagle-street, City-road, for that purpose, and on the following day received an answer, signed "J. Palmer," in which the latter expressed his willingness to comply with prosecutor's wish, if he would send him £1, and some particulars as to the age of his sister, &c. Prosecutor furnished the money and particulars, and afterwards called on the prisoner, who said he had cast the direction of prosecutor's sister and the time of her birth, when the former was so pleased with the plausibility of the latter, that he ordered him to cast his own nativity, and both, it was arranged, should be ready in a week on payment of another sovereign, which was given to the prisoner. Upon calling at the expiration of the time mentioned, the prisoner told prosecutor he was born fortunate, and would become very rich, and would live to the age of sixty-two, and then got 10s. more out of him "for bringing the arc of direction out more fully." He subsequently got £2 10s. more out of the prosecutor, making £3 in all, and in March 1842 gave him a paper which he called his (prosecutor's) horoscope. In October the prisoner pretended to have discovered that the prosecutor was entitled to pro erty, and proposed that he should marry Mrs. Stevens, his housekeeper, and they could all live in one house. He also told prosecutor he was a lawyer, and did business in the law, and in December last gave him his master's horoscope. On November he obtained 30s. out of the prosecutor after filing his head with a great deal of trash, under pretence of going to Doctors' Commons to get a will of his mother's great grandfather. Police constable William Fitzgerald, No. 253, produced "Raphael's Prophetic Almanac" and the two "horoscopes" given by the prisoner to the prosecutor. These documents were of an extraordinary character. The first purported to be a cast of the prosecutor's nativity, containing 33 closely-written pages, and detailing the most improbable vicissitudes, and that of prosecutor's sister, running 16 pages of writing paper. With respect to the former "Raphael" (prisoner) prophesied that at the age of sixty years two months and twelve days, as follows:—" His is an arc of singularly evil tendency, the sun being sanrsta or the destroyer of human life in this nativity, and being followed by other arcs of evil import, we are afraid that the native must prepare to leave this world of care and trouble for one of happiness and peace." Raphael's concluding paragraph in prosecutor's a sister's horoscope was, "fifty-four years seven months, to fifty eight years ten months; remarkably good and prosperous. A fresh settlement is shown should she be single—fifty nine years to fifty nine years seven months We can find no likel hood for her passing over this period." Mr. Wilde, on behalf of the prisoner, contended that no conviction ought to take place under the present indictment. Two witnesses were called to give the prisoner a character, and the jury having found him guilty, the prosecutor recommended him to mercy. The court, in consideration of this being the prisoner's first offence, sentenced him to one month's imprisonment [It has come to our knowledge that this is a species of imposture exceedingly prevalent in the metropolis, and therefore we would recommend to the magistrates the necessity of making a few examples amongst the initiated in the "mystic lore." What is the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge about? Why do they not apply for powers as extensive as are conceded to those other disinguished bodies, the Society for the prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the Suppression of Vice and Mendicancy? Surely these "wh te witches" are as disgraceful to the nineteenth century as "a game of cocks," or a begging letter writer.]

POLICE.

MARYLEBONE.—THE LATE FATAL DUEL.—Mr. Gulliver was again brought up, on Wednesday, with his sureties. The evidence previously taken was read over to the witnesses, and some of the parties who gave testimony before the coroner, but who had not been examined by the magistrate, were also called. The bail was again renewed.

UPTON-HALL.—Mr. Matthew Ledger, receiver at St. Thomas's Hospital, was examined, on Wednesday, and remanded, on charges of embezzlement of the property of that institution, to so high an amount as £17,000. The cause which led to the inquiry into the state of his affairs was the dishonour of a bill for £200.

John Tucker and James Tucker, two young men, brothers, were brought before Mr. Nottingham, charged with committing a very daring highway robbery, attended with violence, on a rent eman named Okey, a musicmaster, in the neighbourhood of St. Saviour's Church, Southwark, and the evidence being quite clear, they were committed to take their trial for the off-nce at the ensuing Surrey assizes.

WORSHIP-STREET.—Luke Dimond, a well-dressed and genteel-lo king youth, about 18 years of age, was brought before Mr. Bingham, upon a charge of having attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat with a razor.—The prisoner's mother, a widow lady, who appeared painfully agitated, stated that the youth was her only son, and he resided in her house, which was situated in Cumberland-street, Hackney road. Until the preceding day she had nothing to complain of in respect to his behaviour which was always dutiful and affectionate, but on that afternoon he returned home in a shocking state of intoxication, and began to conduct himself in an extraordinary manner, using language towards her of the most violent and threatening description. All her efforts to induce him to retire to rest were ineffectual, and after committing all sorts of excesses, he hastily withdrew from the apartment. On proceeding into the kitchen, to which he had gone, she found him seated in a chair, but on going up to him she was shocked to perceive that he was bleeding profusely from a wound in the throat, which he had himself inflicted with a razor that was lying at his feet. She felt dreadfully alarmed and agitated, but had sufficient presence of mind to secure the razor, after which she ran into the street, and procured the assistance of a policeman by whom the prisoner was conducted to the station-house.—The prisoner said he became so much excited from the unaccustomed stimulants in which he had indulged, that he did not know what he was about at the time.—Mr. Bingham said he should require him to find two sureties for his good behaviour for three months.

HAMMERSMITH.—Mr. George Wm. Jones, the secretary of the Hammersmith Bridge Company, appeared before Mr. B. Combe, the sitting magistrate, on summons at the instance of Mr. Oliver Edward Teale, under the Hammersmith, Bridge Act, for having, on the 3rd instant, unlawfully obstructed and prevented the free passage of the footways of Hammersmith Bridge, whereby he had incurred a penalty not exceeding £5. After a lengthened discussion the summons was dismissed.

FIFTH ANNIVERSAY OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.

The great gatherings of this important society have been successively held at Oxford, Cambridge, Liverpool, Bristol, and now at Derby. Each meeting has been an improvement on its predecessor, in point of attendance, the increase of members, the receipts of the society, and, above all, in the proofs of its active utility in advancing agricultural science.

Before we proceed to detail this great meeting we must say a few words of the town wherein it has been held. It is well built, and, considering its extensive manufactures, remarkably clean. The public buildings are good, some of them very handsome. The Town Hall originally was a very fine classic structure: subsequently to its partial destruction by fire a tower has been added to the design. The Royal Hotel, with the Post and other offices adjoining, is a striking pile. The tower of the Church of All Saints is a very fine and remarkable object. The Derby Railway Station—the first by universal consent in the empire, or indeed in the world—claims special attention. Its prodigious extent, its incomparable plain form, its light but beautiful roof, its refreshment-room, its fine hotel, and the admirable manner in which its immense transactions are conducted, must fill every stranger with surprise and admiration. The Arboretum presents a very pleasing and unusual local feature. This beautiful ground, comprising about eleven acres, well wooded and admirably laid out, was presented to the inhabitants of Derby by Joseph Strutt, Esq., to be enjoyed as a place of recreation.

Although the note of preparation for the above meeting had been sounded in Derby for some time, it was not until the last few days that most of the arrangements were complete. Their localities will be best understood by the annexed plan.

On Monday a considerable number of visitors arrived; but on Tuesday the railway trains brought them in good earnest, holding out a promise of the present meeting being fully equal to those which have preceded it. On Wednesday the number of private equipages in the town was very great, many of them of a very showy description, several noblemen and gentlemen having brought with them their carriages and four in full state. The various exhibitions unconnected with the society were numerous, and pretty well attended. There were booths, wild beasts, and theatrical shows, and, in short, all the paraphernalia of a country fair.

On Wednesday the sale of tickets, and collection of the subscription of members, commenced at the offices of the society. By a most admirable arrangement, the mechanism of which was conducted by Mr. Hudson, the secretary to the society, the whole operation was effected with the greatest celerity and precision. A great accession of new members took place.

On the last day for the reception of agricultural implements, seeds, &c., intended for exhibition in the implement-yard. On Saturday they were all arranged by the stewards for the judges' inspection, who inspected them on Monday, and made their selection of those intended for trial.

On Tuesday the implement-yard was opened for public exhibition from eight o'clock in the morning until six in the evening: the admission being 5s. each person. The implements exhibited were, as to number, much larger, and with regard to value and importance in their different constructions and adaptations to particular uses, of much more consideration than were those brought to any previous meeting of the society. It may safely be said that there is not a firm of eminence in the country which did not contribute to the exhibition in this department, and a description even of the varieties of the implements would fill a column. There were ploughs of all descriptions, adapted to different soils and different modes of cultivation. Then there were clod-crushers, mills, rollers, scarifiers, harrows, tile machines, bruising machines, carts, waggons, drills, chaff-cutters, corn cleaners, corn metres, cultivators, dibbling machines, drays, draining apparatus, winnowing machines, egg-hatching machines, churns, dynamometers, hay-making machines, grabbers, horse-shoes, manure carts and drills, odometers, weighing machines, thrashing machines, turnip cutters, potatoe steamers, scythe reapers, stack ventilators, straw cutters, subpulverisers, and many other varieties highly interesting to the agriculturist to examine, but utterly impossible to describe so as to be intelligible to the non-practical man.

PLAN OF DERBY.

EXTERIOR OF RAILWAY.

INTERIOR OF RAILWAY.

During Tuesday the cattle from all quarters continued to arrive, giving that part of the town allotted to the meeting more the appearance of a great farm-yard than of anything else. Until the doors of the show-yard were finally closed against the reception of stock, no one was permitted to know what animals had arrived; and even the names of the judges were sedulously kept secret to the last moment, in order to prevent the least suspicion of partiality or private influence. Generally, however, it may be said, that the show produced the very finest exhibition of all the varieties of sheep, especially the Leicesters, which have ever been congregated together.

The cattle and implement yards are situated at Litchurch, about one mile and a half from the town of Derby, and one mile from the railway station. These exhibition yards are enclosed by a close boarded fence nine feet high, through which are two gateways, one for entrance and another for exit. There are also two entrances for visitors, one for members of council, and two exit doors. There are numerous offices fitted up for the council, directors, stewards, judges, and others connected with the carrying on of the business of the society.

The yard in which are deposited the implements is in the fore part of the ground, commencing immediately from the entrance, and extending in ten rows of covered shedding to the extent of 300 feet; an avenue of 20 feet then separates the implements from the cattle. The cattle-sheds consist of 20sheds divided by an avenue of 20 feet, and extending nearly 600 feet in length. These sheds are fitted upfor the reception of various kinds of live stock, such as stallions, mares, bulls, heifers, pigs, sheep, &c., and are arranged in admirable order; a good supply of water is on the ground for the use of the live stock. The whole of the exhibition yard is in the shape of a parallelogram, having one angle taken off, and is about 1000 feet in length and 300 feet in breadth. In the receiving yard is one of Manning's colonial cottages, fitted up for the use of the Director and Stewards of the yard, which is fitted together in a very simple manner, the whole being portable, and fitted in the same manner as those which have been sent to Australia and other parts by the contractor, Mr. Manning, of High Holborn, London.

The exhibition of implements, it is agreed by all parties, is far superior in quantity and quality to any hitherto produced. The show of cattle is also the most splendid ever seen. The arrangements made for the trial of implements, on Tuesday, was superseded by the attempted imposition of charges on the society, nearly equal to the fee simple of the ground on which they were proposed to be tried. The trial, therefore, did not take place until Wednesday, which caused some disappointment to many who had made their arrangements—all, however, went off very well.

The following is a list of some of the principal individuals of rank and influence from a distance, who have arrived in Derby on the occasion of the meeting:—The Duke of Devonshire, the Duke of Richmond, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Marquis of Northampton, the Earl of Scarborough, Lord Hood, Lord Yarborough, Lord W. Paulet, Lord Bridport, Lord Stavordale, Lord Leigh, Lord Charles Manners, Lord Calthorpe, Lord Lifford, Lord Hatherton, Lord Ilchester, Lord Spencer, Lord Waterpark, Lord Essex, Lord Burlington, Lord Hardwicke (President of the Society), Lord Downshire, Lord Morpeth, the American Minister (Mr. Everett), Sir Robert Heron, Bart.; Sir Charles Lemon, Bart.; Sir Robert Sheffield, Bart.; H. Frampton, Esq.; the Rev. C. Frampton; R. N. Cheney, Esq.; Dr. Buckland; Sir Thomas Acland, Bart.; Professor Playfair, Professor Cowman, and Professor Sewell. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge was prevented attending.

On Tuesday night the Mayor of Derby gave a splendid entertainment at Huggins's Royal Hotel to the council of the society, numbering eighty noblemen and gentlemen. The most important speech of the evening was that of Mr. Hillyard, and the following passage elicited marked attention:—"The opinions he had formed as to the useful connection of science with practical agriculture were those:—Science without practice could do but little, but science joined with practice could do a vast deal. (Hear, hear.) Science and practice now went hand in hand. (Hear, hear.) Science now took its proper and useful position. It did not stand forward as instructor to the experienced practical farmer, but as his able assistant. (Hear.) With this union of science and practice, joined by the best exertions of tenant farmers, effectively supported by liberal landlords, and all engaged in agriculture—with all this in prospective, such general improvement in British agriculture might reasonably be expected as to place this country in that most desired situation for every country—that of not being dependent on foreign nations for any part of its supply of food." (Hear, hear.)

TOWN HALL, DERBY.

ARBORETUM, DERBY.

THE COUNCIL DINNER,

at the County-hall, took place on Wednesday, when about 400 noblemen and gentlemen were present. The dinner itself was very good, but we cannot say so much for the attendance, which was the worst we ever witnessed at a public entertainment.

The Earl of Hardwicke presided, and the Duke of Richmond was the vice chairman. At the noble president's table were the Duke of Devonshire, Mr. Everett (the American minister), the Marquis of Northampton, Lord Burlington, Professor Playfair, Sir C. Lemon, Doctor Buckland, Sir R. Pearce, Marquis of Downshire, Lord Yarborough, Lord Morpeth, the Mayor of Derby, Lord Scarborough, Mr. Miles, Hon. G. Cavendish, Mr. E. Buller, the Recorder of Derby, Lord Bridport, Mr. Alcock, Mr. Barclay, Hon. R. Clive, Mr. Chandos Pole, Colonel Challenor, Mr. Hayter, M.P., Mr. R. Stansfield, Sir R. Heron, Mr. Miles, M.P. At the table of his Grace the Duke of Richmond were Lord Spencer, Mr. Pusey, Mr. Strutt, the Mayor of Southampton, Lord Ducie, and many other noblemen and gentlemen.

After the dinner the following toasts were drunk:—"The Queen." "The Queen Dowager, Albert Prince of Wales, Prince Albert, and the rest of the Royal Family." "The Professors of Science."

Dr. Buckland returned thanks to this toast.

The list of prizes for the best cattle was then read, after which the Chairman gave "The successful competitors for cattle, and particularly Mr. Turner."

The list of the awards for the best show of sheep and other animals was next read, and the Chairman proposed as the next toast, "The health of the persons who had been successful."

The Duke of Richmond next addressed the meeting: He was in hopes that some of the gentlemen who had been more successful than him would have risen to respond to the toast. He owned that he should have been more pleased if he could have returned thanks for having gained a higher prize. He, as a farmer of Sussex, felt proud that one premium came into that county, and he was the successful individual who carried it there. He met the farmers of his own county as often as he possibly could, and he was sure they would feel pleased at his having been successful. He believed that the society was of the utmost benefit, and that year after year it would continue to increase in its usefulness. He recommended other farmers to persevere as he had done, and he was sure that they, like him, would eventually obtain some prize. After some further remarks, his grace concluded amidst loud cheers.

The next toast, "The Marquis of Northampton, president of the Royal Society." His lordship returned thanks in a very admirable speech, which was loudly cheered throughout.

After the health of the Chairman had been given, and various other toasts had been drank, the meeting separated.

The list of prizes awarded was read by the noble Chairman, and included the following:—

1st prize, best bull, 30 sovs., Mr. Barnard, M.P., Gosfield, Essex.
2nd do., do. 15 sovs., Mr. Thos. Forrest.
3d do., best young bull, Mr. John Cooper, Notts.
4th do., best short-horned cow, 15 sovs., Mr. Thos. Cr-tem, Durham.
5th do., best in-calf heifer, 15 sovs, do
6th do., best yearling heifer, 10 sovs., Mr. H. Watson

Four prizes of the six for South-down sheep were won by Mr. James Webb.

THE TRIAL OF IMPLEMENTS.

For the ploughing match, on Wednesday, or rather for the trial of the ploughs and other agricultural implements, several fields in the occupation of Mr. White, of Rough Heanor, near Mickleover, a distance of between two and three miles from the town, were selected by the local committee. The hour appointed for the trial was twelve, previous to which the road leading to the ground presented a continuous stream of pedestrians, together with vehicles of every description, from the baronet's four to the tax cart. Almost all the noblemen and gentlemen whom we have

(Continued on page 40.)

MR. JUSTICE HALIBURTON.

This gentleman is one of the judges of Nova Scotia, and is now in England, an attaché to the American legation. He is, however, better known in this country by the sobriquet of "Sam Slick," under which he published, about four years since, a collection of "Notions," which immediately took high station, by right, as one of the few really original productions of the day.

Sam's entrée into the literary world appears to have been by the columns of a weekly Nova Scotian journal, in which he wrote, about seven or eight years ago, a series of sketches illustrative of the peculiarities of homely Yankee character. These, with no name attached to them, but they soon became so popular that the editor of the Nova Scotian newspaper applied to the author for permission to reprint them entire; and this being granted, he brought them out in one small unpretending duodecimo volume, whose popularity, at first confined to our American colonies, soon spread over the United States, by all classes of whose inhabitants it was most cordially welcomed. At Boston—at New York—at Philadelphia—at Baltimore—in short, at all the leading cities and towns of the Union, this anonymous little volume was to be found on the drawing room tables of the most influential and intelligent members of the social community; while even in the emigrant's solitary farm house, and the squatter's log hut, among the primeval forests of the "Far West," it was read with the deepest interest, cheering the spirits of the backwoodsman, when his day's toil was at an end, by the wholesome, vigorous, and lively pictures which it presented of every-day life; and a recent traveller records the surprise and pleasure he experienced at meeting with a "well-thumbed" copy of the duodecimo in question in a log hut among the woods of the Mississippi. This transatlantic popularity soon reached England; and an enterprising London publisher concluded with Mr Haliburton, who is a British subject, the purchase of the copyright. Its success was almost instantaneous; and its primary cause, we conceive (with a writer in "Bentley's Miscellany" for the present month) may be found "in its sound, sagacious, unexaggerated view of human nature—not of human nature as it is modified by artificial institutions, and subjected to the despotic caprices of fashion, but as it exists in a free and comparatively unsophisticated state, full of faith in its own impulses, and quick to sympathise with kindred humanity; industrious, self-relying, adventurous, untrammelled by the fetters of social etiquette; giving full vent to the emotions that rise within its breast; regardless of the distinctions of caste, but ready to find friends and brethren among all with whom it may come into contact. Such is the human nature delineated in 'Sam Slick.'"

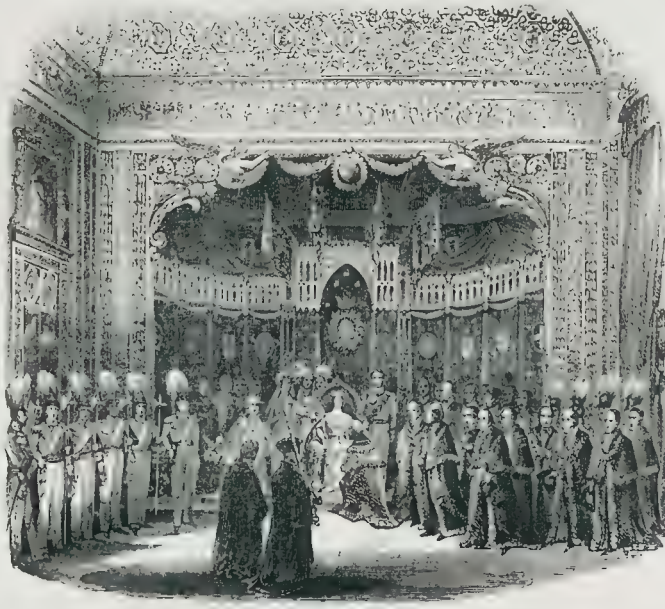
Another reason for "Sam Slick's" popularity may be found in the humour with which the work is full to overflowing. Of its kind it is decidedly original; but, perhaps, we shall be able to come to a more exact estimate of its peculiar quality, if we just briefly glance at the three distinct sorts of national humour—English, Irish, and Scotch—of which our lighter literature is composed. Like the English character, the English humour is frank, hearty, and unaffected. Generally speaking, it is by no means remarkable for quaintness or eccentricity, but maintains a certain decent method, and adheres to nature, even when it verges on sheer extravagance, as we may see by reference to the farces of Foote, the Odes of Wolcot, and the admirable Legends of Ingoldsby, where it appears in its broadest, funniest, and most grotesque aspect. The Irish humour, on the contrary, sets all propriety at defiance, and is most characteristic when most extravagant. In all its phases it is tinged with the rich lights of fancy—is buoyant and mercurial to excess—owns no allegiance to the understanding, being prompted solely by the animal spirits—delights by reckless and unexpected sallies—but even in its wildest flights never loses sight of good-nature, which redeems its excesses, and is its essence and inspiration. The Scotch humour is sly, grave, caustic—the humour rather of the understanding than the fancy. It has little of bonhomie or cordiality about it—is eminently shrewd and practical in its character—is founded on observation, and a nice, intuitive perception of the weaknesses of human nature—and is seldom unmixed with something of sarcasm. Those who wish to see it in its highest perfection may consult the "Sir Andrew Wylie" and "Entail" of Galt, and the splendid sketch of Lismahago in Smollett's "Humphry Clinker." Now, in describing the humour of "Sam Slick," we must borrow a phrase from architecture, and say that it is of a Composite order, by which we mean that it combines the qualities of English and Scotch humour—the hearty, mellow spirit of the one, with the shrewd, caustic properties of the other—inclining, however, for the most part, to the latter. It derives little help from the fancy, but has its ground-work in the understanding. It does not convulse us with laughter, like the broad, racy drollery of Hook, or convey a succession of pleasing shocks to our mind, like the airy, fanciful extravagancies of O'Keefe; but affects us by its quiet truth and force, and the piquant satire with which it is flavoured. In a word, it is the sunny side of common sense.

PORTRAIT OF JUDGE HALIBURTON.

Since Mr. Haliburton has been in England, attached to the American legation, he has lost no time in noting what he has seen and heard in the mother country, which new "Notions" he has thrown together in a work entitled "Un Attaché; or Sam Slick in England." Here is a specimen—a characteristic sketch of a genteel London dinner-party, to which he is invited in his capacity of Attaché.

Well, there is dinner. One sarvice of plate is like another sarvice of plate, any one dozen of sarvants are like another dozen of sarvants, hock is hock, and champagne is champagne—and one dinner is like another dinner. The only difference is in the thing itself that's cooked. Veal, to be good, must look like anything else but veal; you mustn't know it when you see it, or it's vulgar; mutton must be meog, too; beef must have a mask on; anythin' that looks solid take a spoon to; anythin' that looks light, cut with a knife; if a thing looks like fish, you may take your oath it is fish; and if it seems raal fish, it's only disguised, for it's sure to be fish; nothin' must be natural—natur' is out of fashion here. This is a manufactur'n' country; everything is done by machinery, and that ain't must be made to look like it; and I must say the dinner machinery is parfect. Sarvents keep goin' round and round in a ring, slow, but sartain, and for ever, like the arms of a great big windmill, shovin' dish after dish, in dumb show, afore your nose, for you to see how you like the flavour; when your glass is empty, it is filled; when your eyes is off your plate, it's off too, afore you can say Nick Boddie. Folks speak low here; steam is valuable, and noise unpolite. They call it a "subdued tone." Poor tame things, they are subdued, that's a fact: slaves to an arbitrary tyrannical fashion, that don't leave 'em no free will at all. You don't often speak across a table any more nor you do across a street, but p'raps Mr. Somebody of West Esend of town will say to a Mr. Nobody from West Esend of America—"Niagara is noble." Mr. Nobody will say—"Yes, it is; it got its patent afore the Norman Conquest, I reckon, and afore the subdued tone came in fashion." Then Mr. Somebody will look like an oracle, and say, "Great rivers and great trees in America! You speak good English." And then he will seem surprised, but not say it, only you can read the words on his face—"Upon my soul, you are almost as white as us."

Dinner is over. It's time for ladies to cut stick. Aunt Goosey looks at the next eldest goosey, and ducks her head as if she was agoin' through a gate, and then they all come to their feet, and the gemmen come to their feet, and they all toddle off to the drawin'-room together. The decanters now take the "grand tour" of the table, and, like most travellers, go out with full pockets, and return with empty ones. Talk has a pair of stays here, and is laced up tight and stiff. Larnin' is pedantic; politics is out of date; religion ain't fashionable. You must tread on neutral ground. Well, neutral ground gets so trampled down by both sides, and so plundered by all, there ain't anything fresh or good growin on it, and it has no cover for game nother. Hows'ever, the ground is tried, it's well beat, but nothin' is put up, and you get back to where you started. Uncle Gander looks at next eldest gander hard, bobs his head, and lifts one leg, all ready for a go, and says—"Will you take any more wine?" "No," says he; "but I take the hint—let's jine the ladies."



PRESENTATION OF THE CITY ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

On Saturday the Queen held a court at Buckingham Palace for the reception of an address on the throne from the Corporation of the City of London, congratulating her Majesty on the auspicious birth of a princess. The civic procession from the Mansion House included the City Marshal on horseback, the Lord Mayor's footmen in their superb state liveries, and the state-coach conveying his lordship, attended by his Chaplain, Macebearer, and Swordbearer. The following aldermen and officers of the Corporation also attended his lordship:—Aldermen Sir Peter Laurie, Sir Chapman Marshall, John Johnson, Thomas Johnson, Pirie, Sir George Carroll, Gibbs, Farncomb, Sir James Duke, and Sir C. Hunter; the Recorder, the Chamberlain, the Sheriffs, the City Remembrancer, the City Controller, the High Bailiff of Southwark, &c. A numerous body of members of the Common Council were also present.

The procession reached the palace shortly before one o'clock, and the deputation were ushered to the green drawing-room. The Corporation were then conducted by the Lord Chamberlain to the throne-room, where the Queen was seated on her throne, his Royal Highness Prince Albert on her left and the Duchess of Buccleuch, Mistress of the Robes, on her right; the Viscountess Jocelyn, Lady in Waiting, and the Ministers and officers of state standing on either side. Her Majesty's Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms lined the room.

The Recorder then approached her Majesty, and read the following address:—

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

The humble Address of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London in Common Council assembled.

Most Gracious Sovereign,—We, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the city of London, in Common Council assembled, humbly approach your Majesty to offer our heart felt congratulations on the safety of your Majesty, and the birth of another princess.

Feeling at all times the most lively and affectionate interest in any circumstance calculated to increase the domestic felicity of your Majesty and of your royal consort, and to promote the public prosperity, we hail with peculiar satisfaction this auspicious event.—Signed, by order of the Court,

HENRY ALWORTH MERRYWETHER.

Her Majesty was pleased to return the following most gracious answer to the address:—

I receive, with hearty thanks, your loyal and dutiful congratulations which are an additional proof of your attachment to me and my family.

Nothing can be more acceptable than these testimonies of loyalty on the part of the city of London.

It is my warmest wish, and it has been my constant object, to promote the honour and happiness of my faithful subjects.

The two senior members of the Court of Aldermen, Sir Claudius Hunter and Sir Peter Laurie, and the mover and seconder of the address had the honour to kiss hands.

The deputation then retired from the royal presence.

The throne-room, minutely represented by our artist, is a superb saloon, in the centre of the east front of the palace; it is forty feet in height, and has a coved ceiling, richly emblazoned with arms, and gilded in the boldest Italian style of the fifteenth century. The frieze, in marble, representing the wars of the Roses, was sculptured by Baily, and was Stothard's last great work. The throne is placed in an elaborately gilt alcove, and above is a medallion of George IV., with festoons of flowers, &c. The apartment is well lit with lofty plate-glass windows, the prospect from which is very cheerful; and the Sovereign, when seated on her throne, can, by a slight inclination of the head, command a view of the metropolis, with the majestic cathedral for its nucleus.

HORTICULTURAL FETE AT CHISWICK—GATEWAY TO THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE'S GROUNDS.

On Wednesday the third and last display of fruits and flowers for the present season took place in the gardens of this society, at Chiswick. The day was fine, and this, together, no doubt, with the influence of an announcement which appeared in the papers, that, on this occasion, the pleasure-grounds of his Grace the Duke of Devonshire's villa, adjoining, would be thrown open to the visitors to the gardens, attracted a remarkably crowded attendance. The fruit exhibited, and which was arranged in one circular pavilion, presented a profusion of grapes in richest cluster, and a liberal contribution of pines; there were a few samples of cherries, strawberries, and black currants, of a fine quality. The flowers were less redundant in choice bloom than those of last month, but they offered a large and luxuriant collection of roses; the pelargonium was also copious in quantity, and brought some good seedlings. The orchidaceous class had some remarkable representatives. A group of the large Datura arborea was very conspicuous, as was also the interesting novelty of a collection of very delicate pine-plants, seemingly fresh from the seed. The promenade was enlivened by the music of a band of the foot guards. A third object of interest proved more powerful than either, and at times they were comparatively deserted, in consequence of the attractions of the garden and grounds of the villa of his Grace the Duke of Devonshire. They are laid out with consummate taste and picturesque effect. They are enriched by the crowning ornament of two glorious cedars of Lebanon. The flower-garden, conservatory, and walks graced with statues, and frequently wailed in with greenery, were much admired, and among all present there was but one feeling of acknowledgment to their noble proprietor for the gratification which he had been so considerate as to afford them. Towards six o'clock there was, however, a change of scene, and the whole gay floral spectacle of the Chiswick gardens for this year brought to its conclusion. Our engraving represents the magnificent entrance to the Duke of Devonshire's grounds, which presented a very animated scene throughout the day.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 22nd.

SUNDAY, July 16.—Fifth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 17.—St. Alexis.
TUESDAY, 18.—Petrarch died 1374.
WEDNESDAY, 19.—Coronation of George IV., 1821.
THURSDAY, 20.
FRIDAY, 21.—Burns died.
SATURDAY, 22.—Battle of Salamanca, 1812.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending July 22.

Monday.		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
Mr.	Af.	M	A.	Mo.	A.	Mo.	A.	Mo.	Af.	Mo.	Af.
h. m	h. m	h. m	h. m	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
5 28	5 47	6 4	6 23	6 42	7 2	7 23	7 45	8 10	8 48	9 23	9 57

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"T. L. H.," Stamford.—Thanks to our correspondent. Allhallows appears to be a general name for churches dedicated to All Saints; but we scarcely trace more than a nominal connexion between Allhallows Barking, Tower-street, and Allhallows, London-wall.

"W. J. H."—The drawing of the stork's nest n ar Hamburg, is not suited for our news-paper.

"A Bachelor," Birmingham, may venture.

"A. R. Z."—We do not think it likely, though the question should rather be sent to the Home-office than to that of the I. L. N. The stabilist to serve extends between the ages of eighteen and forty-five.

"A. G."—The illustrated excursion shall soon appear. The Foreign Intelligence was omitted through press of news, but we think in only one instance. The letter shall be left at our office for Monday next.

"X X X."—We do not take sufficient cognizance of the association to know the amount of its funds.

"M. O."—The communication from Harrow did not reach us in time; but our correspondent is thanked.

"An original Subscriber."—We cannot at present extend the Gazette intelligence.

"J. W."—The subject shall receive attention.

"J. B S."—Thanks to our correspondent for his good intentions.

"An Old and Ardent Admirer."—The objects suggested shall be considered in their turn. There is not, however, the same motive for engraving our own cathedrals as that of Cologne, the restoration of which is matter of intelligence. Tintern and Kirkstall have, we think, been too often engraved. We have not room for Mr. Mackay's letter for Sir Robert Peel.

"T. W. T.," Liverpool.—The report was accidentally omitted. We intend, however, to pay more attention to the game, as our present paper indicates.

"E K." is thanked for the long letter from Florence. Rome, he tells us, has its Illustrated News, the office being in the Corso, the Strand of the Eternal City. Provided future letters contain news, they will be acceptable.

"T. D. K.," Bristol.—The contributor of the National Sports, we know, joins in our correspondent's reverence for the Dramatic Hard, and the misquotations must have been made in more hasts than good speed. At p. 21, of our last paper, middle column, for "toil and sweat," read "grain" or "groan and sweat." For,

> "As far as trees of Araby
> Their medicinable gums;"

read,

> "As fast as the Arabian trees
> Their med cinable gum."

"A Subscriber," Tadcaster.—We do not know the result of the attempt to raise the Telemagus treasure-ship. See No. 33 of our journal.

"Anti," Dublin.—We have not room for a narrative of the opium war. The other suggestion is under consideration.

"Line in," and "J. G.," Barnstaple.—Mr. Day's charity for the blind. We are, in some respects, gratified at our own mistake as to the result of Mr. Day's benevolent intentions. Lincoln has evidently sent us the following brief details of this admirable charity:—Mr. Day, the well-known head of the firm of Day and Martin, by his will left £100,000, the dividends and interest arising from which he directed should be disbursed in sums of not less than £10 or more than £20 to each blind person, the selection of the objects to be left to the discretion of the trustees. The will also appointed Mr. George Simpson, No. 25, Saville-row, land-street, to be treasurer of the fund and manager of the charity under the trustees. From the former it appears that

60 blind persons a-e in the annual receipt of				£20	per year each.
75 do.	..	..	.	..	16 do.
100 do.	..	..	..	..	12 do.
235 persons.					£3600 per year.

The scheme upon which the charity has been founded, and the satisfactory way in which it works, will, we trust, induce others to follow the example of Mr. Day. Where money is left for charitable purposes, we too often see that a great portion of it never finds its way to the proper object. In the acute instance the cause is happily, reverse.d.

"Scrutator."—The subject is under consideration.

"C. T. E. S."—We must adhere to our decision already expressed, though with due sense of our correspondent's kind intentions.

"J. ..," Belfast.—Thanks; but we think the subject would scarcely be of general interest.

"H. D. G."—We participate in the satisfaction so unequivocally expressed at the recent defeat of the attempt to enclose Hampstead Heath and Blackheath. Every effort made to abridge the healthful recreations of the people shall meet with our correspondent's cordial unanimity.

"A Subscriber," Mark-lane.—A late edition is uniformly published on Saturday afternoon. We know nothing of the "cerium pecus" referred to.

"Lunther Castle."—We have not room at present.

"Littlecote Park."—The station, we fear, is too slight.

"G. S. B.," Ramsgate.—Thanks.

"G. B. ..," Newcastle.—Not of sufficient interest for engraving.

"J. C.," Aldersgate-street.—Apply to Messrs. Wiley and Putnam, American booksellers, Paternoster-row.

"C. ..," Woolwich.—We had rather await the consecration of the church.

"Lucile" is thanked for the sketch of Kensington.

Several other correspondents shall be replied to in our next.

"C. C."—The time has been received from Great Totham.

Inelgia e.—The following contributions are better suited for a magazine than our newspaper:—Modern Matrimony, by "D. D.;" To a Friend on her Birthday, by "A Constant Reader;" Sonnet to he Swan, by "J. B.;" "A Rustling Farmer's" Address to the Year; This time next Year, by "Lucile;" Latin translation of a Lament, &c., by "H. R."

"W. R."—A few of the miscellanies may appear.

"G. A. R."—Soon after King James created the rank and order of baronet, he d rected that the baronets might bear, either on their canton or as an escheon on their shield of arms, the arms of Ulster, which, symbolized it seems of the warlike character of the inhabitants of that province, as is set forth in the preamble of the baronet's patent, was a bloody hand; or, in the language of heraldry, a hand gules in a field argent. Such was the origin of baronets bearing the bloody hand in their coats of arms.

"E. F., jun.," Kingsland.—The lion was, doubtless, adopted in the royal arms as heraldry mark of courage, the unicorn Mr. Ogilby considers to have originated from the Indian rhinoceros, described by Ctesias as the Indian ass; "and as he attributes to it a whole hoof like the horse, and a single horn in the forehead, speculation required but one step further to produce the fabulous unicorn, such as it appears in the royal arms of England, and such as it has retained its hold on popular credulity for the last two thousand years."

"Fly Fish"—The New River is free for any angler from its source near Ware, in Hertfordshire, to Islington.

CHESS—"C. M. F." "A Constant Reader," and "C. P.," received.

"A Chess Tyro."—Quite correct.

"J. A. S."—The address has been forwarded to the gentleman.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S ANNIVERSARY AT DERBY.—Next week we shall resume our illustrations of this grand Meeting, and notice the very fine exhibition recently opened at the Athenæum at Derby, and inspected by the most distinguished visitors during the past week.

NOTICE.—Any of the back numbers may be had to complete the volumes, by remitting to our publisher postage stamps at the rate of Sixpence per copy. The Covers for binding the volumes may be had through all booksellers, at 3s. each.; Portfolios, for keeping the numbers clean, 4s. each. Subscribers may have their numbers bound in the same style as issued from our office, for 5s. Orders, through their booksellers, to Messrs. Remnant and Edmonds, of 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, Lovell's-court, Paternoster-row, will have immediate attention.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 15, 1843.

The debate on Ireland—of which we have given as long a parliamentary summary as our space will admit—has been in every sense a most emphatic one. It has evoked a fresh and unlooked-for spirit in some quarters of the House of Commons, and although it has produced no practical results in the way of legislation, or any declaration from the Government of the manner in which the present emergency of affairs in Ireland is to be met, yet it has indicated the much-altered position of the Minister, and proved that the amount of public confidence in his energy and ability is no longer what it was. It will be remembered that we last week intimated to our readers that the press barometer had begun to work, and that the two chief Conservative organs, the Times and Post, had prepared us for a change in the atmosphere of party opinion, in so far as adherence to the present Administration was concerned. A great public discussion has since taken place; and a stirring though tedious Irish debate has demonstrated more in the Parliament than did the Post and Times in the press. It has presented the singular phenomenon of Ministerial members speaking from the Government benches against the Government. It has recorded the secession, from different causes, from Sir Robert Peel's ranks of long-accepted and avowed supporters—of Mr. Milnes, Lord John Manners, and Mr. Smythe, and of such sincere and ruggedly independent members as Captain Rous and Mr. Ferrand, all of whom may be said to have spoken in terms of rebuke, dissatisfaction, and distrust. There is no formidable alteration in the Minister's majority, but we fear there is a formidable depreciation of the public reliance on the comprehensiveness and decision of his policy, and the falling of his press and his parliamentary adherence is one of the signs of the times. Nor was the Premier's speech of Tuesday evening at all calculated to stay the progress of adverse or deficient feeling. It was the half-faltering, uncheered oration of a much-discouraged man—it evinced a struggling more than a cheerful spirit—a something which was neither energy, nor decision, nor determination, but which the speaker would fain have imposed upon us for all three. And yet it began, was made of nothing, ended in nothing—and so—ex nihilo nihil fit—we can make nothing of it. This is the feeling of the public. The speech of the Minister has answered no anxiety—quelled no curiosity—indicated no adopted course; and England and the English are as much in the dark as ever as to how the agitation of Ireland and the Irish is to be taught to subside. One thing, however, is clear, and upon this we may congratulate our readers, that we are to have no force—no recourse to bloodshed—no appeal to arms. Sir Robert Peel has promised to carry out the principle of conciliation to its utmost; and, as it is quite clear to us that he cannot without the total loss of party interest maintain much longer the principle of supine indifference, we take some comfort in the inference (though Sir Robert Peel has hardly taken the trouble to make it at all a positive one) that legislation for Ireland will come at last;—still come, because it must. There must be some grappling with great grievances, and our lawgivers, appealing by good, quick, practical, and efficient acts to the impulseful gratitude of the people, may administer something like an antidote to the poison of repeal—may produce something like a reaction upon that morbid but wild ambition which a desire to be an independent nation, instead of an integral element of our common British home, has cruelly infused into the vanity of the Irish heart. Something may be done, but zealously and carefully, with the vexata questio of religious animosities, and the Church establishment and the Romish priesthood be taught to approach each other in a more friendly spirit. Much more may be effected between landlord and tenant, and with the almighty curse of absenteeism; and the abolition of the poor-law and of some restrictive commercial enactments might be made to woo the unhappy country with a tempting persuasion which she would find it difficult to resist. The vision of repeal would greatly dissolve before the sober reality of positive social amelioration. But, whatever is done, if 'twere done 'twere well it were done quickly. There is no time for vacillation, and a Minister should declare his plan. That Sir Robert Peel has not done so has dissatisfied all parties, and in the meanwhile the emergency, we had almost said the imminent peril, of disaffection increases hourly. The power of O'Connell increases—the repeal rent increases—the English anxiety increases—the quarrel of Parliament increases, but Sir Robert Peel is dumb. This has proved a reason of grave offence—it is a silent confession of dilemma which he seems undecided how to overcome. The Times treats this position with its usual force. Speaking of the Minister's many advices from his friends, it says:—

> "One urges strong; another is for healing, measures; one pleads for enforcement of the law, another for conciliation; but none speak with that confidence and energy which should distinguish the member of a party commanding an immense majority in the House of Commons, and led by one who has long enjoyed, from friend and foe, the credit of being its ablest member. Meanwhile what does that leader? Alas! Mr. Roebuck's description appears but too true:—
>
> "'During all this time the right hon. baronet at the head of the Government of this great empire—that most sagacious manager of parliamentary debates—seems to have been whirled along, unknowing, uncaring, the mere slave of accident and chance, and does not step forward, as he ought to do, and become the governing mind. What is the consequence? Why, that his own friends are in a state of defection from him, until he sits like some general in his camp, to whom each successive messenger brings tidings of some fresh person having left him, and of all having one by one gone over to the enemy.'
>
> "In truth, Sir Robert Peel, able and experienced tactician as he is, either does not understand, or is unable to fulfil, what a party requires. It requires a leader whom it understands, and to whom it can look for expressing, defending—perhaps qualifying—the feelings and ideas which bind it together. Men must know what they are supporting—what, as a whole, they have to expect from the man to whom, as members of a party, they submit their judgments in detail. The only principle with which Sir Robert Peel can be said thus to be identified is that of order. In supporting that Minister, men considered that they were supporting one who could not indeed be said to be a thorough aristocrat or a thorough reformer—a thorough agriculturist or a thorough manufacturer—a thorough protectionist or a thorough free-trader—a thorough churchman or a thorough liberal; but they did think they were supporting a thorough friend of order—an able practical man, who would enforce law, and look after the material peace and prosperity of the country. Unintelligible, questionable, surprising as Sir Robert Peel's policy has often turned out upon other points, men thought they had him safe upon this. Yet, even here he appears to be failing us."

We fear there is no such thing as fairly disputing the truth of these propositions, or of the last assertion, that the Minister appears to be failing us. One natural result is, that the Minister's former adherents will be failing him, and that he must expect this if he do not declare some definite course of policy with reference to the crisis of the country the recent debate upon the state of his Irish difficulties has most emphatically declared.

We recollect being highly amused with the excuse of an adventurous Hibernian in the brave town of Edinburgh, who, being deprived of his paternal estate by the "right owner," thought to mend his fortunes by entering into a hymeneal speculation; and having ogled a fair damsel in the opposite habitation, who felt disposed to reciprocate his attachment, they hit upon the happy expedient of hanging their portraits opposite each other in the attic windows, in order that in the absence of either the eye of the other might be feasted with at least the resemblance of the beloved one. It happened, however, that more eyes than those of the parties principally concerned observed this proceeding, and our Hibernian friend being questioned on the point, he coolly assured his interrogator that he merely exhibited the painting (which was at the top of a seven-storied house), for "the encouragement of the arts." Our aristocracy and our cognoscenti in this country seem to have as extraordinary ideas concerning, and to take just as efficient means to promote, this much-talked-of object, the encouragement of the arts. Painting and sculpture they seem to think were never intended for other eyes than theirs; they love to gloat upon their beauties, and interchange their admiration, but any proposal to gratify the public curiosity they regard as a piece of sheer impertinence. This course of proceeding, though very discreditable, might be tolerated, if they did not insist on the public paying for the amusement, and, in addition, boast of the time and labour which they gratuitously and disintere-tedly expend in their service. The course which has been pursued with reference to the cartoons intended as specimens for the decoration of our new Houses of Parliament is highly illustrative of the mode of proceeding generally adopted with reference to the sister arts of painting and sculpture in this country. We fancy we need hardly inform our readers that the prizes awarded to the best of these cartoons (which are at present being exhibited in Westminster-hall) are defrayed from the public purse. But does the burning ardour of those who are intrusted with the management of this branch of our public embellishments, and who affect to be actuated by the most intense desire for the promotion and encouragement of the arts and the elevation of the public taste, induce them to adopt the likeliest method of effecting these objects, namely, by throwing them open to the gratuitous inspection of the public? No such thing. The same peddling and huxtering mode of dealing that has ever characterized the management of our public institutions—until shamed into propriety and liberality by the public voice—continues to pervade the councils of our most art-loving and scientific "Boards of Encouragement." No poor man—however refined or cultivated his mind, and, alas, how many such does not London contain!—who does not choose, or is unable to pay a shilling, dares presume to gaze at the cartoons, until the wonder-seeking purse-proud mob of the metropolis have sated their idle and unmeaning curiosity. Thus it will be seen that the public enjoy the luxury of paying twice, and so long as they are content to do so, if they do so with their eyes open, we can have no objection; but, as we are disposed to think that the public are no parties to such an arrangement, either by their representatives in Parliament or through the popular organs of opinion, we should think ourselves remiss in the duty we have undertaken to discharge did we refrain from expressing our sentiments on a subject which, in whatever light it is regarded, reflects neither honour or credit on those who have assumed to themselves the direction of the public taste. But the dénouement is well worthy the proceedings that have marked the history of these deservedly admired works of art. We have reason to know that applications have been made for permission to take copies of these cartoons by parties who intended them for general and comparatively cheap circulation. Those applications have been peremptorily refused, notwithstanding that the artists themselves gave an eager and willing consent to the proposal; and in the Standard of Tuesday evening last we observe a letter, bearing the signature of a publishing house in Paternoster-row, stating that they have purchased the copyright. Thus the copies of these cartoons—this public property, which was at first excluded from public view, except on payment of a certain sum—is eventually "signed, sealed, and delivered over" to most disinterested executors, we have no doubt, but in a manner which must convince every one that, during the term of copyright at least, this work is effectually placed beyond the reach or all but the wealthiest portion of the community. We are by no means serious when we say that this proceeding "requires no comment." We are of a very different opinion, and so we imagine will the public be; but we must leave off for the present, and in the meantime we trust we shall hear from those distinguished caterers for the public taste no more nauseating twaddle about "the encouragement of the arts."

A Hull paper, in describing a thunder storm which took place over the range of country from the East Riding of Yorkshire to Northamptonshire on Wednesday week last, says, that "the lightning, which was more than usually vivid, and assumed all sorts of fantastic forms, succeeded each other with scarcely a moment's intermission. It commenced early in the afternoon on the other side of Rugby, and followed the train all the way down."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

On the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, the Law of Libel Bill was read a second time.—The Lieutenancy of Actions Bill was read a third time and passed.—On the motion of the Bishop of LONDON, the Church Extension Bill was read a third time, and the additional clauses were ordered to be taken into consideration on Tuesday.—Some bills on the table were forwarded a stage, and their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

Mr. TURNER asked if it was the intention of the Government to advise her Majesty to visit with her presence the displeasure of all persons engaged in duelling, or if they would bring in a bill upon the subject early in the next session of Parliament?—Sir R. PEEL said he was quite alive to the importance of the subject, but was not prepared to make any declaration without mature consideration.—The adjourned debate on the state of Ireland was resumed by Captain BERNAL, who contended strongly for the necessity of inquiry, and said the Irish people would have no confidence in a Government which took every opportunity of rewarding the bitterest assailants of the religion and character of the majority. He impressed upon Sir R. Peel the necessity, instead of attending to the advice of the coercive party in the Cabinet, of adopting the advice given to Charles I., by removing the causes of complaint.—Sir H. DOUGLAS denied that there was any parallel between the cases of Canada and Ireland. The happy state of Government in Canada was adverse to its true interests and to British connexion. In Ireland, the agitation was not the work of an individual, and had not any real grievance to warrant it, and if no other member would do it, he would himself bring forward a specific motion, deprecating the existing agitation, and declaring that no concession shall be made to the demands of the agitators, until the country shall be restored to peace and tranquillity. (A cry of "Move, move.") The hon. member said he would move it, but the motion was not seconded.—Mr. V. SMEATON, on the part of the people of Ireland, asked for no favour—he only demanded from them their rights—he only demanded that they should be placed on the same footing as the people of England and Scotland. Owing to bad legislation the people of Ireland were steeped in wretchedness and poverty, and even the appeal of the union would not cure the social evils of the country, for these could only be remedied by the introduction of the spirit of legislation. The Established Church was a standing grievance forced upon a people professing a different faith. The burden of the Protestant Church should be borne by those who professed its doctrines. That and an equitable adjustment of the ecclesiastical revenues and some other remedies would change Ireland from being a thorn in the side of Great Britain to its greatest friend and supporter.—Captain ROSS said that the Government, though tried up by the bigotry of the Scotch Presbyterian Church and the bigotry of the English Protestant Church, had nevertheless managed to pacify the agitator who had pacified Ireland, and he thanked God that the country was in a state of such small minority of the population.—Mr. SMITH, the attorney-general for Ireland, vindicated the Government appointed in Ireland, and said that while the late Government was in power he, being opposed to them, did not feel annoyed, or think he was unjustly dealt with, because, in common with other members of the bar, he had been overlooked by that Government.—Lord HOWICK was of opinion that the adoption of the present motion was the best way of intimating to the people of Ireland that something could be done to remedy their grievances. They should conquer the affections of the people of Ireland by redressing the real grievances, the chief of which were the re-actions of landlord and tenant, and the relative positions of the Catholic and Protestant churches, by which the pride of the Catholics was wounded, and their feelings insulted. Government should apply themselves to the subject during the recess, and re-assemble Parliament early in the winter to consider of the plan which might be formed as the result of their deliberations.—Mr. G. R. HIGGS said he had no objection to give the Catholics all that he could get for them; but the people of England would never would consent, call it bigotry or what else they pleased, to the subversion of the Established Church in Ireland. Such an attempt would not only cost us Ministerial place, but would produce a revolution in the country.—Mr. Robert Peel would persevere in the course he had hitherto pursued, undeterred by anything which might fall from the agitators who were exercising such a baneful influence in this country.—Sir B. HALL said that the reason why the Government had not put down the agitation in Ireland was, because they feared the Orangemen on the one hand, and Mr. O'Connell on the other. He avowed himself for the necessity for adopting a conciliatory course, and said the opposition were justified in obstructing the Arms Bill, until they were made acquainted with the intentions of the Government.—Lord JOCELYN hoped the agitation would be put a stop to; but at all events something must be done to quiet the excitement that had existed, and to preserve the peace. He had so good an opinion of his Catholic fellow-countrymen that he could not bring himself to believe that they would become parties to any proposition for the spoliation of the Established Church. He quite concurred in the views of those who recommended the establishment of public works, &c., but at the same time, the agitation which prevailed prevented the employment of capital, and while it continued those views could not be carried out. The objects of the agitators were unconstitutional and dangerous, and he was justified in opposing the motion.—Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL then moved the adjournment of the debate, which was at once acceded to.—The other orders of the day were then disposed of, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Grand Jury Presentments (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.—Lord BROUGHAM'S Sasine Trade Registration Bill was committed for the purpose of having amendments made in it and printed. Report ordered to be brought up on Friday.—The Church Endowment Bill, with amendments, after hearing the objections made to it by Lords BROUGHAM, CAMPBELL, and COTTENHAM, was read a third time and passed.—The Earl of ABERDEEN moved the re-commitment of the Scotch Church Benefices Bill, and stated his intention to accede to Lord Brougham's suggestion, by transferring the last portion of the first clause to the end of the clause, by which means the difficulty with respect to the declaratory part of the bill would be removed.—Lord CAMPBELL, notwithstanding this concession, considered the bill as amended more properly calculated to do mischief than benefit, and he merely declare that there was a right of grumbling in every congregation in Scotland.—The Duke of WELLINGTON: There can be no doubt about that, I should think.—Lord CAMPBELL continued to object to the clergy having worship from the second clause: "The presbytery or other jud catory of the church to whom such objections shall be referred shall, in cognoscing and determining the same, be entitled to take into their consideration the circumstances and condition of the parish, to the spiritual welfare and education of the people and to the character and number of the persons by whom the objections shall be offered."—After remarks from Lord CRANWORTH and Lord BROUGHAM, and the Earl of HADDINGTON, their lordships divided on the amendment—Contents, 14; non-contents, 31: majority, 17.—Another amendment proposed by Lord CAMPBELL, to the effect that, if the presbytery exceeded their jurisdiction in deciding on objections presented to the presentee, a remedy should be given to the presentee in the civil courts, was negatived without a division, and the remaining clauses, with the preamble, were agreed to. The report was ordered to be received on Thursday.—Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

Lord G. SOMERSET brought up the report of the committee of selection, and the following members appointed as the select committee to try the merits of the petition presented against the return of Lord Dungannon, at the late election for the city of Durham, were sworn at the table:—Mr. W. B. Wrightson, Mr. G. A. Hamilton, Mr. J. Parker, Mr. Hemsley, Lord Viscount Elrington, Mr. C. Round, and Lord Astley, chairman. Committee to meet to-morrow (Wednesday).—The adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Smith O'Brien, with regard to Irish grievances, was resumed by Mr. MORGAN J. O'CONNELL, who supported the motion.—Mr. SMYTHE (the Conservative representative of Canterbury) said the chief cause of the difference between the two countries existed not so much in the "fopery" of Ireland as in the "No-Popery" of England—that bitter spirit which still lingered in the caustic precincts of Exeter Hall. The Tory members on both sides of the house next spoke in succession, amongst whom were Mr. G. HAMILTON, Mr. SHARMAN CRAWFORD, and Mr. ROSS for the motion, and Mr. COLQUHOUN, Mr. BATESON, and Mr. M. MAHON against it.—Mr. BUCK [we [illegible] contrary to a belief most unjustly entertained either as a conquered country by means of the garrison we had placed there, or else on the broad basis of liberal principles, seeking the happiness of the many. The latter course should be pursued, and the right hon. baronet was to blame, not for acting worse than his predecessors, but for not proving himself equal to the exigencies of the case.—Sir R. PEEL said he did not believe that the hon. gentleman who had opened the debate had any idea of entering into a solemn inquiry into the state of Ireland, but that his real object was, by carrying his motion, to declare that the house had no confidence in the present Ministry. With respect to those on his side of the house who had spoken disparagingly of the Arms Bill, and by implication of the course pursued by Government, he echoed the hope of Mr. Roebuck, that they would give effect to their words by their votes, as the most honest, the most manly, and, to the Government, the most friendly course they could pursue. He denied that Ireland had been treated, in consequence of the union, with a more parsimonious spirit than would have been observed if she had had her own Parliament, and quoted some returns in order to prove the liberality which had been observed towards that country. It was quite impossible at that time of night to enter into the question as to the union in a pecuniary point of view, considering the establishments which she must then of necessity maintain. At present Ireland paid no assessed taxes, and in a recent crisis had already enumerated as having arrived in Derby, with those who have subsequently arrived, were present.

VIEW OF DERBY FROM CHADDEN HILL, DRAWN BY J. WEBSTER, ESQ.—THE PRIZE MEDAL.

Upon proceeding to the trial fields the company, in passing through Mr. White's farmyard, saw several of the implements driven by steam power, in the course of trial.

At the appointed hour (twelve o'clock) precisely the judges gave the order for the first set of ploughs to start. They were all in readiness and started together, and were followed across the field by a numerous body of the spectators, who, being chiefly farmers and others connected with agriculture, were anxious to witness their performance. We have not room for the list of ploughs, and other implements. The trial was considered to be a decided failure, the ground not being of a nature to afford a fair test of the merits of the inventions.

Fronting the chief or grand entrance to the railway station, and about 200 yards distance from it, stands the grand pavilion in which the annual celebration of the society took place. The greater portion of the road leading from the station to the main highway was lined with refreshment booths, and presented a very gay appearance during the greater part of the week. At a distance of about a quarter of a mile from the pavilion are the cattle and implement yards, the approach to which is through a green lane, pleasantly overshadowed by oaks and elms. There was also a large number of refreshment booths on either side of the rural entree to the great feature of the celebration. The Royal Hotel, at which the mayor's dinner took place, has a commanding position, and is one of the finest buildings of the town. The hall and various parts of the interior were decorated with a profusion of flowers and fragrant shrubs; a splendid flag waved from its summit, and "from morn till noon, from noon till dewy eve," the bustle of agriculture never ceased in the Royal Hotel.

CATTLE SHEDS.

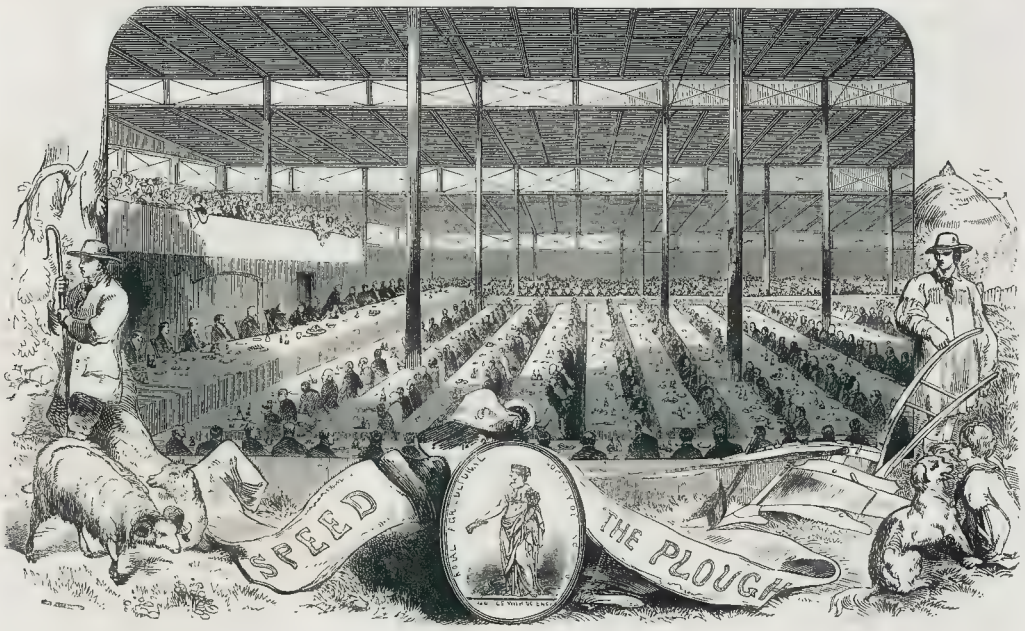
In the engraving beneath the view of Derby is shown the prize medal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England; and beneath the view of the pavilion dinner is the grand seal of the society.

The pavilion is strongly constructed, though extremely light in appearance; it is in total length from front to rear 160 feet, and in breadth 150 feet, covering a surface of upwards of 30,000 superficial feet. The roof is framed in five compartments, each one supporting the other, ample light and ventilation being obtained in an upright space of 4 feet, which intervenes between the eaves of one roof and the top plate of the other. It is a difficult task, in words, accurately to describe the peculiar construction of the roof; it will be found to possess all scientific arrangement and strength of a combination of arches both longitudinally and transversely. The apparent lightness of the roof is very striking, but, on inquiry being made, it was ascertained to contain in weight nearly ten tons of wrought iron. There are some light diagonal ties, but combining great strength, which were introduced by the contractor, Mr. Manning, of Holborn, London," by order of the "Council of the Royal Agricultural Society," in the construction of the building last year at Bristol, which were suggested by Sir Robert Smirke in consequence of the exposed situation near the Downs, on the heights of Clifton, in which the pavilion was then placed. Both at Bristol and Derby, the roof and building has been severely tested by storms of great violence.

PRIZE PLOUGHING MATCH ON MR. WHITE'S FARM, MICKLEOVER; THE QUARNDON HILLS IN THE DISTANCE. DRAWN BY J. WEBSTER, ESQ.



BANQUET IN THE GREAT PAVILION, THURSDAY, JULY 13.

The prominent feature of the interior is, that the whole company, 2200, being seated at single tables, those on the level area marked A and I, and the remainder on the inclined planes, B, C, D, E, F, G, and H, all facing the president's table. By this plan the president and his guests may recognise, with perfect ease, any faces among the numerous assemblage. Immediately, in the rear of the president's table, but raised about nine feet, and from thence are raised six rows of seats and a plane of considerable elevation, is the ladies' gallery, in which is ample accommodation for 300 ladies; attached to which is a staircase leading from a private room entirely for the use of the ladies, which is entered from the council-room (appropriated during the dinner to a refreshment room for the ladies), also answering the purpose of a reception room for them.

The dining-room of the pavilion is divided into nine compartments, which are lettered from A to I, and the tickets of admission are lettered to correspond with these. There are stewards appointed to each compartment as follows:—

A.

Duke of Richmond
William Miles, M.P.
E. S. Chandos Pole
Professor Sewell
T. H. S. E. Sotheron, M.P.
Charles Stokes
Colonel Challoner

B.

Hon. Robert Henry Clive, M.P.
C. Hillyard
Sir John V. B. Johnstone, Bart., M.P.
Sir Charles Lemon, Bart., M.P.

C.

Sir Francis Lawley, Bart.
William Thomas Bramston, M.P.
Hon. George Henry Cavendish, M.P.
E. W. W. Pendarves, M.P.
Colonel Thomas Wood, M.P.

EXTERIOR OF PAVILION.

D.

Earl of Chichester
William Gondenough Hayter, M.P.
Samuel Jonas
William Shaw

E.

Thomas Raymond Barker
Charles Robert Colvile, M.P.
Francis Pym
Henry Stephen Thompson
George Wilbraham, M.P.

F.

Lord Portman
Stephen Grantham
George Webb Hall
John Kinder
Rev. W. L. Rham

G.

Earl Talbot
Colonel Thomas Austen
Edward Buller, M.P.
Sir Charles Burrell, Bart., M.P.

H.

Lord Worsley, M.P.
David Barclay, M.P.
Wadsam Fisher Hobbs
George Kimberley
Henry Wilson

I.

Earl of Ducie
John Benett, M.P.
Sir Hungerford Hoskyns, Bart.
Sir Robert Price, Bart.
W. H. Crompton Stansfield, M.P.
John Villiers Shelley

In the pavilion for purposes of ventilation there are 150 canvas framed windows, which in case of excessive heat can be opened to admit cool air for ventilating the large space, and which has been effectually tested. At the extreme corners are conveniences for the waiters attending on the company. There are four entrances to the pavilion besides those in front (two in number) to the president's table and to the ladies' gallery.

The banquet took place on Thursday at four o'clock, when upwards of 2000 persons sat down to it, and there was ample accommodation for all. A number of toasts were drunk, and the meeting was addressed by Lords Hardwicke, Spencer, Ducie, Morpeth, the Duke of Richmond, and several other noblemen and gentlemen.

THE SHOW OF PRIZE CATTLE, &c.

DERBY, Thursday.

This being the most important day of the whole proceeding, at an early hour there was a most extraordinary influx of visitors from all parts. By the railway trains alone it is calculated that no less than 10,000 persons arrived to Derby from all parts of England.

The cattle, as well as the implements-yard, was open to the public, and presented a very animated scene; and the exhibition of the stock, as well as of the agricultural implements, was superior to any former show; and the whole well repaid the many thousands of individuals who visited the show their expense and trouble

The prizes adjudged for Short Horns have been already given. For the

HEREFORDS.

CLASS I.—First prize 30 sovs for the best bull calved to Jan. 1, 1841, to Mr. T. Jeffries, Pembridge, for his 3 y 8 m and 3 d Hereford bull, bred by himself —Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. J. Walker, of Burton, near Worcester, and Mr. J. Johnson, of Hampton Wafle, near Bromyard, for 3 y 7 m 13 d Hereford bull.

II.—Prize 20 sovs for the best bull calved since Jan. 1, 1841, and more than one year old, to Mr. W. Perry, of Monkland, near Leominster, for 1 y 7 m and 16 d Hereford bull.

III.—Prize 15 sovs for the best cow in milk, to Mr. T. Jeffries, Pembridge, for 3 y 8 m Hereford cow.

IV.—Prize 15 sovs for the best in-calf heifer, not exceeding 3 years old, to Mr. J. Walker, of Burton, near Worcester, for 2 y 5 m 2 w Hereford in-calf heifer

V.—Prize 10 sovs for the best yearling heifer, to Mr. T. Jeffries, Pembridge, for 1 y 6 m 1 d Hereford yearling heifer.

DEVONS.

I.—First prize 30 sovs for the best bull calved previously to the 1st of Jan., 1841, to Mr. G. Turner, of Barton, near Exeter, for 3 y and 8 m Devon bull —Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. T. Umbers, of Wappenbury, near Royal Leamington Spa, for 3 y 3 m Devon bull.

II.—Prize 20 sovs for the best bull, calved since Jan. 1, 1841, and more than one year old, to Mr. T. Reynolds, of Thomerton, near Exeter, for 1 y 42 m 3 d Devon.

III.—Prize 15 sovs for the best cow in milk, to Mr. G. Turner, of Barton, near Exeter, for 6 y 3 m Devon cow.

IV.—Prize 15 sovs for the best in-calf heifer, not exceeding 3 years old, to Mr. G. Turner, of Barton, near Exeter, for 2 y 4 m Devon in-calf heifer.

V.—Prize 10 sovs for the best yearling heifer, to Mr. G. Turner, of Barton, near Exeter, for 1 y 4 m Devon yearling heifer.

ANY BREED OR CROSS CATTLE.

I.—First prize 30 sovs for the best bull calved previously to Jan. 1, 1841, to Mr. Hextall, of Saibstone, Ashby-de-la Zouch, for 3 y 6 m pure long-horned bull.—Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. W. Daniel, of Burton-upon-Trent, for 3 y 5 m long-horned bull.

II.—Prize 20 sovs for the best bull calved since Jan. 1, 1841, and more than 1 y, not awarded.

III.—Prize 15 sovs for the best cow in milk, to Mr. E. Pratt, of Caldwell, Burton-upon-Trent, for 3 y 8 m pure long-horned cow.

IV.—Prize 15 sovs for the best in-calf heifer, not exceeding 3 years old, to the Duke of Buckingham, of Stowe, for 2 y 11 m pure long-horned in-calf heifer.

V.—Prize 10 sovs for the best yearling heifer, to the Rev. C. Thompson, near East Retford, for 1 y 4 m Ayrshire and short-horned cross-bred yearling heifer.

LEICESTER SHEEP.

I.—First Prize 30 sovs for the best shearing ram to Mr. T. E. Pawlett, of Beeston, near Biggleswade, for 17 m Leicester ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to the same for the same.

II.—First prize 30 sovs for the best ram of any age, above two years old, to Mr. T. Stone, of Barrow-on-Soar, for 40 m Leicester ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to the same for 52 m Leicester ram.

III.—First prize 10 sovs for the pen of five shearling ewes, to Sir W. B. Cook, Bart., of Wheatley, near Doncaster, for five 18½ m Leicester ewes.—Second prize 5 sovs to the same for the same.

SHORT-WOOLED SHEEP.

I.—First prize 30 sovs for the best shearing ram, to Mr. Webb, of Babraham, near Cambridge, for 16 m South Down ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to the same, for the same.

II.—First prize 30 sovs for the best ram of any age, above 2 years old, to Mr. W. Salisbury, of West Lavington, near Devizes, for 29 m South Down ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. J. Webb, of Babraham, for 40 m South Down ram.

III.—First prize 10 sovs for the best pen of five shearling ewes, to Mr. S. Webb, of Babraham, for five 16 m South Down ewes.—Second prize 5 sovs to the Duke of Richmond, for five 16 m South Down ewes.

LONG-WOOLLED SHEEP.

I.—First prize 30 sovs for the best shearing ram, to Mr. E. Smith, of Charlbury, Oxon, for 15½ m Oxfordshire ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to the executors of the late Mr. Wm. Fauconer, near Burford, Oxon, for 18 m improved Oxfordshire ram.

II.—First prize 30 sovs for rams of any age above 2 years, to Mr. E. Smith, of Charlbury, Oxon, for 21½ m Oxfordshire ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. E. Smith, of Charlbury, Oxon, for 51 m Oxfordshire ram.

III.—First prize 10 sovs for the best pen of five shearling ewes, to Mr. C. Large, of Broadwell, near Burford, for five 16 m New Oxfordsh re ewes.—Second prize 5 sovs to Mr. E. Smith, of Charlbury, Oxon, for five 15½ m Oxfordshire ewes.

PIGS.

I.—First prize 10 sovs for the best boar of a large breed, to Mr. M. Cartwright, near Burton on-Trent, for 1 y 9 m boar.—Second prize 5 sovs to Mr. Pusey, M.P., near Farringdon, for 1 y 9 m Berkshire boar.

II.—First prize 10 sovs for the best small sow, to Mr. W. F Hobbs, Coggeshall, for 10 m improved Essex boar.—Second prize 5 sovs to Mr. T. Atkin, near Atherstone, for 1 y boar.

III.—Prize 10 sovs for the best sow of a large breed, to the Duke of Devonshire, for 2 y 4 m Lincolnshire sow.

IV.—Prize 10 sovs for the best small sow, to Mr. T. B. Shilcock, near Melton Mowbray, for 3 y 10 m cross bred sow.

V.—Prize 10 sovs for the best pen of three breeding sows, to Mr. W. F. Hobbs, Coggeshall, for 8 m improved Essex pigs

[We have not space for the twelve awards for extra stock, or the commendations.]

LITERATURE.

HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES. By the author of "The Court and Times of Frederick the Great." Colburn.

The period which includes the last decade of the eighteenth and the four first of the nineteenth century will certainly be remembered by posterity as an age of revolutions. If the eighteenth was an age of opinion, that which followed was one of action, when the seeds of change which had been scattered at an earlier date germinated and bore fruit, in that mighty breaking-up of governments and societies which was witnessed at the epoch of the French revolution. That great convulsion was the signal for a series of explosions, of which the shock yet continues to be felt, and may perchance re-act on another generation. It was then that old systems, which had taken their rise when the Roman empire fell before its northern invaders, and lived through long ages of darkness, crumbled to pieces; the ruins of antiquity were swept away, and the ground was cleared for a re-construction of states, and the foundations of a new order of things were laid. It seemed as if the last and most fearful vial of Divine wrath were poured out upon the earth, as if thrones, dominations, principalities, and powers were to have an end. The storm subsided, and, notwithstanding the violent passions which had been called into action, and the blood which had been poured out in rivers over the fairest regions of the Continent by the contending armies of Europe, it was found that the earthquake of the moral world had not been unproductive of good as well as bad effects. In the physical order of nature the tempest purifies the air, and the earthquake relieves, by its outbreak, pent up fire in the secret hidings places of nature. In the moral world the political convulsion cleanses society from the impurities which during stagnation generate in the public mind; the might and opinions receive an impulse, of which the good effects are felt for years, and the mental energies of nations are quickened into new life and activity.

The aim of the present work is to furnish a summary of the annals of this epoch. There has been, hitherto, been a great want of useful compilations of recent history, from which the student may derive a knowledge of the political arrangements of modern European communities, and the events which have produced them. If this work is continued in the spirit of the first volume, which is now before us, we think it bids fair to supply this deficiency. It is written with clearness and succinctness, presenting a condensed and satisfactory account of the history of the world during one of its most important periods. We quote the author's general view of his subject, which is, perhaps, somewhat too extensive in point of time for the title he has chosen;—

It opens with the spectacle of a nation rousing from the lethargy of ages, and reclaiming the rights of which it had been despoiled; of a people repotted the most polished and the most elegant in Europe imbued all at once with a fierce, sanguinary, and inhuman spirit; trampling upon institutions which antiquity had hallowed, and education taught them to revere; of a revolution which, after sacrificing the reigning family in France, and covering the face of that fine country with blood and ruins, enabled a fortunate military adventurer not only to usurp the sovereignty there, but to establish his sway over nearly the whole of the Continent, by a sacrifice of human life which almost defies calculation; and ended in the return of the proscribed Bourbons to the throne of their ancestors.

It exhibits that same nation, though rent by internal factions and feuds, successfully vindicating its newly-acquired liberties against foreign invaders, whom its rulers, it is true, had most wantonly provoked; and the long train of triumphs won by it over all its Continental enemies, till the overweening ambition of the conqueror, who had yoked it to his car and dazzled it with the glare of false glory, produced his own downfal and its humiliation. It presents, in the cases of Russia and Spain, an animating picture of what national energies, excited by unjust aggression, are capable of accomplishing; and it shows us, in another hemisphere, vast regions breaking the shackles of the mother-state, and, after desperate struggles, successively achieving their independence.

The emancipation of Greece from Turkish thraldom, through the interference of the great European powers; the daring but less fortunate insurrection of the Poles; the transfer of the crown of France to a new branch of the house of Bourbon; the erection of a throne in Belgium; and the civil wars in the two divisions of the Spanish Peninsula, kindled by pretenders to their respective crowns, and stained with barbarian cruelty, form more recent features in this great moving drama.

And what shall we say of the commanding attitude assumed and maintained by our own country during this wonderful period? What shall we say of Britain, standing proud and pre-eminent among the nations, as the only one whose hearths and homes were not profaned by the foot of the invader; whose fields were not trodden down nor drenched in her blood by the rights of outraged humanity; whose natural bulwarks, defying the leagued navies of the world, swept them from the ocean; whose perseverance in the combat for life and death was finally crowned with a triumph glorious beyond all example; and whose extended possessions, power, influence, and commerce in every quarter of the globe have made her the object of universal envy!

One defect of this work may be remarked. The writer does not quote his authorities, a practice which detracts from the authenticity of history, and is becoming common with too many who have written history in the present day.

THE OLD OAK CHEST. Edited by PIERCE EGAN, the younger. Parts I., II., and III.

This is a collection of agreeable tales, nouvelettes, anecdotes, and scraps, in prose and verse; "The Old Oak Chest" being the repertoire, or magazine, whence these pleasant trifles are doled forth upon the serial system, in chapters per week or month. The leading story is "Quintin Matsys, the Blacksmith of Antwerp," and in constructive interest it will bear comparison with the historical tales of some romancists, whose names and titles herald forth certain higher-priced periodicals than that before us. The glancings from standard authors in this work are likewise made with taste; and the illustrations are liberally sprinkled throughout its neat quarto pages.

NEW MUSIC.

1. THE HARMLESS DEWS. Ballad from the Opera of "Gul Reazee, or the Feast of Roses." Written by J. Augustine Wade, Esq.; the music composed by L. Lavenu. Mori, Lavenu, and Co., New Bond-street.
2. DEAR IONIA. Ballad. Ditto, ditto, &c.

Two most charming and expressive ballads, full of original grace and intensity of feeling. The first, in its original key (A flat), and sung as our Alien (not to go to the foreigners) would sing it, must be extremely effective. The second melody is also transposed from its original key (D flat), by which the obligato viola part to the second verse is made to extend below the range of the instrument; but this is an accidental consequence of the vicious habit of transposition, and entails no censure upon the composer. We understand that these two delightful excerpta are from a MS. opera which abounds in beauties of the highest range in dramatic writing, although, like many an exiled sister, it must seek the protection of a foreign shore before the merits can claim any attention at home. Would that we had the moral courage to have an opinion of our own!

REC., "MORNING HAS NEVER DAWN'D," and Song, "MUST I WOO THEE," sung by Miss Clara Novello in the Opera of "Sappho." The words by Thomas James Serle, Esq.; the music by G. Pacini; adapted to the English Stage by J. L. Hatton. D'Almaine and Co.

A preparation from a recipe that every maestro of the general or mediocre school in Italian music can give to his muse, thus reversing the source of invention. There is no passage in this reffacimento which we have not heard a thousand times before, and oftener with much better application to the subject.

AH! WITH HIM I FELT FORSAKE ME. Cavatina, sung by Mrs. Alfred Shaw in the Opera of "Sappho." The words by Thomas James Serle; the music by G. Pacini; adapted to the English Stage by J. L. Hatton. D'Almaine and Co.

The words of this cavatina are beyond our comprehension, but the writer certainly had a difficult task to couple anything like meaning with the broken, syncopated style of the music, particularly in the three-four movement, which is grossly modelled upon "Son vergin vezzosa," and indebted to that charming composition for the only good passages it contains.

I'VE OFTTIME BEEN SAD. Ballad, written by J. F. Martin, Esq.; composed by Charles Frederic Blagrove. Blagrove.

A pleasing, flowing melody, harmonized with care and taste, but not very much indebted to its words for any good effect it may produce.

No. 1. OH! CARE TENEBRE. Arietta for a Contralto, composed by Giovanni Maraviglia. D'Almaine and Co.

No. 2. LA ZINGARELLA. Duetto di Camera for Soprano and Contralto, composed by Giovanni Maraviglia. D'Almaine and Co.

No. 3. LA GITA IN GONDOLA. Duetto di Camera for Soprano and Contralto, composed by Giovanni Maraviglia. D'Almaine and Co.

No. 1 is a very elegant and graceful composition, the study of which would be much more serviceable to many a young singer than the difficult dramatic pieces it is their ambition to essay. No. 2, which should more properly be called "Le Zingarelle," is a most delightful duettino in the gipsy style, and cannot fail to be an universal favourite. No. 3 is as pretty a serenade as was ever whispered in the once romantic City of the Waters. Altogether we recommend these productions of Signor Maraviglia for their grace, naïve expression, and facility.

YES, THOU ART CHANG'D. Canzonet, sung by Miss Marshall; composed by H. Brinley Richards. Chappell.

A very charming composition, replete with graceful and good writing.

MUSIC.

EXTRA NIGHT AT THE PHILHARMONIC, BY ROYAL COMMAND.

On Monday evening last this boon from royal favour was conferred upon the first orchestra in the world, for the first time. We do not recollect that the Philharmonic Society was ever before similarly honoured, and feel confident that the consequence of such patronage will be of the greatest utility to, and advancement of, our native artists. The programme (said to be the selection of Prince Albert) was as follows:—

ACT I.

Overture, "The Isles of Fingal"	F. Mendelssohn Bartholdy.
Chorus, "Oh! great is the depth" (St. Paul)	F. Mendelssohn Bartholdy.
Concerto, violin, M. Spohr	Spohr.
Choral Symphony (scherzo and second part), the solo voice parts by Miss Birch, Miss M. B. Hawes, Mr. Hobbs, and Herr Staudigl	Beethoven.

ACT II.

Symphony in D	Mozart.
Air, "Der Kriegsrath," Herr Staudigl (Jessonda)	Spohr.
Overture, "Der Freischütz"	C. M. Von Weber.
Recit., "Sidonie Sponde," and Cons, "Placido è il mar;" the solo part by Miss Birch (Idomeneo)	Mozart.
Overture, "Macbeth"	Spohr.

The unrivalled band of this society never distinguished itself more than on this, their last appearance for the season. Everybody was on the qui vive—royalty was present, and the prospect of future encouragement from such an illustrious and vivifying source seemed to stimulate every one to the highest degree of enthusiasm. Never was Weber's immortal overture to "Der Freischütz" more splendidly performed: Mendelssohn's also was beautifully executed. As to Spohr's concerto there was evidently more reverence for the composer than for the instrumentalist: we have been accustomed of late years to startling effects; and it is not easy to fall back upon tameness and quietude, however "pure and holy." As to the vocal portions of the concert none were most excellent. Herr Staudigl as usual was a consummate artist, particularly in the popular air from Spohr's "Jessonda." Miss Birch's most exquisite voice was heard to the greatest advantage in that morceau of Mozart's neglected "Idomeneo," "Placido è il mar;" would that she might be induced to think that the possession of voice alone does not constitute a vocalist!

Her Majesty remained to the last moment, and seemed delighted throughout with the performance.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

THALBERG.—This distinguished artiste is in a very bad state of health at Vienna. The report is that he has ruptured a blood-vessel.

HANDEL.—The increasing enthusiasm with which the works of this mighty genius are received on the Continent, particularly in his "fatherland," is beyond our adequate description. At Vienna, Madame Viardot Garcia has been singing an air from the "Armida" of our "marvellous adopted," which produced a most extraordinary sensation.

LA SCALA, MILAN.—The following description of this splendid establishment affords a curious contrast to the arrangements of our English theatres. There is no fixed light in the salle (or audience part), all being imparted to it from the scena, or stage, which is extremely brilliant. To the subscribers the expense of admission is not more than seven or eight pence of our money, and to the chance visitor little more than a shilling! No wonder that our dramatic speculations fail almost universally. Actors, singers, dancers, &c., are here generally paid too much.

MR. WHITE'S CONCERT, with Illustrations of the Minstrelsy of Ancient Ireland, announced to take place at the Hanover-square Rooms on the 10th instant, was necessarily postponed in consequence of her Majesty having commanded an extra Philharmonic Concert for that evening. Although this is a temporary inconvenience to Mr. White, who, under the patronage of several of the most distinguished nobility, had made extensive preparations, there is little doubt that the éclat of the entertainments will ultimately be increased by this unavoidable delay, and that national music, so ably advocated by Mr. White, will not be neglected for the preference of any other, however classical in its design, or fostered by unnatural and misapplied patronage.

On Wednesday night Mr. Henry Cockton, the author of "Stanley Thorn," and other popular works of fiction, delivered what was called "An Illustrated Lecture on the Social Influences of Vocal Music," at the City of London Institution, Aldersgate-street, to a large and most respectable audience. As a lecture, it was characterised by a most felicitous eloquence, and a happy admixture of pathos and humour, which alternately touched the hearts and excited the laugnter of his hearers. After an introductory discourse, characterised by much originality and power, he introduced each one by appropriate remarks, not only upon the particular song, but upon the genius by which he belonged, some ten or twelve songs, which he executed with much sweetness and taste, and elicited enthusiastic applause.

POSTSCRIPT.

The Queen and Prince Albert rode out on horseback on Thursday, attended by Major-General Wemyss and Col. Bouverie. The royal dinner party included the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Gordon, the Marquis and Marchioness of Abercorn, Sir R. Peel, &c

BRUSSELS, July 12.—The King and Queen landed at Ostend this morning. The Prince and Princess of Capua and suite set out yesterday afternoon for Spa.

A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office, on Friday, at two o'clock, the summonses for holding the Council were issued by the direction of Sir J. Graham.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir T. Arbuthnot had an interview with Sir James Graham on Thursday at the Home-office. On Friday morning the gallant officer left town by an early train for Manche-ter.

DURHAM ELECTION COMMITTEE.—The Committee decided on Friday afternoon that the election of the Right Hon. Lord Dungannon to serve in Parliament for the city of Durham was void; that he had been guilty of bribery through his agents by the payment of a sum of money to a large number of electors, but that he (Lord Dungannon) had not been cognisant of their acts.

LIVERPOOL RACES, Thursday.—A Free Handicap of 10 sovs each, was won by Lord G. Bentinck's St. Jean d'Acre, beating Champagne by a neck, The Queen's Plate was won in a canter by Alice Hawthorn, beating Jack, Sir Abstruptus, Varius, and Puncher.

The Trade Cup.—Mr. Mc Kaig's Aristotle (Lye), 1; Mr. B. Ii's Eboracum (Cartwright), 2; Lord Eglinton's Pompey (Copeland), 3.

The Foal Stakes of 100 sovs each, Mr. Herbert's b c Cornopean by Ellis out of Clare (bly) (S. Rogers) 1; Co. Anson's b c Armiger, 2; Lord Stanley's b c Aquila by Velocipede out of Armida, 3; Lord Eglinton's b c Aristides (3 b), 4.

The Derby Handicap of 10 sovs each, p.p., with 80 added, Mr Jaques's Sensuera, 3 yrs (Copeland), 1; Lord Chesterfield's Knight of the Whistle, 5 yrs, 2; Col. Cradock's Pagan, 5 yrs, 3.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT IN STATE TO THE OPERA.—Her Majesty has intimated her intention to visit the Italian Opera in state on Thursday next, the 20th inst.

DEPARTURE OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF THE BELGIANS.—WOOLWICH, July 13.—At ten minutes past eleven o'clock the King and Queen of the Belgians arrived at the dockyard. Their Majesties looked remarkably well, and were accompanied on board by Lord Rivers and Major-General Hawker, and Mr. Van de Weyer. At about twenty minutes past seven their Majesties bade farewell to the distinguished party who had waited upon them, and the Ariel immediately afterwards left the wharf, and proceeded down the river.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT ON BOARD HER MAJESTY'S SHIP CAMPERDOWN. —SHEERNESS, July 13.—At 2 45 p.m. this day, whilst a salute was being fired in honour of the King of the Belgians passing down Seareach, one of the portable magazines blew up and did much damage. The most melancholy part is the dreadful calamity which has befallen the visitors on board, and a portion of the ship's company. Three seamen, S. West, J. Duke, and A. Kennel, hurt, the two former very dangerously, the latter slightly. Lieut. Blackmore, of the Camperdown, is dangerously hurt, a splinter having fixed itself under his jawbone. There are two young ladies, who were visiting the ship, dangerously wounded and burnt; and several others slightly wounded and burnt. As soon as the alarm had subsided a signal was made for the fire-engines, in a short time the new floating engine was alongside the Camperdown, and the fire was soon extinguished. Half-past three, p.m.—Preparations are now being made to convey those who are in a fit state to be removed to Melville Hospital by a Government steamer.—Shipping Gazette.

FOREIGN.

FRANCE.—The Paris papers are quite destitute of interest.

SPAIN.—Constantinople has re-received the Government of the Regent.

The Central Junta of Old Castile was installed on the 5th at Valladolid, consisting of representatives from Zamora, Avila, Salamanca, Leon, Palencia, Burgos, Segovia, and Valladolid.

Olozaga has refused to take any part in the movement, refusing to preside at the Juntas of either Logrono or Vittoria.

The municipality and deputation of Madrid had published a manifesto, accusing France and French gold of having suborned those causeless pronunciamentos. The French King is accused of seeking to place his son on the throne of Madrid. The Madrid guards had formed a force of artillery, and determined to resist any attack on the capital. Gurren and a few troops had forced Gundalazara to re-procure General Seoane had returned to Saragossa. Van Halen had made prisoners, near Manresa, the juntas of Cordova, with 40,000 ducros, and 500 men of the escort. The insurgents of Seville had attacked Xeres, and been repulsed.

FRAGMENT OF A WEDDING SCENE, WITH BRIDAL SONG.

* * * * * * *

The first light round of dance is done,
And many a heart begins to beat,
As through the hall the whispers run—
"Whose song will rest our weary feet?"
Each fears, yet wishes, to be plac'd
At the mute harp that silent stands,
Like that of old on Egypt's waste,
Till waken'd by beloved hands!
And whose are they whose thrilling touch
Calls out the music of each string?
Oh! if thy Morning-love had such,
No wonder, Memnon! thou didst sing!
The silky fingers seem to sigh,
As if they had Æolian breath,
With breezy kisses, as they fly
To wake the silent chords from death!
The prelude's past; and, whisp'ring low,
A strain half sorrowful is heard—
And, hark! a song begins to flow,
Like music from a wounded bird!
So sadly sweet its melody,
You hear the jealous roses sighing—
"Our nightingales could never be
More soft in ev'n enamoured dying!
But, hush! let Silence' self her ears unclose
To drink the hydromel of song that flows!"

BRIDAL SONG.

Sisters! a star from our cluster is gone,
The fairest, the purest of all our bright ring:
Say, shall we weep for the wand'ring one,
Or speed it with blessings wherever it wing?
Oh! Benedicite! peace be its way,
Though far from the cradle that nurs'd its young sphere!
Our lustre is dimm'd by the loss of its ray;
But cloud not its going by one dewy tear.
No! Benedicite!
Peace to the star!

Sisters! a rose from our garden has flown—
The youngest, the freshest of all our parterre;
Say, shall we mourn that the truant is gone
To breathe out her sweets on a dearer-lov'd air?
No! Benedicite! peace to the flow'r!
Though far from the mates of her childhood she roam,
Perhaps she will sometimes revisit their bow'r,
And bring back at moments new sweets to their home!
Yes! Benedicite!
Peace to the flow'r!—W.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Queen and Prince Albert, and the Queen of the Belgians, attended by the Viscountess Jocelyn, the Countess Vilain XIV., Viscount Sydney, Baron de Dieskau, M. de Meerkerke, Major-General Wemyss, and Colo el Bouverie, honoured the Italian Opera with their presence on Saturday evening. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, also honoured the performance of the opera with her presence

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Royal suite and the Household, attended divine service on Sunday morning, in the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Bangor, from Psalms 139, and verse vi. The prayers were read by the Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay.

MONDAY.—The Queen and Prince Albert visited her Majesty the Queen Dowager. His Majesty the King of the Belgians arrived at Buckingham Palace Office, from Claremont. Her Majesty and the Queen of the Belgians, attended by the Lady inwaiting, afterwards took an airing in an open carriage and four. His Royal Highness Prince Albert also rode out on horseback. In the evening the Queen and Prince Albert and the King of the Belgians honoured the performance of the Philharmonic Concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms, with their presence.

TUESDAY.—The Queen held a Council at Buckingham Palace. M. Tricoupi, the Grecian Minister, had an audience of her Majesty, to take leave. Their Majesties the King and the Queen of the Belgians visited her Majesty the Queen Dowager at Marlborough-house. Their Majesties also visited their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Princess Sophia, at their private residences, to take leave, on their Majesties' departure for the Continent.

Their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, attended by the Countess Vilain XIV., Baron de Dieskau, and M. de Meerkerke, left Buckingham Palace at a quarter past ten o'clock on Wednesday morning, for Woolwich, where their Majesties and suite embarked in the Aries steam packet for the Continent.

The Queen and Prince Albert took an airing on Wednesday in an open carriage and four. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the Viscountess Jocelyn, Hon. Miss Murray, Viscount Sydney, Major-General Wemyss, and Colonel Bouverie, honoured the performance of the French play with their presence on Wednesday evening.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—The health of the Queen Dowager has sufficiently improved to admit of her departure from the metropolis. Her Majesty, accompanied by her limited court, will leave Marlborough House to-day, for Bushy Park, for a few weeks.

THE KING OF HANOVER. His Majesty had a select dinner party at Kew on Sunday evening. During the day his Majesty visited the King of the Belgians at Claremont. The King and Queen of the Belgians paid a visit to his Majesty on Tuesday, at his residence in St. James's Palace. His Majesty, attended by the Baron de Rettzenstein, honoured the Duke of Cleveland with his company at dinner in the evening, at his residence in St. James's-square. His Majesty, attended by Baron Rettzenstein, went to Lady Barrington's soirée musicale, in Cavendish-square, on Tuesday night. The King, attended by General Durring, was present at the marriage solemnity of Lady F. Vane with the Marquis of Blandford, at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, on Wednesday morning. His Majesty afterwards met his Holderness House, the residence of the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry. Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Kent (attended by Lady Anna Maria Dawson and Sir George Cooper), the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge and Prince George (attended by Lady Augusta Somerset), also honoured the Marquis and Marchioness with their company. A sumptuous breakfast was served to the illustrious visitors, and to a numerous party of the nobility, in the state gallery. His Majesty, attended by Captain Sinclair, honoured the Marquis of Salisbury with his company at dinner in the evening.

We hear that Viscount Melbourne had a farewell audience of his Majesty King Leopold, at Buckingham Palace, on Tuesday, when it is understood the noble ex-Premier also saw her Majesty and Prince Albert, and was congratulated by those illustrious personages on his restoration to health.

ALMACK'S.—On Tuesday night the commencement of another series of these delightful réunions took place at the usual rendezvous, when upwards of 350 of the beau monde were present. Weippert's band filled the orchestra

A Cabinet Council was held on Monday afternoon at the Foreign Office. Sir R. Peel, the Duke of Wellington, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Wharncliffe, the Duke of Buccleuch, Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Earl of Ripon, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Sir E. Knatchbull, and other Ministers attended

The Committee on Education of the Queen's Privy Council held a meeting at two o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, at the Council office. The noble present were—the Lord President, the Duke of Buccleuch, Sir Robert Peel, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Earl of Ripon, and Lord G. Somerset. The meeting broke up at half-past four o'clock.

The Marquis of Lansdowne has been labouring under a severe attack of the gout, which has confined him to the house for the last few days. The noble marquis, we are happy to state, is much better.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF GLASGOW. The Earl of Glasgow died on Thursday week. The deceased was Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Ayr, and his heir and successor is his son, Lord Kelburne, representative of the same county.

His Excellency the Greek Minister and Madame Tricoupi are on the eve of quitting this country for Athens, his excellency having, we hear, been recalled by the Greek Government. His excellency paid farewell visits to the corps diplomatique and leading nobility on Saturday last, previous to his departure.

Mrs. Edwards, the party connected in bill transactions with Lord Huntingtower, Colonel Copland, and others, was again examined before the Court of Bankruptcy on Tuesday, and the Commissioner (Evans) not thinking her answers sufficiently explanatory or satisfactory, again adjourned her final passing to an early day in October.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE BUSINESS OF PARLIAMENT.—There is every prospect of the Parliament sitting until late in the ensuing month, at least; and Mr. Roebuck has fixed his notice of motion respecting the recent transactions in Scinde for the 8th August. It is not, however, likely to come on so early as that day, owing to the great quantity of Government business, and of other notices that have priority of it.

FIRE AT KENSINGTON PALACE.—SUPPOSED INCENDIARISM.—About a quarter past ten, on Wednesday night, the town and neighbourhood of Kensington were thrown into a state of considerable alarm by a report that Kensington Palace was in flames. Hundreds of persons instantly hurried to the Palace-avenue, when the report received confirmation by the appearance of a dense body of smoke and flames above the statues on the north side of the palace, and on reaching the spot a large rick of hay, containing from 70 to 80 loads, which was stacked nearly a joining the stable-yard, was in flames. A number of engines arrived soon after, but it was found almost impossible to procure a supply of water, and the rick was consequently entirely consumed. When the fire was discovered only a portion of the west end was on fire, which leaves no doubt that the fire was caused by some vile incendiary. The soldiers from the barracks in the Palace-green, and a strong party of the F division of police, under Inspector Smith, were early on the spot, and rendered essential assistance. The Hon. and Rev. Ormsby Gore (brother of the Duchess of Kent), and Mr. Reay (of the Duchess of Kent's household), and Mr. Hugg (the clerk of the works), were also conspicuously active The rick was the property of the late Duke of Sussex, and was, we believe, uninsured.

DURHAM ELECTION COMMITTEE.—WEDNESDAY.—The committee selected to try the merits of the petition against the return of Viscount Dungannon for this city assembled on Tuesday, at eleven o'clock, Lord Ashley in the chair, when the case for the petitioners was opened by Mr. Cockburn. Several witnesses were examined; after which the committee adjourned.

THURSDAY.—This inquiry proceeded to-day, when a witness named Ralph Sa.ked was examined; but the chairman and committee decided that they placed no credit on his evidence. Mr. Austin, also, for the sitting member, admitted that a sovereign had been given to each of a number of voters. The committee adjourned at four o'clock.

ASYLUM FOR AGED AND DECAYED FREEMASONS.—On Wednesday evening a general meeting of the governors was held at Radley's Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars -Dr. Robert Crucifix in the chair. The report of the auditors stated that the total receipts, since the last audit, had amounted to £443, including the subscriptions at the last annual festival held at the Freemasons' Tavern, and at which the Right Hon. the Earl of Boyne presided. The total sum invested in Consols, Exchequer Bills, &c., amounted to £3936. There were now seven pensioners on the funds of the institution. The report, on the motion of Mr. C. Stevens, having been received, Dr. Crucifix was re-elected treasurer, and Mr. Field secretary. The committee and other officers were likewise reappointed, and the meeting, after awarding thanks to those gentlemen, dispersed.

THE LATE DUEL.—A correspondent informs us that Lieut. Munro's father is an old and gallant officer. He served with Lord Hector Munro, and is at present one of the magistrates for the county of Ross

LICENSED VICTUALLERS' SCHOOL.—The thirty-seventh anniversary of this establishment was celebrated on Wednesday at the White Conduit Tavern, Pentonville, where upwards of 2300 persons partook of an excellent and substantial dinner. The whole of the party was accommoda ed at fourteen tables, ranged in the garden at the rear of the hotel, and under a large marquee, which was decorated with a number of banners bearing appropriate inscriptions. Mr. Samuel Charles Whitbread presided, and Mr. George Byng, M.P., was also present. The musical loyal toasts having been proposed and warmly responded to, the secretary announced that the subscriptions amounted to £830, including the chairman's donation of £50. The report stated that the public appeal made last year in aid of the society's funds realised the fullest anticipations of the committee, having produced upwards of £4000, being an increase of nearly £2000 upon the subscriptions of the preceding year. The total number of children admitted into the schools was 961, of whom 103 are still co-ntained in the establishment; and the committee intend admitting 38 in addition. The children, whose appearance was extremely clean and orderly, were then introduced, and having been placed on the tables, two of the senior boys read an address; and the whole of the children subsequently joined in an appropriate hymn of thanksgiving. The company proceeded to the festivities to a late hour.

SHIPPING INTEREST.—At the meeting of shipowners, held on Wednesday, rather a gloomy report was made of the general state of this interest, partly attributable to the increase of bu ding in the colonies, without any reference to the freight offering, and also, as alleged, to the alterations in the tariff.

IRELAND.

As many absurd and ridiculous rumours are afloat concerning the interest excited in this country by the repeal agitation in Ireland, and as, however ill grounded, may be productive of the most vicious consequences, we have great pleasure in extracting from our contemporary the Times the following letter addressed to the editor of that Journal:—"Sir, I have, while sitting at the bar of the Court Royale, just had a number of your journal, dated the 27th of June, brought to me, from which I learn that I am at the moment occupied in carrying on a republican propaganda in Ireland. I do not know, sir, where your correspondent has obtained his information, but I think you will consider it a duty to rectify the account which you have published. It is true that I have just returned from England, where I was three weeks, and since I find myself obliged by your article to say how I employed my time, here is the account of it:—Previous to the vacation of the French bar, which takes place at the fêtes of the 15th of August, I embarked at Havre on the 8th of June; on the 9th I was at the isle of Wight, at the cottage of Benstead; the 7th, at Stoneham, in Hampshire; the 8th, at London; the 10th, at Bretton park, in Yorkshire; and the 18th I returned to London, where I remained till the 25th; until Monday the 26th, the day on which I embarked at Southampton for France. You will probably find, sir, that the means of communication are not yet sufficiently speedy to enable me to travel between the 14th and 26th, to go over and take a part in the agitation of Ireland; besides, I employed my leisure better. During my stay in London I visited all the collections of pictures and sculptures that were open to the public. I was so fortunate at the House of Commons as to hear Sir Robert Peel and Lord John Russell; at Westminster, the principal orators of the English bar, and among others your advocate Sir William Follett. Since, sir, I have not read one word, or done one act, which could have given rise to the article in which you have placed my name. It is true that I have returned to Paris full of pro-Anglomanie; for nothing can be more unfortunate to publish in a review some reflections with the object that the forms affording so much protection, which I have had occasion to observe in the English tribunals, in the matter of the examination of witnesses, and of the counsel, may be known and understood in France. The thought of the continually occupied my mind while in London, as it still does since my return. It shall not be the fault of the communication that

GRAND SAILING MATCH.

The great sailing match for £200, between Lord Alfred Paget's iron boat the Mystery, and Mr. Reid's yacht the Enigma, took place on Monday, and concluded, contrary to the opinion of the layers of the long odds, in favour of his lordship. It was agreed that the distance contested, in order fully to develop the sailing excellence of either, should be from Blackwall to Holly Haven and back. At 10 minutes past 12 they started, the Enigma being at the southernmost station. The wind was blowing freshly from the northward, and the Mystery showed that she was the fastest, and went off with the lead, which in the course of the reaching down she much increased. She arrived first at Holly Haven at two hours thirty minutes after the start, and four minutes ahead of her adversary. There was a good bit of turning all the way up from Gravesend, but in each succeeding board the Mystery showed her superiority at that work, and arrived at Blackwall nineteen minutes ahead of her opponent. The Pearl, the Marquis of Anglesey's, and other first-rate yachts, accompanied the race.

YACHT MATCH.

THE EMIGRANT TO HIS MISTRESS.

Where Zephyr sleeps
At noontide hours,
Cooling his wings
In dew of flow'rs!
There let us go,
And former times
We will live o'er
In happier climes! [breath,
Yes! there, with love's own balmy
That's caught at some young rose's death,
I'll sing, sweet, to thee!
Oh! come—
There by the fountains
Of glens,
Deep in the mountains,
Happy thou'lt dwell with me!

Come where no wind
Chills the young green,
Where all is one
Soft, summer scene!
Here ev'ry smile
Comes but for grief;
There even tears
Are joy's relief!
Oh! fly to such land of delight,
And there, from the daybreak till
I'll sing, sweet, to thee! [night,
Oh! come—
If earth can show thee,
One joy
I can bestow thee,
Happy thou'lt dwell with me!

W.

FAIRLOP FAIR.

According to ancient custom "gay Fairlop" was held on "the first Friday in July," on the borders of Hainault or Epping Forest, and drew together an immense number of persons. The block-makers, sail-makers, and mast-makers, as usual, proceeded to the forest at an early hour in their amphibious-looking "frigates," mounted on carriages, rigged out like ships, and decorated with colours. Each of these vehicles was drawn by six horses, gaily dressed out, and the wives of the men in their holiday gear followed in open landaus. The booths and shows were not so numerous as on former occasions, and the restriction of the fair to one day by the Essex magistrates has sadly diminished the profits of those who cater for the public. The Gipsies were uncommonly numerous; but the thimble and pea-riggers were dispersed by the police, and quitted the fair amidst the hootings of the people. In the afternoon, a man about to ascend the watermen's boat, fell under the wheels, and the horses starting at the same moment, he was run over, and his leg was broken; he was conveyed to the London Hospital. The boat in its way to town caught fire while the parties belonging to it were burning blue lights, and some difficulty was experienced in extinguishing the flames. The Lea Bridge and Ilford roads were crowded with horses and vehicles. A great many went down the railway to Ilford, and thence to the forest. The conduct of the assembled thousands was marked by the greatest good humour and decorum, and there was not a single police charge arising out of "the first Friday in July." Owing to the rain, which fell in torrents on Saturday, the booths and shows could not be removed, and they remained on the ground until Monday; but nothing was allowed to be sold after Friday, and the exhibitions were closed. The forest was as much crowded on Sunday as it was on Friday. It has been the custom, for nearly a century, for the people of London, and particularly the East-enders, to visit Fairlop on the first Sunday, as well as the first Friday, in July, and upon this occasion they were much disappointed at finding they could obtain no refreshments. The police, acting under the orders of the Essex magistrates, would not allow the sale of a slice of bread or a glass of beer on the forest; and the visitors were obliged to retrace their steps, and obtain victuals and drink at the roadside inns. The Maypole, at Chigwell-row, on the borders of the forest, entertained more than 2000 guests during the day.

Fairlop Fair originated with one Daniel Day, a block and pump maker, of Wapping, who, for many years, regaled a large party with beans and bacon, beneath the shade of a stupendous oak, which measured, at 3 feet from the ground, about 36 feet in girth! Day's hospitable custom attracted such crowds of persons that a sort of fair was established; and Day annually distributed from the trunk of the oak several sacks of beans, and a proportionate quantity of bacon, to the persons assembled. The oak was much burnt in 1805, by some persons making a fire within the trunk to cook their provisions; and in 1820 the famed "Fairlop Oak" was stretched on the turf by the wind: the trunk was purchased by a builder, and both the handsome pulpits of St. Pancras new church were made from it.

FAIRLOP "FRIGATE."

PANORAMA OF COBLENTZ.

Mr. Burford has just completed a charming panoramic painting of Coblentz, the fortress of Ehrenbreitstein, the Rhine, and the surrounding country, endeared to English tourists in the impassioned pilgrimage of the noble poet:

Lovely Rhine!
More mighty spots might rise, more glaring shine;
But none unite in one attaching maze
The brilliant, fair, and soft—the glories of old days. BYRON.

The panorama is sketched from the centre of the splendid river, whence the spectator commands a considerable extent of the river, here flowing with a majestic volume; whilst the boats of various kinds, rafts, &c., that cover its surface, considerably enliven the scene. On a kind of isthmus of land, formed by the confluence of the Rhine with the Moselle, stands the city, rising, as it were, from the bosom of the waters; its front stretching at right angles along the left bank of the former and the right bank of the latter, presenting a long line of white and coloured buildings, a magnificent palace, and some curiously-formed steeples and towers of churches; the whole backed by strong fortifications even to the water's edge, and backed by high and picturesque mountains. On the opposite bank of the river stands the huge and mighty Ehrenbreitstein, the Gibraltar of the Rhine, with its vast crown of fortifications, rising from the crest of its nearly perpendicular and formidably picturesque rock. At the base of the rock are the small town of Ehrenbreitstein, with the palace of the Electors of Treves, and the adjacent village and heights of Pfaffendorf, together with the curiously constructed bridge of boats crossing from Coblentz, and the ancient bridge of the Moselle, backed by vine-clad hills; whilst above and below the "glorious river," ever rolling onward, is seen winding into the distance through fertile and well-cultivated plains, fruitful orchards, luxuriant cornfields, and rich vineyards, studded by numerous towns and villages, embosomed in foliage, and over-topped by eminences shrouded by dark forests, and crowned by the chiefless castles and mouldering remains of feudal times, finely reposing against the more elevated forms of the distant mountains, or standing in bold relief against the horizon. So much picturesque and richly-embellished scenery under the eye at one view—such an endless combination of hill and valley, lofty brow, and bold ravine—now rising into magnificence, now sinking into soft loveliness, that completes the panorama—is truly beautiful and captivating.

The picture is admirably painted throughout: the characteristic tints—as those of the majestic river, and of the distant hills—are unexceptionable; and the surface of the waters teems with busy life, as in the vast timber-raft with its floating population, and the gaily-decked steam-boat freighted with tourists; all of which make up a scene of extraordinary interest and finely picturesque effect.

FAIRLOP FAIR IN EPPING FOREST.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

THE SHADOW DANCE FROM "ONDINE."

"Of its own beauty is the mind diseased,
And levers into false creation!"

says Byron; but we require some stronger, more satisfactory reason why, in sober health, we become occasionally indifferent to the beautiful realities of our own earth, and fly to the immortals for ecstasies that, after all, are but a poet's dream. Everybody is not a Numa, and therefore cannot indulge in the blissful phantasy that he holds intercourse with "moulds beyond the earth;" and yet we would if we could, such is our "longing after immortality."

"Egeria! sweet creation of some heart
Which found no mortal resting-place so fair
As thine ideal breast!"

how often hast thou been conjured up to our imagination! But "hence! unreal mockeries, hence!" and leave us to our task, not of criticism on the present occasion, but that of recording one of the most beautiful productions that any stage ever boasted of. The ballet of "Ondine," everybody by this time knows, is founded on La Motte Fouqué's fanciful and interesting story of "Undine," but does not adhere very faithfully to its original. Never mind: narration must give way to impersonation, particularly when we see such a "steg-revealing goddess" as Cerito in the principal character. Her dancing the pas de l'ombre (which is illustrated above) is in the highest degree beautiful, and inclines us to agree more than ever with the old Greek assertion that "Dancing is a silent poetry." Nothing can be more enchanting than Cerito's innocent surprise when she first sees her shadow, and thinks it (or makes you believe she thinks it) to be something tangible, and

"lovely in outline as herself."

The dioramic effect of the scene in which this pas occurs reflects the highest possible credit upon Grieve, the artist. No other stage-painter is so acquainted with the use of compound lights, commonly called mediums. It is a splendid specimen of skill in the art, and it is only to be regretted that such things are so evanescent, for we could see them a thousand times "with yet unwearied eyes." Although Cerito is la déesse of the scene, we must not be indifferent to the exquisite grace of Guy Stephan. She is one who could take the place of any more talked of rival, and leave criticism nothing to do but applaud with rapture. In fact, the danseuse that in the waiting presence of Taglioni was honoured with an encore of one of her pas must be allowed to

"range herself on level with the best."

TAGLIONI. — This Terpsicore redivivu, as the Milanese have lately named her, has been presented with a medal of extreme beauty and artistical finish, by the ladies of that capital of which her charming rival Cerito is a native. This is generous, and as it ought to be.

DUMILATRE. — This enchanteuse is to appear this week in a new ballet at the Académie in Paris, entitled "Leila, ou les Peris." Is it too late, or too soon, to hope for another visit from her?

SHADOW DANCE—CERITO AS "ONDINE."

LOUIS SPOHR.

It is now three-and-twenty years since Louis Spohr appeared in a London orchestra, and it may not be uninteresting to state what different circumstances attended his first advent from those which wait upon his present visit. He came in the former position as a great instrumentalist—now, he appears in the light of a great and original composer, with none of his "beams shorn" as a violinist, but with the additional lustre of being acknowledged as one of those immortal minds who shed undying glory upon their art. Our compatriot Mori was in the possession of public favour at the time, and successfully managed to almost negative the claims of Spohr to his own advantage; but Mori, although master of his instrument, did not possess the master-mind of the musician which belonged to his foreign rival; for, granting that "he was quick to learn and wise to know," to him did not belong "le génie du musicien que soumet l'univers entier à son Art." Spohr retreated, evidently displeased with the contest, and betook himself to retirement and study as a poet-contrapuntist. The consequence of this resolution has been the production of some of the noblest emanations of a thoughtful genius.

Spohr is a truly great man; but, in some degree, we regret that he presented himself lately to us otherwise than as the grand composer, which he undoubtedly is. We do not deny that he is a first-rate instrumentalist also; but he is so transcendantly superior to himself in the former capacity, that it was a pity he appeared as "sun and moon" on the one occasion. Spohr's volume of tone on the violin is prodigious: he makes use of the largest strings that can possibly be made to bear the necessary tension, but we are inclined to think that tenuity of sound is best capable of expression, and hence the violin is more soul-breathing than the contrabasso, the oboe than the ophecleide. The same opinion may be applied to voices: Persiani's thin soprano can convey more to la sensibilité of her auditors than all that the most powerful stentorium could effect;—otherwise his concerto was truly beautiful and effective. A short notice of this great artiste's career may not be unacceptable to our musical readers.

Ludwig (or Louis) Spohr is the son of a physician, and was born at Siesen, in Brunswick, in 1783, consequently is now in the 61st year of his age. His first preceptor was Mancourt, and his second the celebrated violinist Eck (not publicly known in this country), whom he accompanied to Russia. In 1805 he was appointed director of the Ducal Concerts at Gotha, and while enjoying that situation distinguished himself in many provincial excursions as a first-rate violinist, and a composer of a new and varied style. Solos, concertos, duets, trios, quartets, quintets, &c., he wrote in abundance with novel and felicitous combinations of effect, particularly in his clarionet quartets and duets for violin and tenor, which were literally quartets, or compositions in four parts. He also became eminent as a vocal composer, by the production of his oratorio, "The Last Judgment;" and an opera entitled "The Lovers' Duel." In 1814 he produced three works at Vienna: his first grand sinfonia; his faithfully-metaphysical "Faust;" and an oratorio entitled "Das befreite Deutschland." From this period forward to 1820 he made several neighbouring trips, exciting universal admiration wherever he went; ultimately, in that year, arriving in our metropolis, where he brought forth his second grand symphony. From London he retired to Cassel to fulfil the office of Kapelmeister, which he holds at present. Since his last visit to us he has produced several operas:—"Zemire und Azor" (in which there are some of the most immortal inspirations that ever blest a genius); "Jessonda," another exquisite work; "Der Berggeist," &c. His "Fall of Babylon," first produced in this country at the Norwich Festival, 1840, is a later and more sublime composition, perhaps, than anything else he has written.

PORTRAIT OF SPOHR.

Take him all in all he is a genius of the highest order; and we cannot but deplore that his reception in our hospitable land has been rendered equivocal by his supposed connection with "those who serve not to the name they bear" Quacks are the lowest order of the "profanum vulgus!" and Spohr's motto ought to be "Odi et arceo."

PORTRAIT OF BOX.

GRAND CRICKET MATCH.—COUNTY OF KENT v. ALL ENGLAND.

This great annual contest—from the near equality of the sides, the most attractive of the season—was played at Lord's on Monday and Tuesday. On the first day there were present upwards of 4000 spectators: among the distinguished visitors were the Duke of Beaufort, the Earl of Aboyne, the Earl of Winterton, the Earl of Munster, Viscount Grimston, Viscount Drumlanrig, Viscount Bronke, Lord F Beauclerk, Lord Marcus Hill, Lord E. Hill, Lord Gardiner, Lord F. G Hallburton, the Hon. F. Grimston, Hon. R. Grimston, Hon. C. Grimston, Hon. Edward Grimston, Hon. W. G. Ponsonby, Hon. Col. Lowther, Hon. Captain Lawley, Hon. C. B. Lyon, the Countess of Craven, the Countess of Verulam, Lady Jane Grimston, and Lady Bayley; Sir J. Bayley, Sir H. Peyton, Major Udney, Captain Loftus; Messrs. H. Everett, C. Harenc, T. Craven, W. Ward, Barnett, &c.

There were two or three alterations in the list of the England players, which weakened rather than strengthened the side; but even with this depreciation of power, the betting when play was called was only one point in favour of Kent. England opened the business of the day. The score of England, including byes and wide balls, amounted to 129. This number made the betting another point in favour of Kent; and certainly at one period of the innings of the latter it appeared as though Pilch, A. Mynn, and Wenman were going to run up that extent of score by themselves; but some fine bowling by Barker, and excellent catches by Dean, at length put a stop to their career. Pilch scored 37, Wenman 29, and Mynn 18. The hitting of these three players was splendid. The batting of Mr. Grimston, Mr. Kynaston, Box, and Bayley, on the part of England, was distinguished by much science and skill. When "time" was called Kent had made 98 with 8 wickets down, amongst which were those of Mr. Felix for 4, Mr. W. Mynn for 0, Mr. Whittaker for 1, Hillier for 0, and Martingale for 1. Mr. E. Bayley and Adams were in and batting with much spirit. Betting, at the conclusion of the day, was even.

Annexed is a portrait of a "crack" player from each of the sides. Both have been copied, by permission, from the portraits of celebrated cricketers, published by Mason, of Brighton, and allowed to be excellent likenesses.

On Tuesday morning the match was resumed. Mr. E. Bayley and Adams appeared at the wickets. At the close of the play on Monday evening, the eight of the Kent wickets that were down had fetched 98 runs, and that amount by the exertions of the two parties just named, and Dorrington, the last wicket, was increased to 113, thus leaving their opponents 16 ahead. England then commenced their second innings, the betting, notwithstanding they were in advance on the score, being 3 to 2 against their bearing off the laurels, and by the time the tenth and eleventh players, Mr. Kynaston and Lillywhite, were alone left to fight the battle, the odds against them had increased to 5 and 6 to 1. Nine wickets had fallen for 30 runs, indeed so terrific was Mynn's bowling, that scarcely a run was obtained off it, and in no instance, except in the case of Good, did any player score more than 5. Good made 9, having, however, given a chance or two. Mr. Kynaston being "well in," joined by Lillywhite, the two went to work in real earnest, and although the bowling both of Mynn and Hillier, as well as the fielding, was of the finest description, they each hit away until, amidst oft-repeated rounds of applause from the assembled multitude, they had added 33 to the score, making on the whole innings the number of 63, and the total for the Kent to go in against of 79. Mr. Kynaston made 14, and Lilly, who of course carried out his bat in triumph, 49. After dinner Kent went in, and obtained the winning figure 80, having lost seven wickets; of these Mr. Felix got 15, Mr. W. Mynn 26, Adams 14, Pilch 3, Wenman 1, and Dorrington 7. Mr. A. Mynn was hitting away with much brilliancy, and had scored 8 when "game" was called. One of the most extraordinary catches ever seen, probably, was made in the course of the day by Dorrington, who played long stop. Good, who is a left-hand-ed bat, hit a ball round to the leg; but the ball, not being caught full, instead of wending towards the "long leg," it steered in a line about 15 yards wide of the "long stop." Dorrington feeling an inward conviction that he could cover it, presently got under the ball, which was still going at a rapid rate away from him; and just as the ball had reached within two or three feet of the turf, Dorrington darted forward and made the catch, amidst a simultaneous burst of cheering from every one present.

PORTRAIT OF PILCH.

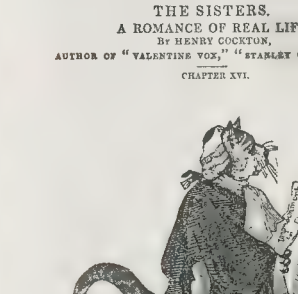
[We have given portraits of two of the most celebrated cricketers of the day—Fuller Pilch (born March 17, 1803, at Horningtoft, Norfolk), one of the best of batters; and Thomas Box (born at Ardingly, Sussex, Feb. 7, 1809) the most celebrated wicket-keeper of his time.]

ENGLAND AND FRANCE;
OR
THE SISTERS,
A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

BY HENRY COCKTON,

AUTHOR OF "VALENTINE VOX," "STANLEY THORN," &c.

CHAPTER XVI.



UPON Caroline, the suggestion of Lady Grange had a powerful effect; she thought of nothing, dreamed of nothing, but the jealousy of Sir Arthur, and was highly indignant at the idea of being possible, that right had she to be jealous? How could he be jealous? What cause had she ever given him to be jealous? But was he jealous? That was the point. What proof had she of it? What cause had he even given her to suppose it? He had always appeared to be most confiding; he had never made the slightest inquiry as to where she had been, or whom she had seen, nor had a single word indicative of jealousy ever escaped him, still it was possible! she could not deny that, and hence resolved to bring the matter to the test.

In pursuance of this determination—dangerous because of its manifest tendency to create the very feeling of which we do but suspect the existence—Caroline proceeded to give her every opportunity, consistent with honour, for the display of that jealousy which her husband now had assured her was so apparent. But no: she could perceive nothing like jealousy: not a syllable did he utter which could be supposed to have been even remotely prompted by suspicion: he was still affectionate, still confiding: in fact—at the expiration of a week she felt perfectly convinced that his confidence in her was unbounded.

And so in reality it was. The idea had never occurred to him. He had never dreamed of the possibility of his Caroline being unfaithful. Whenever she had displayed more than ordinary pleasure at the society of a man, that man had been most frequently invited and classed with his most highly valued friends. Suspicion with him was entirely out of the question: he never even gave it a thought. Her happiness was ever the chief object he had in view, and he always felt delighted with whatever seemed to promote it.

"Well, my dear aunt," said Caroline, having to her judgment sufficiently tested the matter, "I am happy to say that you were perfectly mistaken."

"I grant, dear," rejoined Lady Grange, who appeared to have forgotten all about it, although in reality she panted to hear how her amiable scheme had progressed, "in what was I mistaken?"

"You recollect stating the other evening that you fancied Sir Arthur was jealous."

"Oh, I do remember something about it. Let me see—what was it? exactly—yes—ah! I said he appeared to be, certainly."

"Well, I have since then proved that he is not."

"So much the better, my dear. I am really rejoiced to hear it. But how have you proved this?"

"By during the last week I have tried him in every possible way, and instead of exhibiting the slightest symptoms of jealousy, he has shown that his confidence is unabated."

"A week is but a short time to prove whether a man be really jealous or not. Men are extraordinary creatures, my dear, and more especially in matters of this kind. The chief aim of a jealous man is to be satisfied, and until he is satisfied, he is at all times anxious to conceal his feelings lest the discourse of them should put the object of his jealousy on her guard. A jealous man is the greatest anomaly in nature he wishes his wife to be pure and yet he panics to discover her impurity: he is anxious for her not to be conscious, and yet seeks to condemn her. His suspicions give him infinite pain, yet he labours to have those suspicions confirmed: he would repudiate every doubt, and yet he anxiously courts its face by which every doubt may be strengthened: in short, he endeavours by all the means at his command to find that which, when found, is to him a source of everlasting misery. His immediate object therefore is not to let it be found: he feels he appears guilt: he is actually convinced, and if he cannot prove his wife to be false, they may be concealed for years, for the conviction of a suspected woman's purity is a long time reaching the mind of a jealous man."

"Oh, but he is not jealous."

"Well, all I can say, my dear, is, that I most sincerely hope that he is not. But I nevertheless fear that he is."

"I do not believe it. I cannot believe it! I'm determined however to find it out: I will know whether he is or not."

"Will you ask him, then?"

"Why no. I'll not ask him: that would not do; but I'll very soon discover it if he have any feeling of the kind; that I have resolutely made up my mind to because you know, my dear aunt, this suspicion is insufferable."

"Well, you must not distress yourself: you must allow yourself time, my dear, to make the discovery. It is not, you know, my love, to be accomplished in a day."

"Said I do so? believe it."

"Well, my dear, I may be mistaken: let us hope that I am. I ought not, perhaps, to have surmised it at all."

"Oh, no! I am infinitely obliged to you, because, if it be so, I'd much rather know it than not. It is highly correct that I should know the truth. But until I do prove the fact beyond all doubt, I'll not believe it."

Thus was the state of mind precisely to which Lady Grange had been anxious to bring her niece. She knew her disposition; she knew that she would, if possible, be satisfied, and conceiving that in order to be satisfied some apparent cause for jealousy might be given, she felt that this, beyond all dispute, was the way to set upon Sir Arthur, and therefore before having by practice disguised her hand, wrote a note, of which the following is a copy:—

"SIR ARTHUR CLEVELAND.

"Look to your wife!

"And believe me to be,

"A FRIEND."

This she conceived would be amply sufficient, and that while its effect would be to create suspicion, Caroline's conduct would tend to confirm it: but being anxious for the hint to reach Sir Arthur during Caroline's absence from home, and knowing that she was almost invariably out between the hours of two and five, she delayed sending the note until the morning, when, in order that no clue might be obtained, she left her house unattended, and posted it herself.

Contrary to her usual custom, however, Caroline, on that particular morning, remained at home. She had several early visitors, and at length Darnley called, and he and Sir Arthur conversed in the library about Charles and his prospects, until the note arrived. Little, indeed, did either of them suspect the nature of its contents. Sir Arthur took it from the servant and placed it before him, and when he had finished the explanation of the manner in which he intended to proceed, with the view of ascertaining if it were possible for the influence of the Government to have any effect, Darnley rose and said, "Well, I must now go up and pay my respects to Lady Cleveland."

"Ay, do so," returned Sir Arthur, "she's quite alone, I believe. But you'll dine with us to-day. will you not?"

"I shall be most happy."

"That's right. And, Darnley, will you go with me in the morning to look at an opera box?"

"With great pleasure!"

"Caroline has been of late somewhat out of spirits: dull, you know, Darnley, and thoughtful—she is to-day; you'll excuse it, when you go up and I have been talking if she had a box, it might tend in some degree to shake off that sort of thing. We need but season to have a box for the night, but, as you can't always get the same, it isn't so pleasant."

"Oh, no: there is nothing like having one of your own."

"But, not a word, not a syllable until we have be—"

"Oh, certainly not," replied Darnley, who then at once proceeded to the emerald room, and found Caroline at the piano.

Pleased with the idea of at once surprising and gaining the spirits of Caroline by securing the best box that could be obtained, Sir Arthur, for some time, dwelt upon the delight she would experience, and the endearing terms in which she would thank him. He at length, however, opened the note, and in an instant fell back in his chair. Again he read it. He could scarcely breathe; and, while his heart beat with painful violence, his lips quivered, and he became pale as death.

"Look to my wife!" he exclaimed, in a whisper which startled him, "Look to your wife! —So I! what can this mean? My wife—Caroline!—can she—oh! impossible—impossible! And yet—'Look to your wife!'—I cannot think," he added, after a pause, during which his eyes appeared to be starting from their sockets—"I cannot—not, how have I spoken of late so much depressed? What can have been the cause? Remorse?"

Again he sank back in his chair, and while absolutely gasping for breath tried to review her past conduct; but he was able to view only the horrible picture which the note had on the instant presented to his imagination, and in which he saw her whom he had loved so fondly—her whom he had almost to delight when he would have resigned his heart-strings a wanton—causing him, a poor feeble injured old man, to sink beneath the weight of her dishonour.

Once more he read the note, as if to be sure that he was not dreaming, and once more he wanted it. "Look to your wife!" Where was she then, at that moment? Why with one in whom society she had given full pleasure—the very villain, perhaps, by whom she had been tempted—perhaps! and they were alone—alone! In an instant, as if inspired by some devil, he rushed wildly up stairs and dashed into the room.

He had scarcely, however, entered when he stood as if struck with paralysis, and would have fallen, but that Caroline instantly was from the piano, and flew to his assistance.

"Great heavens!" she exclaimed, "what has happened?"

"Good God!" cried Darnley, rushing from the window at which he had been reading, "why, what is the matter?"

"What is it, my dear?" continued Caroline, leading him to the sofa with the utmost tenderness, "tell me, dear, what on earth is it?"

"I am not well," replied Sir Arthur, very faintly, "I am not well, Caroline."

"You alarm me: why do you thus tremble and look so pale? Mr. Darnley," she added, self-possession is"

Darnley bowed and left the room, but with feelings having reference to Sir Arthur's recovery, which reflected upon him the most favourable light.

"Now dear," said Caroline, sitting by his side and kissing him affectionately, "what has occurred?"

Sir Arthur having gazed at her earnestly for a moment, pressed her to his heart, and then burst into tears.

"My dear Arthur, what is the meaning of this? For heaven's sake tell me! Has Charles written again?—Have you received any further intelligence from France?"

"No, Caroline, no," returned Sir Arthur, who continued to sob like a child.

"Then, what can it be?"

"Nothing—nothing—nothing!" he replied, striking his forehead with violence, "Nothing!"

"Oh, but my dear love there must be something. Why are you thus?"

"You alarm me: why do you thus tremble and look so pale? Mr. Darnley," she added, self-possession is"

Darnley bowed and left the room, but with feelings having reference to Sir Arthur's recovery, which reflected upon him the most favourable light.

"Now dear," said Caroline, sitting by his side and kissing him affectionately, "what has occurred?"

Sir Arthur having gazed at her earnestly for a moment, pressed her to his heart, and then burst into tears.

"My dear Arthur, what is the meaning of this? For heaven's sake tell me! Has Charles written again?—Have you received any further intelligence from France?"

"No, Caroline, no," returned Sir Arthur, who continued to sob like a child.

"Then, what can it be?"

"Nothing—nothing—nothing!" he replied, striking his forehead with violence, "Nothing!"

"Oh, but my dear love there must be something. Why are you thus?" What has induced this excitement?"

"It will soon subside; I was seized with a fit—it will soon pass off."

"Let me send for Dr. Hawtree, dear."

"No, no; do can do me no good. I shall soon be better now."

"But it may be something serious, my love."

"No, I want but repose—but a moment's repose. Leave me, Caroline, leave me."

"Nay, let me sit with you, dear head, pray. I will not disturb you by speaking a word."

She then drew his head upon her bosom, and having kissed him, tenderly pressed his throbbing temples and was silent.

And during that silence his reason returned. "Why," thought he, "am I thus struck down? Why do I suffer myself to be thus maddened by that which may alone may have suggested? What cause have I to suspect her pure by? what reason—what proof has been adduced? what is there to justify even a doubt? She has been ever most affectionate, most kind: her tenderness now gives the lie to that vile insinuation. Is it just, then, to suspect on such evidence? Is it not unnatural? Is it not cruel? I will not be made the slave of credulity—I will not suffer my happiness to be blasted by the foul breath of calumny—I will not be tortured for sport and made the laughingstock of the envious! I'll henceforth repudiate doubt and be guided by reason alone."

Having formed this just and highly laudable resolution, he became much more calm, and on raising his head, observed tenderly, "Caroline, did you not think just now that I was mad?"

"No, dear, no; but I repose to see you better you are better—much better."

"Bless you my own sweet girl," he exclaimed, embracing her fervently, "Bless you."

"What was the cause of your indisposition, dear?" she inquired after a pause, "I never knew you to be attacked so before. What induced it?"

"I cannot explain. It came suddenly upon me, and almost deprived me of reason. But it's all over now, thank heaven. Where is Darnley?"

"In the next room, my dear, I expect."

The finding doors were opened, but Darnley was not there the bell was rung, but when the servant was desired to ask Mr. Darnley to walk up, they were informed that he was off the house in the utmost haste.

"That's very strange" said Sir Arthur, who felt that suspicion still lingered, "what could have induced him to go away? It appears so extraordinary. I cannot account for it."

Scarcely, however, had these expressions of mystery been uttered, when Darnley's knock was heard at the door. He had—not indeed as a matter of benevolence, but purely for the look of the thing—started for Dr. Hawtree. Although he impressed upon the mind of that gentleman the imperative necessity for his immediate attendance, he furnished other feelings which may be conceived.

"How is Sir Arthur now?" he inquired of the servant who opened the door

"Sir Arthur, sir? Sir Arthur?" returned the fellow, whose faculties the question appeared to confuse, "Sir Arthur's quite well, sir."

"Quite well! what do you mean? Have you seen him?"

"He just this moment came to see you to walk up, sir."

Darnley looked at the doctor and the doctor looked at him, but without exchanging a word they proceeded up stairs, and found Sir Arthur apparently well and happy.

"Why, what has been the matter?" inquired Dr. Hawtree.

"Oh, nothing of importance. It's all over—quite gone off, quite. Have you been then, Darnley, for the doctor?"

"Oh, it quite alarmed me. I started off at once! I thought it was paralysis, or apoplexy, or something of that sort"

"Darnley," said Sir Arthur, taking his hand, "I thank you; it was very kind indeed—very friendly, very. I appreciate it, Darnley, I appreciate it."

"Well," said Dr. Hawtree, "let's hear how you feel."

"Oh, it was but a momentary attack. I felt a sudden dizziness, you know—a sort of staggering sensation."

"I perceive. You must lose a little blood."

"Do you think that necessary now"

"Quite, quite. Pulse very high."

"Oh, but I feel as recent nothing at all of it"

"Possibly not; but you may have a relapse, and these things are very serious"

"Well, but I never was better in my life," cried Sir Arthur, who didn't wish to lose any blood: "it was only excitement

"I know it was only excitement, and a relapse may only produce instant death! Come, I must have a little"

"Yes, do be advised, dear," said Caroline, "You'll feel so much better."

"I cannot feel better, love, than I do"

"But it may prevent very dreadful consequences"

"Well, there must be help for it! Certainly, it was not his wish to be bled, he had, indeed, a strong objection to it, but as he saw no chance of avoiding the infliction with any degree of propriety, he suffered himself to be led to his room, and there submitted to the lancet like a martyr.

Having made this sacrifice of blood—although he protested all the time very soundly against losing too much of it—he felt rather faint, and therefore requested to be left entirely quiet by Dr. Hawtree, who wrote a prescription, with which a servant was immediately despatched.

Sir Arthur was now apprehensive that the doctor would remain until the servant returned, and see him actually swallow the draught prescribed, of which, in common with all kinds of medicine, he had an unconquerable abhorrence. Greatly to his relief, however, the doctor in a short time departed, and when the medicine arrived, the patient took very quietly half a pint of sherry mixed, and felt very considerably better.

He then returned to the drawing room, and sat with Darnley, while Caroline was dressing for dinner: but the note he had received alone occupied his thoughts: he could not forget the warning it contained. He felt that Caroline was virtuous, that Darnley was his friend, that the note had proceeded from some malicious wretch, and that he was a fool to allow it to interfere with his happiness; still he could not cease to think of that warning, he could not cease to view it as an oracle: notwithstanding he believed the intimation to be false, it had made an impression too deep to be removed

And, hence, during dinner that day, he weighed every word which passed between Caroline and Darnley, scrutinised their every look, and watched their every action, and, although he perceived nothing that could justly suspicion, he did suspect in spite of himself

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

SIR THOMAS MORE AND ERASMUS.

Among his other eminent acquaintance, Sir Thomas More was particularly attached to Erasmus. They had long corresponded before they became personally acquainted. Erasmus came to England for the purpose of seeing his friend; and it was contrived that they should meet at the Lord Mayor's table before they were introduced to each other. At dinner they engaged in argument. Erasmus felt the keenness of his antagonist's wit, and when hard pressed, exclaimed, "You are More, or nobody." The reply was, "You are Erasmus, or the devil."

THE HORRORS OF WAR.

Dr. Dick, in one of his clever calculations, states, that "since the creation of the world 14,000,000,000 of beings have fallen in the wars which man has waged against his fellow-creature—man. If this amazing number of men were to hold each other by the hand, at arm's length, they would extend over 19,886,360 miles of ground, and would encircle the globe upon which we dwell 608 times! If we allow the weight of a man to be on an average one cwt. (and that is, if anything, below the mark), we shall come to the conclusion that 69,260,000 tons of human flesh have been mangled, disfigured, gashed, and trampled under foot. The calculation will appear more striking when I state that if the fore-fingers only of every one of those 14,000,000,000 human beings were to be laid out in a straight line, they would reach more than 600,000 miles beyond the moon; and that if a person were to undertake to count the number, allowing 19 hours to the day and 7 days to the week, and to number at the rate of 6000 per hour, it would employ that person 295 years; and awful is the consideration, that 3,500,000 pipes of human blood have been spilt in battles."

ONE OF THE EFFECTS OF PUBLIC EXECUTIONS.

A few days ago, three boys met at the north end of the town of Liverpool, in the course of their play in the brickfields, determined that they would represent a public execution. One of them agreed to act as culprit, the second as hangman, and the third as clergyman. A pile of bricks was raised as a temporary scaffold, a rope was obtained and suspended from the pole. The youth took his place on the bricks, with the rope round his neck, and after the representative of the clergyman had mumbled over some sentences, the bricks were knocked from the boy's feet, and he was left suspended. His companions attempted to release him, but were unable to do so; and had it not been for the prompt attendance of a man who was in the neighbourhood, we have not the last doubt, there can be no doubt but he would have lost his life. At the time he was released from his perilous situation his tongue was protruding, and his face quite discoloured.

A parallel instance of the spirit of emulation is given by a journal of the Bas-Rhin. A man went a short time ago to the mayor, at Schelestatt, and gave instructions for the publication of a marriage between himself and a young person, whom he named. After the lapse of a fortnight he went again to the mayor, and stated that he had changed his mind, and had selected another wife, and wished her name to be inserted instead of that which he had given in. He was, however, informed that this could not be done without the production of fresh certificates, and the other necessary documents, involving additional fees to the amount of 6f. 50c. This took the would-be Benedict aback, and after pondering whether this new expense could not be spared, and finding it, to be indispensable, he coolly made up his mind to save it, and decied upon taking the first-named girl for his spouse.

INTERESTING FACT.

There is at present in the possession of an individual in Aberdeen a male canary, of about 13 years of age, that is unable to feed itself, and to whose musical powers ill-natured time has put a complete stop. On the same floor, but in a separate apartment, is another male canary, a son of the aged bird. This young one being allowed to leave his cage early in the morning, and fly about at pleasure, is in the practice of visiting his old friend, and kindly feeding him as birds feed their young; and this he does several times in the course of the day. He also perches on the cage of his progenitor, and sings with great spirit, no doubt to cheer up his old relative in his declining days. The old bird has a particular way of calling on this young friend, and also when he requires his services, which are always given and received with mutual satisfaction. When the young bird is in any way obstructed from attending to the call of the other, he appears to be very angry, and expresses his displeasure in a certain noisy and screaming manner, which is well understood by the inmates of the house.

RAILWAYS AND COACHES.

The best distinction drawn between railway and coach accidents was that of an old coachman. "If," said he, "you get comfortably capsized in a ditch by the roadside, there you are! but if you gets blown up by an engine, run into a cutting, or off an embankment, where are you?"

A ROYAL REQUEST.

The papers relative to the expedition to the River Niger were presented to Parliament on Tuesday last. Amongst other documents will be found a despatch from Captain Tucker, dated Fernando Po, May 31, 1840, to the Admiralty, giving an account of his mission to King Denny, of the Gaboon river. "His Majesty" seems to have been infinitely delighted with the respect paid to him by the repeated salutes with which Captain Tucker honoured him, but sadly disappointed with the presents—a gold medal and chain—sent to him by the Queen. "His Majesty" gave expression to this disappointment by dictating the following letter to the Queen:—

"TO QUEEN OF ENGLAND.—Sister,—King Denny, of Sandy Point, River Gaboon, must embrace you for the things you send me by Captain Tucker, your war-ship, Wolverene, who dashed them me this day with grand ceremony, and much pleased me. King Denny was too glad to have Queen's men belong Lynx, which cost 120 dollars, which I too much glad to give Queen. King Denny wish very much to be brother to Queen, and will be very glad more than any thing to see Queen's name for slaves; and suppose Queen send plenty English ships to me for trade for ivory, gum, bees'-wax, dye-wood, and ebony. And King Denny wish my sister send me great-coat, with tecompoddee sleeves, with gold lace, waistcoat, and trousers, plenty gold in them; cocked hat with gold and feather; sword and belt, plenty gold; and two easy chairs: and King Denny wishes Queen health and good-bye. King Denny very glad he hear Queen got husband.

"King Denny Town,
3rd day of Moon:
i.e., May 16, 1840."

his King ✕ DENNY, mark.

INTERESTING TO SMOKERS.

Some idea may be formed of the quantity and quality of the stock of pipes and tobacco laid up by his Royal Highness the late Duke of Sussex, when it is stated that the portion sold at the auction on Tuesday last realised upwards of £2500. The chief part of the tobacco was in jars, containing from 3lb. to 5lb., which fetched from 10s. to £3 2s. per lb. A present from Mr Stephenson, in 1830, to his Royal Highness, of which about 4lb. remain, of yellow fine cut Turkey, sold for £4 4s. Five pounds of broad cut Turkish leaf tobacco, a present from Percy Grasse, in 1840, £4 8s. Presents of different tobaccos from the Turkish Ambassador, Lord Ponsonby, Mr. Barchesen, Sir Gore Ouseley, Mr. Hagott, Bread and Habenicht, of Hanover, &c., produced from 15s. to £1 10s. per lb. On Wednesday the produce of the continental sale of tobacco was enormous, producing as it did upwards of £3000. The chief part of the principal pipes being made by gentlemen, as the price was too high for the brokers. Colonel Gurwood and Lord Dunboyne (one of the late Duke's executors), both bought largely. Among the more important lots were a box of 1000 cigars, presented to his Royal Highness by Lord John Churchill, £40 19s., Colonel Gurwood, a similar lot, £43 18s., Mr. Cunningham; a box of 5 0 Wonsville's, presented by Lord Sligo, £13 7s. 6d., Sir A. Macdonald; 500 Woodville's, presented by Sir Edward Brackenbury, £38 18s., Viscount Canning; 500 Woodville's, presented by Sir George Cockburn, £22 11s. 6d., Otley; a box of 40 Havannah cigars, presented by Admiral Sir Charles Rowley, £1 10s., Mr. Crockford. The following lots, from 463 to 471 inclusive, numbering 2125 cigars, presented to his Royal Highness in 1841 by Chevalier Hebeler, were purchased by Colonel Gurwood for £87. The engraving on the cigar-boxes and three lots of 1000 each, presented by Lord John Churchill, by the same gentleman for £137. It is unnecessary to quote any other of the lots to show the interest excited by the sale; but it was generally remarked that on no previous occasion were so similar articles known to have been realised by articles of the like description.

COURAGE AND HUMANITY.—(From a Correspondent.)

The Morning Chronicle of Wednesday, in the report of an inquest held before Mr. Wakley, on the previous day, on the body of a youth who was unfortunately drowned in a pond in Pocock's-fields, Islington, contains a curious commentary on the scriptural injunction of "Do unto others," &c. It appears that a person named David Cato Macrae, who described himself as a reporter of the Morning Chronicle, was walking near the pond at the time of the melancholy occurrence, and being attracted from the road to the pond, he urged a brickmaker to plunge in to find the body, and sent for a surgeon to the Model Prison. When the body was recovered, however, life was extinct." This is Mr. Macrae's own version of the matter, and there is, therefore, no reason to discredit it. The time spent in urging the brickmaker might well have been employed in saving the boy's life, had Mr. Macrae not entertained so consequential a notion of his own "porcelain clay," and only reflected that

"Urns and pipkins are but fragile brothers,
And works of the same pottery."

LONDON ANTIQUITIES.

Wallbrook took its name from the rivulet which entered the city from Moorfields, and divided into two parts afterwards, and flowed into the Thames at Dowgate. Friday-street, Cheapside—so named from its being near to the fish-market—which was formerly inhabited by the fishmongers, who regularly supplied our Catholic forefathers with fish on Fridays. Langbourn Ward "is so called of a long borne (bourn) of sweete water, which in olden times breaking out into Fenchurch-street, ran down it, and Lombard-street, to the west end of Saint Mary Woolnoth church, where turning south and breaking itself into many small shares, rills, or streame, it left the name of Share-bourne-lane, because it ran south to the river Thames."

CHESS.

Solution to problem No. 30.

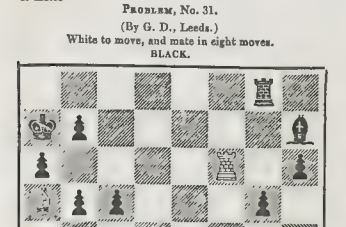
WHITE.	BLACK.
R to K B 5th	R to Q 2nd
Q to Q 5th ch.	K covers
Q takes R ch.	K moves
R mates

PROBLEM, No. 31.

(By G. D., Leeds.)

White to move, and mate in eight moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

Solution in our next.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

LIVERPOOL RACES.—WEDNESDAY.

The Croxteth Stakes were won in a canter by Mr. Jaques's Semiseria (Copeland), beating The Shadow, Martyr, Maid, Forester, Trueboy, and Vitellina; the two last fell at the distance.

The Sefton Stakes were won by Lord Eglinton's Egidia (G. Noble), beating Fragrance and the Amathine filly.

The Produce Stakes were won by Mr. Mostyn's General Pollock (Marlow), beating the Maid of Honour filly and Messalina by a head.

Sweepstakes of 500 sovs each.—Lord Stanley's Aquilo (Nat) beat Aristides by a length and a half.

The Mersey Stakes, for two-yr-olds, were won by Lord Westminster's Sister to Auckland (Templeman), beating the Cure (second), British Tar (third), and seven others, by a length.

The Innkeepers' Stakes were won by Cooper (Rogers), beating the Jemima colt and the Myanda colt by a length.

CUP RACE.—2 to 3 agst Pompey, 5 to 1 agst Knight-of-the Whistle, 8 to 1 agst Mus, 9 to 1 agst Boscacum, 10 to 1 agst Morpeth, and 14 to 1 agst Rhodanche.

SOUTHAMPTON RACES.—TUESDAY.

£50 given by the Members for the Southern Division of the County, added to a Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, h ft.

Lord Palmerston's Illens, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..	(J. Day, jun.)	0 1 1
Mr. W. Sadler's Conqueror, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..		6 2 dr
Mr. Frankwelyn's Mulberry, 5 yrs	..	..	..	..		0 dr
Mr. Osbaldeston's c by M. Molock Tickle, 3 yrs	..	..	..	..		3 dr

The first was a dead heat between Lions and Mulberry, the second was won easy, and the third walked over for.

WEDNESDAY.

The Borough Plate of £50, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each.

Mr. Osbaldeston's Devil-among-the-Tailors, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..		1
Mr. Lucas's The Traitor, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..		2
Mr. Werbeck's Ivy Cassel, out of Wadastra, 3 yrs	..	..	..	..		3

The Hunters' Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 30 added, one mile and three quarters, gentlemen riders, were won by Mr. Legg's Stickler, aged, beating Mr. Humby's Buonaparte, aged; Mr. Berwick's Ullington, 4 yrs, and Virginia, aged.

The Members' Plate of £50, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each. The second to save his stake, and the winner to be sold for £500.

Mr. Biggs's Elena, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..	(J. Day, jun.)	3 1 1
Mr. Wreford's Franchise, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..		1 3 2

CRICKET.—A match was played on Tuesday between the Xion boys and the officers of the Life Guards and Foot Guards quartered in Windsor, in which the former were victorious.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

The merchants of Trieste intend to send, at the end of August, commissioners, by way of Egypt and Suez, to Southern Asia, and especially to India, in order to ascertain the possibility of opening an active trade between those countries and the Austrian empire. ——On Monday the state carriages and other equipages of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex were sold by auction, by Messrs. Tattersall. The lots, which excited little competition, were principally knocked down to dealers, and fetched very low prices.——At the July meeting of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge a request from the Bishop of Montreal for a grant in aid of the establishment of a college in his diocese was acceded to.——The anniversary festival of the Fishmongers and Poulterers' Society was held at the Bridge House Hotel on Tuesday last, when the chair was occupied by M. W. Attwood, Esq. Numerous donations and subscriptions in aid of the charity were handed in during the evening.—— There landed from the steamers on Sunday, at Chelsea, 5271; Putney, 4822; Kew, 2793; Richmond, 5421; Teddington, 2504, independent of those who landed at Wandsworth, Hammersmith, and Brentford. It was a splendid sight to witness the numerous boats returning to town with the tide in the afternoon.——The wine trade have completed their arrangements with Government for an Excise survey, to prevent loss, in case of any alteration hereafter in the duties.——The election of a Scottish representative peer, in the room of the late General Lord Forbes, is fixed to take place on the 19th inst., at Holyrood House. Lord Polwarth and Lord Elphinstone, late Governor of Madras, are, it is understood, candidates.——We learn from Boulogne-sur-Mer that a few days ago a revenue cutter captured, off Cape Grinez, a boat, with three men on board, containing bales of cotton-thread, tulles, and stockings, amounting in value to 10,000f. Each bale had straps, so as to make it portable as a knapsack. The boat and its freight were brought into Boulogne and sold, on condition of the goods being re-exported.——We understand that it is in contemplation by the directors of the London and Brighton Railway to lower their fares. It is said that the fares are to be 5s., 8s., and 12s., the charges for the express train remaining as at present 14s.——A deputation from the Established Church of Scotland is about to visit the metropolis, in order to set their case in its proper light before the public.——The Ecclesiastical Commissioners had a meeting on Tuesday; as had also the Commission of Health of Towns.——Lord Grey may now be considered perfectly recovered from his recent indisposition.——The number of petitions against the Factory Bill as at first presented to the House was 13,369. The signatures amounted to 2,058,059 ; against the same bill, with the amended clauses, there were presented 12,045 petitions, having 1,959,476 signatures.——An official advertisement has been issued from the Treasury Department, inviting proposals for a new loan to the United States of seven millions of dollars, in sums of not less than ten thousand dollars, to be redeemed at the pleasure of the government at any time after ten years from the issue thereof.——The Emperor of Russia has just entered into his 48th year, having been born on the 7th July, 1796.——Mr. Winston, secretary of the Garrick Club, and formerly connected with the theatres, died at his house in Covent-garden on Sunday.——We have learned from a quarter entitled to the highest credit, that the unfavourable intelligence in the Bombay papers, and also communicated by some correspondents, respecting the affairs of Scinde, is entirely without foundation.——An universal Norwegian missionary society has lately been organised at Christiansand, and its prospects are stated to be very encouraging.——The number of Campbells who have signed the requisition to the Lord Advocate of Scotland, to come forward for the representation of Argyllshire, is sixty-nine. ——A special committee of the Middlesex magistrates have resolved upon presenting a petition to Parliament against the Coroners' Bill, now under discussion, and have drawn the attention of the metropolitan, county, and borough members to the subject.——The King of Hanover has expressed his intention, through Lord R. Grosvenor, of making the munificent donation of £300 towards the expenses of the new building of the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's Inn-road.——Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar has obtained leave of absence from the Horse Guards, and gone to visit his parents in Germany. His highness returns early next month.——Bihin, the giant who appeared some years back at Paris, in the melodrama of Goliath, has just terminated his career most unexpectedly. He was living retired near Spa, and, happening to go there during a fête, he was seen by an Englishman of great stature and strength, and was challenged by him to see which was the better man at boxing. The giant accepted the challenge; but on the morning of the contest he was found dead in his bed, from the rupture of an aneurism. He was only thirty-six years of age. About £4600 has been subscribed towards building a church and school-room at the Swindon station of the Great Western Railway. The church is to consist of entirely free sittings.——Dr. Orville Dewey, the distinguished American writer and preacher, is on a visit to this country, and has occupied the pulpits of several Unitarian chapels in and near the metropolis.——The munificent donation of 4000 francs, made by the King of the French to the widows and orphans of the brave fellows who perished in their attempt to assist the French vessel La Maladetta, has been followed by an award of medals of honour on the part of his Majesty for the survivors.

The Rev. Joseph Jekyll, B.A., has been presented the rectory of Hawkridge-cum-Withypool, Somersetshire.

ASSIZES IN WALES.—Baron Rolfe opened the Summer Assizes at Cardiff on Tuesday. In charging the grand jury, he adverted to the riots which have taken place in the three southern counties of the principality, and said that prompt and severe punishment was necessary to repress disorder. If the parties engaged in those disorders had real grievances to complain of, those grievances did not justify outrage, and the laws must be vindicated.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE.—In consequence of the arrivals of English wheat up to our market this week having been very moderate we have to report a further improvement in the demand for that article, at an advance of from 1s to 2s per quarter, at which prices a clearance have been effected. In our foreign wheat a fair retail business has been done, at a rise of quite 1s per quarter; while for grain, under look, there is more inquiry. Barley and malt have commanded more attention, but without any improvement in their quotations. Good sound oats have commanded 6d more money; and the value of other grain has been supported. Flour has risen 3s per 280 lbs.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 2640; Barley, 90; Oats, 1170; and Malt, 5810 qrs.: Flour, 3570 sacks. Irish: Barley, —; and Oats, 4130 qrs. Foreign: Wheat, 16,046; Barley, 2020; and Oats, 1810 qrs

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 54s; ditto white, 52s to 58s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 44s to 50s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s, rye, 34s to 38s; grinding barley, —s to 28s; malting ditto, 30s to 33s; Chevalier, 32s to 34s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s; brown ditto, 50s to 54s; Kingston and Ware, 56s to 62s; Devon and Suffolk ditto, 54s; and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 21s; potato ditto, 18s to 23s; Youghal and Cork, black, 17s to 18s, ditto white, 19s to 20s; fine beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 36s to 38s; grey peas, 36s to 38s; maple, 32s to 34s; white, 30s to 32s; boilers, 32s to 37s per quarter. Town-made flour, 45s to 46s; Suffolk, 38s to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 47 to 48s. In bond. Barley, 20s; oats, new, 16s to 17s; ditto feed, 14s to 16s; beans, 30s to 32s; peas, 32s to 37s per quarter. Flour, America, 22s to 24s; Baltic, 20s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—As is almost invariably the case at this season, the demand for seeds is very limited, and prices late rates.—Linseed, English, sowing, 38s to 40s, Baltic, crushing, 32s to 40s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s; hempseed, 32s to 40s per quarter; coriander, 10s to 18s per cwt; brown mustard seed, 10s to 11s; white ditto, 12s to 14s per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £20 to £22 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 to £10 10s; ditto foreign, £7 to £7 10s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 5 to £5 per ton; canary, 75s to 84s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 6d to 6½d for the 4-lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 49s 10d; barley, 28s 8d; oats, 19s 7½; rye, 32s 8d; beans, 33s 9d; peas, 31s 7d.

Imperial Averages of Six Weeks ending yesterday Duty.—Wheat, 49s 1d; barley, 27s 8d; oats, 19s 9d, rye, 31s 1d; beans, 32s 8d; peas, 30s 6d per quarter.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 8s; oats, 5s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 11s 6d; peas, 10s 6d.

Tea.—This market is decidedly firmer than last week, but we have no alteration to notice in the quotations of the article. The imports, this week, are 5000 chests from Macao.

Sugar.—Notwithstanding the large importers of sugar into the London docks, demand for most descriptions is active, and prices may be considered 6d per cwt. higher than on this day se'nnight.

Coffee.—This market is in a much more healthy state than we have had occasion to notice for a considerable period, and fine qualities are extremely scarce.

Indigo.—The quarterly sales have been in progress the whole of the week. The auctioneer have got off with spirit, at higher prices.

Rice.—We have a steady sale for rice at fully late rates.

Spices.—Admir's, 12s 6d; Carr's Hartley, 12s, Holywell Mount, 12s; New Tanfield, 14s 6d; Downing, 12s 6d; Wilson, 14s 6d; Hetton, 12s 3d, Lambton, 12s 6d, Stewart, 12s 3d per ton.

Wool.—Nearly 5,000 bales of wool have been imported into London since our last, chiefly for our continental manufacturers, and for exportation.

Hops.—The accounts from the plantations not being very favourable, the demand here is fair, at full quotations.

Potatoes.—About 600 baskets of foreign potatoes have reached us this week. In old qualities very little is doing, but new ones readily command from 3s to 6s per cwt.

Smithfield.—There has been a very slow inquiry for cows this week, and prices are again easier. Beef, from 3s to 4s; mutton, 3s 2d to 4s 6d; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; and pork, 3s 4d to 4s per 8 lbs.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—These markets have ruled dull, but we have no material alteration to notice in the quotations. Beef, from 2s 8d to 3s 6d; mutton, 3s to 4s 2d, lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d, and pork, 3s to 4s per 8 lbs.

ROBERT HEARNE.

COMMERCE AND MONEY

During the last two or three weeks a demand has arisen for wheat throughout all our great markets of consumption, and an improvement of from 4s to 6s. per quarter has been the natural consequence. The farmers, however, during the season, to make up their farming expenses, have been compelled to deliver much larger quantities of wheat than, under more auspicious circumstances, they would have done, and consequently the quantity of British grown wheats now remaining in this country has seldom been so small, therefore as it was the previous year.

In Mincing-lane, the quarterly sales of indigo commenced in the beginning of this week, and they went off better than was generally expected. The sales were well attended by the trade, although a considerable degree of hesitation evidently existed amongst them and prices were from 3d. to 6d. lower than those obtained at the previous sale. A considerable quantity, however, changed hands, and thus the field is partly cleared for further importations of this article. Of teas, also, the deliveries throughout this week have been rather more than the average ones of late, and prices generally have been well supported. In the sugar trade, likewise, a small improvement, both in value and in the quantity delivered into the hands of the grocers, has occurred during this week, and a similar observation may be made respecting coffee, both common and fine. In fact the whole of the markets now for all articles of necessary consumption are becoming gradually more healthy, and furnishing satisfactory proofs that the industrious classes are gradually recovering from their late depressed condition.

In the cotton and woollen departments, prices generally have been fully maintained since our last publication, and extensive orders, chiefly for exportation, still remain to be executed. At Birmingham and Sheffield, likewise, appearances, at all events, are becoming more favourable. In the iron and steel trades, also, considerable activity prevails, and the orders for those articles made chiefly for the markets in the United States of America. This may, perhaps, be the stepping-stone to the renewal of the great depression at present existing in the mining districts.

The transactions in the Money market, early in the week, were without any interest, and attracted in a very small degree the attention of the public. In the Consols scarcely any activity existed, the opening value of them, on Monday, having been 92¾ to 94, and gradually to 92⅝, which was the closing price of the transactions in four days until the end of the week. Money is so abundant that the time account leaves no continuation whatever. Some large purchases of the Three and a Half per Cents., however, were effected in the middle of the week, which caused a small improvement in their previous value. For Exchequer Bills, also, a demand at present exists for the investment chiefly of Trust property, and the premiums on those bearing an interest of 1¾d. has risen to 70s. Bank of England Stock continues to command the high quotations of 179 to 180; and East India Stock cannot be purchased at any rates under 260. For Foreign, in fact the only securities now for all article

ROYAL SOCIETY, REGENT'S PARK.—The last EXHIBITION of Plants, Flowers, and Microscopes for 1843 will take place on WEDNESDAY, the 19th instant, at Two o'clock. Fellows, Members, and Bearers of Ivory Tickets will be admitted upon entering their names in the gate-book. Visitors may obtain tickets by orders from Fellows and Members (until two o'clock on the 19th) from ten till four o'clock, at No. 38, Regent-street, and at the Gardens, price Six Shillings each; or, at the Gardens only, after two o'clock, Ten Shillings. Scientific and private, not admitted. Carriages may be had at the Gardens, and at No. 38, Regent-street, as above.
July 15. J. DE J. SOWERBY, Secretary.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—On WEDNESDAY, JULY 19, at Two o'clock, Mr. WILSON will, by desire, repeat his Entertainment of "A MORNING WI' BURNS."

WILSON'S SCOTTISH ENTERTAINMENTS.—Last but Two for the Season.—At the MUSIC-HALL, STORE STREET, on MONDAY Evening, JULY 17th, at Eight o'clock.—Songs: "Duncan Wheech's new ane" "Grace, the flower of Dumblane"—" Bonnie Prince Charlie" " From M'Donald's Lament"—" The Lass o' Gowrie"—" What'll buy caller Herring?"—" Mufferal Willie."—PART II. " Royal Wife of Aldivalloch"—" The Ewie wi' the crookit horn"—" Auld Gudeman,ye're a drunken carle"—" Scots wha ha'e wi' Wallace bled"—" The Land o' the Leal"—" Tak yer auld cloak about ye."—Pianoforte, Mr. Land.

GRAND EXHIBITION at the ATHENÆUM ROOMS, in DERBY (held for the benefit of the town and county MUSEUM).—The Exhibition comprises a large and very fine collection of Paintings, beautiful Sculpture, ancient Arms and Armour, groups of figures in rich Chinese and other Oriental Dresses, Models of the Royal George and other celebrated Ships. The whole consists of the Museum, with large additions—Antediluvian fossils (Saurian and others), Egyptian Mummy, and other objects of the most remote antiquity, a great variety of the most choice and valuable Curiosities, and miscellaneous Works of Art of the most elegant description.—The magnificent collection occupies the Grand Room called the Arbor-ium Hall, the Museum, and seven other apartments, besides the staircase, and is one of the richest and most beautiful ever offered to public view.—Open from half-past nine in the morning to half past nine in the evening.—Admission, 6d; catalogue (32 pages), 6d.

WILL SHORTLY CLOSE.
EXHIBITION.—Sir GEORGE HAYTER'S GREAT PICTURE of the HOUSE of COMMONS, painter's 170 square feet of canvas, and containing Portraits of all the Members, a Portrait of the Queen, and various other historical pictures, in which are more than eight hundred portraits of eminent men of the present day, is OPEN for exhibition from Ten o'clock till dusk every day, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.—Admission, 1s. each person.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.—ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A LECTURE on this subject, illustrated by Models of several kinds, which elevate themselves in the air, and form steerable balloons, will be delivered Daily, and on MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY evenings, at Eight o'clock, in addition to the popular Lectures usually delivered. The exhibition of the Collected Electrical Machines, Diving Bell, Glass Blowing, Dissolving Views, and the other varied and instructive objects of the Institution, continues as usual. The original Crayon Drawings from the Cartoons at Hampton Court, by the late Mr. Hollaway, with numerous other Works of Art, have recently been placed in the Gallery.—Admission, One Shilling. Schools, Half-price. Open Mornings and Evenings, except Saturday Evening.

POPULAR SCOTCH MUSIC.
THE PIANO (July), price 1s., or post-free, 1s. 4d., contains Mr. WILSON'S celebrated Scotch Songs, arranged with accompaniments for the Pianoforte, as sung by him in his entertainments, viz.—Duncan Wheech's new ane" "Land o' My Ewie wi' the crooked horn" My sin kind dearie"—Muirland Willie—Logan Braes—The last time I cam' o'er the muir—Jessie's bawkers—My Nannie, o!
Also No. 11 of the MUSICAL CASKET, twenty-one admired Airs, arranged in the easiest keys for all instruments, by Mr. JAMES MEWEN, price 3d., or post-free, 5d.
Published by DUNCOMB, 10, Middle-row, Holborn.

CURVATURES of the SPINE, &c.—Mr. AMESBURY'S PRIVATE ORTHOPEDIC ESTABLISHMENT for the PREVENTION, RELIEF, and CURE of CURVATURES of the SPINE.—Particulars of the arrangements may be obtained by application to Mr. Amesbury, at his residence, 12, Dorset-street, Portman-square, London.
For illustrations of the effects of the treatment adopted, see his PRACTICAL REMARKS on DEFORMITIES of the SPINE, CHEST, and LIMBS; Stiffness and Weakness of the Joints, Muscular Contractions and Muscular Weaknesses, partial and general. 4to., 211 ls. 6d.—Published by Longman and Co., Paternoster row, London.—By the same author, PRACTICAL REMARKS on the TRUNK and EXTREMITIES, with Plates and Cases 2 vols 8vo., £1 1s.

PUBLIC MEETING.—BRITISH and FOREIGN INSTITUTE.—A Public Meeting of the friends of the BRITISH and FOREIGN INSTITUTE will be holden at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on the morning of TUESDAY, JULY 25th.—Prospectuses of Messrs. Hetley and Co., 65, Cornhill; Colnaghi and Co., 23, Cockspur-street; and at the Society, Blenda, and Co., 65, Cornhill; Colnaghi and Co., 23, Cockspur-street; and at the Hanover-square Rooms; where platform tickets (for members only), and visitors' tickets for ladies and gentlemen, may be had, between the hours of ten and four, but none will be issued after the morning of the 19th.—The chair will be taken by the Earl of Devon, at Two o'clock precisely.

BOARDING SCHOOL FOR YOUNG GENTLEMEN.—Ten Miles from London by Railway.—Terms, 18, 20, or 22 guineas per annum. No extras. The quarter is dated at entrance. Prices supply the place of severity; and a hundred respectable schoolfellows in the city of Londinium will constantly bear witness to the excellence of the diet and system of education. Mothers, have your children fed, not driven; taught, not told to learn. For prospectuses, address C. M. P., Post-office, Croydon.—A young gentleman required as articled pupil, age 19 or 20.

TO SCHOOLS, PRIVATE FAMILIES, &c.—DRAWING from MODELS.—Mr. GANDER, Professor of Perspective Drawing, &c., gives lessons in the new and successful method of DRAWING from MODELS on the simultaneous plan as practised by the classes at Exeter Hall, &c.—Terms, which are very moderate, may be obtained of Mr. GANDER, No. 4, Lower Belgrave-place, Pimlico.

THE Late DUKE of SUSSEX.—HYAM HYAMS, Goldsmith, 72, Cornhill, begs to apprise noblemen, gentlemen, and others who may wish to possess a memento of his late Royal Highness, that having purchased at the late sale several choice articles in plate and stone Hjoiutery, he respectfully offers them for selection Amongst others may be classed as the most recherché the Gold Coffee-pot, the elaborately chased and gilt Rosewater Dish, the silver Wine Cistern, the Gold Tea Caddy, and the richly gold-mounted Meerschaum Pipe, constantly used by his late Royal Highness; several costly Snuff Boxes, presented to his Majesty George IV., the Queen of Wurtemberg, and others, together with rings, &c., too numerous to detail.

PROUT'S COURT PLASTER (the original India-rubber) continues to enjoy the patronage of the nobility and gentry to an unprecedented extent; it effectually resists the action of hot or cold water, and sticks firm and close for a week. In consequence of the very numerous imitations, be careful to ask for "PROUT'S," and observe the name and address in full—" THOS PROUT, 229, Strand, London."
N.B. It will be sent free per post on receipt of its penny stamps.

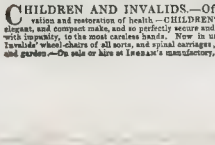
A WATCH, AS A GIFT, from its particular properties, is the best expression of the truth and sincerity of friendship: it is always with the owner, and always doing him service.—J. JONES, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, Watchmaker to the Admiralty, has on sale a particular variety of Watches, suitable for all classes. The elegant gold horizontal watches, at £7 each, are suitable for ladies and gentlemen.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watch Work, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

TO ROAD and ESTATE SURVEYORS, BUILDERS, and Others requiring earth to form embankments for roads and footpaths, top dress and level lands, &c., for to fill a cavity of TEN THOUSAND LOADS OF CLAY, comprising the two large mounds within the Cemetery at Kensal-green, to be GIVEN AWAY to any party carting the same.—Apply for leave at the Office of the General Cemetery Company, No. 4, Cross Keys-court, Gresham-street, Bloomsbury. G. W. H. CROPP, Secretary.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.
—No. 10, Chatham-place, Blackfriars, London.—Established January, 1819.
PRESIDENT—SIR JAMES NIVETT CARNAC, Bart., Rock Cliff, Lymington.
VICE-PRESIDENT—GEO. FORBES, Esq., 3, Finsbury-square.—With Twelve Directors.
FACILITIES are offered by this long-established Society to suit the views and the means of every class of Insurers. Premiums are received yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly, or upon an increasing or decreasing scale. One-half only of the usual rate, with interest on the remainder, will be received for five or seven years, the other half to be paid at the convenience of the assured, or remain as a security for his participation in the profits of the Institution. A liberal commutation is allowed to Solicitors and Agents.
DAVID FOGGO, Secretary.
N.B.—Agents are wanted in towns where none have been yet appointed.

EDWARD DODD, MANUFACTURER to H.R.H. Duke of Cambridge of his ANGLO-ROMAN STRINGS for VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, and HARP, which Strings for power of tone and durability are equal to the best Italian Strings, at 50 per cent. less, and for sympathetic tone in greater use. They have a peculiar property of resisting the ill effects of heated rooms. Testimonials from Messrs. Blagrove, Pelbergue, Willey, Jay, Greenwood, Hill, &c. &c. Sold by the Inventor and Sole Proprietor, at the manufactory, 117, Vauxhall Walk, Lambeth. Each bundle wrapped with a blue band, with E. Dodd's, Anglo-Roman Strings, warranted not to turn green.

NOVEL ARTICLE FOR THE TOILET.—MELMOTH'S GEORGIAN EXTRACT is decidedly one of the most useful preparations ever offered to the public a little of it used twice a day entirely removes from perspiration the unpleasant odour which usually accompanies it. Its application is harmless, its efficacy astonishing; it has never failed in a single instance, those who once use it will never be without it. It is invaluable in sick rooms, crowded assemblies, and warm climates. All persons of delicacy and refinement will find it as an invaluable addition to the toilet.—Sold in bottles, 3s. 6d. each, at J. Sangster Medicine Warehouse, 140, Oxford-street; Messrs. Gifford and Lender, 104, Strand; Mr. Prout, 229, Strand; Johnston, 68, Cornhill.



CHILDREN AND INVALIDS.—Of high value in the preservation and restoration of health.—CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES of every superior, elegant, and compact make, and so perfectly secure and easy that chi dren may be entrusted, with impunity, to the most careless hands. Now in use from the palace to the cottage. Invalids' wheel-chairs of all sorts, and spinal carriages, also, self-m-ving chairs, for house and garden.—On sale or hire at INGRAM'S manufactory, 26, City-road.

Now ready, 1 vol. small 8vo., 7s. 6d., cloth, with a Map and 20 Illustrations,
CAPE OF GOOD HOPE and EASTERN PROVINCE of ALGOA BAY, with Statistics of the Colony. By J. C. CHASE, Esq., a Settler of 1820, Secretary to the Society for exploring Central Africa; author of a Map of the Colony, &c. Edited by JOS. B. CHRISTOPHERS.
PELHAM RICHARDSON, 23, Cornhill.

HYDROPATHY.
This day is published, in 8vo. cloth, lettered, price 4s.,
A MEDICAL VISIT to GRAFENBERG, in April and May, 1842; for the purpose of investigating the Merits of the WATER CURE TREATMENT. By Sir CHARLES SCUDAMORE, M.D., F.R.S., Physician Extraordinary to the Queen; Member of Trinity College, Dublin; and of the Imperial College of Physicians, Vienna, &c. &c.
JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—The Second Volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is now ready, price 18s., and a prepared Cover, price 3s. Subscribers already supplied with the Paper may have them neatly bound in the prepared Cover; for which purpose the numbers may be sent free, through the Post, in one parcel (which must be open at the ends, and properly supplemented as the Stamp Act requires), and may be sent by Post.—Apply to W. Jones and Co., London and Country Newspaper and Advertising Office, 74, Canton-street, City, London. Established 1809.

TIERNEY'S DODD
Just published, price 18s., Volume the Fifth of
THE CHURCH HISTORY OF ENGLAND; from the Year 1500 to 1688, chiefly with regard to Catholics. By CHARLES DODD. With Notes, and a Continuation to the beginning of the present Century, by the Rev. M. A. TIERNEY, F.R.S., F.S.A.—The Fifth Volume, which is original, and principally supplementary to the reign of James I., embraces the history of the two arch-priests, Birkhead and Harrison, the negotiations which led to the appointment of the Bishop of Chalcedon, and the many struggles and remonstrances by which the independence of Douay College was finally established.
London: C. DOLMAN, 61, New Bond-street.

THE LONSWORTH'S NEW ROMANCE
WINDSOR CASTLE—ILLUSTRATED.
THE ILLUSTRATED EDITION
of Mr Ainsworth's New Historical Romance of "Windsor Castle," containing 120 Plates and Wood Engravings, by George Cruikshank and other eminent artists, complete in one handsome volume 8vo., uniform with the "Tower of London," by the same Author, price 14s., elegantly bound.
NOW READY
And may be had of all booksellers.
"One of the best of the Author's productions. The Illustrations by George Cruikshank are of almost unprecedented force and spirit."—Literary Gazette.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough street.

SUPERIOR SCHOOL BOOKS.
BUTTER'S ETYMOLOGICAL SPELLING-BOOK and EXPOSITOR. An Introductory to the Spelling, Pronunciation, and Derivation of the English Language; containing, besides several other important Improvements, extensive Tables of Words deduced from their Greek and Latin Roots. Sixty-fourth Edition, 1s. 6d. bound.
BUTTER'S GRADATIONS in READING and SPELLING, upon an entirely new and original plan; by which Dissyllables are rendered as easy as Monosyllables. With numerous entertaining and instructive Reading Lessons in Prose and Verse, and Spelling-Tables leading to a knowledge of Grammar and Derivation. Twenty-ninth Edition, 1s. 6d. bound.
SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; WHITTAKER and Co.; LONGMAN and Co.; HAMILTON and Co., London. OLIVER and BOYD, Edinburgh.

THE METROPOLITAN LOAN COMPANY.
Offices, 1, Craven-street, Strand, London.—Loans are advanced by this Company, on the security of responsible housekeepers, in sums of £10 10s., £15, £20, £25, £30, £35, £40, £45, and £50, for periods, at the option of the borrowers, of 25 weeks, at 7½ per cent., or of 50 weeks, at 5 per cent., to be repaid by weekly instalments. Forms of application, and particulars, may be obtained at the offices as above, which are open daily from eleven till three o'clock. If the securities are approved, the loan is granted without delay. Larger sums are granted by the Company upon special agreement with the Directors.

LIGHT SUMMER COAT, WAISTCOAT, and TROUSERS of the best description, and in greater variety, than any other house in the trade in London, at 2, ALBERT and Co.'s, tailors, &c., 325, King William-street, City.—Established upwards of 20 years.

ALE of very superior quality, brewed entirely from the very best Malt and Hops, and in such proportions as persons of nice palate will be sure to appreciate. Sold in casks of eighteen and nine gallons each, at 1s. per gallon. Sent to any part of town carriage free, and punctually attended to. Address to the John Bull brewery office, 20, Philpot-lane, City.

BACON.—J. CRAFT, Philpot-lane, City, offers to the Public Bacon of excellent quality, which he receives weekly from a farmer in Wiltshire, who attends to the feeding and rearing of his pigs; and he will be sure to suit the most delicate stomach.—Sold by the side or half side, 6d. per lb.—Sent to any part of town carriage free.

DELICACY OF COMPLEXION.—The Use of GOWLAND'S LOTION is speedily followed by the disappearance of every species of cutaneous defect and discoloration, rendering the skin soft, fair, and blooming. A single trial it preserves the most susceptible complexion from the effects of sea, freckle, and sallow-vess and sustains its soft and delicate beauty to an early period. "ROBT. SEAR, Surgeon," is on the Stamp.—Prices, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. Sold by all perfumers, 26, Hatton-garden.

KETT'S CASTOR OIL POMATUM is the best preparation for encouraging the growth of the hair, and entirely preventing the accumulation of scurf. Its stimulating and cleansing properties eminently adapt it for the Bandoline. Sold in pots, 1s. and 2s. 6d. each, by G. Kett, No. 29, Fleet-street, Rayner, 150, Oxford-street; Ground, 49, Theobald's-street; and of all Chemists and Perfumers, through Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street.

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWING-ROOM, LIBRARY, &c., in Italian Alabaster, Marble, Bronze, and Derbyshire Spar, consisting of Vases, Figures, Groups, Candlesticks, Obelisks, Inkstands, Paper-weights, &c.—Imported by J. TENNANT (late MAWE); 149, Strand.—A very extensive assortment of Specimens, and Cases for Students in Geology, Mineralogy, or Conchology. Elementary Collections, from Two to Fifty Guineas each, and gives private instruction in Mineralogy.

BONNETS.—Leghorns, Tuscan, Fancy Chips, Dunstable, and Milinery Bonnets and Caps, from Paris, in all the New Shapes, possessing the advantage of giving a youthful and graceful appearance—a peculiarity confined to this house. The Prices are moderate, ranging from the full benefit of the New Tariff. Leghorns, 20s.; Children's Leghorn Hats, 6s. to 10s.; Tuscans, 8s. to 15s.; Dunstables, 6s. 6d. to 10s.; Paris Chips, for Bridal Bonnets, 14s. 6d.; Fancy Straws, 5s. to 10s.; Ladies' Hats, 1s. to 5s.; French Shapes, 7s. 6d. to 9s. 6d.; Tuscan Caps, 5s. to 8s. 6d. per doz. The Trade supplied.—J. SIMMONS, 20, King William-street, London-bridge, corner of Cannon-street.

TABLE-GLASS and CHINA.—APSLEY PELLATT, Falcon Glass Works, Holland-street, Blackfriars, respectfully solicits an inspection of his show-rooms for Cut, Engraved, Plain, Opaque, plain, cut, and engraved Table-glass of every description; new variegated Ceramic Flower-ornaments; China, and Earthenware; bulb cucumber Tubes, and other horticultural purposes; Chemical Apparatus, for admitting light into vaults and cellars; Chemical and Philosophical Glass, &c. Printed lists may be had on application. Days for viewing the manufactory—Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

CHASTON'S PATENT INDIAN-RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLASTERS are now generally admitted to be the most unique and best to eradicate either HARD or SOFT CORNS. From their elastic quality they can be worn with perfect ease, however tight the boot or shoe fits the foot. Invented and prepared by R. CHASTON, Chemist, Watton, Norfolk, and sold in Boxes 1s. 1½d. each. N.B.—On receipt of Thirteen Stamps (free) a box will be forwarded (also free) to any part of the kingdom.

PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS BAZAAR, 58, BAKER-STREET, PORTMAN-SQUARE.—Wholesale and Retail for the sale of GENERAL FURNISHING IRONMONGERY. Bright Stoves, Cooking Utensils, Table Cutlery, Papier Maché Tea Trays, Tea and Coffee Urns, best Sheffield Plate, German Silver Wares, Papier Maché Tea Trays, Tea and Coffee Urns, Stoves, Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders and Fire Irons, with Baths of all kinds, Gasaliers, Bed, cold, vapour, plunging Baths, Ornamental Iron and Wire Work, for Conservatories, Lawns, &c., and Garden Engines. All articles are of the very best description, and offered at exceedingly low prices, for cash only; the prices of each article being marked in plain figures.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is universally acknowledged to be the only article that will effectually produce and restore hair, prevent it from falling off or turning grey, free it from scurf and dandriff, and will render it delightfully soft and flexible. It will not preserve the coolure in the heated atmosphere of crowded assemblies.
CAUTION.—Ask for ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, and see that those words are on the Wrapper; all others are gross impositions.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s. Family bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.
Sold at 20, Hatton-garden, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, FIRE-PROOF SAFES, CASH-BOXES, &c.
CHUBB'S NEW PATENT DETECTOR LOCKS give perfect security from false keys, and may be fitted to any Street Door. They are made to all sizes, and for every purpose to which locks are applied. These locks are strong, secure, simple, and durable. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes and Boxes form a complete preservative from fire, and Cash-Boxes, Deed-Boxes, Japanned Iron and Wire Work, for Counters, Boxes of all sizes fitted with the New Patent Locks. A large assortment of the above on sale, by C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

DINNER, DESSERT, TEA, and TOILET SERVICES, &c.—HENDER and Co. announce that they have for inspection at their spacious Showrooms and Warehouses the largest Stock in London of New Patterns of the above Services in Porcelain, Ironstone China, and the newly-discovered semi-transparent Pearl Ware, equal in appearance to China, at a fourth the cost; a few Services of last season's Patterns at a reduction of twenty per cent.; a splendid selection of richly-cut Glass, in table and dessert dishes, decanters, tumblers, vases, &c., of every description. Papier maché trays, instands, and fancy ornaments in bronze, ormolu, china, &c. &c., in great variety.—311 and 320, High Holborn, opposite Gray's-inn-gate.

A LUXURY FOR WARM OR WET WEATHER.
BERDOE'S SUMMER VENTILATING WATERPROOF FROCK and LIGHT SUMMER COAT.—These novel and gentlemanly garments have already been adopted by a long list of the nobility, gentry, professional gentlemen, &c., and will prove well deserving the attention of all who regard a respectable and gentlemanly appearance in opposition to sleep, vulgarity, and meanness. Made to measure in the first style, but a large assortment always ready, of which an inspection is confidently invited. Warranted waterproof, without confining perspiration.—Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill, eight doors from Bishopsgate-street.

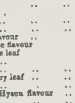
GOODWOOD RACES.—The TWO CUP DAYS.—The Nobility, Gentry, and Public are respectfully informed that the EARL OF MARCH Coach will leave the Bells Savauge, Ludgate-hill, at half-past Five, and Hatchett's White Horse Cellar, Piccadilly, at a quarter to Six, on THURSDAY, the 27th instant (the GOODWOOD CUP Day), for the course; and at the end of the day's racing will proceed to Chichester and Brighton.—The Earl of March will leave Brighton and Chichester at Ten, on FRIDAY (the CHESTERFIELD CUP Day), for the Races; and, on the conclusion of the meeting, will return to London, arriving by half past Eleven the same evening.

GOODWOOD RACES.—A GENTLEMAN'S HOUSE, completely furnished—three sitting-rooms, and eight or ten bed-rooms—TO LET, and provided. Also, several PRIVATE APARTMENTS for single gentlemen or families, may be obtained, by application to W. BALLARD, Dolphin Hotel, Chichester.—July 13, 1843.
N.B. The DUKE OF RICHMOND Coach will leave the Bolt-in Tun, Fleet-street, and Golden Cross, Charing-cross, on Thursday morning, the 27th (Cup day), at half-past Five, to enable the gentry to arrive in time for that day's races, and return the same afternoon from Goodwood to London.

SOMETHING QUITE NEW IN PAPIER MACHE.—MACEY, 4, Leadenhall-street, London, has just completed some extraordinary specimens of Tea-trays, Dressing-cases, Ink-stands, Writing-desks, Envelope-cases, and Workboxes, in Papier Maché, richly inlaid with Mother of Pearl, and ornamented in a most attractive manner. A few elegant Tables, Cabinets, and Jewel cases, of the same material, and a first-rate assortment of Papier Tea-trays, Pole-screens, Card-cases, Tea-caddies, Cornets, Ladies' Companions, Portfolios, Desks and Tea-baskets, Vases, and every description of Tortoiseshell and Ivory work. A visit to Macey's establishment will gratify, by exhibiting the most brilliant display of any in the fancy manufactures. Catalogues gratis. The regular assortment of Plated Dessert Knives, Sheffield Plate, Table Cutlery, Razors, Scissors, Penknives, &c.

LEA and PERRIN'S "WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE."—Prepared from the recipe of a nobleman in the county.—The above celebrated Sauce has, from the time of its introduction, been steadily progressing in public favour. Its popular piquancy, combined with exquisite flavour, establish it of a character unequal ed in essence, Mushroom, Anchovy, and others of science and long experience, it to be "the only good sauce," and for cunching gravies, or as a zest for fish, curries, steaks, game, cold meat, &c., especially unrivalled. As a rapid increasing inquiry is now made for it in all parts of the kingdom, the proprietors beg to state that druggists, grocers, and others may be supplied by their agents, Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; C. H. Nicholas, 19, Bolingbroke-row, Walworth; and at the Manufactory, Od Bargehouse, Christchurch, Surrey.

GINGER BRANDY.—This invaluable Liqueur continues to be manufactured by VINCENT and PUGH, the original Proprietors, at their Distillery, 16, Great Dover-street, Borough, and may be obtained of all the principal retail dealers in the metropolis, in bottles neatly sealed and labelled.
VP CONNOISSEURS IN SEALING-WAX have also fully rended in bringing to public notice the most perfect article ever yet offered, possessing both the delicacy of character and richness of bouquet natural to Cognac, they being supported in their assertion by the opinions of both the French growers, and the leading press in the English market.
The PALE BRANDY is particularly recommended as something extremely curious.



WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty, established 123 years, 4, Birchin-lane, Cornhill.—Every article worthy of the Second-hand Watches of any house in London, by the most eminent makers, many nearly equal to new, and all warranted. The above half their original cost, all of which Webster and Son warrant. They consist of fine repeaters, duplex lever and horizontal escapements, all of superfine manufacture. New Watches of the most elegant patterns upon the principle of their chronometers, to which the Government awarded the prizes three years in succession, with compensation balances to counteract the variations of temperature, also a large assortment of lever and elegant horizontal Watches for ladies and gentlemen, at considerably reduced prices. Old Watches taken in exchange. The strictest workmen are employed on the premises in the repairing department.
WEBSTER and SON, 3, Birchin-lane, Cornhill.

THE TEA ESTABLISHMENT, 4 and 5, KING WILLIAM-STREET, CITY.—The Overland Mail of the 10th instant confirms the accounts previously received of the favourable state of affairs in China, and of large shipments of Tea to this country. The effect will be a continuance of the low prices of Teas which have for some years past been generally prevalent in the market, and as a result a rule with the proprietors of this establishment to meet the various changes which take place, when those changes, as to the interest, are made by purchasers, and they have now to announce a reduction of 4d. per lb. on a good and fine Congou and Souchong, 8d. per pound on fine and superfine Hyson, and 8d to 10d per lb. on fine Gunpowder. These descriptions of Tea have never been known to change. The difference in value is too trifling to require notice. In the accompanying list of prices the consumer will obtain the full benefit of the alteration—

BLACK TEAS.

Ordinary to Good Ordinary Congou	..	2s 1d to 2s 3d per lb.
Useful Congou	..	2s 4d to 2s 6d
Good Congou, full flavour	..	2s 8d
Strong Congou, liquoring	..	2s 10d, equal to former 4s 0d
Fine Congou, Pekoe Souchong	..	3s 4d, equal to former 4s 8d
Finest Congou, very blackish leaf, full rich Pekoe Souchong flavour	..	4s 0d, equal to former 5s
Lapsang Souchong	..	4s 4d, equal to former 5s 8d
Finest Congou, rich Orange Pekoe, Hyson flavour	..	4s 8d

Besides the above kinds of Black Tea, there is a large stock of Sungpoo Souchong in the market at 2s 4d to 2s 8d per lb; but as the supply is small, greater part is sold. We give no quotations.

GREEN TEAS.

Common Twankay, or Hyson Skin	..	3s 8d to 3s 8d per lb.
Fine Twankay, bloom kind	..	3s 10d
Fine Hyson-kind	..	4s 0d
Good Hyson	..	4s 4d
Fine Hyson	..	4s 8d, equal to former 6s
Fine Hyson, fresh and full flavour	..	5s, equal to former 6s 8d
Superfine Hyson, rich and fine flavour	..	5s 6d, equal to former 8s
Superfine Hyson, bright close leaf	..	6s, equal, to former 7s
Young Hyson	..	4s 4d to 4s 8d
Preferable ditto	..	4s 8d to 5s
Fine Ouchoan, small close wiry leaf	..	5s 4d
Superfine ditto	..	5s 8d to 6s
Superfine Imperial, delicate Hyson flavour	..	5s 6d
Gunpowder, Canton kind	..	5s 6d to 4s 8d
Gunpowder, mixing sort	..	4s to 4s 8d
Good Gunpowder, Strong burnt flavour	..	4s 8d
Fine Gunpowder, even leaf	..	5s 4d
Finest Gunpowder, small close twisted leaf	..	6s 8d, equal to former 7s
Curious Gunpowder, small bright pearly leaf	..	7s 6d, equal to former 8s

COFFEE.

Trague, or common Plantation Coffee	..	9d to 1s per lb.
Ceylon Coffee	..	1s 2d
Fine Ceylon	..	1s 4d
Fine Country's Java	..	1s 7d
Fine Jamaica Coffee, or picked Java	..	1s 8d
Choice old Mocha	..	2s 10d, equal to former 2s 8d.

COCOA.

Best flaked Cocoa	..	7½d. per lb.
First-rate Cocoa, in ½-lb. packets	..	8d

TERMS.—Cash on delivery of Goods. To Parties residing in the country, if accompanying their Orders with a respectable reference, a remittance for the receipt of them will be satisfactorily made.
NOTICE.—This establishment was opened for the sale of Teas in October 1836, and was the means of reducing the price about one-fourth, or 2s per rent.
It has no connection whatever with any other house in London. The Proprietors think it necessary to mention this, as several persons have taken the liberty of copying their circulars, evidently with the intention of misleading the public.
RIDGWAY and COMPANY, 4 and 5, King William-street, City.
July 4, 1843.

EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF CURE IN BRITISH AMERICA.—Public attention is respectfully called to the following letter forwarded by Mrs. Fenwick, Bookseller, Boscawen, Province of New Brunswick, to the LIFE PILLS; another proof that this medicine is the most efficacious remedy of the present day:—

Boston, April 18, 1843.

Gentlemen,—My neighbour, Mr. John Costall, saddler and harness maker, of this borough, has this morning shown me a letter he has received from a near relative residing in Canada, which I have read; and has kindly consented to send the following paragraph therefrom, which I subjoin:—"Elizabeth has been very bad with the Liver complaint all winter, and Dr. Morrison says there is no hope for her recovery, as she has also a dropsical affection of the chest. She now sees no other health than she has done for ten years. They have also cured me of the Erysipelas and Sore Throat, with which I have been very sick."
The above plain statement speaks for itself, and is more gratifying to me from the fact, that the parties were the more readily induced to make trial of the Pills from seeing a testimony to its merits from
Gentlemen, yours truly,
J. NOBLE, Wholesale and Retail Agent, Boston, Lincolnshire.
P.S.—Mr. Costall or myself will be happy to answer any inquiries.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC
Many persons, after hearing of the wonderful cures that have been effected by PARR'S LIFE PILLS, have a great desire to procure this medicine when has done so much good. In doing this, however, caution must be observed, as certain individuals, without honour or principle, have sold dangerous substitutes, instead of the genuine medicine. The proprietors cannot, of course, be accountable for any untoward results that may ensue to those who have purchased spurious imposed upon, but they can point out an official means to prevent further imposition—viz., be particular to observe that round the sides of each box of the Genuine Medicine is pasted the Government stamp, on which is engraved, in White letters on a Red ground, the words, "PARR'S LIFE PILLS;" without this mark of authenticity they are spurious, and an imposition. Observe, also, that the signature of the sole proprietors is on each box, in the direction wrapped round each box—"T ROBERTS and Co."
Sold wholesale by E. Edwards, 67, St. Paul's; Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Sutton and Co., Bow Churchyard; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Mayhew, Manchester; and J. and R. Raines and Co., Edinburgh; and retailed by at least one agent in every town in the United Kingdom, and by most respectable dealers in patent medicines. Price 1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. 9d., each packet, 11s. each. Full directions are given with each box.

NOTICE.—All communications respecting the transmission or non-arrival of the paper, must be addressed only to the person who supplies the paper or who receives the subscription.

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 10, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and Published by WILLIAM LLOYD, at 66, Strand, where all communications for the Editor are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, July 15, 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 64.—Vol. III.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 22, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

NEGLECT OF THE POOR.

The readers of this journal will hardly have failed to notice our assiduity in seeking, both morally and physically, to better the condition of the lower classes of our fellow-subjects—to watch their interests with unsleeping anxiety—jealously to preserve to them their privileges, and defend them against the encroachments of power—and never to omit an opportunity of publishing cases of individual oppression, or of selecting instances of official grievance, to fix upon them the serious reflection and attention of society, and to evoke sympathy with, and indignation against, all needless suffering and wrongs. The spirit in which we have done this has not been a violent or disturbful one; it has not sought to add fuel to the flames of discontent—to pour oil upon the more fiery passions of the people—to wake useless repinings, and augment the unjust complainings of the idle, the dissolute, or the depraved; in fact, it has not addressed itself to the very classes upon whose condition it reflected—for the readers of this paper are most of them in higher walks of life—but it has sought to knock, for poverty's sake, at the doors of the heart of the world above it, and to request earnestly that they might be opened unto the poor. It must not be thought, then, that we overstrain the theme, or assume a canting virtue in our perseverance in their behalf, when we press into our service every fresh story of misery wedded by tyranny or cruelty to wrong, which the broad leaves of the morning journals unfold from day to day; for not only do we do so without the possibility of personal interest or advantage, but without one thought of party or political bias—one motive that does not spring from the purest wells of Christian feeling, and cling only to aspirations after what is just, charitable, and humane.

It has long been our opinion that habitual official neglect of the poor, and legislative neglect also, have been among the worst and most crying evils of our political system, and have gone far to increase and perpetuate that far-spread wretchedness which other social evils had superinduced. It is only now acknowledged that the reproach of not educating the lower classes—of giving them mental pabulum as well as bodily food—spiritual as well as physical subsistence—has fixed its enormity upon the community, and that there is no worldly sophistry that can elude its grasp. This reproach it seems all too difficult to remove, for, while all ranks admit its disgrace, and civilization cries aloud for its extinction, governments seem baffled as to the means of effecting this most national of objects, and the enterprise of private virtue is left weakly to essay the achieval of a glorious public good.

The same impediments, however, which have presented themselves to the practical philosophy of mentally elevating the lower classes, have never thrown up their barriers against any system of benevolence that could be devised for the national management and protection of our destitute poor. No contingencies of legislation, no necessities of political economy have demanded that cruelty should be an imperative ingredient in Poor-law administration. No human voice has had the hardihood to declare of our humbled poor that it is right to crush their spirits while we are relieving their wants—that, while giving them the bread of charity, we are to impregnate it with the bitterness of oppression—that we are to shelter them, and mock the natural hospitality of the heart—to clothe them, and weave into their raiment the petty meanness of official insolence, so that the garb of poverty shall seem to them the badge of spite and shame—in a word, to make them feel that poor men should have no affections, and that in their bosoms the chords of love should be broken, and the ties of kindred and brotherhood be rent. Because they break stones for us, we may not break hearts for them; we may not unstring the harp of humanity, and bid its music cease to the grieving spirit, and hush the soft murmurs of consolation in the desolate hovels of despair. Yet we are sure that our present Poor-laws have done much—far too much of this unseemly wrong, and that legislation has shown its utter and depraved heartlessness in nothing so much as in criminal neglect of the poor. The press literally groans with evidences of this guilty and melancholy truth. It shrieks in our gaols, moans in our workhouses, suffers mutely in our silent homes of poverty, and shivers with feeble wretchedness in our streets. Guardians and overseers and governors proclaim it with a brazen trumpet in our parishes; the police-offices echo its cries of horror or its sighs of woe; and the benevolent community is shocked and sorrowed by distresses which hardened legislation has still the bold cruelty to uphold. And this because men will not direct their attention to the details of pauperism, and to the manner in which in all parts of the country its legal remedies are applied. The great importance of the whole subject which has elicited these general remarks is, unfortunately, never without the illustration of individual example. For instance, we beg our readers to peruse the case which has immediately provoked this article. Two deplorable beings, a man and wife, are brought up upon the too common charge of street destitution. They have been respectable, indicate that they have seen better days, but they are starving, shelterless, tottering from debility in the highways of London, with clouds for their canopy, and drizzling rain soaking around them all the miserable night. In such a condition workhouses refuse them admission—even a magistrate's order is of no avail. "Mr. Coste told them he did not care if fifty magistrates had sent them, he should not admit them." At last the policeman, out of charity, charged them as vagrants, and got them, as prisoners, what he could not get them as paupers—a station-house shelter from the wretched inclemency of the night. The next day the magistrate, who sees the unfeigned illness and distress of the poor creatures, procures their admission to the workhouse; but only by a most determined course of conduct, accompanied by a threat to fine the authorities if they dared refuse to execute the mandate which he had felt himself bound to make. They were admitted accordingly; but, on the following Saturday, a devilish and cunning imposition was sought to be practised upon the justice who heard their case, only equalled in brutality by the cruelty which, in the first instance, refused to pity their destitution. We shall let the narrative make its own impression upon our readers.

Mr. Boyce, one of the Shoreditch guardians, accompanied by the doctor of the workhouse, came to the court, and made the following application to Mr. Broughton.

Mr. Boyce stated, that two paupers had been taken into the workhouse by desire of Mr. Broughton, who, it had been ascertained, were infected with the itch, and as they were very troublesome and obstinately refused to be cured, he (Mr. Boyce) wished to be informed if they would be justified in locking them up in a room by themselves and adopting such coercive measures as would be necessary to cure them, or that the parish officers should bring them to that court, and have them punished for their contumacy.

Mr. Broughton said they could not be sent to prison to spread the infection—the visiting justices would complain of such a course. All workhouses were, or ought to be, provided with accommodation for cases of this kind, and he was of opinion that the parish officers would be justified in using coercion under such circumstances, and separating these paupers from the rest of the establishment, for the sake of cleanliness.

Mr. Boyce: And if they resist our taking their clothes off and putting on others, we shall be justified in using force to them?

Mr. Broughton: Certainly.

Mr. Boyce and the medical gentleman, in making this application, abstained from mentioning that the parties they referred to were the unfortunate people in the above case; but just as they were leaving the court this fact was communicated to the magistrate by Mr. Hurlstone, the clerk; upon which

Mr. Broughton instantly ordered them to be called back, and addressed them in the following terms:—"I cannot too strongly express my indignation, Mr. Boyce, that you should have attempted to practise this trick and deception upon the Court. I had not the remotest idea, when I gave my sanction to the course you suggested, that your application referred to the parties I have since ascertained that it did, for not one word to lead me to such a conclusion did you or the medical officer say. I was under the impression, from what you stated, that you referred to some filthy and outrageous paupers, who, coming into your house with an infectious disease, from purely refractory motives refused to be cured of it, and with such persons the course I indicated would have been very proper to adopt; but instead of such being the case, I find it refers to two very decent and respectable people—people not often placed in such an unfortunate situation, and who when they came before me appeared perfectly clean and healthy. These unfortunate people apply to your workhouse for relief, and they are refused it; they then apply to me, and I direct Holland to take them again to your house and get them admitted, with a direction from me to that effect; the officer does so, and they are again positively refused; Holland has no place to take them to, and is obliged to leave them in the streets; and at 12 o'clock at night these poor creatures are met by a policeman under most distressing circumstances—both of them wet through, and the woman (and a most respectable woman she appears to be) in such a state of exhaustion and illness, that the officer has the greatest difficulty in getting her to the station-house, whence the sergeant on duty very properly again sends her to your workhouse, accompanied by the officer, but only, ill as she was, to be again repulsed; and, in the end, the officer is absolutely obliged to charge them at the station-house, and place them at that bar like criminals, to provide these poor unfortunate people with a night's shelter. It is true they are now in the workhouse, but it was only when I had issued an order to that effect, and had expressed my determination to follow that order up by a fine upon the relieving-officer, in the event of his non-compliance with it, that they were at last admitted. I am extremely sorry to find that a strong prejudice exists in the minds of the parish officers with regard to these poor people, and I must say that the conduct of the parish is most extraordinary, unprecedented, and unbecoming; and you will now understand me, gentlemen, in the most distinct, clear, and positive terms, to withdraw the opinion I before expressed - an opinion I would never have delivered had I known the persons to whom it applied. As something serious is likely to result from this matter I desire that Mr. Hurlstone will take a note of my positive withdrawal of my opinion on it, and I likewise call upon Holland, the officer, to recollect that I have done so.

The rebuke of the magistrate is dignified and does him honour; and we hope that the officials may yet reap the just punishment of their mean and guilty tyranny, and of that pitiful vengeance of depravity which would thus wreak its spite, against a hostile decision, upon the suffering wretchedness of two poor creatures broken in happiness, in fortune, and in health!

In another of the morning papers we find an inquest upon a pauper woman who had died in childbed from the neglect of the assistant to the parish surgeon—a boy of nineteen experimentalizing his carelessness upon the life of one of the poor! The jury in strong terms recorded their reproach of the enormity, but we have not heard that their verdict has called the hapless young mother back to her mourning friends from the grave, or that any other punishment has been awarded to the guilty culpability which has only added another to the thousand public instances of wicked, wanton, and indefensible neglect of the poor.

MADRID, WITH THE ROYAL PALACE.—See next page.

MADRID.

We here present our readers with a view of Madrid, the capital of that unfortunate country which appears fated to never know tranquility or peace, and which is now convulsed to its very centre. The letter of our Paris Correspondent will be found to contain an interesting detail of the state of affairs in Spain. The following are the latest accounts:

TELEGRAPHIC DESPATCHES.

"PERPIGNAN, July 17. -Majoras pronounced on the 14th, and General Tacon was appointed President of the Junta of Safety of the Balearic Islands.

"General Cortinez has left Lerida for the Seo d'Urgel.

"SERRANO, with three brigades, commanded by Brigadier Prim and Colonels Concha and Cordova, forming an effective force of 7000 infantry, 1300 cavalry, and three batteries of artillery, marched to Mequinenza, whence he was to proceed to Molina.

"NARVAEZ left Calatayud on the 10th with 12 battalions and 1000 horse to march upon Madrid. Castro has been appointed deputy commander of Catalonia and Governor of Barcelona, where he arrived on the 15th."

"MADRID, July 14.—General Aspiroz, with 5000 infantry, 700 horse, and two batteries of artillery, slept last night at El Pardo. The entire militia is under arms.

"NARVAEZ is to arrive to-morrow before Madrid with twelve battalions and 1100 horses.

"According to the last accounts the Regent was marching towards Bayten, with the intention, it is said, of going to Cadiz."

A rumour, orig nating in a well-informed quarter, was afterwards circulated upon the Bourse, to the effect that a telegraphic despatch upon Madrid had also been received, announcing that an engagement had taken place on the 14th between the populanon of Madrid and the corps of General Aspiroz, the result of which was the retreat of the troops. Mendizabal was represented as having distributed arms to the populace, and declared that if 500 d be sufficient if Madrid could hold out for two or three days to give time for the arrival of Z rbano and Seoane, who were advancing to the relief of the capital. The gates of Madrid were said to be guarded by strong columns of militia and by artillery; and Aspiroz, having been unsuccessful in his first attempt, is stated to have retired upon his position at Pardo, whence he would not quit to move until joined by Narvaez, who was expected on the evening of the 15th.

The conjecture by which alone we could account for the rapidity and decision with which Narvaez exchanged his defensive position in Valencia for a march between two hostile armies and upon Madrid, has been fully confirmed. It is now evident that the plan of the insurrect n was to excite the troops and the populace to pronounce against the Government in every province, and then for the leaders of the revolt to converge simultaneously upon the capital. This movement has been so well combined that Aspiroz arrived from the north on the heels of the Manzarres at the very moment that Narvaez is reported to have possessed himself of the road between Saragossa and Madrid.

Everything and everybody in Spain have thus "pronounced against the Regent—disparity has pronounced against itself—the troops in the garrisons and even the ships in the harbours, the magistrates in the cities and the peasants in the Vegas, the birds of the air and the beasts of the field, either by foreign influence, or by some epidemic, or by spontaneous combustion, have suddenly converted the Government itself into a sort of fugitive insurrection, and the constitutional head of the state and general of the Queen's armies into an outlaw. Nothing more inaccountable e ver fell out in history. Up to a certain point the Regent acted with all the energy and apparent success which the emergency required. He dismissed the Lopez cabinet, and dissolved the Cortes with a perfect knowledge that he would have to encounter the whole force of the opposition elsewhere than in the legislative bodies or the electoral assemblies. When the insurrection broke out, he marched against it with sufficient promptitude; but from the moment he reached Aranjuez his councils, whether civil or military, have been totally paralysed. Every opportunity, and they have not been wanting, has passed away; till the Regent appears to be left entirely to his own resources, if indeed that can be called a contest in which the Government has not seriously unsheathed its sw .

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

SPAIN.—(From our Paris Correspondent.)—PARIS, July 18.—It would be useless to enumerate the different towns now in the hands of the insurgents, or to describe the number of battalions deserted to them; suffice to say, the cause of Espartero is lost. Anarchy, disorder, and military despotism have triumphed. The whole of Catalonia, with the exception of Seo d'Urgel and Fort Montjuich, has been abandoned by Zurbano. Even Leida, the besieging of which in 1810 raised Suchet to the rank of field marshal, has been evacuated without the slightest struggle: the Balearic Islands have declared against Espartero; the Basque provinces, the inhabitants of which were his staunchest friends, no longer acknowledge him, the army of which not twelve months since he was the idol now declare him a traitor, and receive such proclamations as the following with shouts of applaus-

" Barcelona, July 12, 1843.

"A proclamation has been addressed to the inhabitants, informing them of the flight of Zurbano from Lerida, and thanking the people of this part of the country for their efforts against the infamous traitor of Buen-a-vista (Espartero), who, raised from the ranks by the suffrages of the people, sold to a stranger (England) his country and his honour. The proclamation goes on to seek refuge on board an English vessel, or to be exposed on a gibbet on the place of the Cebada. People of Spain, you are the admiration of the whole of Europe."

Thus has fallen Espartero, Duke of Victory—he whom Christina honoured with the title of "Saviour of the Country!" Great blame is attributable to Espartero for his want of energy. When he quitted Madrid, and that fourteen days ago too late, it was generally supposed that he intended immedia.ely to attack Valona; had he done so, it is more than probable that he would have succeeded; but after wasting a considerable time at Alcasser, he with difficulty marched to Val de Penas —honoured twice the Sierra Morena, directing his course to Bayten—and by this time he is either in Cadiz or not far from it, having with him only 3000 infantry and about 800 cavalry, and separated from General Van Halen. It is said, and I am inclined to believe with some truth, that the army with Espartero revolted at Bazaote, having at its head the famous regiment of Lusitana, commonly called "Espartero's Janissaries," and that he owed his safety to the speed of his horse, and three squadrons of cavalry. The insurgents, on the other hand, have acted with an energy and decision worthy of a better cause. Immediately on the last, at the head only of 4000 infantry and 300 . . . . . ll to at General Enabe fore Teruel, and by marches and counter-marches, showing much military tactics, he is now not far from Madrid, ... with hun upwards of 10,000 infantry and 2000 cavalry. Madrid itself; it is surrounded by three divisions: on the one side, General Urbina with the garrison of Badajoz; on the north, General Concha and Amor, with eight battalions of infantry, 500 cavalry, and two batteries of artillery; and on the side of Aragon, Navaez. General Ivisate to defend Madrid (not fortified), has only the National Guard, greatly divided in opinion; three companies of pioneers, 300 cavalry, and the depôt of the different battalions with Espartero. It is more than probable that Mendizabal will capitulate; indeed, I am assured that he has promised the Regent regents in Madrid that in case they do not to shed the blood of his countrymen in a cause which, to say the least, he considered desperate. After this assurance, the Duke de Glucxtandt and Mr. Addington offered his partner's hands and honourable protection to the Regent or England. His reply does him great credit. "I cannot accept your generous offer," said he; "I am not sufficiently rich to live either in London or Paris; a Spanish colony is the only refuge proper for a poor exile." But one thing I must demand," continued he, "is for my wife and her personal property."

Little is known of the movements of General Van Halen; it is reported that he has crossed the Regent; I should not be surprised if this were true. Van Halen's reputation dates from the war of independence. The last accounts of this general stated, that, after putting Cordova in a state of defence, he had marched in the direction of Seville.

Insurrection triumphs! but, as was once observed by Napoleon, "it is the commencement of the end." The troubles of Spain will now really begin; the struggle will be between Lopez and Narvaez, between the tools of Lafayette and the Christino moderates. France must protect Christina. Louis Philippe and the Queen's mother are strongly compromised, and must now together act. But the struggle can be of short duration; the majority of the Spanish nation will never permit his meddling in their affairs; the blood made use of him as a powerful auxiliary against Espartero; but neither he or his country now will be ever popular on the other side of the Pyrenees.

The first serious attention should now be directed to the movements of the French Government; and, as far as I am able, you shall be kept well-informed. The departure yesterday of the Duke de Montpensier from Paris is of more importance than is generally imagined. It is supposed that the youth of the duke will prevent suspicion; but a deep scheme has been laid, and, ere long, you will hear of marriage (the Pyrenees) of the Duke d'Aumale—the future husband of Queen Isabella, as he is generally called by the sycophants of the Tuileries.

The French intend sending an imposing marine force into the Mediterranean at the end of August or the beginning of September; there will be present 8000 Sadian troops, several princes, and many diplomatic personages of high standing: the fortress will be able to contain 40,000 men.

A serious accident has happened to the reigning Duke of Oldenbourg: he fell from his horse, put his shoulder out, and received many severe contusions. Should the Duke die, which must be appointed, the Hereditary Prince, born on the 2nd of July, 1827, not being of age—his majority is eighteen years of age.

Two railroads have been opened in Prussia—one from Magdebourg, by Gross Ocherseleben to Halderstadt; and the other, Brunswick to Gross Ochers eben.

Arrangements are being made between the French and Austrian Governments for the forwarding of letters without being obliged, as at present, to pay the postage beforehand.

It is said that the triumphal arch of Djimlah will be brought from Algeria and erected in Paris, at the foot of the bridge of Jena, near to the Champs de Mars.

The Duc de Nemours will reach Caen on the 29th. The royal family, after assisting at the funeral service, on the 13th, at Dreux, returned the next day to Paris.

The municipal authorities have decided on throwing a suspension-bridge across the Seine, at Bercy; the want of a bridge at this part of Paris has been much felt, and continued petitions have been sent to the préfet.

The truly benevolent Polish Princess Czartorysska has purchased for £6400 the celebrated Hotel Lambert, in the Isle Saint Louis.

The directors of the Verviers Railway have placed a novel carriage of two stories on the line. The upper story is destined to the curious traveller, to enable him with ease to take notes of the surrounding scenery.

The ballet "La Peri" was brought out last night at the Grand Opera. I am told it was well received. You shall have full particulars in my next.

The success of the highly talented vaudevillist, Offenbach, at the Festival of Douai was most flattering. Such was the enthusiasm of the audience that immediately after the festival his portra t was exhibited in a most every shop, with the following description, "In remembrance of the second concert of Douai, given the 11th of July, 1843." A compromise has been effected between the director of our Grand Opera and Fanny Elsaler, condemned for breach of contract in 60,000 francs damages. Mr. Lenox Pillet has consented to take 30,000 francs, and Fanny is shortly expected in Paris. Madame Rossi decidedly quits the Opera Comique; she has accepted an engagement for the month of September in Lisbon, Madame Damoreau is shortly expected in Paris, having received fifteen months' leave of absence from the Emperor of Russia. Mr Prume, a talented violinist, but better known as the composer of "La Mélancolie," died on Sunday last in one of our madhouses. The opera of "Eddine" is a deplorable fiasco.

The poet Kind, the author of the poem of "Freyschutz," died on the 25th of June at Dresden, on the very day on which the theatre of that city gave the 112th performance of that renowned opera.

A great musical festival is preparing at Baden Baden, under the auspices of M. Bennazi. The orchestra and chorus will be composed of more than 300 performers.

The son of Lanner, the well known leader in Vienna, only eight years of age, has composed a waltz and polka, for a full orchestra, and which was performed on the 22nd of June before an audience of 2000 persons, the élite of the Austrian capital. The infant pro igy was carried by the audience in triumph to his mother. The Italian Opera at Vienna closed on the 1st of July, after a most profitable season.

The Italian Opera at Amsterdam opens next month. Amongst the artists already engaged are Conti, now in London; Derivis, Gueli, and Donatelli. The Italian Opera at Oporto is highly spoken of. Its company is composed of Ferlotti, Jantana, Vitalli, Galli, Salavi, and Ekerin.

Liszt is staying at Nonenwerth, near to Bonne. It is expected that he will remain on the banks of the Rhine the greater part of the summer. Standigl has been engaged for eight months, from August next, at the principal theatre of Vienna. Ricci's opera, "Un avventura di Scaramuccia," was represented at Athens with great success.—A Philharmonic Society has been organised at Algiers. Several Italian artists have already become mem-ber-

Four o'clock.

I have just learnt from a highly respectable source that, if possible, Espartero will endeavour to get to the Havannah and join General Valdes, his most intimate friend, the Viceroy of the Island. I am positively assured that a letter has been received in Paris by a first-rate Spanish banking house from Espartero to that effect.

The following information may be interesting to your mercantile readers. From official documents it has been ascertained that the average dividend on bankruptcies in Paris was, in 1835, 13 per cent.; in 1836, 20 per cent.; in 1837, 14½ per cent.; in 1838, 20½ per cent.; in 1839, 22 per cent.; in 1840, 15 per cent.; and in 1841, 14 per cent.

Was lately married at Berlin, Mr. Eichhorn, son of the Minister of Instruction and Religion, to Miss Schelling, daughter of the celebrated philosopher.

It is said that Admiral Leray has been appointed Commander of the French Fleet in the Mediterranean. Admiral Furpré replaces Admiral Fairac on the Algiers station.

PORTUGAL.—We have received accounts from Lisbon to the 10th inst., by the Liverpool Peninsular steamer, which arrived at Southampton on Monday. The state of Spain has produced a great sensation in Portugal, and every precaution was being adopted to prevent the disturbance of pub ic order in Portugal, by the possible effect of success on the part of the pronunciados. The cruiser Don Miguel was ordered to the coast of Algarve on the south of Portugal of the partisans of either side, and in Lisbon various restrictive measures were in progress to be enforced on the first show of popular symbathy with the proceedings in Spain. The Duke de Palmella had tendered his resignation as President of the Council and Minister of War. The most important part of the news by the arrival is that the Cortes had been closed by a royal "declared" on the 5th instant, at Algesiras, which port she had been sent to blockade. Seville, Malaga, Barcelona, and Valencia—indeed all the towns on the coast, with the exception of Cadiz, have "declared" against the cause of Espartero. The authorities at Cadiz had refused all intercourse with the other ports. The confinement of the Queen of Portugal may be looked for within another month. The Infanta Isabella Maria has returned to Lisbon.

ALEXANDRIA, June 16.—A murder committed by a Turk upon a young Frenchman has caused a great deal of sensation amongst the European residents here. The Turk, it appears, had forcibly entered his victim into his house under some false pretence, and there throttled him, and threw the body afterwards into the sea. Upon the requisition of the French Consul-General, Mehemed Ali ordered the principal officer of police (nazir) of the province to arrest the murderer, who soon found out the perpetrator of the horrid deed, his own wife, who had previously sued for a divorce, betraying him. He was sentenced to be hung, and on the scaffold he begged to be allowed once more to see his only son, a young man twenty-two years o d, and, upon the latter being brought before him, he ordered and inspired him to kill his own mother and at least two Europeans. With the first of these mandates the young man accordingly proceeded on the spot, by hurling a large stone at the unfortunate woman's head, which nearly proved fatal. The Pasha has sent the young wretch to Upper Egypt to work in the mines for life.

GREECE.—ATHENS, June 30.—The representatives of the three allied powers have received their answer from King Otho. He has very plainly and candidly told them that he will not pay, at present, the arrears of interest on the guarantee loan. He has remained firm to his resolution that three powers will do, but it is quite certain that they will get nothing without using coercion. The Greeks seem so convinced that the allies must actively interfere, that they have ceased to take any notice of the violent menaces of themselves. The country is perfectly quiet in all parts. With moderately good government a revenue might be obtained amply sufficient for paying not only the interest on the loan, but the principal in a few years. At least this is the opinion of the most respectable and talented Greeks. Almost all the Athenian newspapers are filled with most violent articles against the King and his employés. These papers are seized as soon as they appear; but the printers take care to have plenty of copies concealed, which are forthwith circulated extensively.

WEST INDIES.—By the mail steam-ship Tweed, Captain Sharpe, arrived at Falmouth on Sunday morning, from St. Thomas's 29th June, Bermuda 1st July, and Fayal on the 10th. Passengers:—Colonel and Mrs. Turner, Mr. A. C. Bagot, and Mrs. Cuppidge and son, Mr. Hodge, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Mathews, Mr. Dick, Mr. Julian, Mr. J. P. Julian, Mr. Salmon, Mr. Navis, Mr. Hackshaw, Dr. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Sutherland, Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds and child, Mr. M. T. Betteridge, Mr. Haynes, Mr. Rees, Mr. and Mrs. Stubbs and child, Baron Karwinski, Miss Karwinski, Mr. Leal, and Mr. Dart and lady. The Forth, from Havannah, conveyed to Bermuda the intelligence that Espartero had left the island for St. Thomas's, to come up with the next mail for England. The l . . . . by the Severn had arrived out. The Medway and the Ta . . . . St. Thomas's. The freight of the Tweed consists of 446 packages of . . . . about 700 ounces of gold. Her Majesty's ship Pique was a . . . . The Comet French steamer of war had been on shore near Guadaloupe, but was got off without receiving damage. Two smart but momentary shocks of earthquake had been felt at Antigua on the 9th and 11th of June. The . . . . . ptain Jessamine, and her infant daughter, died on the 4th of June, at Antigua. Mr. Betteridge, the late colonial agent for Bermuda, who was the daughter of . . . . Cumming Bruce, Esq., was married to the Earl of Elgin, governor of . . . . ral of Jamaica, April 22, 1841; has left issue a daughter, born June 19, 1842. The whole of the West India Islands are represented in a very healthy state.

We extract the following from the Antigua Weekly Register of the 13th of June, with reference to the great earthquake which appears to exist in that island of perpetual beauty and terrific horrors. The recent earthquake of the 11th: "Count of Queen's Bench and Grand Sessions, held at St. John's, Antigua, 8th of June. The Grand Jury, amongst others, made the following presentment:—"During the state of the deplorable state to which the agricultural interest of the country has been reduced from the inadequate supply of labour to carry on the cultivation, arising in part from the extended employment of carpenters, masons, and their attendants, and consequent greater absorption of labour, and in some measure from a general unwillingness on the part of the labouring classes to render their services unless induced by exorbitant and unreasonable wages, does not think it would be performing its duty were it to leave the court without calling to its serious notice the ruinous consequences which must result to the community at large. The Grand Jury feels it imperative on it earnestly to recommend to the court that such prompt and decided steps should be taken to avert the impending ruin as to the court in its wisdom may seem fit."

MEXICO.—Advices have been received from Mexico by way of Havannah to the 4th of June from the city of Mexico and from Vera Cruz. The son of Santa Anna had arrived in the capital from Yucatan with the official particulars of the surrender of Barragan, of whom it is said he acted de-camp, to the insurgents near the city of Merida. They do not materially vary from those already published. The Mexican papers were occupied with discussions about the negotiations known to be in progress for effecting a pacification with Texas. The insurrection which had broken out in the south appeared to be still in progress, and General Bravo had advised the Government that 2000 or 4000 Indians, composing his chief body, were encamped in the vicinity of Chitapa, where they had declared for the federal system. He himself was unable to resist them, having only 200 recruits at his disposal.

AMERICA.—The fine packet-ship Garrick, Captain Keddy, arrived at Liverpool on Tuesday afternoon from New York, after a twenty-one days' passage, with papers to the 26th ult.

The accounts from Canada, relative to the riots on the Beauharnois Canal, state that the insubordination still continued: that the rioters had been furnished with arms and ammunition, by persons not known; that a reinforcement of 300 men had arrived from Lachine, and that another conflict with the authorities might speedily be looked for.

A new plan, wrested in his cou ch out by him in favour of Texas and Yucatan, is anxious for peace. He had made a proposition that two commissioners from each Republic should meet him in the city of Mexico to agree upon terms. As all parties seem tired of the slaughter and misery which it can hardly be called—have already brought that first embarked in it, there seems little doubt that it will now be brought to a close.

Beyond the announcement of the death of the Hon. Mr. Legare, the attorney-General, who expired at Boston, and is described as an able and accomplished man, and since the retirement of Mr. Webster, Secretary of State, there is no news worth recording from the United States.

A repeal meeting had been held at Boston, when Robert Tyler, the son of the President, made a pompous inflated speech in favour of repeal. It did not, however, do much for the rent, for not more than 250 dollars were subscribed by a meeting, which the Boston Post describes as most numerous and enthusiastic. It would appear that Mr. O'Connell's just and indignant denunciation of slavery wherever it exists, has caused considerable irritation on the part of the Irish-American party in the United States. There was a stormy discussion at a repeal meeting held at Philadelphia on the 21st ult; it was stated that the on y object of the association was to obtain a separate and independent Legislature for Ireland, and "to be translated as they find it;" but there is no doubt that some harm has been done to the cause in America by the Liberator's abolition crusade.

A Miss Catherine Gilmour, alias Cochrane, who died from Scotland in January last, to avoid a charge of murdering her husband, has been arrested and claimed by the British Consul at New York, and after undergoing examination, was remanded. She is described as most numerous and enthusiastic. It would appear that Mr. O'Connell's just and indignant denunciation of slavery wherever it exists, has caused considerable irritation on the part of the Irish-American party in the United States. There was a stormy discussion at a repeal meeting held at Philadelphia on the 21st ult; it was stated that the on y object of the association was to obtain a separate and independent Legislature for Ireland, and "to be translated as they find it;" but there is no doubt that some harm has been done to the cause in America by the Liberator's abolition crusade.

A Miss Catherine Gilmour, alias Cochrane, who died from Scotland in January last, to avoid a charge of murdering her husband, has been arrested and claimed by the British Consul at New York, and after undergoing examination, was remanded. She is described as the last man, in order to afford her counsel a chance of establishing a plea of insanity. She is the first person arrested under the new treaty.

A destructive fire took place at Beauchenille, a village on the banks of the St Lawrence, which destroyed 52 houses, besides other buildings, including the church, convent, and school house.

BUSINESS.—The week now past was dull, the spring trade, which had been unusually brisk this year, having ceased. The markets generally were heavy—that of cotton especially. The only exception was the grain market, which, like that on the side of the water at the present moment, was brisk, with rising prices. The exchange on England was 10⅝, and on France 5 90 and 5⅝.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Lord BROUGHAM gave notice that on Monday next he would move that Mr. Wm. Brown, of the Kendal Gazette, should be called to their lordships' bar, for a breach of privilege committed by him in having attributed improper motives to the noble lord for introducing a declaratory bill to their lordships, implying that it was so introduced in reference to a trial about to take place at the next Westmoreland assizes, in which he (Lord Brougham) had a personal interest. The Earl of ABERDEEN having moved the third reading of the Church of Scotland Benefices bill, Lord COTTENHAM rose and moved the amendment of which he had given previous notice, "That all the declaratory words, and the words 'as part and the commencement of the proceedings in the examination and admission of the person presented for the cure of souls,' be left out, and the trial of his gifts and qualities,'" be omitted —The LORD CHANCELLOR said that the object of this bill was to tranquillise the minds of the Scottish people on a most important subject. It object was to secure to the Church that a person well qualified to discharge the duties of a minister. Was the Presbytery the proper tribunal to judge? Who could doubt it? Were the proposed limitations under which they were to exercise this power correct and proper? He had heard no objections urged in this respect. Did this bill encroach on the rights of patrons? Not at all. Under these circumstances would their lordships refuse to pass it on account of some objections in point of form, for which, after all, he did not believe any good foundation existed? He trusted that their lordships would resist the amendment.—Lord CAMPBELL viewed the measure in a totally different light from the noble and learned lord. He thought it would produce, instead of harmony, nothing but discord and dissatisfaction, and cause great prejudice to an established church. He had been always averse to any interference with the legislative bodies affecting unjustly the rights of patrons. This bill, instead of making the Church of Scotland, as it had hitherto been, more popular and more venerated, perhaps, than any other Church—instead of making it what it was now, as the church of the whole population, would make it the church of the minority. From such evils it was his heartfelt wish to exempt his native country.—The EARL of ABERDEEN said if the noble and learned lord had been active acted upon it would tend to disestablish the Church of Scotland. The General Assembly in the year 1833 had adopted the same resolutions, which were re-enacted since 1834 to 1838, and which the present bill only proposed to put them into this bill. He did not anticipate any ecclesiastical tyranny to arise out of the passing of this bill, as had been predicted. He hoped that that wise and moderate course the noble earl's bill would never have t e effect of allaying the irritation which at present prevailed in Scotland or pacify the people, or satisfy in the slightest degree the Presbyterians of that country. As a person, he considered the bill on general grounds, because he thought that it would cause a direct transference from those who at present held the patronage to the church itself. There were upwards of a million of seceders from the Church of Scotland who would not accept that bill.—Lord COTTENHAM replied. His object in moving the amendment was that the law should be enacted and not made declaratory.—The question was then put, and the amendment was negatived without a division.—Upon the question that the bill do pass, Lord COTTENHAM moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read this day three months.—After a few words from the Earl of ABERDEEN the amendment was negatived without a division, and the bill was read a third time and passed.—Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY

Lord J. RUSSELL gave notice of his intention of moving an address to her Majesty, praying her Majesty to direct her attention to measures for the improvement of education in Great Britain, and assuring her that Parliament would concur in any improvement of the kind. Mr. HUME moved that there should be issued for the city of Durham —Mr. HUME opposed the motion.—After a short discussion, the motion for issuing the writ was carried by a majority of 128. The numbers were 144 and 16, when the house resumed, having made but little progress with the clauses.—On the order of the day being read for the house went into committee on the Irish Arms Bill, in which many verbal amendments were made, and

CAMPBELL said this was a most important clause. It related to the defence to actions for libel. This clause abolished the law which allowed truth to be pleaded as a bar to a civil action. He moved an amendment that both in civil and criminal cases truth may be pleaded, but then it must be accompanied by a plea that it was beneficial to the public. The clause as amended, and the other clauses to clause 7, were agreed to.—On clause 7, Lord CAMPBELL said he proposed that the present law should be altered to assimilate the law in such proceedings as the Townshend Peerage Bill; for instance, to proceedings in courts of law. This would not be a sanction to members for publishing slanderous language, and to gentlemen, because ill afterwards themselves, because that would be a clear case of slander, for which they would be liable. For instance, there had been accusations, some time since, against the learned and excellent Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas that were a scandal to the House of Commons. He hoped their lordships would retain the clause, which had been founded on the tenth resolution of the committee relating to ex parte proceedings. He proposed to introduce in line two of the clause, that no action for libel shall be maintainable for publishing, "without proof of actual malice."—The Lord CHANCELLOR doubted whether actual malice could, in many cases, be proved.—Lord CAMPBELL said he had thought it necessary to guard against wrong being thus inflicted, by moving the insertion of these words.—Lord BROUGHAM suggested that case. Suppose a member of Parliament got up in the House and asserted that the Sovereign had no title, and recommended assassination. Lord CAMPBELL said that was provident for, as the bill enacted that the publication of any matter should not be at variance with the standing orders. He thought the sooner they got rid of those standing orders the better. He thought it was not creditable for the house to have stood up contrary to the wishes of every individual, and which they wished to be violated. (A laugh.)—Lord BROUGHAM thought his noble and learned friend should not enter into the wide and important question of Parliamentary privileges on such an occasion as the present. He agreed with Sir Samuel Romilly, that their standing orders were to be delicately and carefully dealt with, because they were generally found to be the practical result of considerable and long experience—veiling the evil and suggesting the remedy—and their being long retained was a proof of their essential character. It had been properly stated to be important to maintain the standing orders for the exclusion of strangers and the non publication of the debates; and he thought they should not be the best possible judges if they were never or rarely exercised; but it was the knowledge of the power existing that rendered their exercise unnecessary. Other countries were of the same opinion upon this subject. He had been in France for the opinion stated that, at the time of the French revolution, it had always been imputed to the interference of the public that many of the worst proceedings of those troubled times were owing. Men in France had told him, "We look with envy and admiration at the better course you have taken in England, as I consider that, if we had observed your rules, we should not have had to lament the dreadful scenes that marred the fair prospects of the earlier part of our revolution." Upon the whole, he was most reluctantly obliged to state that his opinion was again at the clause.—After a few words from the Lord CHANCELLOR, Lord CAMPBELL said that he could not abandon the clause.—The house was then cleared for a division. The numbers were, Contents, 51; non-contents, 11; majority against the clause, 6. Clause 11 was then agreed to, as was also clause 12, regarding costs, with amendments.—Lord CAMPBELL said he proposed to omit clauses 13 and 14, not on the ground that he disapproved of their enactment, but that they were unnecessary, as the law at present made the intended proprietor liable, not only for stamps and advertisement duties, but for costs and damages that might be recovered in any actions against the paper.—The Lord CHANCELLOR having asserted to the same effect, they were struck out of the bill.—The bill then went through committee. The house resumed, and the report was ordered to be received on Friday next. Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

There being only 18 members present at four o'clock, the house adjourned till WEDNESDAY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY.

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

Mr. S. CRAWFORD gave notice that on the bringing up of the report on the Irish Arms Bill he would move a resolution to the effect that the unrestricted power of carrying and using arms for all legal purposes is an inherent right enjoyed by Irishmen and Scotchmen, and one of the essential safeguards of freedom, and that the limit imposed on that right with respect to arms is an unwilling and unjust disinction, and a violation of that equality of rights which is the only just basis of imperial legislation.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE made it a matter of complaint that the Government had not made a house on the previous evening, when there were some important subjects for discussion, and moves that the dropped orders of Tuesday should have precedence of other business. Sir R. PEEL said he was quite so, however, the decision on coming down to the house on Tuesday evening, about 20 minutes past four, to find that a count was waiting. He has, to-day, however, that the members of the Government had been much interfered with in their departments, and had no right to be exclusively responsible for not making a house, the onus lying quite as much upon the opposition as upon the ministerial side.—After a short conversation, Sir C. Douglas said that Lord John Russell was to blame for not making a house, as he had an important motion on the paper.—Mr. FREMANTLE said it had been his fate to sit on both sides of the house, and while he shared the responsibilities of opposition, he always felt it his duty to assist in making a house, if any of his friends had motions to bring forward.—Ultimately, at the suggestion of Sir G. GREY, Mr. Duncombe withdrew his motion.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL moved, pursuant to notice, that leave be given to the sergeant-at-arms to plead to the action commenced against him by Mr. Pearse.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE regretted the absence of Sir T. Wilde, for he thought the country had a right to be paid dearly enough for the blunders committed in the course of former actions. Now that people saw the house wavered in supporting its privileges, they might rely upon it that they would have enough of such actions. The authority of the house was at an end; but still, in order to arrest the progress of the mischief, he moved as an amendment that the party who had served the writ on the sergeant-at-arms should be ordered to attend at the bar of the house this day.—Mr. HUME seconded the motion.—Sir R. PEEL said that the action would not be stayed by the committal of the party who had served the writ, and the motion would only lead to a waste of time, and again bringing them into collision with the executive authorities of the law. He hoped the house would allow the sergeant-at-arms to plead to the action.—After a short conversation the Attorney-General's motion was agreed to, by a majority of 105 to 44.—The Health of Towns Bill was withdrawn for the present session.—The Coroners Bill went through committee pro forma, notwithstanding an amendment was moved by R. KNATCHBULL, to have it committed that day three months. The amendment was negatived by a majority of 62 to 42.—Mr. FRENCH then moved the committal of the Medical Charity (Ireland) Bill; but while Lord STANLEY was about replying to some of his observations, the house was counted out.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The Presbyterian Marriage (Ireland) Bill was read a first time, and ordered to be read a second time to-morrow (Friday).—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE obtained leave to have a copy of any official papers respecting the erection of a workhouse at Ridenderry, Ireland.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The Infant Orphan Estate Bill, and the Duchess Dowager Countess Waldegrave's Estate Bill, were read a third time and passed.—Mr. WARD gave notice that he would bring forward the motion respecting the Established Church of Ireland, as a substantive motion, on the 1st of August.—Sir R. PEEL entered into a statement respecting the public business, stating what the Government meant to do: they were prepared to give precedence to the Irish Arms Bill, the Irish Poor Law (Church Bill), to the Irish Poor law Bill, and to the Export of Machinery Bill. He had, on the other hand, to announce, on the part of the Government, that they intended to postpone for the present session the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, the Factories Bill, and he believed he might add the Law Courts (Ireland) Bill. With respect to the County Courts Bill, he should postpone till some future day the announcement of Her Majesty's Government in regard to that measure, which was one that would be very unwilling to abandon.—After some questions had been replied to, the house went into committee on the Irish Arms Bill, and the remainder of the evening was occupied in the discussion of the various clauses.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The Irish Presbyterian Marriages Bill was read a third time and passed, as was (after a slight discussion) the Slave trade Suppression Bill. The Defamation and Libel Bill was ordered to be read a third time on Thursday next.—The Scientific Societies Bill went through committee. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The report of the Designs Copyright Bill was received, and the third reading was fixed for Thursday next.—In reply to a question of Mr. GLADSTONE that in the report of the Customs' Acts Comm itee he received some discussion to-day, and Mr. Gladstone stated that he should object to the appointment of a select committee to consider the bill, as the time had gone by at which it could be properly moved for, and the report had already been fully investigated by several committees of that house.—Mr. HUME gave notice that he should on Tuesday move that at the Attorney General be directed to prosecute Mr. Ward and Mr. Wilkinson, the agents to Lord Dangan mon, and other electors, for acts of bribery committed by them at the late election in Durham.—The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER in reply to Mr. Macaulay said that it was the intention of the Government to advance £100,000 to Australia, by way of loan, and that an Act of Parliament would be necessary to secure the repayment.—The house then went into committee on the Irish Arms Bill.

COUNTRY NEWS.

BROMLEY, MIDDLESEX.—On Tuesday Mr. Baker held an inquest at the Coventry Cross, Bromley, Middlesex, on the body of Jane Humphreys, aged seventy-seven, of Bromley-lock. It appeared that the deceased was the widow of a distiller, and lived with her son. On Sunday last they had company, whom the son saw home, leaving deceased perfectly sober preparing for bed. He returned, midnight, and was made by a man named Osborn, and going up stairs he found the deceased on the landing place on the dead, having her clothes burned from off her body, and by her side was an extinguished candle. A surgeon (Mr. P. Smyth) was called in, who said that deceased had died from the effects of severe burns, on the chest and abdomen principally. The son believed that his mother had set fire to her clothes as she was going up stairs to bed with a lighted candle. Verdict, "Accidental death."

COLCHESTER.—DESPERATE ATTEMPT AT MURDER.—On Saturday night last, a most desperate attempt was made by a man named Osborn, upon the life of his wife, by means of a pistol, with which he inflicted a wound in her neck, producing consequences which it is feared will terminate fatally. It appears that Osborn and his wife have been separated for some time, the former, who is a shoemaker, residing at Ardleigh, and the latter working as a tailoress at Colchester. On Saturday night, about half-past ten, the wife left her work in company with the other work-women, and were proceeding along the walk, when Osborn made his appearance in front of his wife, saying he wanted to speak to her; she replied that she would have nothing to say to him, and the three females walked up into the town, Osborn following them. When they returned to the walk, on their way home to George-lane, he was still pursuing them; and just as they reached the spot leading out of East Stockwell-street, he rushed up to his wife, and, without speaking a word, fired the contents of a pistol into the back part of his wife's neck. The instant she was dropped by Jane Verlander and Grace Hayward, who were in the [illegible] Osborn made a desperate attempt to [illegible] Mr. Bright, of Anti-Corn-Law League celebrity. It is said, will offer his se f from the side of the tree trustees. Mr. Parvis left town for Durham on Sunday night. The Marquis of Sandford and Lord Seaham have also been spoken of as candidates in the same side.

HAVERFORDWEST.—The Rev. Jacob Saeger, the vicar of Royston, committed suicide on Wednesday night. As he did not appear in his usual place at the usual hour on Thursday morning, the family with whom he lodged, after having repeatedly called him without obtaining any answer, had the door of his bedroom broken open, when he was discovered undressed and hanging from the top of the bedstead. He had not been in bed, but had extinguished the candle, and had probably, on his returning for the night, undressed and destroyed himself in the dark. The deceased was educated at one of the dissenting colleges, and for several years remained in the Independent denomination. He was first ordained minister of a dissenting congregation in Buckinghamshire, whence he removed to a small chapel at Hampstead, from the pulpit of which he retired about 15 years since, for the purpose of entering the Established Church.

MAIDSTONE.—HOP BANKER.—The annual hop dinner at the Queen's Head, Maidstone, took place on Tuesday last. The chair was ably filled by Mr. Edward Monckton, and after the cloth had been withdrawn the betting commenced, and proceeded with great briskness. There were several bets made in favour of £140,000, but the average betting was made under that amount. Some heavy sporting bets were made against naming the duty within £1000, and which, with one exception, were considerably beneath £140,000.

WALES.—REBECCA AND HER DAUGHTERS.—In consequence of the continued disturbed state of South Wales, orders were received at Woolwich on Sunday morning to have in readiness a six-pounder field gun and twelve-pounder howitzer, which were selected from the field train department, and at ten o'clock, A.M., they left Woolwich with the usual number of men of the Royal Artillery required for their service in the field under the command of Capt Taylor and Lieut Wodehouse. The orders were to proceed to Bristol by the Great Western Railway, and from Bristol to Carmarthen, with the least possible delay.

WELSH DARING ATTEMPT AT MURDER.—About midnight on the 10th instant a most daring and diabolical attempt was made to murder Mr. Robert Waters, of Strafford-le-the-Cas le, in the county of Wilts, who, was in his father's farm yard, was feloniously fired at by a man dressed in a white coloured cap, fitting close to his head, and which appeared to be tied under his chin, and who effected his escape through a shrubbery. A reward of £50 has been offered by Mr. Waters for the detection and apprehension of the ruffian.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT—LINCOLN, JULY 17.

WALMSLEY V. HURDMAN.

CURIOUS CAUSE OF ACTION.—This was an action of trespass. Mr. Hill and Mr Whitehurst were for the plaintiff, and Mr. Humfrey and Mr. Wray for the defendant.—Mr. Hill, in opening the case, stated the plaintiff was a solicitor, and the defendant a farmer, and he complained of an assault being committed on his person, and an indecent exposure of himself at one of Mr. Hurdman having, in public, stroked his hair backwards. The evidence was, that on the 24th of February last there was to be a variety of performances in a public room, at Horncastle, called the Theatre. Among the things proposed to be enacted was "Hercules struggling with the Numidian Lion, in Six Positions," and "Ajax defying the Lightning." Attracted by so highly a graced bill of fare, the plaintiff and defendant attended. Mr. Hill's attention was rivetted on the performance, but Mr. Hurdman had leisure for the display of a few practical jokes of his own, and among other jokes he was guilty of perpetrating was one of catching hold of Mr. Walmsley's hair and stroking them backwards. This was not to be endured, and accord ngly the plaintiff remonstrated with Mr. Hurdman on the impropriety of his conduct, and demanded a public apology to be inserted in the Stamford Mercury, with which the defendant refused to comply, and the present action was brought.—Mr. Humfrey, for the defendant, characterized this emphatically as being the attorney's action, for if the plaintiff had had no wish to put costs into his pocket, but simply to have made an example of Hurdman, he would have gone before a magistrate and had him fined.—Lord Abinger having summed up, the jury found for the plaintiff, damages 1s.—The learned judge refused to certify for costs.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE.—TWO CAPTAINS DROWNED.—It is with deep regret we have to announce a distressing and fatal occurrence, which has caused the death of Captains Drew and Jones, two of the elder brethren of the Trinity-house, London. It appears that these gentlemen, with others of the brotherhood, whose lives were providentially saved, had been engaged in surveying the lightvessels in the Bristol Channel, and when off Trevose Head they attempted to land in a boat on the Quies Rocks, but owing to the heavy surf they were unable to do so. In returning, the boat came in contact with the steam-yacht, and all in the boat (we believe nine in number) were thrown into the water, by which the two unfortunate gentlemen named were drowned. The steamer put into Padstow on Friday from Penzance, and sailed the same tide for Bristol, where a coroner's inquest was held on the bodies on Saturday. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death." We understand that not the slightest blame is attached to any one: it was one of those unfortunate accidents which cannot be accounted for. Sir J. H. Pelly was on board the steamer at the time of the occurrence.

DEATHS FROM DROWNING.—Early on Sunday morning, between eleven and twelve o'clock, John M'Claw, an engineer, living at No. 35, Paradise-row, Chelsea, was bathing in the Thames, off the Lammas-land, Chelsea, when he was suddenly seized with the cramp, and was drowned before assistance could be brought him.—Between four and five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, Thomas Rawson, a labourer, an inhabitant of 9, Brentford-end, was drowned whilst bathing in the Thames, between Brentford and Kew. His body was not recovered until two hours afterwards.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT ON THE RIVER.—A melancholy accident occurred on the river just below London Bridge, on Sunday evening, by which the lives of two young children were sacrificed. It appears that the [illegible] Ann, belonging to Mr [illegible] was lying off [illegible] on board which were [illegible] two children, the eldest [illegible] Coleridge, a daughter of one of the men, were playing about the vessel, when they both mounted the gunwale, at the same moment the brig sudden[illegible] and throwing the sweep off the steerers, which they had failed to [illegible] the [illegible] no assistance could be rendered they were washed [illegible] another named Benjamin Wind, be ng in the 15th Regt. of Light [illegible] and who was wading, at the moment, [illegible] Thomas Hopper, Esq., and in the occupation of Mrs. Sm th. Her Majesty's pardon also is promised to any accomplice (not being the actual murderer) for such evidence as may lead to conviction.

AN AFFECTING CIRCUMSTANCE.—A few days since two men (brothers) were cutting down three-rood-field, a farm belonging to James D[illegible] Esq. Allston, when it was the usual time to go home to dinner, one of the brothers told the other that he would not go home to dinner that day, but would lie down and rest himself, desiring the other to go and bring his dinner to the field. The other, after remonstrating a little upon the "leanness" of the first, at last went; and the latter immediately laid himself down and pulled his hat over his face to shade it from the sun. The home-going brother returned at the usual time with the dinner, took the hat from his brother's face, and found him—a lifeless corpse.

DREADFUL SUICIDE.—Friday last, the body of Mr. Thomas Adams, of the firm of Adams and Son, purveyors of meat to her Majesty, was discovered in a private part of the back premises of deceased, between two hay-ricks, in Park-street, Windsor. Upon the body being taken up, a wound of upwards of six inches in length, extending from ear to ear, and about three inches in depth, nearly severing the head from the lifeless trunk, was discovered to have been inflicted by means of a large dinner knife, which was found in the field close to the deceased. Mr. Adams, who had been in a low and nervous state for some time past, had been carrying on a flourishing business for upwards of fifty years in the town, and was in possession of considerable wealth. A coroner's inquest sat on the body the same evening, and it having been clearly established that the deceased was not in a sane state of mind, the jury returned a verdict of "Temporary insanity." Deceased, who has left a widow and three sons and two daughters, was in his seventy-sixth year.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

By a letter from Vienna, of the 7th, we learn that Count de Bombelles, the Austrian Minister to the Swiss Confederation, died that morning in the capital, where he had been for some time on leave of absence. Baron de Lieven arrived at Vienna on the 6th.——The Deputation of the St. Katharine Docks declared a dividend of 2½ per cent. at their half yearly meeting on Tuesday last.——The King of the Belgians has issued an ordonnance that all wools in bulk shall be allowed to pass through Belgium without payment of any transit-duty.——This exemption is to commence from and immediately after the close of the present session of the Chambers, should not the ordonnance be in the meantime converted into a law.——In consequence of the enormous increase in the money order department of the General Post Office, the authorities are making extensive improvements in the office in St. Martin's-le-Grand, to meet the increased demand consequent upon the reduction of the rate of commission.——Part of the rails of the new line from Hertford to Ware are now being laid down, and the foundations dug for the intended terminal station.——A deputation, consisting of the Rev. Dr. Montgomery, of Monaghan, synod of Ireland; the Rev. George A. Armstrong, of Dublin; Mr. Alexander Mitchell, of Belfast; and Mr. John Roberts, of Collin House, Belfast, had an interview with Sir Robert Peel, on Tuesday.——On the 4th instant (the birthday of the Crown Prince) the last great review took place of the Swedish troops encamped near Stockholm. The King, now in his 80th year, looked remarkably well on horseback, and, on dismissing the troops, he took off his hat, and repeated several times, with evident emotion, in Swedish, "God bless you, my children, if I should never see you again."——The late Lieutenant-Colonel Fawcett, 55th, was a member of a respectable family near Ratisbrin, county Dublin, and cousin of Sir William Wainwright Lynar, R.M., of Shurcone.——The Rev. Robert King, author of the "Primer of Church of Ireland History," has been appointed professor of science and chaplain to the new Irish college, near Navan, county Meath.——A singular duel was fought at Marseilles, on the 10th instant, between two Spaniards. One was a barber, and the other, though a dealer in cigarettes, consented to fight his opponent with his own weapon—a razor. The cigarette-man received the first wound, so deeply slashing his face that he was unable to continue the combat, and was obliged to be carried to the hospital, whilst the barber was taken to prison.——A letter from Vienna of the 8th inst., in the Journal de Francfort, states that a negotiation is about to be opened between the Austrian and French Governments, relative to a new arrangement of the passage between the two states, and particularly for putting an end to the necessity of passports being given.——The Rev. Owen Parr, vicar of Preston, has formally signified that he will resist the intended tolling of a bell at the Popish chapel of St. Augustine, considering it amongst the privileges of the Church of England as by law established.——An interchange of several of the police in England and Ireland is, it is said, shortly to take place.——Mr. T. W. Hill, barrister-at-law, on the South Wales circuit, has been appointed to the office of police-magistrate for the Merthyr district, with a salary of £600 per annum.——It is now definitely arranged that H.R.H. Prince George of Cambridge shall proceed to the Ionian Islands. His locale will be Corfu. His Royal Highness will take his departure early in the ensuing month, and will, it is expected, remain abroad about two years.——The Manchester merchants complain heavily of the limited business which is doing with the country dealers, and the goods are very considerably accumulating in town for immediate want. No speculation whatever exists.——Saturday morning a brace of hares were picked up dead on the Eastern Counties line, which it is supposed were killed by the mail train the previous night.——The Rev. Samuel Horton, secretary to the Protestant Association of London, has been ordained by the Bishop of Gibraltar.——Mr. Jaques sold nine short-horns at Derby for 600 guineas, and Mr. Watson, of Walkingham, a short-horn heifer for 150 guineas.——There are, according to the statements of Mr. Cowing, a land surveyor, before Mr. Wilmot Horton's Emigration Committee, fifteen millions of profitably cultivatable acres of waste in England, Scotland and Ireland.——The growth of flax, of which so much has hitherto been imported into this country from foreign states, has been greatly increased, and so successfully it appears in the present year, that the Flax Society in Norfolk have found it advisable to engage competent persons from Belgium to pull, tie, and shock it.——A new college in which young men, members of the Established Church, will receive instruction on the plan pursued in the English Universities, has been established at Stoxcellan, in Ireland, and is to be opened with the usual ceremonies on the 1st of August next.——The Comte d'Aincourt, the celebrated French author, who is so well known in the literary world as the autnor of "The Solitaire" and other popular works, is at present in London.——In the intended new dock at Liverpool, called the Brunswick Dock, the estimated quantity of cast iron is no less than 7000 tons.——A novel and interesting ceremonial was witnessed at the parish church of Leeds, in Kent, on Sunday last, namely, the baptism of the seven children, four sons and three daughters, of Mr. Saxby, a respectable farmer of the parish. The children [illegible] joined the communion of the church having brought up as a Dissenter), according to the primitive and apostolic rule, took his household with him.——Upwards of 100 men are daily employed at the Tower in making preparations for filling up the moat. Extensive cuttings are being made in the soil for the purpose of gradually draining the swamp, and carrying off the numerous drainings which flow from the interior of the citadel.——"A collision took place," says the Moniteur Parisien, "a few days ago, on the frontiers of Italy, between Liberal and Counter-Revolutionary parties. Two men were mortally wounded.——We learn from the Liverpool Times that the suggested practice of placing women in the public stocks is being revived at Prescot [illegible] St. Helen's.——We understand that there are doubts whether [illegible] able collection of Bibles and collection of rare manuscripts [illegible] comprising the library of the late Duke of Sussex, will be submitted for public compe tition or not, as we hear the King of Na[illegible] tered into negotiations for the pure [illegible] A deputation of the iron masters of Staffordshire, headed by Lord Hatherton, Colonel Anson, and Lord Ingestre, had an interview with Sir Robert Peel and the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Wed[illegible] [illegible] Downing-street [illegible] Quarterly Review, &c., &c., formerly of Berry-street, [illegible] troller General of Convicts in Van Diemen's Land.——[illegible] ter, appointed about three years ago to the Governor-Generalship of Barbadoes, has arrived in London.——The Leipsic Gazette states, on the authority of a letter from Constantinople, June 17, that the differences between Turkey and Persia are farther than ever from [illegible] justment, and that open hostilities are become probable.——The subscription raised for Miss Martineau, who so nobly refused the pension offered by the late Government, reaches the sum of £1000.——In different towns the mayors have issued proclamations to the inhabitants, ordering all dogs going at large to be muzzled during the hot weather.——M. Jean Baptiste Laffitte, brother of M. Jacques Laffitte, and director of the Messageries Generales died in Paris on Wednesday, after a long and painful illness.——During the thunder storm of Wednesday week 34 sheep were killed by lightning, on the farm of Edstone, near Peebles.——The forces now concentrated in Ireland exceed, it is said, 35,000 men!

LAUNCH OF THE GREAT BRITAIN STEAM-SHIP—VISIT OF PRINCE ALBERT TO BATH AND BRISTOL.

Wednesday being the day fixed for the launch of the mammoth steam-ship the Great Britain, which his Royal Highness Prince Albert had undertaken to name, the cities of Bath and Bristol were in commotion at an early hour, and the authorities were busied during the greater part of Tuesday and Wednesday morning in making preparations for the reception of his Royal Highness.

His Royal Highness and suite arrived at the Great Western Railway terminus shortly before seven o'clock: the Prince was accompanied by his Royal Highness the Prince of Saxe Coburg, the Marquis of Exeter, Lords Liverpool, Lincoln, Wharncliffe, and Charles Wellesley, Lieut.-Col. Bouverie, and Mr. G. Anson. The train also brought down Mr. C. Russell, M.P., chairman of the railway company, Mr. Saunders, the secretary, and Mr. Smith, the inventor of the Archimedean screw as applicable to steam-ships. Mr. Brunel acted as engineer.

At the moment of the arrival of his Royal Highness at the terminus the scene was truly animated. The reader will recollect that although the railway company have not yet constructed an expensive terminus, they have a very large establishment here for the repair of engines and carriages, and every convenience for carrying on the traffic. As this is the longest independent line of railway completed in this country, so all its appointments are in keeping with this superiority. Itsengineering peculiarities, as the mode in laying the rails, and the distance preserved between them—the broad gauge, as it is termed—and the larger diameters of the carriage-wheels and engine-driving wheels, have almost rendered this an experimental railway; and we are happy to state a very successful one in the greater rate of speed, and less liability to accident. The vastness of construction throughout the line entitles it to the rank of "grand," and even "gigantic,"—as in the Box tunnel, in constructing which, for two and a-half years, 1100 men and 250 horses were employed, 30,000,000 bricks were consumed, and a ton of gunpowder and a ton of candles every week—so that the Kilsby tunnel, on the London and Birmingham line, till lately the greatest wonder of the kind, is less than two-fifths of the size of the Box tunnel in cubical contents. Many other works on this gigantic line, especially in the very difficult country towards the Bristol end, might be referred to; but we can only here notice one other—the magnificent bridge by which the line crosses the Thames at Maidenhead: it consists of ten brick arches, of which the two principal are the largest and flattest brick arches ever built, being of 128 feet span.

EXTERIOR OF THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY TERMINUS.

As you pass the engine-houses at the Paddington station, you are struck with the colossal size of the engines. The carriages, too, are of excellent build and accommodation, and some of them cost £400 each. Some are 18 feet long and 8 feet wide, while others are 21 feet in length. The royal carriage was fitted up for the accommodation of her Majesty and Prince Albert, and that in which his Royal Highness travelled on Wednesday, is 21 feet in length and 9 feet in width, and is divided into three compartments, two end ones 4 feet 6 in. long; while the centre forms a noble saloon, 12 feet long, and 6½ feet high, and is fitted up in the style of Louis Quatorze, panelled with crimson and white silk, relieved by paintings of the four elements, by Farris. The sofas, &c., are of richly-carved oak; and at each end of the carriage is a large plate-glass window, affording a view of the railway line. Of this truly sumptuous interior the annexed engraving is a correct representation.

INTERIOR OF THE ROYAL RAILWAY CARRIAGE.

The royal special train reached Bath at about nine o'clock. Prince Albert having been graciously pleased to signify his willingness to receive an address from the mayor and town council of Bath, preparations were made for receiving his Royal Highness in a manner worthy this ancient city. An apartment at the station was elegantly prepared as a reception-room. It was fitted up in the form of a tent, open in the front, and at the sides surmounted by a canopy. The floor was covered by a splendid carpet, worked with the royal arms. The reception-room was separated from the other portions of the station, at the front and at the sides, by barriers three feet high, so that the spectators were enabled to obtain a full view of the ceremony. Around these barriers, withinside the room, were arranged marble stands, on which were placed vases containing choice exotics. At the upper end of the reception-room, under the canopy, was a raised dais, upon which his Royal Highness stood, while the space on the one side of the reception-room was appropriated exclusively to ladies, and the other to the gentlemen deputed to present the address. The deputation assembled at the Guildhall at half-past eight o'clock, and proceeded in procession to the station. On the arrival, the Mayor (J. Eldridge, Esq.), accompanied by two of the aldermen and two of the principal inhabitants of the city, proceeded to the reception-room, the mace-bearers remaining as guards outside the barrier through which the deputation had entered. The deputation, advancing to the dais, presented the following address to his Royal Highness:—

TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE ALBERT.

May it please your Royal Highness,

We, the mayor, aldermen, councillors, and inhabitants of the city and borough of Bath, with sincere emotions of gratification, avail ourselves of this occasion to present to your Royal Highness the united expression of those sentiments of profound respect and affectionate regard with which your near and interesting relation to our beloved Sovereign, and the public and private virtues which illustrate and adorn your character have inspired us. We humbly solicit that when your Royal Highness's high and important engagements admit, your Royal Highness may be induced to visit our ancient and loyal city, which, though it aspires not to the highest rank among the cities of this vast and mighty empire, yet yields to none of them the precedence in its determination of those bland and august qualities by which, no less than by the eminence of station, your Royal Highness is distinguished.

The satisfaction which we should experience in being encouraged by your Royal Highness to indulge in so flattering an expectation would be greatly enhanced if we could be allowed to hope that such an occasion might afford us the opportunity personally to express to our benign and beneficent Sovereign our fervent feeling of devotion and affectionate loyalty to her Majesty's most gracious person.

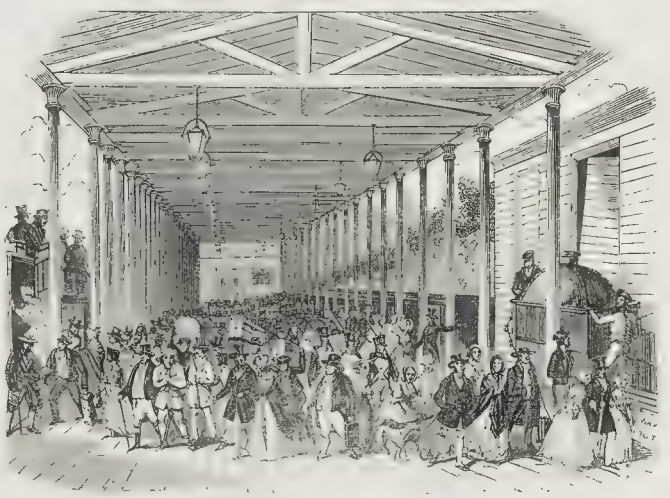
His Royal Highness then proceeded to Bristol, and arrived at the railway terminus shortly after 10 o'clock. The Prince and his attendants took their places on the platform of the terminus, which was covered with crimson cloth for the occasion. He was received with loud hurrahs from the company assembled, and the band struck up "God save the Queen." His Royal Highness was dressed in a plain frock-coat, wearing the Riband of the Garter. He looked well, and appeared much gratified with his trip. The shouts and themusic having ceased, the Mayor was introduced to his Royal Highness. After which, Mr. Burges, the town-clerk, read the following address:—

May it please your Royal Highness,

We, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the city of Bristol, beg permission to present our sincere and joyful congratulations on the auspicious occasion of your Royal Highness's visit to this ancient and loyal city. We approach your Royal Highness with every sentiment of respect and affection, deeply sensible of the high honour conferred upon us by your presence, and desirous of testifying our dutiful attachment to the illustrious Consort of our beloved Sovereign, and to assure your Royal Highness that it affords us the highest gratification to welcome your presence within the constitution of this country, as established under the auspicious reign of the house of Brunswick, and it is with the liveliest satisfaction and pleasure that we record our testimony of the respect and esteem we entertain for your Royal Highness, and for those amiable and excellent qualities which have endeared you to the nation at large.

May your Royal Highness continue to enjoy the affection and esteem of the British people. May your august Consort be long preserved to uphold the rights and liberties of her attached and devoted subjects, and to insure the prosperity of this great empire. May the blessing of Almighty God attend the illustrious and beloved offspring of your Royal Highness, and may they be preserved to promote the happiness of their Royal parents, and, ultimately, to realize the fondest hopes of a loyal and affectionate people, in perpetuating that form of government under which we have the happiness to live, and in maintaining inviolate the lustre of the British Crown.

His Royal Highness expressed his gratification in a few words. Mr. Savage, the master of the Society of Merchants, then presented to his Royal Highness the freedom of the society in a gold box, and bearing a suitable inscription. The Prince having received the box and acknowledged his sense of the honour, the Dean of Bristol, accompanied by nearly thirty of the resident clergy of the city, was introduced, and addressed his Royal Highness, who briefly replied. Shortly after, the Prince entered one of the royal carriages, accompanied by the mayor, in full official costume, Lord Wharncliffe, and Lord Lincoln. The procession then formed, the third carriage being the mayor's state carriage, drawn by six fine horses, the coachman and footmen in splendid liveries. The cortège, escorted by the Royal Gloucestershire and North Somerset Yeomanry Cavalry, and a troop of the 4th Light Dragoons, proceeded through the city, along Cumberland-road, to the yard of the Great Western Steam-ship Company, where his Royal Highness was received by the chairman and directors of the company, and, with his suite, conducted over the magnificent Great Britain Steam-ship, described in our last number. On her various masts were hoisted the colours of the United States, of Russia, of France, and of Belgium, and on his Royal Highness stepping on her deck, the royal standard of England appeared waving bravely from her maintop. The royal party having inspected every department of the ship, which occupied nearly two hours, adjourned to the room temporarily fitted up on board for the banquet, where about 320 sat down to the tables, Mr. T. Kingston, chairman of the board of directors, presiding, having on his right his Royal Highness Prince Albert. After the viands had been disposed of, the usual loyal toasts were drunk, the Prince returning thanks for his health in a few impressive words. His Royal Highness and the company having left the banquet-room shortly after three o'clock, the Prince took his place on the platform erected for the occasion, and the Great Britain was towed out of the dock in which she floated into the other dock, and thence into what is termed the Float, the band playing and the people shouting on all sides. She swam gallantly into the place appointed for her, and presented one of the noblest sights to be imagined.



INTERIOR OF THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY TERMINUS.

The Prince and his suite having seen the vessel into her temporary locality, immediately took their departure for the terminus of the rail, passing along the road by the side of the new cut and the outskirts of the city. Having reached the terminus at four o'clock, where a special train was in readiness to convey them to Paddington, and having taken their leave of the Mayor and the authorities, they entered the carriages and were conducted back with the same speed as in their journey down, Mr. Brunel again acting as engineer.

We have been purposely brief in our account of the day's proceedings, as it is our intention to illustrate them, next week, with a series of spirited engravings.

INCREASE OF TEETOTALISM.—During Father Mathew's visit at Leeds, last week, he administered the pledge to several thousand persons—some suppose to 6000! In Bradford, on Tuesday, it is said he administered the pledge to 7000. In Huddersfield, on Wednesday, his visit is also said to have been attended with similar success. Even in York (a place which, comparatively speaking, had never hitherto felt the existence of total abstinence) he gave the pledge to 2000.

The parish of Methyrmawr, in Wales, has no public-house, no shop of any kind, no Dissenting chapel, no doctor, no lawyer, and no paupers. It however contains several octogenarians.

THE THAMES REGATTA.

On Wednesday, the third day of the Thames Regatta (fully reported and illustrated in No. 62 of our journal), a match took place amongst the apprentices in the seventh year of their time, who plyed between London-bridge and Teddington-lock—the prize being a coat and silver badge, presented by Evan Morris, Esq., and the freedom of the river.

The badge is massive, and richly embossed on the dexter side with the figure of Victory, holding in her right hand a small wreath, in the act of crowning the successful candidate, in the left hand a palm branch; on the reverse is a waterman, in full costume, resting upon a rudder, and bearing the union jack. In the distance is seen the scullers' match, for which the badge was intended as a prize; Putney-bridge, the Middlesex shore, the well-known ancient toll-house, and the antique parish-church of Fulham.

In a scroll is inscribed the appropriate motto of the gallant Nelson, "Palmam qui meruit ferat." In a shield at the foot are the arms of the donor, with his motto, "Assiduitate," below, chased in bas relief, surmounted with his crest; and the whole is surrounded by a wreath composed of water-lilies. The badge is attached to a full dress waterman's coat, of beautiful maroon colour, embroidered with silver lace, and silver buttons bearing the same crest as the badge.

THE PUTNEY SILVER BADGE.

TERRIFIC EXPLOSION AND CONFLAGRATION OF JOHNSON AND PINCHIN'S OIL AND TURPENTINE WORKS.

On Saturday morning last, one of the most terrific explosions that has visited the metropolis for some time, attended with an immense destruction of property, took place soon after five o'clock, at the extensive and valuable oil and turpentine works belonging to Messrs. Johnson, Pinchin, and Company, situate in the Back-road, St. George's-in-the East, which not only destroyed the whole of the factory, which is considered to be one of the largest in London, and contained several thousand barrels of turpentine, but the conflagration was so fierce and intense as to injure, it is said, part of the Blackwall Railway; and damaging between 30 and 40 houses in the neighbourhood, including the well-known Roman Catholic school in the above road. The factory stood on the north side of the road between Christy-street, and Grove-street, comprising a substantial brick warehouse, about two stories high, with a frontage facing the road of upwards of 50 feet; it extended in depth some 50 feet, within a couple of feet of the Blackwall Railway, three arches of which were rented by the firm, and used for the deposit of turpentine and other combustible materials, in the latter of which it was estimated that at least 2000 barrels were lodged.

For a length of time, owing to the immense excitement which prevailed, it was matter of very great difficulty that the subjoined particulars could be elicited. It appears from a statement made by Inspector Norman, of the H division of police, that at about a quarter to five o'clock he was proceeding down the Back-road, to inspect his command on the beats, when he had occasion to pass the above factory. At that period the premises were apparently free from fire; he had not, however, proceeded more than fifty yards, before he heard the policeman on duty, whom he had just passed, cry out "fire," and on turning round he hastened down the road, for the purpose of calling the engines of the brigade from Wellclose-square station, but meeting one of his men, he directed him to call them, and he then returned to the fire, which appeared to be confined to the centre of the works. Dense volumes of smoke were pouring forth from all parts of the roof, proving to him that it was the turpentine which had ignited. He directly, with his men, proceeded to alarm the inhabitants, and whilst so engaged the two engines from the above fire-station came up, and were instantly put into operation, the firemen keeping the gates closed until the hose was supplied with water, in order that they could throw a greater force on the devouring element. They were then forced open, and the firemen, viz., Isaacs, Goddard, and Frost, together with Sergeant Williams, of the police, entered. They had not been there but a few seconds before a most awful explosion took place, causing destruction to the factory—the roof was blown high into the air, and the whole of the walls were forced outwards into the street, partially falling upon the above-named persons. Never was such a scene witnessed at the East-end of the metropolis. For several minutes the whole district was enveloped amidst clouds of dust and smoke, and an intense shower of burning remnants of the building. The shock resembled that of an earthquake, and the houses for some distance round were shaken to their very foundation, every window in them was blown to atoms, and the inhabitants appeared for the moment to be paralyzed. Then regaining themselves, the wildest confusion ensued, all rushing from their respective habitations, fearful that another more frightful explosion would take place. Soon as the smoke and dust had in some degree been cleared, great anxiety was manifested for the safety of the firemen. Two of them, it was found, had managed to extricate themselves from the ruins, but Isaacs and the policeman were dragged out in a most pitiable condition, bleeding profusely, and much burnt by the flaming timbers falling on them. They were immediately carried away to some neighbouring house, where medical assistance was called to their aid. Other explosions, almost equal in power to the first, and which now, by a clerk in the firm arriving, were ascertained to be the result of several hundred weight of gunpowder on the place, followed in rapid succession, hurling at considerable distance the few remaining portions of the ruins which were left standing. It was now deemed by the authorities of the fire brigade, as additional assistance had arrived from the stations at Jeffrey-square and School-house-lane, to withdraw the men for the present, and accordingly the spot was entirely deserted, every one standing aghast until the reports had ceased, and then it was with difficulty that the firemen could be induced to combat with the flames. Within half an hour the whole of the turpentine stores had caught, and a more terrific blaze had been rarely witnessed. The men had conveyed the hose of several engines into the gap between the ruins of the factory and the stores in the arches of the railway, in order to prevent them taking fire; it was then too late, as before mentioned, for every barrel in the stores, the arches being perfectly blocked up with them, had burst, and the spirit was flowing in a state of ignition into the street, increasing the conflagration to an alarming extent. Intelligence of the calamity having been sent to all the fire-stations in London, in a short time nearly the whole of the brigade force and engines, as also others of various offices, came in quick succession. By half-past seven it was evident to all parties that the water began to weaken the fire to some little extent, and in about another half-hour all danger of its further extension was dissipated, although a great body of fire still remained. The premises of Messrs. Pinchin and Johnson were entirely consumed, and a great number of other houses damaged.

SCENE AFTER THE FIRE, AND EXPLOSION NEAR THE BLACKWALL RAILWAY.

EXPLOSION ON BOARD THE CAMPERDOWN.

It was our painful duty, in our last, to give an account of this alarming and calamitous occurrence, and we have this week to add to the melancholy interest which the untoward event has excited, by laying before our readers the additional particulars which have since transpired, as well as the accompanying engravings, sketched by an eye-witness (who has contributed many valuable pictorial designs to this paper) immediately after the catastrophe. Our readers are already aware that the explosion on board the Camperdown took place between the hours of two and three o'clock in the afternoon of Wednesday, the 12th instant, whilst a salute was being fired in honour of the King of the Belgians passing down Sea-reach, when one of the portable magazines blew up, forcing the upper deck on the starboard side up, from the mizenmast as far forward as the mainmast, and knocking down nearly all the cabinet bulkheads, fore and aft, on the upper gun-deck. Scarcely a whole pane of glass was left in the ports on that deck. So great was the force, that the iron horn-knee on the beam-end, at the break of the bulkhead, where the magazine exploded, was broken quite asunder. The most melancholy part is to relate the dreadful calamity which befel the visitors then on board, and a portion of the ship's company who were about that part of the ship.

THE CAMPERDOWN.

THE EXPLOSION ON BOARD THE CAMPERDOWN.

There were three seamen—namely, Samuel West (since dead), James Duke, gunner's mate, and Alfred Fennel, hurt, the two former very dangerously, the latter slightly. Lieutenant Blackmore, belonging to the Camperdown, was dangerously hurt, a large splinter having fixed itself under his jaw-bone, which cannot at present be extracted. There were two young ladies, who were visiting the ship with their friends, most dangerously wounded and burnt; there were also several others slightly wounded and burnt.

Nearly all the officers present have received slight injuries by splinters, and were more or less burnt by rescuing the ladies from their burning clothes, and the bulkhead boards which were blown upon them.

As soon as the alarm had subsided a signal was made for the fire-engines and all boats from the different ships and the dockyard; and in a very short time the new floating engine from the dockyard was alongside the Camperdown, and the fire was soon extinguished.

At an early hour on Thursday morning her Majesty's steam-vessel African went alongside her Majesty's ship Camperdown, with her Majesty's tender Ceres, to convey the wounded persons who were in a fit state to be removed to Melville Hospital. At about ten A.M. Lieutenant John Blackmore, R.N., and James Duke, gunner's mate, were put on board the Ceres, and towed away to Melville Hospital, accompanied by Dr. Bruce, the surgeon of her Majesty's ship Camperdown.

The sufferers left on board were—a Miss Barton, aged about 20, a Miss Yerker, aged about 40, both dangerously hurt by the splints, and severely burnt; and a Mrs. Greenhill, slightly burnt, and struck by some small splints.

Augustus Bullock, son of Captain F. Bullock, of her Majesty's steam-vessel Tartarus, who was on board the Camperdown as a first-class volunteer, escaped with a slight scar upon his head in a very miraculous way. He was close to the gun on the aft side of the bulkhead, and when the bulkhead was blown down he was buried under one of the panels, by which the whole force of the explosion passed over him; after the shock had gone off, he crawled out, and escaped the fire that was blazing around him.

Lieutenant Clavell, R.M., was slightly wounded on his right cheek by a splint. The Rev. John Cooper, chaplain, was severely bruised, and his coat was blown and burnt from his back. Amongst the visitors who were slightly hurt were Mrs. Gaze, the lady of Mr. John Gaze, master-attendant of her Majesty's dockyard here, and Master Gaze; Miss Yerker, a twin sister of the unfortunate lady so seriously hurt, also received some slight bruises and burns.

The Rev. John Barton, of the parish of Eastchurch, with his lady and daughter, were standing close to the spot where the explosion took place, and so violent was it that the starboard ends of the deck-beams, from the coop-deck to the quarter-deck, below and above the spot where the portable magazine, or what is commonly called the "salt-box," was affixed, were broken and badly sprung. The rev. gentleman and his family stood amidst this scene of destruction, and, strange to say, escaped unhurt in person, although some of their clothes were on fire, but soon extinguished by the officers and others who ran to their rescue.

On Saturday a coroner's inquest was held on board the Camperdown on the body of the seaman, Samuel West, who died from the effects of a severe injury through the blowing up of the portable magazine. George Griffiths, the gunner's mate, was examined, and stated that the salt-box was used in all ships for saluting cartridges, to prevent the frequent opening of the powder magazine. It was generally placed, as in this case, three feet from the after gun on the main deck, near the bulkhead. The box, when it exploded, had in it ten cartridges of four pounds each. There were also two one-pound rockets, and two of half a pound, hanging to the beam right over the salt-box. The case of one of the rockets was forced about midships after the explosion had taken place. The guns were fired with tubes for priming. It has happened, though very rarely, that the quill of the tube is thrown from the gun whilst lighted. Some of the tubes are composed of worsted. Several gunners of the ship were examined, who proved that the salt-box was the usual place for keeping a small supply of cartridges, and that no safer place could be found for the box than where this was placed. Mr. William Bruce, surgeon on board the Camperdown, said that deceased was much burnt about the face and head. His hands were scorched, and he had a large cut on his left temple. He was perfectly insensible, and remained in that state till he died. The cause of death was a concussion of the brain. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," at the same time expressing their opinion that all proper care and diligence had been taken by the commanding officer of the ship.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 29th.

SUNDAY, July 23.—Sixth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 24.—Dr. N. Lardner died, 1733.
TUESDAY, 25.—St. James.
WEDNESDAY, 26.—St. Anne.
THURSDAY, 27.—French Revolution, 1830.
FRIDAY, 28.—Cowley died, 1667.
SATURDAY, 29.—Wilberforce died, 1833.

HIGH WATER at London bridge, for the Week ending July 29

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday.	Thursday	Friday	Saturday.
M. h. m. 11 48	A. h. m. 0 0	M. h. m. 0 32	A. h. m. 0 47	M. h. m. 1 10	A. h. m. 1 33	M. h. m. 1 57	A. h. m. 2 18	M. h. m. 2 39	A. h. m. 2 59	M. h. m. 3 20	A. h. m. 3 40

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"W. C."—High Holborn.—The subjects are almost exclusively antiquarian, and therefore will not suit.
"B. S. Soho."—Will our correspondent oblige us by sending the print and description?
"Marie Louise."—We fear we have not space for the illustrations suggested.
"Old Subscriber."—Leicester.—Received. Thanks for the sketch.
"R. B. G." Clifton.—Thanks for the sketch, which shall appear next week.
"Querist" should consult Walker's "Dictionary."
Indignus.—"To a Friend on her Birthday;" "The Regret," by a Constant Reader.
"W. B. S." Gloucester.—1. Consult the new Building Act. 2 Either.
"P. P."—No.
"Formidaar," Bristol.—Mrs. Bingham will supply the back numbers. We think not.
"J. H." Weymouth.—The engraving shall appear when the subject comes before Parliament.
"An Oxfordshire Incumbent."—Consult "Rickman on Gothic Architecture."
"R. M."—We have not room.
"A Subscriber." Abingdon.—A passport is not requisite for a trip to Boulogne.
"A. K. Z."—Nearly a fortnight.
"Z. Z."—Answered by post.
"A Subscriber," Manchester.—We have to thank an amateur and subscriber for the sketch.
"W. B. S."—Arms of pretension are borne by sovereigns who are not in possession of the dominions to which such arms belong, but who claim or pretend to have a right to such possession, as, for instance, the kings of England from Edward III. to George III. quartered the arms of France.
"W. W." Watford.—We do not remember to have received the music.
"T. H.," Mechanics' Institution, Liverpool.—Will our correspondent send two spirited drawings? If so, we shall be enabled to decide.
"H. C. B."—We have no recollection of receiving a drawing of "the Priory."
"Capt. B.," Rochester.—A view of the city of Barcelona and the fortress of Montjuich, appeared in No. 21 of our Journal.
"S. H.," Loughton, place.—Thanks for your notes, &c.
"Rural."—The paragraph has not reach us in time.
"A Subscriber from the commencement"—Yes.
"A Constant Reader."—The accent is on the first syllable.
"A Subscriber," Devonport.—Consult "Jackson on Wood Engraving."
"W. T. K." York.—We cannot entertain the proposition.
"S. O." Luton.—Order a cover through your bookseller, and get him to bind it for you.
"Two Subscribers."—Apply to a respectable solicitor.
"P. B.," Winchcomb.—The subject is not of sufficient interest.
"W. P. Pollard," Barbadoes.—Persons selling the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS in the colonies, are supplied only through regular news agents.
CHESS.—"G. Y. H.," Margate.—Answered by post.
"Checkmate."—1st. Mr. W. Lewis, the chess author, is alive, and we hope well. We do not know his address. 2nd. The solution appeared in No. 51, April 22, page 276.
"H. Y. Z. Q."—Your solution to No. 30 is not correct: you don't play the best moves for black. If at the 2nd move he plays his K's P one square, how can you mate next move?
"C. Rhodes"—Please send the solution.
"G. D."—Received. The second question shall be answered shortly.

 We shall give next week a series of Illustrations of the Launch of the Great Britain, sketched and engraved by our distinguished artist, R. Landells, Esq., who was present on the occasion.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 22, 1843.

The coroner's inquest and all the preliminary examinations with reference to the late duel case having terminated, the jury, as our report will show, have returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against all the principals in the first degree, as well as against Mr. Gulliver, the medical man, as principal in the second degree. This is a verdict which all who have read the evidence will have been prepared to expect. It is in accordance with the painful disclosures by which it was arrived at—in accordance with an awful sense of justice—in accordance with the sad and solemn magnitude of the crime itself.

It is a melancholy task to peruse the afflicting details of this fatal affair as they are reported to us from the coroner's examination. Mr. Isidore Blake, a relative of Colonel Fawcett's widow, produces from his lamented friend's portfolio—a sort of evidence from the grave—the dead man's written testimony, describing the particulars which led to the duel itself. It is probable that these would have been withheld but for the necessity, for the sake of Colonel Fawcett's memory, of repelling some exparte statements which had found their way into a Sunday paper, and which were coloured with prejudice in favour of Lieutenant Munro, from whom or from some of whose partisans it is impossible to doubt, and yet humiliating to believe, they emanated. It is very shocking, in truth, that such a publication should have taken place; it was inconsistent with the natural generosity which influences brave men who have survived their enemies, even in an honourable cause—inconsistent with the forgiveness which charity awards the dead; but most of all inconsistent, and horribly so, with that humility begotten of remorse which should have chastened the spirit of the survivor after the commission of such a crime, and which should have shrunk instinctively from seeking a justification in the eyes of the world of a sin that must have been scorching his own conscience with flames of fire. We repeat that the publication was bitter and wicked in the extreme; nor has it tended to place the living principal in the duel in a fairer light: on the contrary, followed up by, as it has been, and productive of, the written documents of Colonel Fawcett, it has rather tended to excite loathing than palliation, and to deaden the consideration which society will often almost unjustly feel for fellow-creatures placed by crime or misfortune in extreme trouble.

It would seem from the unvarnished story, dragged unwillingly from the portfolio of the deceased officer, that the conduct of the man who now stands charged with his murder was aggravating in the extreme—that it was tinged with a sort of bullying ferocity—a sort of ungentlemanly brutalism, very difficult for a warm and chivalrous nature to endure. On the other hand, it seems to have been met with high spirit and conventional good breeding—with soldiers' punctilious sense of insult, and with that pride of station and sense of self-respect which do not storm over into threatening, nor forget decency in a rage. Colonel Fawcett, indeed, seems to have maintained the true "army bearing," which, from a false construction of honour by society, has been accepted as necessary (alas! how melancholy wretched is the sophistry) to the true preservation of the character of the gentleman. Colonel Fawcett, however, though of gentle manners, under the interchange of insults, exhibited no reluctance to embark in the act which has terminated so fatally: he was, on the contrary, prone to expedite it, and hurry it to its sad conclusion, and seemed to place all faith in the efficacy, for purposes of satisfaction," of that sort of cold-blooded encounter which eventually resulted in his death.

Thus has the life of a young man—a fond husband and father, and a gallant and distinguished soldier—fallen a sacrifice to a cursed and abhorred conventionalism for which morality has no warrant—religion no palliation—justice no excuse;—a monster social crime, born of depravity of spirit, distortion of honour, and springing from the passion of revenge.

The immediate cause of the quarrel which provoked the insults that led to this duel between two men almost bound up in brotherhood was paltry, valueless, insignificant in the extreme. "Some woman, in what we imply to have been a pecuniary matter, Colonel Fawcett thought had bamboozled both of them; but Lieutenant Munro would not allow Colonel Fawcett to think that he would suffer any woman to bamboozle him." Then in those few words lie all the essence of a quarrel that was to end in blood and death! Is not the absurdity of such a position nearly as ridiculous to reasoning men as it is horrible and humiliating to the eye of the Christian mind? That trifle should swell into a tempest to give the grave another victim, and murder another sacrifice, and to pour despair and desolation into two peaceful and happy domestic homes! God forbid that such an unnatural contingency should ever again outrage humanity in England and mock the religion and civilization of mankind.

What greatly perplexes and distresses us in recurring to the features of this melancholy affair is the course taken by the seconds, who seem to have blindly followed out the duel to its murderous end without an attempt at anything like a moral interference to prevent its coming about. In the hope, however, that upon their trial—should justice ever reach them—they may throw a different complexion upon this part of the history of the mournful tragedy, we will be silent upon the subject now, leaving its implications to convey a moral of their own to our readers—a moral every way strengthening and fortifying our position as to the absurdity, the futility, and the intense wickedness of the duel as a conventional law.

We were about to say that we would restrain ourselves from farther comment upon the parties surviving Colonel Fawcett, lest we might betray ourselves into prejudicing their case in the eyes of their countrymen, or creating an impression unfavourable to the side of mercy—mercy wedded to justice. And so refrain we shall; but, in the meanwhile, it is fair to notice that some hints have been thrown out of the prosecutions being either delayed or wholly abandoned, owing to the peculiar domestic interests which are so unfortunately involved in the results and considerations of the crime. This would be to allow private feeling to warp the public weal; and the Times, in adverting to the possibility of such an injustice, makes some very wholesome and considerate remarks.—"We hear it suggested," says our contemporary, "and we cannot wonder at the suggestion, that, under the circumstances of the case, we cannot expect an effectual prosecution. If it so turn out; if feelings, which we do not dare to blame, interfere to shelter from justice a crime so laden with aggravation as the present appears to be; if English law is so inefficient that it cannot be brought to bear upon guilt of the first magnitude without the aid of those whom a more cogent—it may be a higher—power forbids to move; if it prove to be a matter of private choice whether the price of murder shall or shall not be exacted by that power whose office it is to watch over human life, and which 'beareth not the sword in vain,' we may, perhaps, be forced to resign ourselves to the present result: but we must claim for the future that our criminal procedure be no longer trusted to the hesitating hands of individuals. The supreme authority of the state must not only lend its name to a prosecutor, but assume the conduct of prosecutions which involve in them some of the highest duties which that authority is commissioned to fulfil."

We may conclude with a passing remark upon the distressing situation of Mr. Gulliver. There can be no doubt that he plunged into the affair only to carry with him his medical skill in case of danger; that he went to heal wounds or save life if it fell within his power; that his was rather a mission of charity than of hate. All the public know and feel this, and it is probable that a jury will also view it favourably, even to the extent of acquittal. But, nevertheless, the law is right which regards every man as participeps criminis who can prevent, and does not prevent, the possibility of murder taking place in cold blood. We can understand the "point of honour" which in the army would make it impossible, according to present conventionalism, for a military surgeon to refuse to attend a duel with his friend; but we are not the less sure that that "point of honour" ought to be abandoned, and that conventionalism swept away, so that reason and religion may assume a sway stronger than mere social punctilio, and more virtuous than that unholy secrecy which is scrupulous to conceal a murder, and silent when men and brothers could be snatched from the brink of the grave.

The committee appointed to try the merits of the last Durham election have declared it null and void, and that the noble lord who lately represented that city in Parliament has been, through his agents, guilty of bribery. The evidence adduced on this occasion discloses in the most loathsome aspect that purulence which not only overspreads, disfigures, and debilitates the energies of our system of constitutional representation, but is, alas! a canker in the fair fame of England, and robs the national character of its noblest attributes. Manliness in the assertion of just principles a generous warmth of feeling that impels to practical sympathy with the wronged of every clime—a sturdy independence of thought and expression that would not "flatter Neptune for his trident, nor Jove for power to thunder." These have been the characteristics of Englishmen so plain and palpable that foreigners who could neither emulate nor deny them have been forced to caricature by representing them in their intolerant extremes, and designating them by those social failings to which they make the nearest approach. Alas! how inconsistent are those qualities which create, justify, and ennoble pride with the coward, shrinking, conscience-tracked course of him who, receiving the wages of national treachery, which, lax as the tone of national morality may be, is not yet so debased as that he dare openly avow his shame, violates the highest trust that man can owe to any but his Maker, and disregards that obligation which has in it the highest essentials and adjuncts that could render it a debt of honour, both as regards those who entrusted the political boon, and the country for whose service it was confided in her sons. Such a man—such he who wrestles with the dignity of humanity by receiving, and the traitors still less excusable, who speculate on the privations of poverty in proffering, the wages of political corruption! Each session of Parliament withdraws the veil that had hidden some busy nest of political infamy, and records the disgusting histories of the proceedings of those who have prowled about with sedulous ingenuity to ensnare the consciences and honour of their victims, and of the political recreants who tarnish the name of Englishman by their utter venality and spiritless treachery. Why should not the opprobrium with which all other crimes are visited weigh heavily upon this, and overwhelm alike the tempters and the tempted in those deeds of reciprocal disgrace? Public opinion operates as a salutary check on the commission of most crimes; and in what does this to which we advert differ from the most enormous, except in the dastardliness of its nature and the absence of penal consequences? To all political parties it is equally a shame; for, alas! there is no party free from its stain. For the sake, then, of humanity—for the credit of our common country—let all parties combine in affixing a brand of indelible obloquy to the commission of this crime. Let the man who is guilty of it be considered capable of any species of villany—let the traitor to society be a social Pariah.

Hic niger est tunc tu Romane caveto.

Above all things, let the profferer of a bribe be visited with as deep a condemnation as the receiver. Let the man who is known to have bribed at one election be deemed unworthy of any honest man's vote at a future one. The electors of England have the remedy in their own hands: let it be their common object to apply it. It is the common cause of electors, of journalists, of all who value the morality, the good repute, or the efficiency of the institutions under which they live. The times require a strong simultaneous effort on the part of all Englishmen to raise their national character from the slough and mire of this degradation. All that is requisite is the unequivocal and practical condemnation, both general and electoral, of all those desecrators of constitutional rights, social independence, and moral dignity, who meddle with the sale of the franchises of their countrymen, which were vested in them as an acknowledgment of their liberties, as a right of which they should be proud, and the abandonment of which must be accompanied by general degradation, gross individual infamy, and danger and discredit to all our liberal institutions.

THE BRITISH GENERAL'S DEFENCE OF HIS SOLDIERS.

See the letter of General Nott, published in another part of our paper, to the Adjutant-General of the Army in India.

I.

A slanderous lie from the voice of spite
On the wings of shame was sent
To where the English warrior lay,
And it struck him in his tent!
The sun burned fiery hot above,
And the grass reeked red below—
More fiery burned the warrior's soul
When struck by the slander-blow!

II.

The lie was couched in the form that dares
Suggest, but not asperse:
A question—set with more evil snares
Than ever lay in a curse!
"You plunged into war with a victor's sword—
When the conquered helpless stood
How many were slain by your wanton word?
How loud did you cry for blood?"

III.

"What rapined women shrieked to God
With a fearful vain appeal?
What murdered corses strewed the ground
For plunder's vulture meal?"
The warrior weeps slow blood-red drops
As the lie his spirit sears—
Then bounds to his feet with a torture cry
Tenfold more fierce than tears!

IV.

"But conscience pours on his spirit-wound
A sweet and soothing balm;
And the sword of his soul is sheathed anon
In the soldier's stately calm!
And he bends his brow to think awhile,
Then gives to his pen its wing,
While his scorn sweeps over the slander-lie,
And withers the reckless thing!

V.

* * * * *

"Four years they bore with a scorching heat
And a fevered clime. What then:
They were gallant soldiers every one;
They were true and trusty men!
With loyal hearts and scathing swords,
And spirits free as brave,
They died—or lived for England's name—
Old England or the grave!

VI.

"When the savage came with his traitor eyes—
Wild furious—mad for gore,
They looked fought—smiled,—and all was done;
They conquered and forbore!
No blood of triumph stained the soil
Where'er my soldiers trod,
For, 'mid the madness of turmoil,
They kept a thought of God!

VII.

"GHUZNEE! that city comes the first
Foul finger-point of scorn.
My army entered it; its heart
Was barren and forlorn!
'Twas tenantless and voiceless as
The city of despair!
No life! Now, Slander, go and ask
What souls were murdered there!

VIII.

"But I had the forts razed, one and all,
And the ruins levelled round,
For I could not bear that a relic there
Should of the past be found!
There murder—torture—starving—death—
And treach'ry held their throne
Against our English!—mercy! breath!—
I left the place . . . . alone!

IX.

"ROSA! the spot was very fair,
Most "lovely to behold;"
My soldiers took it, but they took
No crime—no lust—no gold!
It was not like Ghuznee—'twas not
A dead, deserted place—
'Twas filled with beauty—flooded with
The fruitful human race!

X.

"The troops were round its walls—they saw
An Eden in their grasp;
Had Cleopatra's self been there
She'd not have found an asp!
Fair honour's soul—the soldier's charm—
Subdued—pervaded all,
My men paid gold for fruits they might
Have gathered from the wall!

XI.

"Its gardens grew most lustrous fair,
Its barns were full of grain,
Its farms spoke riches, and they felt
An atmosphere of gain!
Nay, more—they saw (sad tempting sight
To vengeance!) pile on pile
Plunder from comrades whom they knew
Were murdered all the while!

XII.

"Yet discipline and mercy joined
To keep the Christians back;
They did not let the bloodhound slip,
They would not swarm his track;
They bade fierce fiery passion yield
To mercy's gentle rein,
And so our British soldiers raised
Their glory above gain!

XIII

"They loved me well—they love me still,
I think, or else "good night!"
God knows I never loved them more
Than when they tow'r'd in fight,
Save when, with chastened hearts, they lay
Before a vanquished town,
Full plumed with mercy's wings, and not
A ruffle on her down!

XIV.

* * * * *

"These questions silenced—now I vent
Some bitterness of soul,
Some thoughts that linger on my brain,
And will not brook control.
They are not selfish—I can yield
What laurels I have earned;
But, oh! I cannot bear to find
My gallant soldiers spurned!

XV.

"They've borne with me untiring war—
All toil—no sigh, no rest;
They've proved themselves, in field and breach,
The bravest and the best.
All England owes them tribute—they
Have prowess'd all her name;
Honour their goal! how will they meet
The scorn blast of this shame!

XVI.

"This their reward!"—The General hid
His face, but spake no word,
While tears fell scorchingly on hands
Well blistered by his sword!
He paused—the soldier's calm again
Soon bated passion's breath—
His seal'd despatch this motto bore,
"OLD ENGLAND'S UNTIL DEATH!"

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, left town at ten minutes past three on Saturday, in a chariot and four, escorted by a party of dragoons, for Claremont. Archdeacon Wilberforce arrived at Claremont on Saturday, and joined the royal circle at dinner. Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the royal suite attended divine service on Sunday at Claremont; Archdeacon Wilberforce officiated.

The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, arrived in town in a chariot and four, at ten minutes before five o'clock on Monday afternoon, from Claremont.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent left town on Monday morning for Bushy House, Bushy Park, on a visit to her Majesty the Queen Dowager. Her Royal Highness returned to Clarence House in the afternoon.

Sir R. Peel arrived in town on Monday from Drayton Manor. Lord Stanley returned to town the same day from Liverpool.

On Tuesday the Queen and Prince Albert took their accustomed walk in the royal gardens of Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Mr. George Edward Anson, afterwards presided at a meeting at the office of the Duchy of Cornwall in Somerset House. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty during the day.

On Wednesday the Queen walked in the royal gardens of Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert left Buckingham Palace shortly before seven o'clock, for the terminus of the Great Western Railway at Paddington, and returned in the evening from Sutton at a quarter-past seven o'clock. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, were taken an airing in the royal gardens Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, attended by Lady Anna Maria Dawson and Sir George Cowper, visited the Royal Botanic Gardens in the Regent's Park in the morning.

THE KING OF HANOVER.—On Monday evening the King of Hanover honoured the Earl and Countess of Chesterfield with his company at dinner, at Chesterfield House, attended by Baron de Rettzenstein. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge also honoured the Countess of Chesterfield with their company at the ball given by her ladyship. On Tuesday his Majesty and the Duchess of Gloucester honoured Mr. Ernst's concert, at the Hanover-rooms, with their presence. The King attended by Captain Bassett, honoured Baron Brunow, the Russian minister, with his company at dinner on the same day, at Ashburnham House. A grand banquet was given to his Majesty and a select circle of the nobility by the Marquis of Abercorn, at Stanmore Priory, on Wednesday evening.

MORTALITY IN HIGH LIFE.—We regret to announce the death of Lady Mary Louisa Lennox, who expired on Saturday morning last at her residence, Wood End, near Chichester. The deceased was the eldest sister of the late Duke of Richmond, and consequently was aunt of the present duke, and was born November 2, 1760—late intelligence of the death of Mr. John Bassett was received on Monday by Lady De Dunstanville. Mr. Bassett, who represented Helston in the late Parliament, on Whig principles, was, we learn, making a tour up the Rhine. He was nephew of the late Lord De Dunstanville, and has related to Baroness Rossetti and Lady De Dunstanville.—Sir Charles E. Nightingale, Bart., died at Bath last week, in his 59th year. Sir Charles, whose sister is married to the Hon. the Recorder of London, is succeeded in his title and estates by his son Charles, now Sir Charles Nightingale, born 1809, married 1839 daughter of the late J. Foster, Esq.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY.—The third exhibition of the Royal Botanic Society of London took place on Wednesday afternoon at their gardens in the Regent's Park, which, in spite of the showery weather and the threatening appearance of the sky, a pretty numerous assembly of visitors attended, including a large number of elegantly-dressed ladies. The flower show, which was beautifully under large marquees, contained a variety of curious and interesting specimens, chiefly supplied by nurserymen in the suburban districts; and the appearance of this rich and rare display of sweet flowers and beautiful plants was attractive in the extreme, and drew forth warm encomiums from the visitors. The gardens were in very good order, and bid fair to prove a delightful rendezvous for the lovers of botanical pursuits. The model of a winter-garden, or large hothouse, which it is shortly about to be erected, was exhibited in one of the out-buildings, and appears well adapted for the purposes for which it is intended. A military band was in attendance throughout the afternoon.

THE LATE DUEL.—On Tuesday last the adjourned coroner's inquest in the late melancholy duel case was resumed before Mr. Wakley, at the Camden Arms Tavern, Camden Town. The painful interest excited by the occurrence, notwithstanding the protracted nature of the inquiry, had not in the least degree abated; and prior to the assembling of the jury the neighbourhood of the Camden Arms was crowded by persons, amongst whom were a large body of military officers. A number of witnesses were examined for the purpose connecting the supposed seconds with a part cipation in the occurrence, and two of Colonel Fawcett's servants were called with the view of eliciting an account of the original cause of difference between the deceased and Lieutenant Munro. They were unable, however, to state further than that they had heard Colonel Fawcett desire Lieutenant Munro to leave the house. The following documents, however, in Colonel Fawcett's handwriting, which were found amongst the deceased's papers, and were produced by his half brother, Mr. Isidore Blake, contain a narrative of the transaction, which, under all the circumstances, may be considered authentic. The first document was dated the 30th of June, but the name of the person to whom it was addressed was torn off. It ran as follows:—

"My dear——" (here the name was torn out), "The enclosed gives you the fullest insight to the nature of the quarrel between Mr. Munro and me that I can offer. Had he not been the husband of my wife's sister, and his conduct flatly contradicting me, and then saying he would have thrown me down stairs, I should have demanded a meeting, not giving him the option of making an apology, and this demanding of an apology seems to me as absurd as his language and manners were unjustifiable. It now rests with you, and on the principle of fighting my tailor, if challenged, should Mr. Munro wish it. Oblige me by having the meeting this evening if possible.—Yours, faithfully, "LYNAR FAWCETT."

The next document also bore date the 30th of June, but was not addressed to any one. It was as follows:—"After some conversation with Mr. Munro relative to Mrs. Smith, I was a blunderer (No matter; I might have made bad I been acting for you; but she has bamboozled us, or you? (I cannot say which) Upon which Mr. Munro, in a very loud voice, said, 'This is four times you have accused me of allowing you to be imposed on.' 'No Munro; I have never said or thought you allowed me to be imposed on. On the contrary, I said it was a blunder which I might have made towards you under similar circumstances.' Mr. Munro, in a most bullying manner, saying 'I say you have, four times.' On which I said, 'A flat contradiction I shall endure from no man. From this moment, Sir, we are strangers, and I desire you leave my house and never enter it again.' On which I stood up, and rinsing the bell, desired the servant to open the door for Mr. Munro. Mr. Munro said he would not leave the house. I said, 'The hall-door remains open until you do.' Mr. Munro, after remaining about five minutes and finishing his tea, left the house. He returned soon after, he said, to apologize to Mrs. Fawcett for having left without wishing her good night. He then addressed me—Do you suppose I left the house because you desired me. I would stay here all night in spite of you, and, if it was not for the connexion of the family, I should, on your ordering me to leave your house, an insult such as I have never before received, I should have thrown you head over heels down stairs. To which I replied, I said, 'Mr. Munro, that is not the way gentlemen settle their differences, and, as to our family connexions, I beg you may cease to think of it.' During this interview, Mr. Munro continued to swaggar in and out of the room on. I pledge my honour to the above being the truth of what passed between us to the best of my recollection, and when he had left my wife was surprised at my fort earance in not calling in the police.

"June 30, 1843. (Signed) "LYNAR FAWCETT"

The coroner (then addressing Mr. Blake) asked: Have you any other letter? Mr. Blake: I have one other. The coroner: I do not know whether the jury have not heard enough. The jury had, however, for their own satisfaction, better hear it. Mr. Blake here read the third letter:—

"My dear——" (The name was here again torn away from the letter), "You are fully authorised on my part to assure Mr. Munro that I never accused him of allowing me to be wronged wilfully. That I neither insulted him, nor had the most distant intention of insulting him in any way, and, that I turned him out of my house for most gross y insulting me.—Yours, &c.,

"June 30, 1843. "LYNAR FAWCETT."

The coroner inquired of Mr. Gulliver if he had any witnesses to call, as that was all the evidence?—Mr. Humphreys said that Mr. Gulliver was ready to give evidence, but he had no witnesses to call. He had always been willing to state all he knew with respect to the transaction, but, acting under his advice, Mr. Gulliver would not make any statement unless he was sworn to the truth of it.—The coroner said he could hear any statement he chose to make, and was bound to hear any witnesses he might call, but he could not be sworn.—Mr. Humphreys contended that there was no accusation against Mr. Gulliver until the verdict of the jury was returned, and he, therefore, was eligible to give evidence.—The coroner said it had recently been decided that all persons acting in an unlawful act were accusable, and he thought, from the evidence which had been given, that a very strong accusation had been made, not only against Mr. Gulliver, but other persons. If he (the coroner) could not make any statement unless he was sworn to the truth of it.—The coroner said he could hear any statement he chose to make, and was bound to hear any witnesses he might call, but he could not be sworn.—Mr. Humphreys contended that there was no accusation against Mr. Gulliver until the verdict of the jury was returned, and he, therefore, was eligible to give evidence.—The coroner said it had recently been decided that all persons acting in an unlawful act were accusable, and he thought, from the evidence which had been given, that a very strong accusation had been made, not only against Mr. Gulliver, but other persons. If the coroner could not make any statement unless he is to lie under such an accusation. He thought he could not examine Mr. Gulliver as a witness, as he could not elicit the truth from him with respect to the transaction without putting questions which legally he would not be allowed to put.—The coroner then summed up the evidence, and addressed the jury at considerable length, who retired from the inquest room to consider their verdict, and having consulted together for about one hour and a half, returned.—The coroner inquired if they had all agreed in their verdict, and being answered in the affirmative, he called upon the foreman to pronounce it.—Mr. Cumberland, the foreman, then read aloud the following as the unanimous verdict of the jury:—"We find Alexander Thompson Munro, Duncan Trevor Grant, and William Holland Leckie Daniel Cuddy guilty of wilful murder, as principals, in the first degree, and George Gulliver guilty of wilful murder in the second degree, believing him present only as a medical man."—The jury, by direction of the coroner, again retired, and ultimately it was understood that Mr. Gulliver was to be forthwith committed on the coroner's warrant to Newgate. This painful and long protracted inquiry then terminated.

LICENSED VICTUALLERS' ALMSHOUSES.—On Monday last a fancy fair, flower show, and fête champêtre took place in behalf of the almshouses on the grounds belonging to the establishment in the Old Kent-road. Several bands were in attendance, and continued to play during the day. The flower show evinced great attention to horticultural science. The amusements closed with a display of fireworks.

NEWSVENDERS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT SOCIETY.—On Tuesday the patrons and members of this institution, having for its object the relief of aged and decayed newsmen, their widows and servants, made their annual trip to that pretty place of summer resort, Twickenham-ait, when the Lady Jane and Richmond steamers were chartered for the occasion. The vessels started from the Adelphi Pier at eleven o'clock, and the voyage was most agreeably enlivened by singing, dancing, and music, some excellent quadrille bands having been engaged. On the arrival of the company at the ait the rain, which had long been threatening, descended in torrents, and in some degree spoiled the pleasure of the company. Every accommodation had been made by the hostess of the tavern for those who had formed pic-nic parties, and a capital dinner was prepared for those who preferred joining the committee, stewards, and their friends. Mr. Hutton was called to the chair, and Mr. Wild officiated as vice-president. After the cloth had been removed the usual loyal and patriotic toasts were given with hearty applause; the healths of the president and other officers of the institution, the chairman, vice-chairman, &c., were drunk with the customary honours.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN INSTITUTE.—A meeting for the purpose of establishing a literary institution under the above title, was held on Thursday last at the Hanover square Rooms. The meeting was most numerously and respectably attended, there being present—The Earl of Grosvenor, Admiral Sir E. Codrington, Thomas Wyse, Esq., M.P., Wm. Ewart, Esq., M.P., N. Wm. Sanderson, Esq., M.P., Hon. Leicester Stanhope, D. B. Reid, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., William Vizard, Esq., H. R. Yorke, Esq., M.P. The chair was taken by the Right Hon. the Earl of Devon, who opened the proceedings by making some interesting observations, and having concluded, the Secretary read the minutes of a preliminary meeting held at the residence of the Earl of Devon, in Bryanstone-square, which stated that the plan, object, and design of the British and Foreign Institute, proposed to be established by Mr. Buckingham, late M.P., at the west end of London, was taken into consideration and generally approved. It was resolved, that two objects are designed to be accomplished by this undertaking. The first and most important, is to establish a centre of personal intercourse, at which gentlemen of education and literary taste from all countries, and especially from the British colonies and provincial towns, may have easy access to each other, and to men of cultivated tastes in the metropolis, &c. The second and subordinate object, is to secure for the originator and founder of the institute, a permanent home after his varied and active life in all quarters of the globe, and an honourable occupation and pursuit, &c. Regulations and rules for the establishment of the institute were next read. They stated that the site of the building will be in as central a position for the west end of London as can be procured, and as near as may be practicable to the principal squares. The board of direction for the government of the institute will consist of a president, five trustees, twelve vice-presidents, &c. The prospectus stated, that at the last preliminary meeting a letter was read by the Earl of Devon, addressed to his lordship by Mr. George Anson, secretary to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, expressing his approbation of the general object of the institute, and stating that his Royal Highness was ready to give it the sanction of his public patronage whenever sufficient progress should be made to warrant him in taking that step.—The first resolution was moved by Lord Brougham, after some lengthened observations in favour of the establishment of the institution. The resolution was seconded by Lord [illegible], and carried unanimously. The second resolution was moved by Mr. Wyse, M.P., and seconded by Mr. Ewart, M.P., and carried unanimously. Resolutions in accordance were afterwards proposed and carried, and a vote of thanks being passed to the chairman, the meeting separated.

IMPROVEMENTS IN NEWGATE MARKET.—The Commissioners of Sewers for the City of London have this week caused a new sewer to be formed in Newgate market, and which has been taken by contract. It will pass in various directions through and outside the market. The depth of it will be about fifteen feet. The construction will be a very great improvement to the market, and tend to render it much more healthy. It is expected that the sewer will take at least two months for its completion.

THE ANIMALS' FRIEND SOCIETY, of Mark-lane, last week caused the proprietor of the omnibus 4421 to be fined 1*l*s., by Alderman Gibbs; the driver of the omnibus 599 to be fined 5*s.* and costs, by the Lord Mayor; Edward Hoar, 5*s.* and costs, by Alderman Thomas Wood; Stephen Pinkister, 5*s.*, by Mr. Jardine; Henry Bange 20*s.*, and Samuel Rumsey 10*s.*, by Mr. Hardwick, for cruelty to their horses. It also charged George Watson, (whom its officers had taken into custody for having very cruelly treated horses) before Mr. Norton, but we were sorry to find that he only rebuked the offender and dismissed the case. The society likewise charged John Clark, with cruelty to a horse, but he could not be found; and at Dover it has been actively engaged in the prevention of cock-fighting.

POSTSCRIPT.

The royal dinner party at Buckingham Palace, on Thursday evening, previous to her Majesty going to the opera, included the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Countess of Dunmore, Hon. Misses Paget and Liddell, Viscountess Forbes, the Earl of Liverpool, Marquis of Exeter, Viscount Combermere, Earl of Beverley, Lord Ernest Bruce, Earl Jermyn, Right Hon. G. L. Dawson Damer, Lord Charles Wellesley, and Col. M'Donall.

The Lord Chamberlain was prevented by indisposition from attending her Majesty at the Opera on Thursday evening.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent honoured the performance of the Italian Opera with her presence at the same time as her Majesty.

ARRIVAL OF PRINCE AUGUSTUS AND HIS BRIDE.—The French steamer Pluton arrived at Southampton, from Lisbon on Thursday evening, having on board their Royal Highnesses Prince Augustus and his bride the Princess Clementine, also the Duke Ferdinand and suite. The royal party landed at eight o'clock, under a royal salute, and immediately departed in a special train for London. Union jacks and other flags were hoisted in all parts of the town.

TWO MEN KILLED BY STEAM.—On Thursday Michael Barrett and James Tye, two workmen employed in the extensive sugar house of Messrs. Craven and Co., in Duncan street, Whitechapel, were occupied in cleaning out a steam-boiler, when a pipe which communicated from a contiguous boiler to the one in which the unfortunate men were internally burst, and the former being at the time strongly charged with steam, that powerful element rushed with considerable force into the empty boiler, and before their cries brought immediate assistance, yet on being dragged out they presented a shocking spectacle, and died soon after.

DEATH OF DR. RADCLIFFE.—The venerable judge died on Tuesday last, at his residence, in Leeson-street, Dublin. Dr. Radcliffe filled the office of judge in two separate courts, the Prerogative and the Consistorial, and had long been a member of the Privy Council. The vacancy in the Prerogative Court is in the gift of Primate Beresford. The Archbishop of Dublin has the nomination to the judgeship of the Consistorial Court. It is not at all likely that both offices will be conferred upon one person.

DEATH OF THE REV. HENRY BLUNT.—On Thursday morning, at six o'clock, the Rev. Henry Blunt, M.A., died at Streatham Rectory. The rev. gentleman was formerly rector of Upper Chelsea, in which benefice he was succeeded by the Rev. Richard Burgess, B.D. Few clergymen have been more respected than Mr. Blunt, whose wacle life was untiringly devoted to the discharge of his ministerial duties.

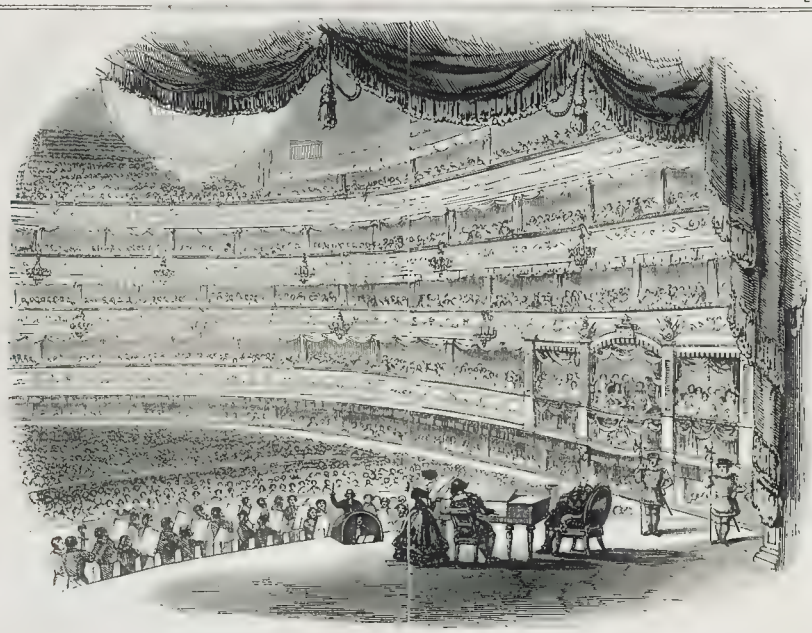
FOREIGN.

FRANCE.—On Tuesday, when the special train from Orleans had arrived near Etampes, it was perceived that water was wanting. An extra locomotive was consequently dispatched. This came suddenly upon the end of the train, and the shock was so violent that the two last dil gences, belonging to the Messagerie Laffitte et Caillard, was dashed to pieces. About 20 passengers in these diligences were more or less injured, and it is said that three of them have since died.

RUSSIA.—On the 13th ult. two churches, a convent of nuns, composed of 17 different bui dings, and 37 private houses, were destroyed at Orzel, in Russia, by a conflagration.

AMERICA. LIVERPOOL, Thursday Night.—By the arrival of the Themis from St. John's we learn that the steam-ship Columbia is safe. The Themis left St. John's on the 3rd, and reports having seen the Columbia on shore on Sable Island, on the 4th. The weather was fair. She was lying off her steam, and was surrounded by fishing boats; and the captain of the Themis states that there is no doubt of her safety.—We have had another arrival from the United States to-day. The packet-ship Oxford, Captain Rathbone, reached here this afternoon after a very rapid passage of nineteen days from New York, whence she sailed on the 1st inst., with a full complement of passengers. The papers by this arrival are only one day later than those received by the Garrick, and contain little of importance. Unfavourable news had been received from Port-au-Prince. The yellow fever raged fiercely, every vessel in the port had lost some of its hands, and the [illegible] Consul had fal en a victim to the prevailing epidemic. Mexico appears to be in a very unsettled state, riots are continually taking place there. The interior, and it is thought by many that Santa Anna's administration must soon terminate. 3000 indians, and 1000 troops, had been assembled Calapa, with a prospect of soon taking possession of that place. Strong resolutions, condemnatory of Mr. O'Connell's abolition speeches, were passed unanimously at a repeal meeting, held at Philade phia.

Dr. Hagan, the editor of the Vicksburgh Sentinel, and an Irishman by birth, was assassinated at that place by Dr. Adams, son of Judge Adams, on the 8th ult., whilst returning to his office after dinner.



INTERIOR OF THE ITALIAN OPERA-HOUSE.

HER MAJESTY'S STATE VISIT TO THE ITALIAN OPERA.

On Thursday, her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by a brilliant suite, honoured the Italian Opera-house with a state visit. The royal command having been announced some days previous, the progress of the royal carriages to the theatre was witnessed by great crowds of persons, who likewise congregated in the immediate vicinity of the Opera-house. The Queen's private entrance in the Haymarket was, on this occasion, opened to the royal family only; her Majesty and suite arrived at half-past seven o'clock, and on entering the royal box the Queen and Prince Albert were enthusiastically received by a most brilliant audience, every portion of the theatre being crowded. The performances commanded were Rossini's opera, "Il Barbiére de Siviglia," with Grisi as Rosina; Mario, Almaviva; Lablache, Bartolo; F. Lablache, Basilio; and Formasari, as Figaro. Between the acts of the opera, Mdlles. F. Eissler and Cerito danced a pas de deux, composed expressly for the occasion by Perrot; and the performances concluded with the last new ballet of "Ondine." The national anthem was sung on the entrée and retirement of the royal party; the Queen acknowledging with her accustomed dignity, her brilliant reception by the audience.

Throughout the evening, but, more especially on the entrée and departure of her Majesty and Prince Albert, the theatre presented a magnificent spectacle, alike superb and impressive; and it would be difficult to convey an idea of the fascinating display of titled beauty, wealth, and brilliancy assembled within the walls of this high court of the aristocracy of fashion on Thursday night. The sumptuous appointments of the royal boxes, the splendid costumes of the Sovereign and the court, and of the general company, viewed from the stage of the theatre, was, indeed, a scene of dazzling richness.

This vast and beautiful theatre, in dimensions, very nearly approaches the great theatre at Milan. The stage is sixty feet deep and eighty feet wide; from the orchestra to the centre of the front boxes the entire pit is sixty-six feet in length and sixty-five in breadth; and, before the division of a portion into stalls, would hold eight hundred persons. The height is fifty-five feet from the floor of the pit to the roof: the boxes are disposed in five tiers, exceed two hundred in number, and would accommodate nearly one thousand persons; and the gallery, before the division of the lower portion into stalls, would contain eight hundred persons. The total receipts, in one season, for the boxes, have exceeded £20,000, and for the pit nearly half that sum. Altogether, we never remember the Opera-house to have presented so tasteful an interior as during the present season: the cotton drapery of other days has been superseded by rich moreen and light chintz lining; the gilding on the box-fronts is of unwonted freshness; and the uniform neatness, and even plainness, of decoration throughout the house is judiciously chosen to set off the brilliancy of the company. State visits to the Opera-house are attended with great cost to the manager: when George IV. went in state in 1821, to the Opera, the entire expense of the preparations was upwards of £300: the ante-room to the royal box were hung with satin and festoons of gold lace.

The preparations made by the lessee for the reception of the Queen, on the occasion of her state visit on Thursday, were distinguished by the usual good taste and splendour which have characterised the whole of his management. The royal box occupied the entrance of the Queen's side of the house, and extended over the space of the three double boxes which usually fill the same situation. The front projected about three feet beyond the regular line of the boxes, thus affording a good sight of her Majesty to the greater portion of the audience in every part of the theatre. The cornices and pillars which formed this frontage, and which were surmounted by the royal crown, were all in gold, and relieved by rich velvet draperies of crimson and azure, the general effect of which, from the house, was excessively rich and imposing. In addition to the boxes on the ground tier, the six boxes below, as well as those above, were devoted to the royal cortége. The passages and waiting-rooms leading to the royal box were fitted up with white silk, and festooned with natural flowers of the choicest kinds. An additional apartment was also fitted up in the adjoining concert-room, in the event of the Queen's wishing to retire for the purpose of taking refreshment during the performances. By the obliging attention of Mr. W. Grieve, from whose design the royal box was fitted, we are enabled to present our readers with an accurate view of the interior, in addition to a coup d'œil of the auditory from the stage, showing the position of the box, its exterior fittings, &c.

INTERIOR OF THE ROYAL BOX.

COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

M. BENEDICT'S CONCERT.—We say concert, because the dramatic portions of this entertainment on Monday night last, being in the olio style, did not afford any great opportunity to the development of histrionic power. Snatches from scenes, or even scenes from operas, are tantalizing. Nevertheless, all that was done was executed in the very perfection of art. Mrs. Alfred Shaw, as Cinderella, was most enchanting. There is a native grace which hangs around this cantatrice that at once wins the way to your approval, where she no sooner arrives than she increases approbation into enthusiasm, and enraptures you by her most exquisite performance of whatever she undertakes. Miss Novello seems to wish to command applause rather than win it; but glorious and generous Staudigl carries with him everywhere the sympathies of his auditors, whether musical or not: his Bertram obliterated all traces of Levasseur's once-deemed incomparable impersonation of that character. Benedict is the first accompanyist, on the pianoforte, to a vocal pezzo that we recollect ever to have heard; moreover, he is a brilliant performer, a sound contrapuntist, an amiable man, and a modest genius. He executed a duet for piano and violin (the joint production of himself and De Beriot) with Camillo Sivori in a most charming and brilliant manner. We have probably heard the latter to greater advantage, but still his performance was very delightful. It is difficult to determine which is the more entitled to distinction—the player who can interpret a very good writer's meaning faithfully, or the one who surprises by his own invented wonders. It is hard, moreover, to determine in which of these two lights we should consider Sivori; although, perhaps, his genius is more apparent in his own compositions, than those of his wizard master. The rest of the performance reflected credit upon the taste and judgment in selection of the beneficiare, and the ensemble was crowned with such a bumper as must have made his heart glad at being caterer and host on the occasion.

The Echo de Vérone relates the following anecdote of the Archbishop of Chevreuse. After the disastrous fire at Salins, which plunged so many families in ruin, the Archbishop commenced a collection for the sufferers, which, although very productive, was still less than he could have desired. When he had exhausted all the ordinary appeals to the benevolence of the people of Bordeaux and its neighbourhood, he learnt that a grand ball was about to take place at Bordeaux, and in the midst of it he presented himself to the astonished dancers. The music immediately ceased, and the dancers stood still. "Go on," said the Archbishop, "I am not come to be a trouble fete." But the respect of the company for the Archbishop would not allow them to continue. "Well, then," said he, "if you will not dance, I must have a waltz for myself," and making a signal to the orchestra, the music was resumed, and the company again took their places. The Archbishop offered his hand to the lady of the house, and went round the circle, with an open purse, collecting subscriptions for the sufferers of Salins. It is needless to say that he had an abundant receipt.

RECENT ASCENT OF POMPEY'S PILLAR.

The accompanying drawing of Pompey's Pillar we have just received from Alexandria; it was made on the occasion of a recent ascent of that celebrated column, in order to afford a correct pictorial idea of the very ingenious, but at the same time safe and simple apparatus by which the ascent and descent were accomplished. This feat was entirely planned, and successfully executed on the 4th of May last, by Captain Betts, of the British schooner Foxhound; and the following explanatory details may be relied upon as correct.

In the first place a kite was flown over the column, by which means a line, and then a strong hawser, were passed over the top of the capital, and the two ends, one on each side of the column, were tightened down by means of handspikes driven into the lower part of the pedestal. The first person who ascended was a sailor, who was hoisted up by a line fastened to the hawser. This man then fixed at the top a studding-sail boom, by strongly lashing it to the hawser six feet below, and also close to the capital. About five feet above this, at the head of the boom, a staff with one of the vessel's signal flags was fixed, as also a block, through which a strong line was rove, both ends being sent down to the ground. At one end of this line a loop was made to pass the leg through, with a lashing to fasten under the arms; the person desirous of ascending sitting as it were in the loop, and being thus secured, he held on by his hands to the hawser, was hauled up in about thirty seconds by the bystanders, landed on the top, where a glass of wine was presented to him, the Queen of England's health drank, and the descent accomplished in the same way. Altogether, about eighty persons ascended, and as many as eight could remain on the top at the same time. Two Arabs rather astonished the English by coolly ascending by the opposite side of the hawser, merely using their hands and feet, without once stopping to rest or to take breath, got on the top of the capital; but they declined to drink the proffered wine, such being against their religion, and then descended in the same manner!

POMPEY'S PILLAR.

This celebrated ancient column is composed of red granite; the height from the base to the top of the capital is 98 feet, and the diameter at the base 9 feet. The capital is oblong, being 15 feet diameter one way and 12 feet the other.

HORTICULTURAL FETE, DERBY.

HORTICULTURAL FETE, DERBY.

A beautiful horticultural exhibition was given on Friday last in the dining pavilion erected for the Royal Agricultural Society. At the hour of six on the morning of that day everything in the pavilion was in the same state as when the company left it the preceding night, but between that time and ten o'clock the tables were cleared and re-arranged, and all the plants, &c., staged. The doors opened shortly afterwards, when the lightness of the building, and the beauty of the plants, produced a most happy effect; and, considering the very short notice unavoidably given to the contributors, the collection was most excellent, showing many choice and valuable specimens from the conservatories of Lord Scarsdale, the Countess of Leicester, Sir Henry Wilmot, Bart., Wm. Evans, Esq., M.P., Henry Barton, Esq., Thomas Pares, Esq., J. B. Crompton, Esq., George Walker, Esq., Joseph Strutt, Esq., &c.

The fruit could scarcely be surpassed in size and quality, and was chiefly sent from the gardens of the Duke of Portland, the Earl of Chesterfield, Sir George Beaumont, Sir F. Burdett, &c.

The principal prizes awarded by the judges (Messrs. Baylis and Gibson), were gained by Mr. Henderson, gardener to Sir G. Beaumont; Mr. Patterson, gardener to the Earl of Chesterfield; Mr. Dryden, gardener to Wm. Evans, Esq.; Mr. Rogers; Mr. Holmes, of Sudbury; and by the Hon. and Rev. F. Curzon.

The receipts at the door amounted to £180; but the many prizes liberally bestowed, and other incidental expenses, will, we fear, leave but a small residue in favour of the object for which this exhibition was got up, viz., the erection of an endowed church, a parsonage-house, and school, at Hazlewood.

Much credit is due to the liberality of Mr. Manning in offering the use of the pavilion on this occasion, and to Messrs. Wilson and Sadler for their disinterested exertions in the management of the horticultural and floral department.

The day proved extremely favourable after the storm of the preceding night, and universal satisfaction was expressed by the numerous and distinguished visitors.

THE EARL OF HARDWICKE.

PORTRAIT OF THE EARL OF HARDWICKE.

This distinguished nobleman, who has with so much ability presided over the meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society, is the fourth Earl of Hardwicke, and the son of Sir Joseph Sydney Yorke, K.C.B., half brother to the third Earl. His lordship was born in 1799, and married, in 1833, the sixth daughter of the first Lord Ravensworth. He represented the borough of Reigate in the parliament of 1831, and Cambridgeshire from 1832 till his succession to the earldom, in 1834. His lordship is a captain in the navy; was midshipman in the Queen Charlotte, at Algiers; is lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of Cambridgeshire; and since September 1841, has been a lord in waiting to her Majesty.

GREENWICH REGATTA PRIZE BOAT.—For account see next page.

Lord Hardwicke has proved a most efficient president of the Royal Agricultural Society, and his enlightened views of the object of the institution may be gathered from the following speeches delivered by his lordship at the council and pavilion dinners of the society. On the first occasion the noble chairman ventured to assert that never in the known world had there been such an exhibition: he denied that it portended any fearful results to the labouring population, and asserted that the opposite was the fact; the progress of science could not be impeded—it would master and put down opposition; it was intended by the Great Creator, who would crown their operations with success. Would any one tell them that the "drill" or the improvements of the threshing-machine had diminished labour? They might reduce the number of horses on their farms. He then alluded to the spinning jennies, and again insisted that the progress of invention could not be arrested. The hand of God was visible, and it would be always found that as the crops in cultivation increase, so must increase the work of the labourer.

At the banquet in the great pavilion, in the course of his remarks, the noble earl said the time was come which called imperatively upon them to turn their attention to the farm labourer, and he was happy to inform them that the society was fully alive to the importance of the subject, and he had no doubt the result would be highly satisfactory. Depend upon it the farm which was the best cultivated diffused the greatest degree of happiness to the surrounding labourers. (Cheers.) He would ask them to accept that as a maxim, to repeat it at home, and let the mind absorb that of which a repetition always produces the certainty that it is true. If the society succeeded in that one axiom being believed and maintained, it had done its work; it had peculiarly done it in the state of England. (Loud cheers.)

GREENWICH REGATTA.

The Greenwich regatta is one of the oldest and most celebrated aquatic sports of our "tight little isle." Founded originally by royalty, and encouraged by many of the sovereigns who once made Greenwich, and the neighbouring domain of Eltham, the country dwelling-places of the court, it has continued to this hour to enjoy the royal countenance; the Princess Sophia Matilda, who holds the office of ranger of Greenwich Park, being the principal subscriber to its funds. Its proximity to the metropolis, its situation between two royal dockyards, and its close association with the veterans of Greenwich Hospital, have also tended, in a very great degree, to give it a distinguished national celebrity.

The wagers of Monday last were contested under circumstances of unusual splendour. Upwards of one hundred thousand persons crowded the wharfs, the promenades of the Hospital, the old palatial quays, and the shores of the famous Isle of Dogs. The day being beautiful, the yachts of the Royal Sailing Club, the Dreadnought, the Marine Society's ship, the frigates, and the timber fleet off Deptford, the steamers in the dock of the Steam Navigation Company, and the various small craft which abound in the Blackwall-reach, displayed their various flags, and the many parti-coloured dresses which distinguish them. And the effect of the whole was heightened by a great number of bands on the water, and by a continual discharge of salutes from the pier of the Watermen's Company.

The race was, as usual, in five heats, with six pair of sculls; the first man in the first heat and the first man in the second heat lying by while the four losers formed the third heat. The two first men in the latter then rowed with the first man of the first heat and the first man of the second heat, and the two best of these contested the grand heat.

The first heat was won by Funge; the second, by Humphreys; the third, by Young and Jones; the fourth, by Funge and Humphreys. These two last named started at eight o'clock for the grand heat, the race extending the whole length of the town repeated. It was a very first-rate struggle: they were small and scull all the way down and up the first time, when Funge became much distressed, and Humphreys then went away, and won by three or four hundred yards. The first man received a boat; the second, £5; the third, £2 10s.; the fourth, £2; the fifth, £1 10s.; the sixth, £1 5s.

At the conclusion of the regatta the "trim-built wherry" was hoisted from her native element, and dragged in procession through the town, to receive the admiration of the pensioners, and to excite the emulation of "jolly young watermen." The wives and children of the successful competitors followed the "noble pageant" in a train of carts, dressed with green boughs and ribbons. Our cut exhibits the thoroughly English festival on the return of the boat from the Royal Hospital, where it is usual for the admiral and the grand folks to give it a parting cheer.

RAMBLES IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

Is there much to talk about? No. There is the usual sprinkle of small topics, but the great ones do not vary. In the battle of politics Ireland still carries the day, and whatever else finds its way into the conversation of the big world is merely digression. Well, we will digress from Ireland then, and see what we can do in a small way with social and political entremets—the variations from the standing dish. When the Eton boys once got surfeited with mutton, they arranged to sing in chorus on the removal of the covers after grace, the following emphatic ditty:—

> Mutton hot and mutton cold,
> Mutton young and mutton old,
> Mutton fat and mutton lean,
> Mutton dirty, mutton clean,
> Mutton tender, mutton tough,
> Curse the mutton—we've had enough!

Part of which the Times, in application to rabbits, misquoted a day or two ago. It was no doubt wicked and inconsistent of the Eton boys to curse the mutton so immediately after grace; but it is equally certain they had had enough of the dish. So of Ireland. She has been cooked in fifty different ways, and fickle and impatient people really long to change the flavour of their condiments.

> Night after night the house is scared
> With wild repeal alarms,
> And members up on Irish legs
> To talk of Irish arms.

Arma virumque cano—there is an echo of Virgil in the House of Commons—but an Irish echo, and nothing more.

Well, let us fly to metal more attractive:—

> Instead of Agitator Dan,
> Suppose we take another man,—

Richard Cobden!—How he does revel in the corn-bin and the the wheat-field—how he labours night and day, and almost without eating, drinking, or sleeping, in his vocation.

> He lays the farmers by the ears
> With ev'ry fresh appeal,
> And keeps on grinding corn so hard,
> He hardly makes a meal!
>
> Poor boys, they cannot even sleep,
> He makes their bed so prick'ly;
> He swears no harvest they shall reap,
> Yet keeps their trade quite sickle-y!
>
> He deals them as he travels on
> An everlasting smashing,
> And practically prates upon
> The noble art of thrashing.
>
> The landlords groan and deftly own,
> He goes too far by half;
> Yet say they would not care a straw
> If it were all in chaff!

Apropos of corn. There has been another agricultural subject before the house—one affecting the commons (sometimes too short commons) of the peasantry. Lord Worsley has announced his intention to abandon his "General Enclosure Bill"—and, like young tapering ladies who grow "small by degrees and beautifully less," the open lands are to run, as usual, to waist. The "Thunderer" sounds the high trump, and wakes the clarion of joy upon this result. There are two ways of looking at the question, by-the-by, and there are good points on both sides of it—good ones for the nice little gardens, and good ones for the "poor man's goose." The Times, however, sticks to the goose, and abandons the gardens, but hardly with so much force as an Old English ballad-maker who flourished about the period in which Lord Kenyon made the same experiment as Lord Worsley has made since, and failed, as he appears to have failed now. The ballad-maker in question was none of your wretches of the contemptible Shakspere order; you had far better have been such a ballad-monger as he than have either been a dog or bayed her majesty the moon, or pursued any other luna-tic occupation. He knew his business, as his lines will show, only that to make them applicable to the present time we shall print the name of Worsley for Kenyon, as being most convenient:—

BALLAD STORIE.

> There were two thinges in Olde Englande,
> There were two thinges I trowe—
> In soothe to tell their merrie tale
> I hardlie doe knowe howe.
>
> The one thing was a goode fatte goose,
> With twice five hundrede quills;
> The other it was my lorde Worslie;
> And bothe had gotte their bills.
>
> My lorde to the Commons of this faire towne
> Went in with his bill so true,
> While on to the commons of Wimbleton
> Went goosey with her bill too.
>
> But jealousie waxed between these twaine,
> Which mortal man did quiz,
> For goosey passed her bill every where,
> But my lorde could not pass his!

For all this we think much good might spring from the cultivation of the waste lands, and the establishment of a pretty cheerful allotment system, if the lords of manors, who can afford it, would give up their rights without making the poor, who can't afford it, give up theirs also.

> Cow, cow, go chew, go chew!
> Ass, ass, go graze!
> You never need starve at the poor man's door
> While there's food by the public ways.

After which we may mount another hobbyhorse, and rock in a different direction.

What are they doing in Spain? Alas!

Woe is me, Alhambra! they are doing mischief, and nothing else.

> Men look askance at the King of France,
> For they think that he has been a
> Pink of best friends to favour the ends
> Of the delicate Queen Christina.
>
> The rebel throng are remarkably strong,
> But, to strike them with heart-fear O,
> Like a second Cid, has left Madrid
> The valiant Espartero.
>
> Some towns his regency frown against,
> Some for his regency are O,
> But Madrid's declared in a pretty state—
> That is, in a state of war O!
>
> The Queen is left in a stick called cleft,
> Where she very much afraid is,
> While the Regent goes away from his foes,
> And in search of his friends in Cadiz.
>
> When once in there, if the wind blows fair,
> He can sail, if his heart's not "mannish,"
> For some English place, where he'll meet with a race
> That have had enough of "Spanish."

We do not mean, however, to depreciate Espartero, though it is hinted that he is bound hard for Cadiz as a good locale in which either to "bide the coming of better days," or to fly when it is all up. For ourselves, we rather wish him luck; he has had fierce enemies and not very firm friends, and we should like to see him weather the storm like an old soldier. Whether he will or not is another business. At present, the aspect of diplomacy and internal commotion says he will not; but Spain never yet was a good barometer, and it is very hard to tell. Ha! there is one change already—bravo, weathercock! The last telegraph says Espartero is retreating upon Madrid!

How goes on "Beccy" in Wales since the publication of our turnpike ballad? So vigorously, it would seem, that they are sending down artillery. There is no putting her down, so they are going to blow her up. They can't bring her to the Old Bailey, and yet every day she is going at a new gate. She is not the goddess of flowers, but she is a regular Floorer in her way. She not only resists impediments, but refuses to put up with any bar. If she is not rich, she is determined that what she is worth shall be untold'd. Meanwhile the iron trade looks gloomy, and is far more serious than rioting "Beccy" herself; and the "turn-out of employ" is almost more alarming than the turn-out of soldiers, or even Ministers for the matter of that, if they cannot find some expedient for relieving misery and quelling sedition. Apropos, it is amusing to find an Irish repeal poet—an itinerant one we suppose—remonstrating with Rebecca and her daughters upon the unfeminine nature of their crusade.

> Pikes
> I dislikes
> As much as you;
> So—don't now—do!
> There lave off whopping
> And be stopping,
> Fighting's not your duty;
> For goodness knows
> That blows
> Like those
> Must spoil the hands of Beauty!

A gallant consideration for the delicacy of the sex!

So her Majesty has been in state to the Italian Opera—to her own theatre, in other words—her Majesty's Theatre! Here was a consummation devoutly to be wished. A royal presence with a royal retinue, and a truly royal theatre. A gorgeous gathering of the aristocracy, a blaze of beauty and diamonds, a coup d'œil of rank, fashion, taste, connoisseur-ship, dilettanti-ism—the most magnificent in the world. Britannia, blest with a musical influence as powerful as her sea sway—grasping the glories of the genius of other lands—listening to voices and harmonies ringing from other spheres, and, with the liberality of luxury, not refusing to pay for them after all.

> Sweet strains from soft Italia's land
> Determined still to foster,
> Determined to have Costa's band
> Whatever sum it cost her.
>
> Determined with an easy mind,
> And in a box as easy,
> To sit, sans tache, and hear Lablache,
> To melt away with Grisi.
>
> Then soon to rally for the ballet,
> Grow dizzy with Cerito,
> And bid the soul, past all control,
> Outbound her pretty feet O!
>
> If such fond joy her soul employ,
> Britannia can't look glumly,
> And, if her way is still to pay,
> No more can Mr. Lumley!

It will be seen that we have been speaking of Britannia, whose masculine alias is John Bull, and not of her Majesty Victoria, whose state visit, however, led us into the digression; but now, badinage apart, we really rejoice to find that such a state visit has taken place, and that one of the most beautiful of our public temples of pleasure has received its share of royal patronage—a boon, let us add, well earned by the enterprise of its manager, and quite in accordance with the wished and feelings of the most refined, educated, and elevated classes of society.

There is still more chit-chat afloat if we chose to "catch each idle rumour as it flies," but we can find no room for it in our "Chatterbox;" so, for the present, farewell, and good betide our readers till the end of time. Amen.

LITERATURE.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

No. I.—THE PUFF SYSTEM.

It may not be deemed incompatible with the character of a Family Newspaper to have occasional recourse to disquisition upon such literary topics of the day as seem to be susceptible of strong interest in the public mind, either by reason of their intrinsic importance, of some adventitious contingency of the moment, or of their bearing upon the amount and quality of the intelligence and instruction which are offered or administered to society through the medium of books. It is quite possible that we may do good beyond the mere circle of criticism, and it is therefore most probable that, should our readers approve of the present experiment, they may find us repeating it, upon occasion, in the public behalf. Our present subject is the Puffing System—a system as insidious, unwholesome, and extended in ramification as any other of the undermining sources of corruption by which a combination of imposture, ingenuity, and mental depravity have wrought deception upon society and polluted the springs of public taste. This puffing system has been of a peculiar and poisonous growth; and although the literary garden has been occasionally weeded of its garbage, its shrubbery has, upon the whole, thickened, and its plants have been allowed to flourish in a baneful and extraordinary degree. Upon this system a recent incident affords us a peg whereon to hang our remarks.

A few days ago the public journals exhibited a report of a trial between a publisher of the name of Colburn in Great Marlborough-street, and the Atlas newspaper. The occasion of the action was a certain exposition by the Atlas of the system of paragraphing—that is, of passing off paid paragraphs in newspapers, about books, as the bonâ fide opinions of their editors, and so gulling the public into a longing after works which the press has reported most excellent. The exposure was not a laborious one, but it aggrieved Mr. Colburn, who instituted legal proceedings; set forth in his declaration that he had sustained damages to the tune of a thousand pounds; and was rewarded by the jury with a verdict of forty shillings, leaving him to pay the costs of his own law.

> Says Colburn, "Just one thousand pounds
> Of damage here you view."
> "You'll make," replied twelve honest men,
> "Just forty shillings do."

It surely could not injure the character of Henry Colburn to say he puffed!

We have not been of late years much in the habit of reading the Atlas (perhaps more the pity for us), but we at least know that it used to be a particularly honest journal in literary affairs, and the trial in question would seem to betoken that it has not bartered its reputation. It attacked—and has had to pay for attacking—that ugly literary monster, the London booksellers' puff.

But our contemporary only raised the veil; for ourselves we confess an inclination to tear it off—to strip the thing of its disguise, and lay the hideous deformity naked to the voice of contumely and the eye of scorn. Ecce signum! Anglice—Here goes!

Every person accustomed to peruse the evening papers will have been struck from time to time with literary notices scattered among the miscellaneous topics of chit chat, and couched in a tone of delicate inuendo about books that are forthcoming, or of extravagant approval about those which are forthcome. The work must be a jewel! The reader has leaped from his sofa to his bell-rope, and in five minutes his servant has been inquiring of Sams, Mitchell, or Hookham, either when it will be published, or why it has not arrived. Now the paragraph which has betrayed him into this excitement is all fudge—fudge in the most provoking, Vicar-of-Wakefieldish sense—Fudge, as the Times says of all the mares' nests of its contemporaries. But what sort of paragraph is it? Let us see—

TALES OF THE COLONIES.—This work revives the charm of our childhood—those days when we followed the fortunes of Robinson Crusoe with an interest that was really insatiable. Since that time we have never met with any work in any language of an exciting a power as these "Tales of the Colonies." The same charm of new incidents in the seeking a new home—the same zest in overcoming difficulties—the same hair-breadth escapes from the native tribes—the same perils and the same pleasures crowd upon the scene, exciting an interest that is beyond expression engrossing. But all of us have felt the power of Defoe, and it is not too much to say that who e the colonial magistrate, who is the author of these volumes, equals him in all things, he exceeds him in many. Among these we find a high and pure relish for the charms of nature, a most felicitous power of d scription, and exquisite accuracy in the conception of character, and a masterly facility in its delineation, and that, too, of characters altogether new to us either in contact or imagination.

There! that paragraph is from the Standard of Friday last. The reader takes it for the genuine criticism of a sagacious public writer; he thinks that the refined judgment and vigorous pen of the enlightened Dr. G—— have perpetrated that atrocity. Not they indeed. Dr. G—— loathes and nauseates the imposture; and the publisher of the book has paid perhaps a guinea for its insertion. It may deceive hundreds, but it is only a bookseller's puff, originally manufactured by some such hack as was examined for Mr. Colburn on the Atlas trial—but doomed to go the round of the morning newspapers upon the now established authority of "Evening paper." Sometimes the plan is to plant the imposition in a country journal first, where its insertion can be easily procured, and then to quote it in the London papers on the authority of the provincial print. These puffs figure in many disguises, and dance at many masquerades; but they are dishonest alike, and their framers and promulgators are unscrupulous, to say the least. The conduct of the daily journals has something to do with the success of their imposition. The Times has the manliness to take away their money, by the prefix of the word "advertisement;" the Chronicle "stigmatises" them with diminutive type; the Post now insists that some authority, such as the "Evening paper" aforesaid shall salve its conscience; but the Sun, Globe, and Standard, swallow the imposture whole, and give it strength and vitality in their columns of ordinary news, only occasionally deprecating it by a juxtaposition with a watch-manifesto from Cox Savory, or a spectacle-proclamation from Solomons and Co.

This system, which has of late years done infinite harm to literature—which is immoral, daring, deceiving, disingenuous, and unjust—has been in vigorous practice by most of the publishers of the day, but by the novel publishers especially. We really believe it—notwithstanding that he is bringing actions about it—to have been originally a bantling of the genuine Colburn stock. We think the coinage was minted in New Burlington-street, when Henry Colburn commanded in chief. But it was speedily followed. Marsh and Miller, Bentley, Bull, Saunders and Otley, Churton, and a host more "took to the gentle trade of lying in print," and swarmed the daily journals with these deceits. They made them available then, as they still do, for all ranks and names of the literary fraternity. They degraded, as they still do, the best of reputations by this worst of expedients for publicity. Your Bowers, Jamesos, Nortons, Crokes, Hoods, and Sullivans—your Galts, your Gores, your Trollopes, Halls, and Landons—your Ainsworths, Maxwells, Whitehends, Dickenses—but we might pursue the list through all the rungs of literature—the fact being that they took every author in the way of trade, and to make his books sell tried to bladder-blow his fame as long as they had anything to do with him. Among publishers there are many honourable exceptions to the above bad rule of enforcing a notoriety, and of these the late and respected John Murray was one of the best.

We have now expended as much space as we can afford to the topic of Literary Puffery for the present week; but we shall now watch the bird upon the wing, and often shoot him flying; and in the meanwhile beg of our readers not to give way to "sweet anxieties" on our account, or to any alarm for our safety on the score of actions brought against us by Mr. Colburn, or any other practitioners of the Black Art.

PUNCH; OR, THE LONDON CHARIVARI. Vol. IV.

Here is Punch in his fourth volume, a very tierce of vin de deux feuilles, that may gladden every intellectual board in the empire. This will be a Punch's popularity—if ever any man be used according to his deserts; and so we give him a "right nartie welcum." Meditations have been poured forth on a pudding—on a broomstick: how gloriously might the sublime conceit be extended to "Punch!" His success has been so signal, that it is worth while to look into its elements. One of these, unquestionably, is originality: he has never lost sight of Selden's injunction: "Wit must grow like fingers; if it be taken from others, it is like plums stuck upon black thorns: they are for a while, but come to nothing." Accordingly, "Punch" has improved with time, and each of his volumes is a half-yearly rejuvenescence: he is always young in spite of his—nose and his comical obesity; though an old friend, he never falls into the besetting sin of acquaintanceship—self-quotation: he never doses you with "the mixture as before." True it is that Kenny Meadows's exuberant fancy comes before us every Saturday in the frontispiece; but we never sadiated with its humour, while it heralds in a galaxy of novelties, and these not by ringing changes upon words, or showing little conceits with oxy-hydrogen power. While great minds are straining to bring the ends of the earth into communication with each other, "Punch" and his club are content to sit at home, by turns put on the cap, and persuade men out of their follies by ridicule and raillery, wit and broad humour—the proper leading treatment for John's national foibles; and, as Jonathan sings:—

When they have joined their periranes,
Out skips a book of miscellanies.

To take "Punch" "to pieces," in estimating his influence, would be as useless a labour as pounding "St. Paul's Church into atoms" to appreciate its beauty: so, we do not individualize his merits, though we can scarcely refrain from noticing the gracefully-written "Story of a Feather" in the volume before us: it has the accustomed power of its author, with somewhat kindlier fancies than usual. The Almanac, too, in this volume, is the very quintessence of humour, and an extract of fun made by any but the nectum process. Then, the cuts throughout are thick-coming impersonations of drollery, and a mosaic of agreeable conceits, that must move the gravest into good-humour, and win a smile from every son of "offending Adam" whom they castigate—for "Punch's" personalities are universal pleasantries. And last, though not least, "Punch" not only softens the hostility of enemies, and induces us to think generously of all mankind, but he accomplishes this and much more by unexceptionable means: his wit never offends; "the pleasure of the experiment keeps the senses and the best part of the blood awake, and lays the gross to sleep"—the only suffusion he raises is that of virtuous approval.

MUSIC.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.

On Tuesday last a morning concert was given for the benefit of the funds of the projected German Hospital, under the immediate patronage of his Majesty the King of Hanover, which proved to be one of the most delightful (and, we hope, for such a praiseworthy object, profitable) of the season.

The chief attraction was the celebrated Herr Ernst, the celebrated German violinist, who for the first time has given this country "a touch of his quality." Never was a reception of an artist more enthusiastic. There was King Ernest—then there was Herr Ernst—and then again there was a crowd of anxious dilettanti more earnest still, and certainly never had an audience greater reason to say "enchanted by sweet sounds." Reason, forsooth! He took their "prison'd souls and lapt them in Elysium." Ernst does not exclusively belong to one school, but "reveals through the round." One moment graceful and classical as Viotti; another time, impassioned and eccentrically wild as Paganini; again, tender and impressive as Rode or De Beriot, he has but to "use his whim, and straight obedience follows;" he is alike master of every style, and for tone, silences all others down into "still small voice." The pieces he played were as follow:—

Eighth Concerto (scena cantante) of Spohr.

Fantasia on the March and Prayer, from "Otello," composed by himself.

Air, with variations, by Mayseder (Op. 40).

Andante, followed by the "Carnival de Venise," and variations on the air "Cara Mamma mia," of his own composition, in each and every one of which are displayed such all-commanding versatility that Justice, in a bewilderment of admiration, was obliged to forego her peculiar privilege, and worship with her eyes wide open! We, in the musical world at least, have not "fallen upon a gloomy day," for "star after star" does not "decay."

THE FASHIONS.

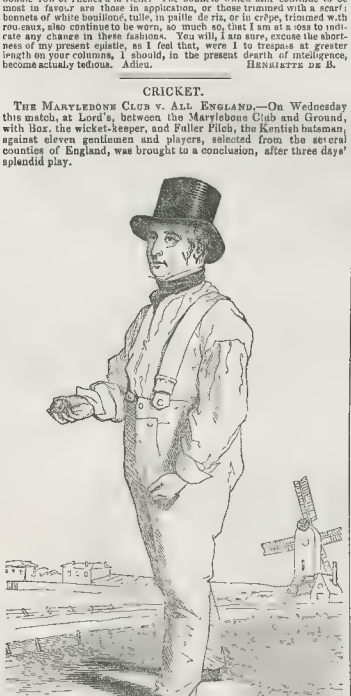
PARIS, Rue Chaussée d'Antin, July 15, 1843.

MON CHER MONSIEUR,—A writer upon the subject of French fashions commences his description of them, and of the weather which influences them, by saying that the memory of a woman of fashion, by which is meant five or six years at least, has never witnessed anything so fantastic, so disagreeably capricious as the weather, which for the last three months has deceived all our hopes and scorcerted all our projects. How often, says our author, has a ray of sunshine since Longchamps accompanied by several sudden outbursts of heat, called back to us our spring illusions, which have, however, been as suddenly succeeded by a change of temperature in twenty-four hours! It is this reason, I suppose, that I also must plead as an excuse for the barrenness of my present communication; in fact, so little change, and that so utterly insignificant, has taken place within the last few days, that I am almost at loss to point it out; and, indeed, I should be quite at fault had I not been favoured with a sight of two or three toilettes now ordered for one of our fashionables, which, while they deserve mention for their extreme prettiness, may serve to show what is now actually worn in our best circles. The first of these is a redingote, in royal cashmere, the front of the skirt trimmed with a range of ribbons disposed in bows intermixed with small gold buckles; the corsage is plain; the sleeves, also, with jockeys, wherein we again find the same description of bows and buckles. The pelerine is crossed at the waist, and forms a double fold on each side in front. The second is a town dress in camelion silk. The skirt of which is trimmed with a deep flounce, surmounted with a row of ruches à la vielle; the sleeves, which are light, are trimmed in the same manner. The corsage is in one piece, pelerine pointed, and made with sleeves forming a jockey, and surrounded with a double row of ruches à la vielle. The bonnets which still continue to be most in favour are those in application, or those trimmed with a scarf; bonnets of white bouillonné, tulle, in paille de riz, or in crêpe, trimmed with rouleaux, also continue to be worn, so much so, that I am at a loss to indicate any change in these fashions. You will, I am sure, excuse the shortness of my present epistle, as I feel that, were I to trespass at greater length on your columns, I should, in the present dearth of intelligence, become actually tedious. Adieu.

HENRIETTE DE B.

CRICKET.

THE MARYLEBONE CLUB V. ALL ENGLAND.—On Wednesday this match, at Lord's, between the Marylebone Club and Ground, with Box the wicket-keeper, and Fuller Pilch, the Kentish batsman, against eleven gentlemen and players, selected from the several counties of England, was brought to a conclusion, after three days' splendid play.



PORTRAIT OF LILLYWHITE.

The game commenced on Monday by the eleven of the club taking the bats, who were put out for 81 runs—Lillywhite and Mr. Alfred Mynn bowling. Barker, run out, made 3; Mr. T. Craven b. Lillywhite, 0; Hon. E. H. Grimston, b. Lillywhite, 15; Pilch, b. Mr. Alfred Mynn, 6; Box, b. Mr. Mynn, 0; Sewell, b. Lillywhite, 3; Mr. Kynaston, b. Lillywhite, 22; Good, b. Lillywhite, 1; Mr. Pickering, run out, 21; Dean, b. Mr. Mynn, 0; Hillyer, not out, 0; byes, 10. The bowling, in this innings, of Lillywhite, was much admired, and, as will be seen from the above score, proved exceedingly destructive to the wickets of the club, five of their men being put out by him for forty-one runs. Mr. Mynn also bowled in his usual splendid style, but the slow old-fashioned bowling of the "veteran" (of whom we present an engraving, from Mr. Mason's faithful portrait), in this instance, was more effective than the round and swift delivery of the latter gentleman. Mr. Mynn, however, lowered the stumps of Pilch, "the lion of Kent," in fine style, after he had obtained but six, and also bowled Dean, the pet of Sussex, who marked only a cypher. Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Pickering batted well, the score of the former exhibiting a four, a three, and a two; and the latter, a five, a four, a brace of threes, and a couple of twos.

The eleven of England then went in, and some of the finest play ever witnessed at this or any other ground followed; the batting of Mr. Felix and Wenman being first rate, clearing between them 154 out of the 233 runs, the number scored in this innings, notwithstanding that the elite of the bowlers of the club tried their best to put them out. A continual change in the bowling was resorted to, but all in vain, till at length Wenman had his wicket lowered by Barker, who subsequently succeeded in catching a ball from the bat of Mr. Felix. The score obtained by that gentleman comprised two fives, nine fours, three threes and six twos. Wenman's number included five fours, three threes, and a couple of twos. Adams bowled Hillyer, cleared; Mr. Walter Mynne bowled Hillyer, 13; Guy bowled Hillyer, 4; Mr. A. Mynn bowled Mr. Craven, 21; Hawkins, bowled by Hillyer, 0; Mr. Whittaker, bowled by Dean, 0; Mr. E. Bayley, leg before wicket, 6; Lillywhite, run out, 1; Sir F. Bathurst, not out, 1; byes, 15; wide balls, 9.

The Marylebone Club, in their second hands, scored 160. Barker, caught by Adams, 9; Mr. Craven, caught by Mr. A. Mynn, 10; the Hon. C. H. Grimston, hurt, 19; Pilch, caught by Hawkins, 43; Box, bowled by Mr. Mynn, 0; Sewell, not out, 15; Mr. Kynaston, bowled by Mr. Mynn, 11; Good, bowled by Lillywhite, 1; Mr. Pickering, bowled by Mr. Mynn, 16; Dean, bowled by Lillywhite, 11; Hillyer, bowled by Lillywhite, 0; byes, 18; gross total, 241.

The side of England having now 8 only to tie, sent in Adams and Mr. E. Bayley. The former having scored 8, and the latter, 1, the eleven of England were declared to have won the game, with ten wickets to spare.

The enclosure each day was attended by some thousands of spectators, and among them many distinguished visitors.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The present season, as far as it has gone, has been remarkable for the spirit with which the popular festivities of the country have been promoted and partaken of. The approaching week will see a fit portion of so sporting a summer. On Tuesday next commences in Goodwood Park, the princely domain of the Duke of Richmond, one of the most brilliant meetings, in the matter of promise, ever offered to the racing public of this racing island. It will continue for four days, during which more than forty events will be disposed of, involving, in stakes, plates, and matches, upwards of twenty thousand pounds; and to be contended for by a corps of from two to three hundred horses! Now, is not that the sort of style in which gentlemen should take their recreations?

This noble programme runs as follows:—On Tuesday, the 25th inst, the Canterbury Stakes, 8 subs. The Lavant Stakes, for two-year olds, 50 sovs each, h ft, 21 subs. The Drawing Room Stakes of 25 sovs each, for three-year olds, 38 subs. Among the nominations for this stake are Cotherstone and Casper. Four-year old Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each, h ft, 9 subs. The Ham Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft, for two-year olds, 46 subs. The Goodwood Club Stakes, gentlemen jockeys, 10 sovs each, 26 subs. The Westerton of 50 sovs each, amateur riders, 10 subs. Two matches. And the Innkeepers' Plate, the best of heats. Wednesday, the Goodwood Stakes of 25 sovs each (handicap), 161 subs and 48 acceptances. Her Majesty's Plate, the Stewards' Cup, the Cowdray Stakes for all ages, the Members' Plate, heats, and the Stand Plate, heats. Thursday—the Cup day. The Stockwell Rubbish Stakes, 50 sovs each, for three-year olds, 8 subs. The Molecomb Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft, for two-year olds, 24 subs. The Racing Stakes of 50 sovs each, for three-year olds, 26 subs. A Sweepstakes of 25 sovs each, for two year olds, 8 subs. The Sussex Stakes of 25 sovs each, for two-year olds, 8 subs. The Goodwood Cup, 47 subs. The Duke of Richmond's Plate, £100. The Aaglesey Stakes of 15 sovs each, amateur jockeys, 15 subs. And four matches. Friday—The March Stakes of 10 sovs each, heats, 63 subs. The Canterbury Cup, 21 subs. The Chesnut Stakes, of 50 sovs each, for three-year olds, 16 subs, and two matches.

Every year alterations and improvements are in course here; and during the past summer many most strenuous exertions have been effected. A great deal of top-dressing has been done to the turf with tan and mould, and more would has been given to the run home. Moreover, steam, which puffs and blows, and knocks and neighbours, has achieved much for those whose purpose visiting Goodwood—once synonymous with being fleeced and starved. Taking the South Western Railway to Faremam (the last station on the London side of Southampton at Bishopsgate is the point at which to stop), and thence by conveyances to the course (which are to be provided), the traveller may leave town at a quarter before seven, and get back again the same evening at his accustomed hour of repose (unless he be one to the "don't go home till morning school," in which case he still has a few hours to spare); and, "all in good," two of the Chichester coaches will also leave town at half-past five, be on the course before the racing begins, and return to London (after the day's sport) the same evening. All the world will be at Goodwood, and what they do there it will be our duty to tell next week. The anticipated betting has been doing during the present week on the Cup, to which the principal public betting is confined:—

9 to 2 agst Gorhambury; 7 to 1 agst Sirkol; 9 to 1 agst Hyllus; 10 to 1 agst Pompey; 12 to 1 agst Charles XII.; 13 to 1 agst Agreeable colt; 15 to 1 agst Marshal Soult; 15 to 1 agst Baronet.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

BOAT RACE BETWEEN THE ST. GEORGE'S AND ROYAL ACADEMY CLUBS.

Both crews have been in very active training day after day since the Putney regatta, in which they achieved considerable distinction, and their exertions have been watched with a very scrutinizing eye by those who lay out money upon sporting events. The St George crew have taken the very careful instruction of Jem Parish, the rockwork of the London, and the Academicians under the skilful hands of Robert Coombes, the champion, and their confidence was throughout first rate.

The following took their seats in the rival boats at a quarter past five—the distance, as usual, being from Westminster-bridge to Putney.

ST. GEORGE'S.	ROYAL ACADEMY.
Messrs. J. Brodrick—Stroke.	Messrs. Atkinson—Stroke.
J. Coomber.	A. Coomber.
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
A. Johnson—Coxswain	Coxswain—Coxswain.

The colours for Saint George were white, with a red cross, those of the other blue and red. There was some disparity in the size of the rival crews, the Saint George's having in appearance men almost a stone each heavier. The St. George's took the inside berth, and it was some time before they got off, the start being delayed until nearly high water. The signal was well taken by both crews, but the St George's headed off with the lead, and one taken but a few strokes, were No. 3, of the Saint George's crew, in consequence of which their opponents were nearly level with them. The St. George's then went to work, and on their arrival off Chiswick's had drawn quite their length clear of their opponents. Some very talented pluckyrowing was shown on the part of either, and the St George's held their lead, and passed through Kew-bridge a length in advance, and although the Academicians showed themselves to be men who knew how to row, they had a little more energy in every stroke. The St. George's arrives first at Putney bridge, one minute and four seconds in advance of their opponents.

[illegible] The regatta, which took place on Monday, was what is termed quite a success, and in each boat-race the win was fairly run to three seats. The distance in the first heat from the Horseferry to within a boat length of Hunt's, Lambeth Bank, down the Middlesex shore, rowing a boat inboard of the Houses of Parliament, back to the Horseferry, and in the grand one, the same course reversed, to start being downwards. After a gallant struggle David Coombes and Winship Medal were declared the victors.

GROUSE SHOOTING.—Active preparations for the moors have already commenced, and the attendance of sportsmen on the northern coast of Caithness, on the morning of the 12th of August, is expected to be the very greatest that has been. The steamers which ply on Saturday for Scotland were crowded with passengers, many of them are there also on the quarters in the Highlands. A large number of dogs accompanied their owners. The sport promises to be excellent.

REVIEW IN HYDE PARK.—The three battalions of the 1st Regiment of Grenadier Guards were reviewed in Hyde Park on Thursday morning by his Grace the Duke of Wellington, colonel of the regiment. The Duke, attended by a numerous and brilliant staff of generals and field officers, arrived on the ground about ten o'clock, and was loudly cheered by the vast multitudes which had assembled to witness the grand military spectacle. The troops, amounting to about 3000 men, went through their evolutions with the greatest precision, the firing was regular in the extreme, and universal approbation was expressed at the beautiful appearance and high discipline of the soldiers. His Grace the Duke of Wellington wore the uniform of a colonel of the Guards, and his decorations consisted of the Grand Cross of the Bath, and the Waterloo medal. We may observe that the medal worn by his grace is precisely similar to that worn by the field officers, several of the ranks who may have assisted in the glory of that eventful day. The ground was kept by a troop of the "Blues," who evinced great forbearance and temper towards the immense masses who thronged to witness the military pageant. A body of the metropolitan police was also present, under the command of Superintendent May, who also displayed a Waterloo medal. He was kindly recognised by the noble Duke.

MR JEFFRIES'S HEREFORD BULL.

PRIZE ANIMALS AT THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND MEETING AT DERBY.

We resume our illustrations of this grand national meeting with a series of portraits of the finest prize animals, from drawings made upon the spot by Mr. Kirk, the celebrated animal painter, of Derby, and by Mr. T. Bretland, the talented animal painter of Nottingham.

As the list of prizes awarded by the Society appeared only in our second edition of last week's paper, more especially for the satisfaction of our readers in the country, we append the entire list of prizes, in which the animals engraved are distinguished by an asterisk (*).

LIST OF PRIZES.—SHORT HORNS.

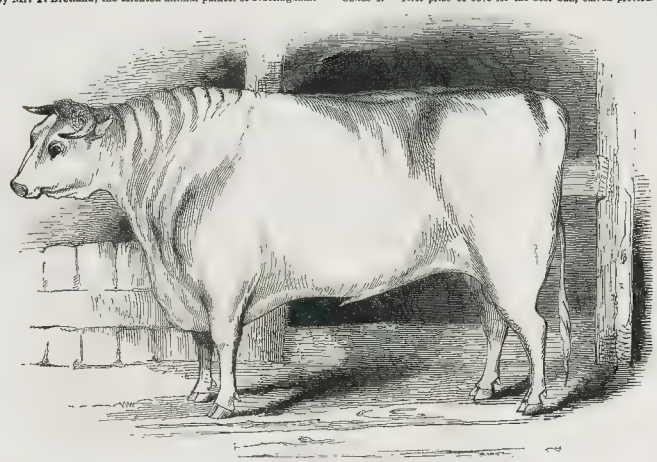
CLASS I.—* First prize 30 sovs for the best bull, calved previous to January 1, 1841, adjudged to W. Barnard, Esq., M.P., Gosfield Hall, Halstead, Essex, for his 3 y 2 m short-horned bull, bred by Earl Spencer.—Second prize, 15 sovs, to Mr. John Forrest, of Stretton, near Warrington, for 4 y 8 m short-horned bull, bred by himself.

II.—Prize 30 sovs for the best bull calved since Jan. 1, 1841, and more than 1 y old, to John Cooper, of Monkwood, Thurgaston, Notts, for his 2 y 1 m 1 d short-horned bull, bred by himself.

III.—Prize 15 sovs for the best cow in milk, to Mr. Thomas Crofton, of Holywell, near Durham, for his 4 y 2 m short-horned cow, bred by Mr. John Colling, of Whitehouse.

IV.—Prize 15 sovs for the best in-calf heifer not exceeding 3 y old, to Thomas Crofton, of Holywell, near Durham, for his 2 y 11 m old short-horned in-calf heifer, bred by himself.

V.—* Prize 10 sovs for the best yearling heifer, to Mr. Henry Watson, of Walkeringham, near Bawtry, for his 1 y 10 m old short-horned yearling heifer, bred by himself.



MR. BARNARD'S SHORT-HORNED BULL.

MR. WORTHINGTON'S SHORT-HORNED HEIFER.

HEREFORDS.

I.—* First prize 30 sovs for the best bull calved to Jan. 1, 1841, to Mr. T. Jeffries, Pembridge, for his 3 y 8 m and 3 d Hereford bull, bred by himself.—Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. J. Walker, of Burton, near Worcester, and Mr. J. Johnson, of Hampton Wafle, near Bromyard, for 2 y 7 m 13 d Hereford bull.

MR. CARTWRIGHT'S BOAR.

II.—Prize 20 sovs for the best bull calved since Jan. 1, 1841, and more than one year old, to Mr. W. Perry, of Monkland, near Leominster, for 1 y 7 m and 16 d Hereford bull.

III.—Prize 15 sovs for the best cow in milk, to Mr. T. Jeffries, Pembridge for 3 y 8 m Hereford cow.

IV.—Prize 15 sovs for the best in-calf heifer, not exceeding 3 years old, to Mr. J. Walker, of Burton, near Worcester, for 2 y 5 m 2 w Hereford in-calf heifer.

MR. HOBBS'S ESSEX BOAR.

V.—Prize 10 sovs for the best yearling heifer, to Mr. T. Jeffries, Pembridge, for 1 y 6 m 1 d Hereford yearling heifer.

DEVONS.

I.—First prize 30 sovs for the best bull calved previously to the 1st of Jan., 1841, to Mr. G. Turner, of Barton, near Exeter, for 3 y and 3 m Devon bull.—Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. T. Umbers, of Wappenbury, near Royal Leamington Spa, for 3 y 3 m Devon bull.

II.—Prize 20 sovs for the best bull, calved since Jan. 1, 1841, and more than one year old, to Mr. T. Reynolds, of Thomerton, near Exeter, for 1 y 42 w 5 d Devon.

THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE'S LINCOLNSHIRE BOW.

III.—Prize 15 sovs for the best cow in milk, to Mr. G. Turner, of Barton near Exeter, for 6 y 9 m Devon cow.

IV.—Prize 15 sovs for the best in-calf heifer, not exceeding 3 years old, to Mr. G. Turner, of Barton, near Exeter, for 2 y 4 m Devon in-calf heifer.

V.—Prize 10 sovs for the best yearling heifer, to Mr. G. Turner, of Barton, near Exeter, for 1 y 4 m Devon yearling heifer.

ANY BREED OR CROSS CATTLE.

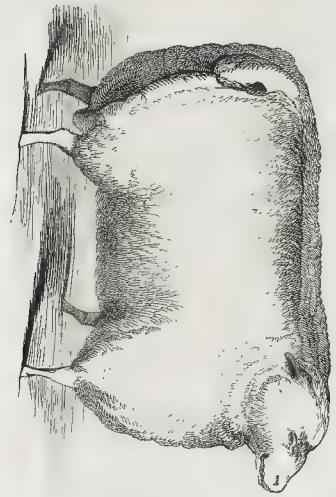
I.—*First prize 30 sovs for the best bull calved previously to Jan. 1, 1841, to Mr. Hextall, of Sunbstone, Ashby-de-la-Zouch, for 2 y 6 m pure long-horned bull.—Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. W. Daniel, of Burton-upon-Trent, for 3 y 5 m long-horned bull.

II.—Prize 30 sovs for the best bull calved since Jan. 1, 1841, and more than 1 y, not awarded.

III.—Prize 15 sovs for the best cow in milk, to Mr. E. Pratt, of Caldwell, Burton-upon-Trent, for 9 y 3 m pure long-horned cow.

IV.—Prize 15 sovs for the best in-calf heifer, not exceeding 3 years old, to the Duke of Buckingham, of Stowe, for 2 y 11 m pure long-horned in-calf heifer.

V.—Prize 10 sovs for the best yearling heifer, to the Rev. C. Thompson, near East Redford, for 1 y 4 m Ayrshire and short-horned cross-bred yearling heifer.



MR. PAWLETT'S LEICESTER SHEARLING RAM.

LEICESTER SHEEP.

I.—*First Prize 30 sovs for the best shearling ram to Mr. T. E. Pawlett, of Beaston, near Bugleswade, for 17 m Leicester ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to the same for the same.

II.—*First prize 30 sovs for the best ram of any age, above two years old, to Mr. T. Stone, of Barrow-on-Soar, for 40 m Leicester ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to the same for 62 m Leicester ram.

III.—First prize 10 sovs for the pen of five shearling ewes, to Sir W. B. Cook, Bart., of Wheatley, near Doncaster, for five 15½ m Leicester ewes.—Second prize 5 sovs to the same for the same.

SHORT-WOOLLED SHEEP.

I.—First prize 30 sovs for the best shearling ram, to Mr. Webb, of Babraham, near Cambridge, for 16 m South Down ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to the same, for the same.

II. First prize 30 sovs for the best ram of any age, above 2 years old, to Mr. W. Sainsbury, of West Lavington, near Devizes, for 29 m South Down ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. J. Webb, of Babraham, for 40 m South Down ram.

III.—First prize 10 sovs for the best pen of five shearling ewes, to Mr. S. Webb, of Babraham, for five 16 m South Down ewes.—Second prize 5 sovs to the Duke of Richmond, for five 16 m South Down ewes.

MR. STONE'S LEICESTER RAM.

LONG-WOOLLED SHEEP.

I.—First prize 30 sovs for the best shearling ram, to Mr. E. Smith, of Charlbury, Oxon, for 15½ m Oxfordshire ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to the executors of the late Mr Wm. Faulkner, near Burford, Oxon, for 13 m improved Oxfordshire ram.

II.—First prize 30 sovs for rams of any age above 2 years, to Mr. E. Smith, of Charlbury, Oxon, for 51½ m Oxfordshire ram.—Second prize 15 sovs to Mr. E. Smith, of Charlbury, Oxon, for 51 m Oxfordshire ram.

III.—First prize 10 sovs for the best pen of five shearling ewes, to Mr. C. Large, of Broadwell, near Burford, for five 16 m New Oxfordsh re ewes.—Second prize 5 sovs to Mr. E. Smith, of Charlbury, Oxon, for five 15½ m Oxfordshire ewes.

HORSES.

I.—*Prize 30 sovs to Mr. D. Howsin, of Bathley, Newark, Notts., for a 6 y cart stallion, bred by Mr. Haden, Baldock, Herts.

II.—Prize 15 sovs for the best cart stallion foaled since Jan. 1, 1841, to Mr. T. Cutler, of Somercoates, near Alfreton, Derby, for 2 y cart stallion, bred by Mr. Radford of Denbigh.

MR. HEXTALL'S PURE LONG-HORNED BULL.

III.—First prize 20 sovs for a cart-mare and foal, to Mr. M. Ingh, of Dumbleton, near Evesham; mare bred by the late Mr. T. Edwards, of Dumbleton; sire of foal belonged to Mr. Willett, of Evesham.—Second prize, 15 sovs to Mr. R. Bean, near Bingham, Notts., for a cart mare and foal; mare bred by Mr. Brewster, of Bingham; sire of foal belonged to Mr. D. Howsin, Notts.

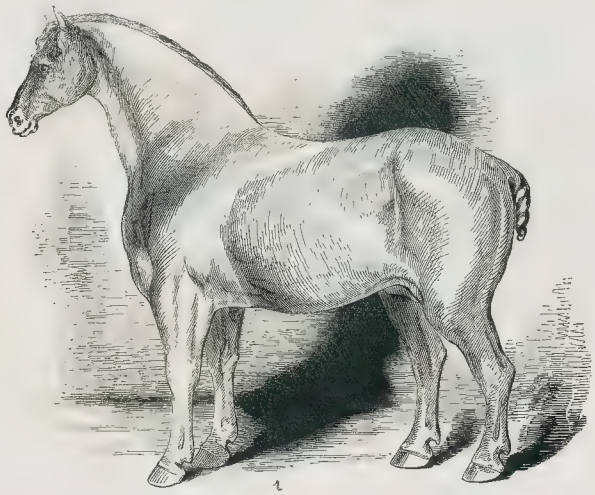
IV.—Prize 10 sovs to Mr. C. Stokes, of Kingston, near Kegworth, Leicester, for a 2 y old filly, bred by Mr. J. Palmer, Ratcliffe, Notts.

V*.—Prize 30 sovs to Mr. A. Chester, of Nottingham, for a thoroughbred stallion, 7 y old, got by Jerry, winner of the great Doncaster St. Leger, out of the celebrated Beeswing's dam, bred by Mr. Orde, near Morpeth, Northumberland; colour, beautiful dark-mottled bay; stands 16½ hands high, with great muscular power; depth and breadth of chest extraordinary, measuring 6 ft 6½ in round.

PIGS.

I.—*First prize 10 sovs for the best boar of a large breed, to Mr. M. Cartwright, near Burton-on-Trent, for 1 y 9 m boar.—Second prize 5 sovs to Mr. Pusey, M.P., near Faringdon, for 1 y 2 m Berkshire boar.

II.—*First prize 10 sovs for the best small boar, to Mr. W. F. Hobbs, Coggeshall, for 10 m improved Essex boar.—Second prize 5 sovs to Mr. T. Aikin, near Atherstone, for 1 y boar.



MR. HOWSIN'S CART-HORSE.

III.—*Prize 10 sovs for the best sow of a large breed, to the Duke of Devonshire, for 2 y 4 m Lincolnshire sow.

IV.—Prize 10 sovs for the best small sow, to Mr. T. B. Shilcock, near Melton Mowbray, for 2 y 10 m cross-bred sow.

V.—Prize 10 sovs for the best pen of three breeding sows, to Mr. W. F. Hobbs, Coggeshall, for 8 m improved Essex pigs.

EXTRA STOCK.

£2 to Mr. R. Burgess, of Cotsgrove-place, near Nottingham, for his 9 m Durham heifer.

£3* to Mr. W. Worthington, of Newton-park, Burton-upon-Trent, for his 4 y pure short-horned heifer.

£5 to the Hon. Mr. Wilson, of Diddlington, near Brandon, for his 2 y 6 m Ayrshire and short-horned heifer.

£2 to Mr. T. Harris, of Fletchampstead, for his 17 m Leicester ram.

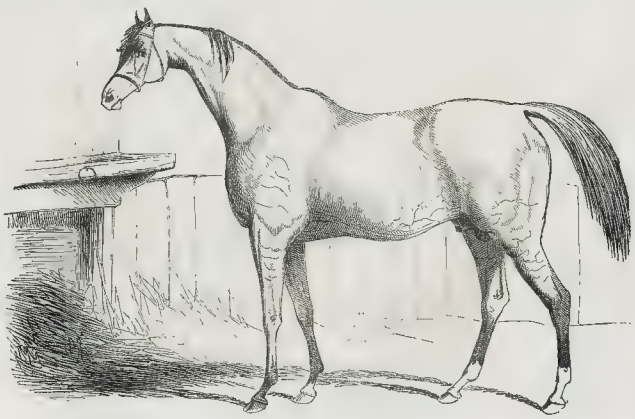
£3 to Mr. Watkins, of Ormsby, for his 52 m fat ewe.

£3 10s. to Mr. Watkins, of Ormsby, for his 40 m fat ewe.

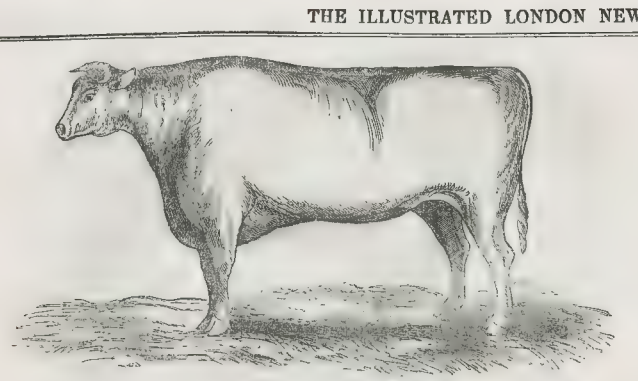
£3 to Mr. Harris, of Fletchampstead, for his 17 m Leicester ram.

£1 10s. to Mr. Harris, of Fletchampstead, for his 17 m Leicester ram.

£3 10s. to Mr. John Buckley, jun., of Normanton-on-Soar, for his 7½ m sow.



MR. ARTHUR CHESTER'S THOROUGH-BRED HORSE, "JOHNNY-BOY," DRAWN BY MR. T. BRETLAND, OF NOTTINGHAM.



MR. WATSON'S SHORT-HORNED HEIFER.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE;
OR
THE SISTERS.
A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

By HENRY COCKTON,

AUTHOR OF "VALENTINE VOX," "STANLEY THORN," ETC.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE EXPLANATION.

RULY anxious to ascertain what effect her note had had upon Sir Arthur, Lady Grange called on Caroline the following morning ostensibly in order to accompany her to the park, and as Sir Arthur was still depressed, while the style in which he conversed was exceedingly mysterious, Caroline very soon alluded to that which of course she conceived to be the cause.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, "we had such a job yesterday! I was so alarmed! Sir Arthur had an attack of epilepsy, or somuching, of that sort, and was for a time so excessively ill!"

"Good heavens! Is it possible? I had no idea of his being subject to attacks of the kind."

"Nor s he! I never knew him to have one before."

"Indeed, indeed! Did it occur in the evening?"

"No, in the morning. Mr. Darnley and I were in this room, when, in Lo desbed, pale and trembling, and would inevitably have fallen had I not on the instant rushed to his assistance."

"Indeed, and Lady Grange, "I perceive, Mr Darnl s was here."

"He had just before left him in the library, where they had been conversing for more than an hour, and he appeared to be quite easy in the"

"Yes, my dear; oh, yes, dear! he was quite calm then; and yet you would have me believe that this man is not jealous!"

"Jealous! Ridiculous, my dear aunt.—what on earth has jealousy to do with an attack of epilepsy!"

"Probably, in this case nothing. But perhaps the less I say about it the better."

"Oh! but I am anxious to have your opinion."

"Then my opinion is, that that was no fit of epilepsy It was neither more nor less than a fit of jealousy, my dear!"

"If I thought that.—but I cannot believe it.—I cannot believe anything of him so unbrotherly base."

"Well, my dear, these things will all come out in time: I merely state it, remember, as my opinion."

"Well, but—now let us enter into this matter calmly. Your opinion is that this was a fit of jealousy very well. Now what can you adduce in support of that opinion?"

"The fact of Mr Darnley being here."

"But Sir Arthur himself wished him to come up, and invited him to dine with us?"

"That does not at all shake the evidence. Where were you when Sir Arthur entered?"

"At the piano"

"And Darnley?"

"At the window, reading one of the magazines. The wretch!" she added, indignantly, "I shall hate him if he goes on thus! And yet—no, my dear aunt, it could not have been that: I am convinced of it, because—I don't mind telling you—he appeared to be so grate ful when I supported him, and blessed me —when Darnley had left the room—with so much fervour and affection that I could not but feel that he loved me too well to entertain so base a feeling as that of jealousy."

"Precisely, my love! And does not all this tend to strengthen my opinion? Do you not perceive that his object in having thus affectionate is to conceal his real feelings? When husbands are so very affectionate, my love, their motives are not always pure."

"But, when Mr. Darnley returned with Dr. Hawtree, he shook hands with him and thanked him and appeared to appreciate his kindness so highly."

"Of course! in order that he might not be on his guard."

"Why, the odious old man! It's quite monstrous! He ought to be ashamed of himself! Yet, my dear aunt, now do you really think that he would be so de

"You already know my thoughts on the subject, my love."

"But, even Dr Hawtree vowed it, evidently, as a case of epilepsy, or something of the kind, for he immediately ordered him to lose a

"However, my love, the patient did not

"Oh! he did not—now I see—I see it all. He did consent, but with re

"Of course! I do not—or I'm resolved to punish him. Whenever he is seized with such a fit I shall be bled! I'll never let him rest until he's bled! I'll cure him in that w

"That medical cure, I fear, is very effectual."

"At all events I shall be [illegible] I could not cure—conscious as I am of not deserving suspicion but that I have to be suspected. And yet I can scarcely believe him to be so mean.—it seems very unjust to entertain a bad opinion of one who has always been kind. Here he, she added, as Sir Arthur and Darnley entered the room, and the latter immediately left her chamber. "Now the very first question I'll ask him, shall be, Don't you think that you had better lose a little more blood d

"You, and much better not. It will relieve him"

"Oh, but I will! I've no patience with such horrid conduct"

Sir Arthur and Darnley now entered the room; but, before she had time to execute her threat Darnley, by Sir Arthur's desire,—informed her that they had been to secure an opera box,—either, of course, to her approval; which, he thought the very best in the house.

"Oh!" and she stared with an expression of rapture, "how delightful!—now, that is kind," she added, taking the hand of Sir Arthur, with a smile which at once expressed gratitude and pe—"you are a dear good creature sir, But will you love me?"

"Scarcely from the present ev," replied Darnley, "on the left of the second t

"Oh, that will be nothing. I know I can box with the very best. I should have chosen I box here secured it

"Yes, but I will call as I return, to let them know that you have decided on having it."

"Do so there's a dear creature! I wouldn't lose it for the world. My dear," she added, addressing Sir Arthur, "I think I

Having had a little private conversation at the window, Sir Arthur and Darnley retired to the library, and, the moment they had quitted the room, Caroline exclaimed, "Now I'll, not believe that he is jealous at all! I'll not believe a word of it! I'll never again do him the injustice to entertain the thought!"

"Why, all this tends to confirm—"

"My dear aunt, do not say another syllable on the subject. I am perfectly convinced, and do not [illegible] Oh! I have no doubt, my dear, to make your conviction! It is not of the slightest consequence to me! You asked me for my opinion, and I gave it. I have no desire to [illegible]

"Now do not be offended, my dear aunt; all that I meant to say was, that I do not wish [illegible] for a moment to [illegible] object I am anxious for it not to be [illegible]

"Why, indeed, I am not. But really it seems to torture oneself with conjectures which, after all, may be utterly false!"

"Not [illegible] but there sometimes exists more for themselves. But, dear me," she added, look ng at her watch, [illegible] time I have been here. I declare I have driven round the park, but now I [illegible] time to dress for I dare to say you are very people. Adieu my dear [illegible] and for heaven's sake do not be wretched!"

Her [illegible] not because she was apprehensive of going too far. To her the news of the opera box was unwelcome, she felt no real regret soo galled. She conceived that that opera box ought to have been hers, as she had pre viously conceived that she ought to have had all, of which Caroline was possessed, including, of [illegible] gained she looked upon as a [illegible] and the stranger were her [illegible] the circumstance of her having [illegible] Sir Arthur to [illegible] sure that, had she but pursued the [illegible] her self-reproaches were invariably more bitter whenever anything occurred—as in the [illegible] to the name of Lady Cleveland. It was then that [illegible] that—seeing it highly unexpedient, under the circumstances, to proceed with Caroline she dared not trust herself to remain any longer with her, from she feared upon so having a [illegible]

Nor was Caroline sorry when she left for [illegible] to suspect that, notwithstanding her [illegible] on the subject of Sir Arthur's attack [illegible] solicited, her motives in stating that [illegible] so pointedly, and especially [illegible] circumstance, as one out of the usual [illegible], and, when she reflected that she never should have thought of Sir Arthur being [illegible] had it not been for her, she—however she might wish to be a deserving woman, and recollecting the lessons she had received from [illegible] prudent to be upon her guard in future against letting her know too much.

Also she felt, thereby greatly relieved, and resolved to abandon the idea of Sir Arthur being jealous, and to appreciate his kind [illegible] to prove to him by all the means at her command that she was worthy of that [illegible] confidence which she believed he reposed in her respect, and as no [illegible] entrusted by the consciousness of which she was [illegible] that the "warning" had proceeded from some malicious source—that the note indignantly and tried to forget that he had ever [illegible] delayed was again in the possession, and for months they were perfectly happy

During this time the amiable Lady Grange called, but seldom, and when she did call she invariably found Caroline reserved, and more especially on matters of a domestic character That indeed her, very naturally, to imagine that Sir Arthur had communicated the contents of the note to Caroline who had by some means traced it to her; but although she tried anxiously to ascertain if this were the fact, with the view of denying its authorship flatly, she could never get at it, because Caroline, knowing nothing of the matter, could never understand what she meant.

To her ladyship this was excessively annoying, and, moreover, humiliating, seeing that all her ingenuity—and she really was very [illegible] was foiled by her own game—the very creature whom she had instructed in those arts of which she deemed herself the most perfect mistress within the sphere of [illegible] She felt sure that Caroline knew what she was aiming at, but as Caroline did not know, and therefore did nothing to promote an [illegible], her, baffling at length, became thoroughly disgusted

For a month after this they saw nothing at all of her but she was not the only person to friend whom they missed. Darnley kept away, but for what cause they could not conjecture. Sir Arthur, of course, thought it very strange, and more especially as he had sent him three notes, of which no notice whatever had been taken. He was perfectly unconscious of having offended him in any way; on the contrary, he felt that he had always treated him with the utmost consideration. He could not account for it! Certainly, it was most extraordinary—nay, it was mysterious—and the fact of its being so brought back those feelings which the note of Lady Grange had caused.

Again his imagination teemed with the prolific germs of jealousy: again he had to endure this, the greatest mental torment—which it is, if there be one more superior to the rest

It might be, he conjectured, that the assumed gentility pair had become apprehensive of discovery—or, that they had had some private quarrel—or, that they met each other secretly, although that did not appear probable, inasmuch as she was, evidently, most anxious to see which she was then preparing to follow him! Something having reference to gaol, he felt perfectly sure, had either occurred, or was contemplated. He was utterly unable to ascribe the prolonged absence of him, whom he looked upon then as a villain, to any other cause: to no other, in his judgment, could it be ascribed!—that was the cause! else, why was she so anxious?

And it is indeed, true that the anxiety of Caroline was most intense. She knew not what cause to assign.

At first she conceived that he was ill, and sent Sir Arthur to his residence to make inquiries; but, as the persons there had seen both of her, their answer was, that he had gone into the country they supposed! She then imagined that he had gone down to visit his mother, and yet she thought it strange that he should go without coming to see her still, while she came out to be there, her anxiety was somewhat subdued, but, on receiving a letter from Mrs. Darnley, in which she mentioned him as being still in town, and commissioned her to beg of him to call, she became completely wretched. Where on earth could he be! What could have become of him! Stricken, something horrible had happened! Her mind was tortured with a thousand apprehensions; but, while she made no attempt to conceal them from Sir Arthur, she little knew what feelings were torturing him.

Three weeks elapsed three weeks of suspense, the most fearful, when, as nothing could be heard of nor about Darnley, Caroline, in accordance with the request, left the knowledge of his mysterious disappearance. She, therefore, resolved at once to write, and did so in the lightest strain she could, she became completely wrecked. Where on earth could he be! What could have become of him Strele frigate in tow, and towed her to the anchorage off Algeciras. The frigate on anchoring fired a salute of 21 guns, which was returned by the town. The steamer left the bay and in the evening. Besides the Cortes, the Spaniards have only one other frigate, the Christina, now lying at anchor a few miles from Malaga. They have only two or three other smaller vessels, steamers, &c. The loss of a frigate is therefore of very great moment to the existing Government. The Governor of Algeciras, was marched from that place with troops some time after Malaga in consequence of the insurrection there, and returned again, not having reached Malaga. He is now at St. Roche, a village about five miles distant from Algeciras, but is not suffered to approach the town, which has been put in a state of de ence during his absence. Many of his troops have left him, and joined the insurgents at Algeciras. Her Majesty's steam vessel Lizard arrived yesterday from Barcelona, sailing at the precise moment the steamer Her Majesty's ship Monarch, 84, Captain Sir Thomas Harries, is at Port Mahon; the brig Savage and steamer Medea at Malaga, her Majesty's ship Formidable, 84, Captain Sir Charles Sullivan, at Gibraltar.

ROYAL YACHT SQUADRON.—COWES, ISLE OF WIGHT.—The Marquis of Anglesey arrived at Cowes Castle on Saturday, and the Marchioness and party arrived on Monday at the Pier, Cowes, arrived from the Thames the same day.

The Earl of Yarborough, the commodore of the squadron, is expected in the course of a few days. The mob is each year, the Kestrel, is now fitted out for the season

The Earl of Orkney's schooner Jack o'Lantern has recently undergone extensive alterations, and the fittings of her interior are very elegant.

There was a great number of yachts on the station and in the Southampton water, the following among the number:—Schooners, Alarm, Brave, Pet, Rose, Brilliant, Cygnet, Lavrock, Gossamer, Ann, Helen, Stormfield, Ida, Wizard, Wren, Gem, Widower, Curasoe, Charm, Falcon, and Phœbe.—Cutters, The Kestrel, Bream, and Water Lily.

EXPERIMENTAL TRIP OF THE ROYAL YACHT VICTORIA AND ALBERT.—On Wednesday her Majesty's royal Victoria and Albert made her first experimental trip from her present place. At a few minutes before seven in the morning she left our moorings, and proceeded down the river as far as Long Reach, below Gravesend, when she was put about and returned to the moorings to take her Admiral Fitzclarence, her captain, on board. While was in his cabin, an opportunity was afforded for ascertaining her capabilities of sailing. A vessel was found to be fine now, and that in turning she took little more than her own length. Shortly before eleven o'clock, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence came on board, and just after passed her once down the river, proceeding to the Nore, and nearly as far as the Reculver. [illegible] to give a very superior sailer and an excellent [illegible] in about an hour, and is surprised that when so [illegible] and in proper trim, her rate in sailing will even be greater. In performing the 44 miles per hour, it must be understood that this is her second trip through the water, and was effected against the tide. On going down the river she passed some of the most rapid of the Margate and Ramsgate steamers, and on getting into rough water she had even a greater advantage over them.

IRELAND.

The usual weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held at the Corn Exchange on Monday last, when the rent for the week was announced to be £1651 19s. It is needless to say that this was the most important part of the day's proceedings.

IRISH IMPORTS.—One of the Ordnance sloops arrived at Dunçannon fort from the Tower of London on Friday evening with 1000 stand of arms, and 250 casks of ball cartridge, an I some other warlike stores.

CONVICTION OF SAM. GRAY.—The trial (the fourth or fifth in the same case) of the notorious Sam Gray, for wilfully setting fire to wheat, commenced at Monaghan on Friday, and did not terminate till one o'clock on Monday, when the jury (a special one of high respectability), after ten minutes' deliberation, brought in a verdict of Guilty. Sentence was pronounced on Sam Gray, the son, was sentenced to seven years' transportation for subornation of perjury.

RIOTING IN BELFAST.—For several days last week Belfast was the scene of a most alarming and dangerous riot, which it was found almost impossible to quell. The contending parties (says the Northern Whig) were Catholics and Protestants, of the former description, disregarding the wishes of both. On Saturday night, and till four or five o'clock on Sunday morning, strong mobs assembled, and violent attacks with stones took place. Many wounds, more or less severe, were inflicted; and a number of police and military, who were on duty, were injured. One of the constabulary received a severe wound on the head from a stone. It required the exertions of a company of infantry, a troop of dragoons a body of constabulary, and a party of the night-watch, to keep the be ligerents in check. [illegible] principally small ones, suffered much; and in one of the houses (belonging to a Roman Catholic), a poor woman was so much injured by actually died a few hours afterwards, was with difficulty pre cted from the stones cast by the assailants. On Sunday, numbers of the inhabitants, in the district referred to, were removed from their dwellings, apprehensive an attack the next evening. We are glad that a number of the rioters, on both sides, have been sent for trial to the assizes. On Sunday night there was a partial renewal of the disorders of the previous evening; but the authorities were on the alert, and nothing serious occurred. Last night passed over quietly, and we trust that we have now done with this disgraceful affair.

IRISH PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY.—Dr. Cooke is so shielded from this body on account of his political proceedings as to [illegible] for securing the return of Presbyterian representatives in the House of Commons.

POLICE.

MARYLEBONE.—A man named Richard Bryant, a tailor, residing at No 9, Hertford-street, Somers-town, was brought up to the office on Wednesday, charged with attempting to cut her throat, and the evidence adduced on this occasion left no doubt on his return home in a state of partial intoxication, he found his wife absent, which excited him to such a degree of rage that he destroyed her clothes, and, having armed himself with a razor, threatened to cut her throat the moment she should meet her. A little girl, who was a witness of his frantic behaviour, ran out to meet the unfortunate woman, and warned her of her fate; but she refused to go into the house, when the prisoner rushed out, drew the razor from his pocket, and, taking her by the neck, proceeded to carry his diabolical threat into execution. In the struggle that ensued the woman had two of her fingers nearly cut off, and received several severe gashes on the face and neck, but ultimately succeeded in extricating herself from his grasp The prisoner then attempted to escape, but the alarm being given, he was stopped by a policeman, and the woman was sent to the University Hospital, where she now lies in a hopeless condition. The prisoner (whose defence was a charge of infidelity against his wife) was remanded.

WANTON AND CRUEL CASE OF MALICIOUS INJURIES.—On Wednesday the Rev. Nathaniel Forth was brought up on a warrant in consequence of not appearing to his personal recognizance, to answer a charge of assault which had been made against him, by a respectable gentleman, at whose house he had been lodged. The defendant is a gentlemanly-looking man, fast approaching seventy years of age. His dress and his general appearance betokened great poverty. Although the rev. defendant is now so much reduced, it is said that he had held valuable appointments in the Church, and amongst them was the vicarage of Foot's Cray, in Kent. It appeared that he owed his service a month's rent, and on attempting to enter his lodgings he was prevented by his landlord, who stood between him and the door, and pointing to a chair, told him he might sit down there and make himself easy." He was informed he could not be permitted to remove until compromised, and certainly a more justifiable assault could hardly well be conceived. It would appear that the magistrate was much of this opinion too when the case first came before him, for he dispensed with a portion of his personal recognizances on condition that he should pay the prosecutor what he owed for lodgings, and there the matter was to drop. The poor old gentleman, however (who, although these circumstances had taken place, was again placed at the defendant's house), when the following dignified and [illegible] scene took place. We quote from the morning papers:—Mr. Clive asked the defendant what answer he had to make to the charge.—Defendant: I have nothing to add to the statement I made at my last examination, but I have many apologies to make to you, Sir, for not having appeared at the expiration of the week.—Mr. Clive: I am not here to receive apologies, and I want none; you ought to have surrendered, and this unpleasantness would not have occurred.—Defendant: I thought that the recognizance was to prevent me going near Mr. Dick upon or assaulting him.—Mr. Clive: The recess is a guilty one; you well know you were to appear again, and I thought, by letting you go at large, you would have got the money and settled this man's claim.—Defendant: I sent you a letter, Sir, on the 5th instead, explaining that I was then endeavouring to get the money.—Mr. Clive: I have the copy, and will read it. Mr. Clive: Indeed you will not. I will have nothing to do with letters, and you had no business to send one to me.—Defendant: I am a clergyman of the Established Church, and have a wife and two daughters. They are living, and have been so for months past, on potatoes and bread. They have no bed to lie on, no chair to sit on, and, God help me, only one knife and fork among them at night. I am poor miserably poor.—Mr. Clive: I pity your distresses, and when you were first here, hearing you describe yourself as a clergyman in reduced circumstances, I did not wish to punish you for the assault if you could contrive to pay your landlord the rent due to him; and, to enable you to do this, I set you free, only taking your own recognizance, but [illegible] doing this, and treat the assault as a trifling matter, and forego having it proceeding. Have you the money now to pay to this man.—Defendant: I have not. I am hourly expecting a remittance from the country. I can give Mr. Dickens five shillings per week, but will not be able to give him 20s. for the assault, and in default of payment you will be committed to prison for fourteen days.—I have no objection to allowing you to come to some arrangement with the prosecutor, and if you can satisfy him I will discharge you.—The complainant refused to take less than the sum he was entitled to (30s.), and consequently the defendant was committed to Kingston gaol.—[Amen: God help you, poor man, for there appears to be little sympathy for you amongst your fellow creatures. This is surely "crushing the broken reed with a vengeance," but we trust there is still sufficient charity left in London to rescue him from the disgraceful incarceration to which he has been consigned. We have now been taught for the first time that the law is vindictive, for poor Mr. Forth is sent to prison (the report does not state whether with or without hard labour), not for the assault, that is clear, but because he treated the court with contempt. Really, Mr. Clive, we cannot think that this is the best mode of vindicating the majesty of the law.—ED. I. L. N.]

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE.—We have had another very limited arrival of English wheat up to our market during the week; but, in consequence of the prevailing fine weather for the growing crops, and a falling off in the attendance of buyers, the trade with that article has not ruled quite so brisk as last week, and continues to occur on this day's account. The whole of the parcels have, however, been cleared off at, in most instances, full rates of currency. In fine foreign wheat there has been a steady business doing, at an improvement in the quotations of 1s per quarter; while, for grain under look we have had more inquiry. Scarcely any barley has been on show, and the prices may be considered nominally unaltered. Good sound malt has fetched fully rather more than the currency, but [illegible] has been dull, and flour have produced previous currencies.

ARRIVALS.—English—Wheat, 3160; Barley, 80; Oats, 6410; and Malt, 1600 qrs.: Flour, 1,80 sacks. Irish: Barley, — and Oats, 15,880 qrs. Foreign: Wheat, 8960 Barley, 960, and Oats, qrs.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 49s to 56s; ditto white, 54s to 60s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 46s to 52s; ditto, white, 52s to 57s, rye, 34s to 36s; grinding barley, 24s to 28s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Chevalier 32s to 34s; Scotch and Northumberland malt, 54s to 62s; brown ditto, 50s to 54s; Kingston and Ware, 56s to 64s; Lincolnshire and Yorkshire red oats, 17s to 21s; potato ditto, 19s to 23s; Dundee, Aberdeen, and Cork, barley, 17s to 19s; ditto white, 19s to 20s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 34s to 38s; grey peas, 35s to 38s; maple, 34s to 36s; white, 30s to 32s; boilers, 32s to 37s per quarter. Town-made flour, 44s to 46s; Suffolk, 38s to 40s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 52 to 58s. In bond.—Barley, 20s; oats, new, 15s to 17s; ditto feed, 14s to 16s; beans, 30s to 32s; peas, 32s to 37s per quarter. Flour, American, 27s to 28s. Baltic, 22s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—We have had rather more inquiry for turnip-seed since our last, at full prices; but in all other kinds very little has been transacted

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 39s to 40s, Baltic, crushing, 42s to 43s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 41s; hempseed, 33s to 40s per quarter, coriander, 10s to 18s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 10s to 11s; white ditto, 10s to 16s 6d; tares, as to be 6d per bushel; English, 40s to 45s; foreign, 36s to 42s per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, 6l10 to 7l10 10s; ditto foreign, 6l7 to 6l7 10s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, 4l5 to 4l5 per ton, canary, 78s to 84s per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread are from 7½d to 8d; of household ditto, 6d to 7d for the 4lb. loaf.

Imperial Average of Corn.—Wheat, 51s 3d; barley, 29s 0d; oats, 19s 8d; rye, 31s 11d; beans, 29s 8d; peas, 32s 6d.

Imperial Averages of Six Weeks which govern Duty.—Wheat, 49s 7d; barley, 27s 11d; oats, 18s 9d., rye, 31s 6d; beans, 29s 6d; peas, 31s 0d per quarter.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 9s; oats, 7s., rye, 10s 6d; beans, 11s 6d; peas, 11s 6d.

Tea.—During the present week [illegible] packages of tea have been offered at public auction by the East India Company, and [illegible] of Mr. J. S. Yeo, of Canonbury-square, Islington.—At this [illegible] the whole of the quantity was disposed of. Common congou realized 11½d to 1s 1d; fine ditto, 1s 2d to 1s 3d; good congou, 1s 4d to 1s 5d; fine ditto, 1s 6d to 1s 7d; good to fine souchong, 1s 8d to 1s 9d; fine ditto, 1s 10d to 2s; pekoe, 2s 1d to 2s 2d; fine ditto, 2s 3d to 2s 4d; fine to finest, 2s 5d to 2s 6d; fine to finest caper, 2s 7d to 2s 8d; fine to finest gunpowder, 2s 9d to 2s 10d per lb.

Coffee.—Public sales of coffee have been [illegible] this week, while the demand has [illegible] at barely stationary prices. The supply from the plantations of Jamaica, Cuba, and Brazil, continues to be moderate, and the supply from the magazines of London is good. Trade rules steady, at from 2s to 2s 2d per cwt.

Cocoa.—Adda's, 12s 6d; Stewart's, 20s 3d; Lambton, 20s 3d; Hetton, 14s 6d per ton.

Hops.—The reports from the plantations being rather unfavourable, the demand is steady, at, in some cases, an advance of from 2s to 3s per cwt. There is a very small quantity of Boys on offer

Wool.—The imports of wool continue very large. By private contract a fair business is doing, at late rates

Smithfield.—There have been fair average supplies of fat stock on offer in the market during the week, while the demand has ruled inactive, at barely stationary prices. Beef, from 3s to 4s; mutton, 3s 6d to 4s 4d; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s 6d to 4s 4d; and pork, 3s to 4s per 8lbs., to sink the offal.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—Prime beef and mutton have produced full quotations; but, otherwise, the demand has ruled quiet. Beef, from 3s to 4s; mutton, 3s 4d to 4s 2d; lamb, 4s to 5s; veal, 3s 6d to 4s 6d, and pork, 3s to 4s per 8 lbs., by the carcase.

ROBERT HERBERT.

COMMERCE AND MONEY.

The demand for cotton and woollen goods for foreign consumption continues still to be large, and all agents of all descriptions of them are made as rapidly as they can be supplied Large quantities are again in progress of dispatch for the river St. Lawrence; and, as the season for the navigation remains open, for three or four months, or more, a good deal more will be forwarded to our American possessions, the very natural inference is that a considerable portion of them will be passed into the United States of America duty free. To the East Indies, Australia, and to Canada, however, extensive shipments of the various descriptions of manufactures continue to be forwarded, and prices therefore, though not high, still are maintained at rates perfectly remunerative to the spinners and manufacturers concerned, and their wages are fully adequate to the present moderate value of all the necessaries of life.

In our last publication we adverted to the improved aspect which was in progress in the corn trade, which improvement has since then been fully supported. In all the large corn-markets the supplies of wheat, in particular, have been unusually small during the last month, and by no means adequate to the consumption

In the manufacturing districts of the United Kingdom the demand for various descriptions of colonial produce is rather increasing than otherwise. The deliveries of teas into consumption are considerably larger at present than they were last year, and the expectations of large arrivals presents a proportionable improvement in prices The quarterly sales of indigo come added much in the same manner in which they commenced. A large quantity was disposed of that was expected, and the declines from the rates ruling at Apr. sales was only from 3d. to 4d., according to quality. Sugars remain much in their former state. Prices perfectly steady for refin ed qualities, while grocery descriptions are requested dearer. In the mining districts, however, much distress continues to prevail, as well amongst the masters as amongst the producers in labourers generally. From, and after the present month of August nearly half the collieries in England will be at work, and will then be profitably produced, and the discharge of numbers of workmen, and the reduction of the wages of the remainder, have created but too well-founded complaints on the part of them. The uncertainty of mining operations is proverbial, and alterations frequently occur in the state of the markets they are not looked for. But, we trust, a soon period will be accomplished, for at Birmingham, Sheffield, and the other market towns for the sale of hardware, a very considerable demand now exists for the description of goods chiefly for America and the East Indies, and prices are rapidly rising. Money, although, as yet, far from being remunerating to the producers

In the beginning of the week an unusual degree of inactivity prevailed in the money market, and the Consols remained at 93¾ to 94¼ until the middle of the week, when several extensive purchases by government took place, and the operations were immediately attended by a decline in prices of nearly ¾ per cent. Bank of England Stock, likewise, could have been purchased rather cheaper at the same period, while Exchequer Bills and Exchequer Bills maintained their previous high value. For the discount of approved accept-ances money is abundantly plentiful, but the amount of bills in the discount market continues to be extremely small, they can be converted into money at very low rates of annual interest. For the time account in the Consols there is scarcely any continuation, and speculators, for the present, show little inclination to assume the characters of either Bulls or Bears

On the Foreign Stock Exchange a similar degree of inactivity existed till the middle of the week, when a renewed demand arose for Spanish Three per Cent. Bonds, which produced an improvement in their value of ¾ per cent. Mexican Bonds, likewise, were purchased at 30, being an advance of ¾ per cent. on the prices of the previous week

BRITISH FUNDS—(CLOSING PRICES)—FRIDAY.

Bank Stock, 190½	India Stock, —
3 per Cent Reduced, 94¾	3 per Cts Bonds 96
3 per Cent Consols, 93¾	Ditto Old Annuities, —
3½ per Cent Reduced, 101¾	Ditto New Annuities, —
New 3½ per Cents, 101¾	Exchequer Bills, £1000, 14s. 4d. pm.
New 5 per Cent, —	Ditto £500, pm.
Long Annuities to expire Jan. 1860, 12 11-16	Ditto Small, pm.
Jan. 1885, 12 7-16	Bank Stock for Opening 1804
	India Stock for Account, —
	Consols for Account, 93¾

FOREIGN FUNDS

Belgian, 5 per cent, 104½	Spanish Deferred, —
Chilian, 6 per cent, —	Dutch, 2½ per cent, 53¼
Spanish, 5 per cent, 18¾	Ditto, 5 per cent, 104½

SHARES.

Bristol and Exeter (paid),	Ditto Loan Notes (paid)
Cheltenham and Great Western (pd),	London and Birmingham ( )
Eastern Counties (paid),	Ditto New Shares (paid)
Ditto New (paid),	London and South Western (p) 85¾
Ditto Scrip (paid),	Manchester and Birmingham (paid),
Great Western (55 paid), 60	South Eastern and Dover (80 paid), 24
Ditto New Shares (50 paid), 56½	Ditto Scrip (20 paid) 5
Ditto Fifths (12 paid), 16¾	York and North Midland (paid)
London and Brighton (50 paid —	Ditto New Shares (25 paid)

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JULY 18.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.—[illegible] CLAM, cutlers, Oxford-street. T. BAILEY [illegible] Lewes, Sussex, grocers. [illegible], Paisley, Lanarkshire. HANDLEY and [illegible] NING, brewers Peckham. W. WHITE, [illegible] Aylesbury. [illegible] DAVIS [illegible] Hatton-garden. [illegible] COOPER, ironfounder, Drury lane.—G. SIMONS, watch-manufacturer, King's square, Goswell-road. W. F. BOLTON, [illegible] Liverpool. [illegible] Plymouth.—T. RADCLIFFE [illegible] Manchester.

BANKRUPTS.—CERTIFICATIONS, J. PRINGLE, merchant, St. Andrew's.—J. BELL, merchant, Maxwelltown, Kirkcudbright.—W. [illegible] DAMS, merchant, Penrith.

[illegible] BANKRUPTS.—[illegible] HEWITT and G. HEWLETT, woollen drapers, Manchester. W. HENDERSON and J. H. VESEY, chemists, Moorfields, Gloucestershire. E. EARDLEY china dealer, Exeter

BANK OF ENGLAND.—Quarterly Account of the Week's Business and Assets of the Bank of England, from the 22nd day of April to the 18th July, 1843, both inclusive, published pursuant to the Act 3 and 4 W. IV., cap. 98

Capital	£14,553,000	Securities	£ 21,467,000
Deposits	10,774,000	Bullion	11,818,903
	£25,327,000		£33,277,000

Dowsing street, July 21, 1843.

BIRTHS.

At High Leigh, Cheshire, the wife of Captain Egerton Leigh, of a son and heir.—In Upper Belgrave-place, Mrs. Wm. B. Macaulay, of a son.—At Croydon, Surrey, the lady of Henry A. Cleaver, Esq., surgeon, of a son.—In Montagu-square, the lady of Major the Hon. J. St. Vincent Saumarez, of a son At Clapham Park, the lady of W. Thornton West, Esq., of a son At 12, Devonshire-p ace, the lady of Edward Hennege, Esq., M.P., of a son.—At Sir John Shelley's, Fulham, the lady of R. T. F. Kent, Esq., of a son.—The lady of George Worth, Esq., of a daughter At Rouse, the lady of J. T. W. French, Esq., of Pinkston, of a daughter.—At Wem, Shropshire, the lady of John Pemberton, Esq., of a daughter.—At the Vicarage, Newton, the lady of the Rev. Edward Dix, of a son. The wife of Mr. Barwis, of Bellevue House Academy, near Forest, of a son

MARRIAGES

At Heath, Bedfordshire, the Rev. Joshua Coult, of Broughton, Bucks, to Mary, daughter of the late Captain Cumberlege.—At Morning Hampstead, Devon, James H. Reiby, Esq., of Trinity College, Oxford, to Caroline, daughter of the Rev. W. C. Clack, Rector of Morchard Bishop.—At Sevens Turner, Esq., of Colchester, to Louisa, daughter of the late Rev. J. H. W. Williams, Rector of Fornham, Suffolk.—Julian E. D. Rodgers, Esq., of Poulton, to Frances, daughter of the late W. St. Aubin, Esq., Medical Staff.—At Marylebone Church, John Parkinson, Esq., of Harley place, Park-crescent, to Marian, daughter of E. Donne, Esq., of Upper Harley street.—At the independent Chapel, Wellington-road, Stockwell, Thomas Wemyss Reid, Esq., of Upper Clapton, Manchester, to Anne Clarance, youngest daughter of Mr. W. Hobson, of Stockwell.—At Forres, Captain T. H. Hall, Madras Establishment, to Hannah, daughter of the late Gordon, Esq. At Bushey, Herts, John, eldest son of the Rev. Miles C. Dixon, of Long Ashton, Somersetshire, to Eliza, daughter of Peter Lawson, Esq.—At Trinity Church, Marylebone, Charles T. Gregg, Esq., Inns-ailing Dr. [illegible] to Caroline, youngest daughter of the late Rt. Hon. Sir Patrick Grant, of Bengal.—At Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, Alexander Mackenzie, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, to Mary Ann, youngest daughter of the late Rear-Admiral Sir Wm. Bevan, Bart., Captain of the 4th Regt. of Madras Light Cavalry, to Margaret, youngest daughter of the late Henry Bull Strange, Esq., of Shipwicks, in the county of Somerset.

DEATH.

At Hill-side, King's Langley, Anne Augusta, lady of Henry Tufnell, Esq., M.P.—At Woodend, Cuckfield, in her 83rd year, Lady Mary Louisa Lennox, aunt to the Duke of Richmond.—At Bognor, on the Rhine, J. Bassett, Esq., of Upper Brook street.—At Bath, in his 84th year, Sir Charles Richardson Vaughan, Bart., late of Bosworth, Leicestershire.—At Pump-court, Temple, Robert Woodruff, Esq.—In Earl-street, Blackfriars, in his 48th year, Robert Burton, Esq.—At Dalrymple, Ayrshire, in his 79th year, W. H. Macnee, h. Prestwick, Esq.—At Bath, Mrs. Isherwood.—At East Malling, Kent, Charles Smith, Esq., of the Temple in his 79th year.—At Mere, Wm. Mean, of Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury-square, in his 66th year.—At Tottenham green, Robert, wife of R. Woollen, esq. aged 40.—At Southampton, Mrs. Hawkins Nicholls, aged 36.—At Folkestone, aged 41, Anne, wife of Matthew Bacon, late of Cowfold, Sussex.—Aged [illegible] Mary Harriett, Esq., of Rokery Hall, North Riding of York.—At Wanstead, aged six months, Susannah Ann, daughter of Mr. J. S. Yeo, of Canonbury-square, Islington.—At his residence, in Wimpole street, in his 77th year, William Woods Page, Esq.—At Packenham-terrace, Bayswater, William Busse, Esq.—At Birmingham, the Rev. W. Roland, Rector, rector of Sutton Coldfield, Warwickshire.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements cannot be received after 7 o'clock on Thursday Evening.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Sign. FILIPPO GALLI and Mdlle. Antoinette Italien, Professeurs de Danse de la Cour de Paris) respectfully announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, that his BENEFIT will take place on MONDAY next, JULY 24th, 1843, when will be performed the First Act of Donizetti's heroic opera, BELISARIO. Belisario, Sign. Ronconi; Eudocia, Signora Bozzi; Antonina, Mdlle. Nolini; Irene, Mdme. Persiani.—To be followed by Guerra's Opera Buffa, LA PROVA D'UN OPERA SERIA, by Mdme. Persiani, Signori Ronconi, and F. Lablache.—Between the [illegible] ITALIANA IN ALGERI [illegible] Mario, Lablache, Ferrazani, and Filippo Galli. In his first appearance these twenty years. To conclude with the new and highly attractive Grand Ballet of the Tableau, [illegible] Carrol, the Music by Sgr. Pugni, entitled ONDINE; OR, LA NAIADE. The Scenery by Mr. William Grieve. Ondine, Mdlle. Carlotta; Martino (a young Troubadour), M. Perrot; Gouverne (to Ondine mother to Martino), Mdme. Guy Stephan. Mdlle. Wilhelmine Guy Stephan, Camille, Schedire, Mdlle. Rosati, Mdlle. Dupont, M. Lucien, M. Perrot.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at seven; to commence at half past seven o'clock.

THE GRAND MODEL of the BASILICA of ST. PETER'S at Rome.—Under the patronage of her Majesty QUEEN VICTORIA. Executed by ANDREA SACCHETTI, Architect to the Pontifical Court. 27 feet in length and 12 feet in height, carved in oriental wood, with statues elegantly carved in ivory, being reduced to one hundredth part of its original size. By its construction the internal parts are exhibited to the spectator, the construction of which occupied the able and zealous artist fourteen years. Open daily, at 12 P.M. till, from ten to eight o'clock. Admission, 1s. Children (not belonging to schools), in parties of two or more, 6d. each. 5, Lord Price.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A Lecture on AERIAL NAVIGATION, illustrated by Models of several kinds, which elevate themselves by mechanical force alone, is delivered by Professor Barbanchon, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at Three o'clock, and on Saturday at the usual hours at Eight o'clock. A Lecture on CHEMISTRY, on some branch of Natural Philosophy, by Mr. Bachhoffner, daily, at Ten o'clock. The Exhibition of the COLOSSAL ELECTRICAL MACHINE, the DIVER and DIVING BELL, NEW DISSOLVING VIEWS, and the other varied and instructive objects of the Institution, continues as usual. The MICROSCOPE daily, at Five o'clock, and at Ten on the evening of Saturday, under the direction of Mr. Godard. Several NEW MODELS and WORKS of ART have recently been placed in the Gallery.—Admission, One Shilling. Schools, Half-price. Open Mornings and Evenings except Saturday Evening

GEOGRAPHICAL WORKS FOR SCHOOLS AND PRIVATE INSTRUCTION.
WHITTAKER AND Co., Ave Maria-lane.

WOODBRIDGE'S ATLAS; exhibiting, also, the Religions, Forms of Government, Degrees of Civilization, Comparative Size of Towns Rivers, and Mountains in the Chief Countries of the World. Royal 4to. 8s. half-bound.

WOODBRIDGE'S GEOGRAPHY; Illustrative of the foregoing Atlas, With numerous engravings. Fourth edition, 18mo., 3s. 6d. bound.

WHITTAKER'S Improved Editions of Pinnock's Catechisms. 18mo., 2d. each.

British Geography (Five Parts).	General Geography
England and Wales.	Use of the Globes (Two Parts).
Scotland	Geology
Ireland.	Botany.
Modern of Europe and America.	Natural History.
Colonies, Asia, Africa, &c.

In each of these little treatises the elements of the various subjects are explained in the simplest and clearest manner. 18mo., price 2d. each.

HISTORICAL WORKS FOR SCHOOLS AND PRIVATE INSTRUCTION.
WHITTAKER AND Co., Ave Maria-lane

WHITTAKER'S Improved Editions of Pinnock's Goldsmith's Histories, viz.:—

HISTORY OF ENGLAND The 42nd edition, 6s. 6d. bound.
HISTORY OF ROME The 21st edition, 3s. 6d. bound.
HISTORY OF GREECE. The 17th edition, 3s. 6d. bound.

Several hundred pounds have been expended on these works since they have become the property of Messrs. Whittaker and Co., and they have been embellished with numerous portraits, woodcuts, and coloured maps and plates; and have been edited on the explanatory and interrogative systems, and copiously illustrated by notes, genealogical tables, and maps. By Dr. W. C. TAYLOR.

The History of the Overthrow of the Roman Empire, and the Formation of the principal European States. By Dr. W. C. TAYLOR. 12mo., 6s. 6d., cloth.

HISTORY of FRANCE and NORMANDY, on the plan of Pinnock's Goldsmith's Histories. By Dr. W. C. TAYLOR. 18mo., 12mo., 5s. bound.

Professor WILSON'S MANUAL of HISTORY and CHRONOLOGY. 12mo., 4s. 6d.

The STREAM of HISTORY. Mounted, 36s.

HAMILTON'S CHRONOLOGY. 12mo., 3s. 6d.

WHITTAKER'S Improved Editions of PINNOCK'S CATECHISMS. 18mo., 2d. each.

Ancient History.	History of Rome.
Bible and Gospel.	" The Jews.
History of England.	Modern History.
" Scotland.	Scripture History.
" Ireland.	Universal History.
" France.	Natural History.

In which the important and leading facts of each history are narrated so as to impress the minds of young persons.

COMMERCIAL AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE, ANNUITY, FAMILY ENDOWMENT, and LOAN ASSOCIATION, 112, Cheapside.

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Commutation to aid parties bringing business. Prospectuses to be had on application to the Secretary. FREDERIC LAW OLIVER, Resident Secretary.

LIGHT SUMMER COAT, WAISTCOAT, and TROUSERS of [illegible] are [illegible] London, at J. ALBERT and Co.'s, tailors, &c., 59, King William street, City. Established upwards of [illegible] years.

INDIA BITTER ALE, of the very best description, shipped at [illegible] per dozen, free on board, bottles and cases inclusive. Families supplied with [illegible] in kilderkins of 18 gallons, 36s. each, or, bottled, at 4s. and 7s. 6d. per dozen, according to [illegible] needed to use, in a diluted state, BRETT'S IMPROVED BRANDY, [illegible] which, being decolized more free from acidity than [illegible] COGNAC, is allowed [illegible] by [illegible] connoisseurs. The [illegible] GINGER BRANDY, on either terms [illegible] HENRY BRETT and Co., Old Furnival's Inn Holborn.

A LUXURY FOR WARM OR WET WEATHER.

BERDOE'S SUMMER VENTILATING WATERPROOF FROCK and LIGHT SUMMER COAT.—These established and gentlemanly garments have already been adopted by a long list of the Nobility, Gentry, Professional Gentlemen &c., and will prove well deserving the attention of all who regard a respectable and gentlemanly appearance in opposition to long, vulgarity, and meanness. Made to measure in the first style; but a large assortment always ready, of which an inspection is confidently invited. Warranted waterproof, without confining perspiration.—Made only by W. Berdoe, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 85, Cornhill, right down from Bishopsgate-street.

WILSON'S SCOTTISH ENTERTAINMENTS. — POSTPONEMENT.—In consequence of the death of one of Mr. WILSON'S children, his ENTERTAINMENTS are for a time POSTPONED.
Taistie Cottage, Church green, Pinchley, July 15, 1843.

WILL CLOSE, ON SATURDAY NEXT, 29TH INSTANT

EXHIBITION. — Sir GEORGE HAYTER'S GREAT PICTURE of the HOUSE of COMMONS, painted on 770 square feet of canvas, and containing Portraits of all the Members, a Portrait of the Queen, and various other historical pictures, in which are more than eight hundred portraits of eminent men of the present day, is OPEN for exhibition from Ten o'clock till dusk every day, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.—Admission, 1s. each person.

ONLY ONE IN THE WORLD.

GLACIARIUM and FROZEN LAKE.—The Artificial Ice, at the Baker-street Bazaar, seems to increase with the summer temperature its virtue of attracting vast numbers of distinguished visitors to witness the excellent skating on the Frozen Lake, with the beautiful Panorama of Lucerne, which, when lighted, as it is in the evening, and enlivened with chaste music, is indeed a delightful cool resort, and the admittance of 1s. very moderate.

JUST OPENED,

PANORAMA, LEICESTER-SQUARE.— A beautiful View from the Rhine, of Coblentz, and Ehrenbreitstein, the Gibraltar of the Rhine, Forts Alexander and Constantine, the Bridge of Boats, the Moselle and its ancient Bridge, Fort Francis, and all the surrounding objects of celebrity in this most splendid, romantic, and historically interesting portion of Europe.—The views of Edinburgh, as at the time of her Majesty's visit, and Baden Baden, still continue open.

THE CHINESE COLLECTION, HYDE PARK CORNER.— This unique Collection consists of objects exclusively Chinese, and surpasses in extent and grandeur any similar display in the known world. The spacious saloon is 75 feet in length, and is crowded with rare and interesting specimens of arts. This Collection embraces upwards of sixty figures as large as life, portraits from nature, appropriately attired in their native costume, from the monarch of the highest rank to the wandering mendicant; also many thousand specimens in natural history and miscellaneous curiosities, the whole illustrating the appearance, manners, and customs, and social life of more than three hundred million Chinese.—Open from Ten till Ten.—Admittance, 2s. 6d.; Children under Twelve Years, 1s.

DR. CULVERWELL'S HAND-BOOK for INVALIDS.—Post free, 1s. 6d.—On COMPLAINTS of the BLADDER, GRAVEL, and other urinary derangements, with nineteen engravings. Also, on CONSTIPATION, HÆMORRHOIDS, and other disorders of the bowels, with twenty-six engravings.—To be had of SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand. At home daily from ten till three.

GILBERT'S OUTLINES of GEOGRAPHY, in 180 pages, 18mo, with ten superior steel-plate Maps, price only 2s., bound in cloth.—"We have no hesitation in recommending this work as the most comprehensive of its kind: its arrangement is philosophical, and well calculated for instruction."—Mail. "The Maps are in the highest style of art."—Atlas. "The cheapest and best got-up educational work we have seen."—Church Gazette. "Most sensibly and carefully written."—Polytechnic Review. "An excellent compendium"—Methocist Mag.

GILBERT'S OUTLINE MAPS of the WORLD, in nine steel-plate foolscap 4to. Maps, with diagrams of projections, and an Index of the latitudes and longitudes of 2100 places; well suited for exercises in map drawing, and for educational purposes. Price 5s. 6d., sewed.—"Thus, with the author's 'Outlines of Geography,' forms the best system of geographical study we have seen."—Methodist Mag." Deserving of great praise."—Polytechnic Review. "The filling up of these Outlines will prove a sanitary exercise."—Baptist Mag.

OUTLINES of ENGLISH HISTORY. By HENRY INCE, M.A. With Remarks on the Manners, Customs, Arts, Dresses, &c.; a Genealogical Chart of the Sovereigns, and other engravings. The twenty-fifth thousand is just published, price only 1s. sewed, or 1s. 6d. bound.—Also, price 1s. each, INCE'S OUTLINES of FRENCH HISTORY, with Engravings.—INCE'S OUTLINES of GENERAL KNOWLEDGE, with Engravings. "Contain a remarkable quantity of useful information."—Athenæum

GILBERT'S JUVENILE MODERN ATLAS, beautifully engraved on steel, containing Maps of the World, Europe, Asia, Africa, North America, South America, Australasia, with eight other corresponding outline maps of the lakes, rivers, mountains, and waterfalls; diagrams of projections; a consulting alphabetical index of 2100 places. The whole accompanied by descriptive letter-press, and forming an instructive and cheap work.

MONS. LE PAGE'S FRENCH SCHOOL.

Just published, new and improved edition, with Woodcuts,

PART 1.—L'ECHO DE PARIS; being a selection of Phrases as spoken in well bred society in France. To which is added, an Abridgment of the Rules and Idioms. SIXTH Edition. Price 4s., neatly bound. By M. LE PAGE, Professor of French in London. Also, lately published, the same Author

PART 2.—GIFT OF FLUENCY in FRENCH CONVERSATION.—A set of Exercises for the Learner of the French Language, calculated to enable him, by means of practice, to express himself fluently on the ordinary topics of life. Second Edition, with Notes, 3s. 6d.

PART 3.—THE LAST STEP TO ERENCH; or, The Principles of French Grammar displayed in a series of Short Lessons, each of which is followed by Questions and Exercises, with the Vocabulary. 3s. 6d.—"In the Last Step to French' we have a Grammar superior, in our opinion, to any that has preceded it. Whilst the three terms of M. Le Page furnish a complete system for the student of the French tongue, at the same time, a Manual of Conversation, enabling him at once to learn and to speak the language."—Parthenon

FRENCH SCHOOL COMPLETE, the three parts bound in One Volume, price 10s. Also,

The FRENCH MASTER for the NURSERY; or, First Lessons in French, for the use of Junior Pupils. By M. LE PAGE. 3s. 6d., neatly bound.—"M. Le Page is the best elementary instructor we know of His dialogues on the sound of French letters and the Parts of Speech are of first-rate excellence."—Court Magazine.
"To schools and private teachers these volumes must be invaluable."—Monthly Review.
London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, 18, Bishopsgate-Within, and sold by all Booksellers.

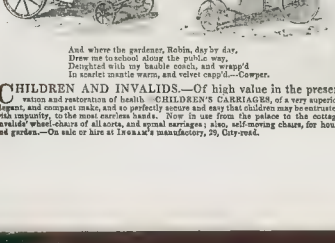
EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—No. 10, Chatham-place, Blackfriars, London.—Established January, 1819.
PRESIDENT—SIR JAMES SHAWE CAMPBELL, Bart., Bank Chief, Inverness.
VICE-PRESIDENT—GEO. FORBES, Esq., 9, Finsbury-square.—With Twelve Directors.
FACILITIES are offered by this long-established Society to suit the views and the means of every class of Insurers. Premiums are received yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly, or upon an increasing or decreasing scale. Or one-half of the annual rent, with interest on the remainder, will be received for five or seven years, the other half to be paid at the convenience of the assured. The insured for life participate septennially in the profits realised. A liberal commission is allowed to Solicitors and Agents.
DAVID FOGGO, Secretary.
N.B.—Agents are wanted in towns where none have been yet appointed.

COLONY of NEW EDINBURGH, to be founded by the NEW ZEALAND COMPANY.
GOVERNOR.—Joseph Somes, Esq.
DEPUTY-GOVERNOR.—Hon. Francis Baring.
DIRECTORS.

Henry A. Aglionby, Esq., M.P.	William King, Esq.
J. Elsworth Bouleott, Esq.	Ross Donnelly Maingles, Esq., M.P.
John William Buller, Esq.	Stewart Marjoribanks, Esq., M.P.
Charles Bulley, Esq., M.P.	Alexander Nairne, Esq.
Viscount Courtenay, M.P.	Lord Petre
Sir I. Lyon Goldsmid, Bart.	Sir John Pirie, Bart., Alderman
James Robert Gowen, Esq., M.P.	J. Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.
Arch. Hastie, Esq., M.P.	Wm. Thompson, Esq., Alderman, M.P.
Sir Ralph Howard, Bart., M.P.	Hon. Frederick J. Tollemache, M.P.
William Hutt, Esq., M.P.	Edward Tyrrell, Esq., M.P.
Viscount Ingestre, M.P.	G. Frederick Young, Esq.

The Court of Directors of the New Zealand Company have resolved:—
First.—That they have undertaken to form a distinct Settlement in New Zealand, to be called New Edinburgh.
Second.—That, for this Settlement, provision has been made for Emigration from Scotland in particular, and for religious and educational endowments on an ample scale, in connexion with the Presbyterian Kirk of Scotland.
Third.—That it is intended to despatch the first body of colonists about the month of October next.
Fourth.—That the Registry of Applications for Allotments of Land in the New Edinburgh Settlement will be opened at the Company's House, on Tuesday, the 22nd of August next, and filled up strictly according to priority of application.
Fifth.—Further information respecting this colony may be obtained by application to the Secretary, and respecting the plans of the body of intending settlers, by applying by letter, or personally, between the hours of Twelve and Four o'clock, to George Rennie, Esq., New Zealand House, Broad-street-buildings. By order of the Court,
July 12, 1843. JOHN WARD, Sec.

IMPROVED ELASTIC GAITERS FOR LADIES.—They require neither lacing nor buttoning, and are put on with the greatest facility They fit close, with particular neatness, without pressure; are made in silk, cashmere, and woollen, black and coloured; suitable for home, the carriage, promenade, or equestrian wear. Can be forwarded in a letter from POPE and PLANTE, manufacturers of every description of the best hosiery, 4, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall.



And where the gardener, Robin, day by day,
Drew me to school along the public way,
Delighted with my basket couch, and wrapp'd
In scarlet mantle warm, and velvet cap'd.—Cowper.

CHILDREN AND INVALIDS.—Of high value in the preservation and restoration of health.—CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES, of a very superior, elegant, and compact make, and so perfectly secure and easy that children may be entrusted with impunity, to the most careless hands. Now in use from the palace to the cottage. Invalids' wheel-chairs of all sorts, and spinal carriages; also, self-moving chairs, for house and garden.—On sale or hire at INGRAM'S manufactory, 29, City-road.

REPORT ON CLAIRVOYANCE.
Just published, price 1s.,
REPORT upon the Phenomena of CLAIRVOYANCE, or Lucid Somnambulism (from personal observation), with additional remarks by EDWIN LEE, Esq. An appendix to the third edition of Animal Magnetism.—The entire work in cloth boards, 9s. J. CHURCHILL, Princes-street.

Just published, in royal 18mo., price One Shilling (dedicated, by permission, to the Rev. J. TWIGGE, A.M., Chaplain to the Cemetery),
A HAND-BOOK for the KENSAL GREEN CEMETERY. By BENJAMIN CLARK. This work contains, with much other interesting matter, Biographical Notices of many persons interred there; also, a list of the Company's Charges, Fees, and Regulations; the names of the directors, &c.
J. MAYNES, 33, Aldersgate-street, London.

Just Published, price 1s. 6d.,
EMIGRATION.—CAPE of GOOD HOPE.—OBSERVATIONS on Mr GEORGE ROBINS'S EL DORADO at the CAPE of GOOD HOPE, with Hints to those who are disposed to try Monmouthshire. One Million per acre in that Colony. By SAM SAMBOR (a Caper).
"Persons intending to emigrate to our eastern settlements may receive useful information from this pamphlet."—"Sam's capers are exceedingly diverting."—Morning Post.
London: WILLIAM GILLING, 195, Strand.

NEW FRENCH AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY.
BAILY AND CO., 83, CORNHILL.
FRENCH and ENGLISH and ENGLISH and FRENCH LEXICON. By MARIN DE LAVOYE
One Volume, handsomely bound in calf (574 pages), 4th edition, price 10s. 6d.
"This is a very useful book, got up with great accuracy." Times, May 17, 1842.
"The arrangement of this work is very clear and comprehensive."—Atlas, June 4, 1842.
"It discriminates and explains the words with more clearness."—Monthly Review for the admirable lexicon."—Literary Gazette, June 11, 1842.
"For the purpose of translation this is the most convenient dictionary we have examined."—New Monthly Magazine and Critical Register for August 1842
London: A. H. BAILY and CO., 13, Change-alley, and 83, Cornhill.

SUPERIOR SCHOOL BOOKS.
BUTTER'S ETYMOLOGICAL SPELLING-BOOK and EXPOSITOR. An Introduction to the Spelling, Pronunciation, and Derivation of the English Language, containing, besides several other important Improvements, extensive Tables of Words derived from their Greek and Latin Roots. Sixty-fourth Edition, 1s. 6d. bound.
BUTTER'S GRADATIONS in READING and SPELLING, upon an entirely new and original plan; by which Dissyllables are rendered as easy as Monosyllables. With numerous interesting and instructive Reading Lessons in Prose and Verse, and Spelling-Tables leading to a knowledge of Grammar and Derivation. Twenty-fifth Edition, 1s. 6d. bound.
SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and CO.; WHITTAKER and CO.; LONGMAN and CO.; HAMILTON and CO., London. OLIVER and BOYD, Edinburgh.

NEW MUSIC.—FOUR SONGS, &c., with Piano Accompaniment, 1. Sweet Spirit, hear my prayer (Melody from an ancient Hebrew Air by Jesty and Prince Albert visiting Scotland) 3. Little Cupid. 4. Auld Robin Gray, revised, and a second and third part added to the music, by J. Gray. The whole, in one cover, 5s.; or, separately, 1s. 6d. each.
CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond-street, London: Wood and Co., Waterloo-place, Edinburgh

THE SEA.—TO PARENTS, &c.—One or Two young Gentlemen, who have a desire for the SEA, and who are willing to learn that profession, may be received in an Indiaman on adventures for three years, as MIDSHIPMEN or CADETS. Premium moderate.—Apply to Messrs. Greenwood and Co., No. 29, Walbrook, Mansion House, City.

TO CONFECTIONERS, COOKS, &c.—A first-rate, desirable Business established above half a century, situate in one of the principal English inland Watering place, TO BE DISPOSED OF, the party declining business after conducting the same beneficially for the last twenty three years. For particulars inquire at Messrs. HOOPER and Son's, 57, High Holborn.

ALE of very superior quality, brewed entirely from the very best Malt and Hops, and in such proportions as persons of nice palate will be sure to appreciate. Sold in casks of eighteen and nine gallons each, at 1s. per gallon. Sent to any part of town securely packed, and punctually attended to. Address to the John Bull brewery office, 29, Philpot-lane, City.

BACON.—J. CRAFT, Philpot-lane, City, offers to the Public Bacon of excellent quality, which he receives weekly from a farmer in Wiltshire, who attends to the feeding and curing of his pigs in such a way as to make the Bacon of a most delicious flavour, and which will be sure to suit the most delicate stomach.—Sold by the side or half side, 6d. per lb.—Sent to any part of town carriage free.

SHAVING a LUXURY.—The newly-invented PATENT SHAVING-CONCENTRATOR is decidedly the greatest luxury which will ever be added to Razors that beautifully keen, smooth, wedge formed edge which removes the beard with perfect comfort. Will last for three years, and can then be renewed, without the slightest trouble, at any cutler's. To be had of J. G. Hughes, 148, Strand, adjoining King's College. Price 1s. 6d. and upwards.

A PPRENTICE to CHEMISTRY, Practical and Experimental.—A VACANCY now occurs for an APPRENTICE to the above profession in the House of a Pharmaceutical and Practical Chemist, carrying on an extensive dispensing and retail business in one of the most fashionable and rising towns in the kingdom. A gentlemanly address and liberal education are requisites, and a youth possessing a natural aptitude for chemical experiments would be preferred. A premium would be required, as part of the ultimate duty would be to assist the advertiser at his lecture table.—For particulars, apply to Messrs. PRICE and WATSON, wholesale stationers, 38, Cherry-street, Birmingham.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESSMAKING.—Madame GALLOIS, 44, New Bond street, still continues her superior method of TEACHING the ART of DRESSMAKING in all its various branches, and the Pupils of the Establishment expertly proficient in cutting, fitting, and executing in a most finished style, in six lessons, for One Pound. The common or old mode not only fully substantiated by references to pupils, and has never been equalled by any competitor. Practice hours from eleven till four.

BONNETS.—Leghorns, Tuscan, Fancy Chips, Dunstable, and Milinery Bonnets and Caps, from Paris, in all the New Shapes, possessing the advantage of giving a youthful and graceful appearance—a peculiarity confined to this house. The Fancy Bonnets, Trimmed with Flowers, Feathers, Lace, &c., for the New Ball Leghorns, 20s.; Children's Leghorn Hats, 6s. to 14s.; Tuscans, 8s. to 15s.; Dunstables, 3s. 6d. to 10s.; Fancy Chips, Bridal Bonnets, 14s. 6d.; Fancy Bonnets, 5s. to 18s.; Garden Hats, 1s. to 5s.; French Shapes, 3s. 8d., 4s. 2d., 5s. 2d., to 8s. 6d. per doz. The Trade supplied.—J. SIMMONS, 20, King William-street, London-bridge, corner of Cannon-street.

LONDON and DOVER RAILWAY.—Passengers and parties visiting the Continent, or forming tours of pleasure on the English coast, are informed that the SOUTH-EASTERN PAVILION, at FOLKESTONE HARBOUR, conducted by MONS. VANTINI (with a full view of the sea), is open for their reception.—Good refreshments, at moderate prices, are always ready. The French and English languages spoken. Omnibuses meet every train, to and from Dover and Sandgate, and Hotel Omnibuses, from the station to the Pavilion.—The trains perform the journey to and from London and Folkestone in rather more than three hours. Select parties desirous of fixing days and hours can have any arrangement of their own fully provided by writing (pre-paid) to MONS. VANTINI.

EDWARD DODD, MANUFACTURER to H.R.H. Duke of Cambridge of his ANGLO-ROMAN STRINGS for VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, and HARP, which, having for power and sweetness of tone been fully secured in bringing to public notice the most perfect article ever offered, possessing both the delicacy of character and richness of bouquet natural to Cognac, they being supported in their assertion by the opinions of both the Professional and Amateur Leaders in the English market.
The FALE BRANDY is particularly recommended as something extremely curious.

SELLING OFF—RETIRING FROM BUSINESS.—GREAT SALE OF SILKS, SHAWLS, LINEN DRAPERY, HOSIERY, LACE, GLOVES, RIBBONS, and FANCY GOODS.—W. EDGINTON, Jun., Pocock's, respectfully announces to the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in general, that in consequence of his intention to retire from business, he purposes offering the whole of his valuable and extensive stock at a considerable reduction from the original cost. for ready money, which consists of rich Brocaded Moire Glace, and Striped Silks and Satins; Balzarines, French Muslin, Mousline de Laines, Lawns, Cambrics, Lisle and Valenciennes Lace in the English market. Bonds, Ribbons, together with an immense variety of Fancy Goods; and as every article has been purchased in the first Britain and Foreign markets for cash, and selected with the greatest care, ladies and families may make their purchases with undoubted confidence, and under the most advantageous circumstances.—57, Piccadilly, opposite St. James's Church.
The Lease and Fixtures to be disposed of.

PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, adjoining the BAZAAR, 58, BAKER-STREET, PORTMAN-SQUARE London. Gentlemen about to furnish will find the largest assortment of GENERAL FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, ever offered to the public, consisting of Tin, Copper, and Iron Cooking Utensils.—Table Cutlery, best Sheffield Plate, German Silver Wares, Patent Mackie Tea Trays, Tea and Coffee Urns, Stoves, Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders and Fire Irons, with Baths of all kinds, shower, hot, cold, vapour, plunging, &c.; together with Ornamental Iron and Wire Work, for Conservatories, Lawns, &c.; Gardens Engines, which are constantly kept on hand by the proprietors of this establishment, and in the largest quantities. All articles are selected of the very best description, offered at exceedingly low prices, for cash only; the price of each article being marked in plain figures.—Patent Radiating Stoves.

KETT'S CASTOR OIL POMATUM is the best preparation for encouraging the growth of the hair, and entirely preventing the accumulation of scurf. Its stimulating and cleansing properties eminently adapt it for children. Sold in pots, 1s. and 2s.; or, four in one, 5s. each, by G. COSE, 29, Fleet-street; SANGER, 150, Oxford-street; GROOM, 46, Threadneedle-street; and of all Chemists and Perfumers, through Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, Farringdon-street.

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWING-ROOM, LIBRARY, &c., in Italian Alabaster, Marble, Bronze, and Derbyshire Spar, consisting of Vases, Figures, Groups, Candlesticks, Obelisks, Inkstands, Paper-weights, &c.—Imported by J. TENNANT (late MEYER), 149, Strand.—J. T. begs to call the attention of Shells, Minerals, and Fossils, &c.; he also arranges for Students in Geology, Mineralogy, or Conchology, Illustrative Collections, from Two to Fifty Guineas each, and gives private instruction in Mineralogy.

A WATCH, AS A GIFT, from its particular properties, is the best expression of the truth and constancy of friendship: it is always with the owner, and always doing him service.—J. JONES, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, Watchmaker to the Admiralty, has on sale a great variety of Watches, suitable for all classes. The elegant gold horizontal watches, at £7 each, are suitable for ladies and gentlemen.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watch Work, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

DELICACY OF COMPLEXION.—The Use of GOWLAND'S LOTION is specially followed for the removal of every species of cutaneous defect and discolouration, and the establishment of a pure surface of the skin, whilst it preserves the most susceptible complexion from the effects of heat, freckle, and sallowness and sustains the softness of texture and vivacity natural to the earlier years. "ROBT. SHAW, LONDON," is on the Stamp.—Prices, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., and 9s. 6d. Sold by all perfumers, &c.,

TABLE-GLASS and CHINA.—APSLEY PELLATT, Falcon Glass Works, Holland-street, Blackfriars-road, respectfully solicits an inspection of his show-rooms and stock of Table Glass, containing a very extensive assortment of every description; new variegated Ceramic Flower-ornaments; China, and Earthenware, both remember Stone, and Glass for Horticultural purposes; Glass Shades for adapting light into vaults and cellars; Chemical and Philosophical Glass, &c. Printed lists may be had on application. Days for viewing the manufactory — Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

CHASTON'S PATENT INDIAN-RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLAISTERS are now generally admitted to be the most unique and best to eradicate either HARD or SOFT CORNS. From their elastic quality they can be worn with perfect ease, however tight the boot or shoe may be. Invented and prepared by B. CHASTON, Chemist, Watton, Norfolk, and sold in Boxes 1s. 1½d. each. N.B.—On receipt of Thirteen Stamps (free) a box will be forwarded (also free) to any part of the Kingdom.

DINNER, DESSERT, TEA, and TOILET SERVICES, &c.—SANDER and CO. beg to announce that they have for inspection at their spacious Showrooms and Warehouses the largest Stock in London of New Patterns of the above Services in Porcelain, Opaque Porcelain, and Earthenware. A splendid selection of richly-cut Glass, in trifle and dessert dishes, decanters, tumblers, wines, &c., of every description. Papier maché trays, japanned goods, and every ornaments in bronzes, ormulu, china, &c. &c., in great variety.—319 and 320, High Holborn, opposite Gray's Inn-gate.
All Goods for abroad properly packed and carted to the Docks and Wharfs free.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, FIRE-PROOF SAFES, CASH-BOXES, &c.

CHUBB'S NEW PATENT DETECTOR LOCKS give perfect security from false keys, and from picking, which has never been. They are made to all sizes, and for every purpose to which locks are applied. These locks are strong, secure, simple, and durable. CHUBB'S Patent Fire-proof Safes and Boxes form a complete protection for deeds, plate, books, &c., from fire and thieves. Cash Boxes and Japan Boxes of all sizes fitted with the New Patent Locks. A large assortment of the above on sale, by C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, London.

NEW TARIFF.

A 7lb. canister of fine Jamaica Arrowroot for 6s.; 7lb. bag of best Patna Rice for 1s.; 7lb. best Carolina Rice for 2s.; 6lb. canister of superior Black Tea for 27s.; 4lb. canister of superior Green Tea for 14s.; Common Tea, 2s. 11d. per lb., and upwards. Rich old Mocha Coffee, 1s. 10d. per lb.; fine Jamaica Coffee, 1s. 6d.; Common, 10d. per lb. and upwards. All other groceries at wholesale prices. Terms, cash on delivery.—Address, W. FORSTER'S Tea, Coffee, and Spice Warehouse, Philpot-lane, City

GOOD sound CONGOU TEAS, in 6lb. bags, or 12lb. chests, at 3s. 4d. and 3s. 10d. per lb.—East India Tea Company, 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street

THE TEA ESTABLISHMENT, 4 and 5, KING WILLIAM-STREET, CITY.—The Overland Mail of this month confirms the accounts previously received of the favourable state of affairs in China, and of large shipments of Tea to this country. The effect will be a considerable reduction of the low prices of Teas which have for some short time past prevailed in the market; and as it has always been a rule with the proprietors of this establishment to meet the various changes which take place, when those changes are in their favour, and likely to remain permanent, they have determined to announce a reduction of 4d per lb. in good and fine Congou and Souchong, 3d per pound on fine and superfine Pekoe, and 6d to 1s. per lb. on fine Gunpowder. These alterations of Tea have never been known so cheap. The difference in common Teas is too trifling to require notice. In the accompanying list of prices the customer will obtain the full benefit of the alteration

BLACK TEAS.
Ordinary to Good Ordinary Congou	3s 1d to 3s 2d per lb.
Useful Congou	3s 4d to 3s 6d
Good Congou, full flavour	3s 8d
Strong Congou, blackish leaf	4s, equal to former 4s 4d
Fine Congou, Pekoe Souchong kind	4s 4d, equal to former 4s 8d
Finest Congou, with blackish leaf, full rich Pekoe Souchong flavour	4s 8d, equal to former 5s
Superfine Souchong	5s 4d, equal to former 5s 8d
Fine rich burnt Orange Pekoe, Hyson flavour	4s 8d
Besides the above kinds of Black Teas, there is a large stock of Singapore Souchong in the market at 2s 4d to 2s 8d per lb; but as the greater part is unfit for use, we give no quotations.
GREEN TEAS.
Common Twankay, or Hyson Skin	2s 6d to 3s 8d per lb.
Fine Twankay, bloom blind	3s 10d
Fine Hyson kind	4s
Good Hyson	4s 4d
Fine Hyson	4s 8d, equal to former 5s
Fine Hyson, fresh and full flavour	5s, equal to former 5s 8d
Superfine Hyson, rich delicate flavour	5s 6d, equal to former 6s
Superfine Hyson, bright close leaf	6s, equal to former 7s
Young Hyson	4s 4d to 4s 6d
Preferable ditto	4s 8d to 5s
Fine Cuchsan, small close wiry leaf	5s 4d
Imperial Gunpowder	5s 6d to 5s
Superfine Imperial, delicate Hyson flavour	5s 4d
Gunpowder, Canton blind	4s 6d to 4s 8d
Gunpowder, small even leaf	5s to 5s 2d
Good Gunpowder, Strong burnt flavour	5s 8d
Fine Gunpowder, even leaf	6s
Finest Gunpowder, small close twisted leaf	6s 8d, equal to former 7s
Curious Gunpowder, small bright green leaf	7s, equal to former 8s
COFFEE.
Tragic, or common Plantation Coffee	8d to 1s per lb.
Ceylon Coffee	1s 2d
Fine Ceylon	1s 4d
Fine Country's Java	1s 2d
Fine Jamaica Coffee, or pinked Java	1s 3d
Choice old Mocha	1s 10d, equal to former 2s 2d.
COCOA.
Best flaked Cocoa	7½d. per lb.
Finest soluble Cocoa, in ½ lb packets	9d

TERMS.—Cash on delivery of Goods. To Parties residing in the country, if accompanying their Orders with a remittance in full, a reduction of 5 per cent. will be allowed on receipt of them, and the same will be duly executed.
NOTICE.—This establishment was opened for the sale of Teas in October 1836, and was the means of reducing the price about one-fourth, or 25 per cent.
It has no connexion whatever with any other house in London. The Proprietors think it necessary to mention this, as several persons have adopted the habit of copying their circulars, evidently with the intention of misleading the public.
RIDGWAY and COMPANY'S, 4 and 5, King William-street, City.
July 4, 1843.

EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF CURE IN BRITISH GUIANA.—Public attention is respectfully called to the following letter forwarded by Mr. J. Noble, Bookseller, Reston, to the Proprietors of PARR'S LIFE PILLS; another proof that this medicine is the most efficacious remedy of the present day.—

Gentlemen,—My neighbour, Mr. John Costall, saddler and harness maker, of this borough, has this morning shown me a letter he has received from a near relative residing at Niagara, in Canada; and has kindly allowed me to extract the following paragraph therefrom, which I subjoin.—"Elizabeth has been very bad with the Liver complaint all winter, so that the doctors gave her up as incurable, when a stranger in the place received a stock of PARR'S LIFE PILLS; and on looking over the certificates I observed one from Mr. John Noble, of Reston, Cumberland, which induced me to try them, and I am happy to say they have produced the happiest result. She now enjoys better health than she has done for many years. I have also cured me of the Erysipelas and Sore Throat with which I have been very sick."
The above plain statement speaks for itself, and is more gratifying to me from the fact, that the parties were the most readily induced to make trial of the Medicine from seeing a testimony to its merits from. Gentlemen, yours truly,
J. NOBLE, Wholesale and Retail Agent, Reston, Lincolnshire.
P.S.—Mr. Costall or myself will be happy to answer any inquiries.
CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC

Many persons, after learning that so many wonderful cures have been effected by PARR'S LIFE PILLS, have a great desire to procure the medicine when such done so much good in doing this, however, caution must be observed, as certain individuals, without honour or honesty, are offering dangerous substitutes, instead of the genuine medicine. The proprietors cannot, of course, be accountable for any accidents that may ensue to those who have been thus imposed upon, but they can point out an effectual means to prevent further imposition—viz., be particular to observe that round the sides of each box of the Genuine Medicine is pasted the Government Stamp, on which are printed, in White letters on a Red ground, the words, "PARR'S LIFE PILLS." without this mark of authenticity they are spurious, and an imposition. Observe, also, that the signature of the sole proprietors is printed on the directions wrapped round each box—"T ROBERTS and Co."
Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons, 37, 38, Paul's; Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Sutton and Co., Bow Churchyard, London; Musterhead and Co., Manchester; and J and R. Raines and Co., Edinburgh; and retailed by at least one agent in every town in the United Kingdom, and by most respectable dealers in medicine. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and family packets, 11s. each. Full directions are given with each box.

NOTICE.—All communications respecting the transmission or non-arrival of the paper, must be addressed only to the person who supplies the paper or who receives the subscription.

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 10, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and published by WILLIAM LLOYD, at 198, Strand, where all communications for the Editor are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, July 22, 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 65.—Vol. III.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 29, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

THE RIOTS IN WALES.

The tumults which are now disturbing society, agitating the population, and destroying all social order in South Wales, have at last assumed an aspect which may no longer be regarded without a profound anxiety, a watchful solicitude, and we fear we must add, also, a natural and justifiable inquiet and alarm, by every one professing to be at all regardful of the common peace of the community and the general tranquillity of the state. We do not mean weakly and flimsily to assume that the wild daring and half romantic turbulence of the Welsh districts—a turbulence which has now indeed become as wicked as mischievous, by darkening its hardy boldness with the crimson stain of blood—is per se a thing to thicken horrors upon the public imagination, or to make the hair of the nation "stand on end;" but we do take up these organized and insurrectionary movements as signs of the times which are multiplying much too rapidly, and which are much too readily made the resort of either disaffection and discontent, with that sort of dangerous defiance of the spirit of the constitution and the power of the law, which every true lover of rational liberty in the British Empire must earnestly deprecate and deplore. That species of argument which is balanced upon a threat is always most dangerous when admitted or tolerated in the most remote degree—as dangerous to the conscious independence of good governments as it would be to the personal honour and character of true gentlemen; and yet this is the very style of "extorting justice" which the spirit of the times seems to have hit upon, and which is equally dishonest in its motive, and demoralizing in its effect. It depreciates the efficacy of the executive in the public respect, and tends to a prestige for tumult, and a defiance of every consideration of social equity and the prescriptive rights of peace. It is vain to say, however, that, with marks of distinction in their nature and tendency, crusades against the law and the constitution have not been suffered to grow ahead amongst us, and that, too, without half enough resistance on the part of those who should have quelled the storm in its rising, have stemmed the torrent before it grew to strength. Who will say that these remarks do not apply to Ireland, whence the threat of repeal has been literally brandished in the face of the British Government, or in the very teeth of the Saxon, as O'Connell would more emphatically shout? There physical force has been arrayed with moral forbearance, and with a display of power sytematic, organized, concentrated, but perilous in the extreme; there the literal wolf of rebellion has howled forth his hypocrisy in the sheep's clothing of peace. And now that he has done this, it may be the best policy of the Government to conciliate him into impotence—by calm, untroubled reserve of authority to bind him with silken fetters within his jacket of fleece, and so give the wolf no pretext for escape into his natural atmosphere of ferocity. This we say may be, and perhaps is, the best policy now; but we much question the wisdom, nay, censure the indifference, of allowing an insurrectionary spirit, whether passive or active in its principles, so far as actual violence is concerned, to have grown into so formidable a presence—to have spoken with so bullying a voice.

So, in a lesser degree, of the Welsh riots. They ought not to have been supinely permitted to have swelled to what they are—to have grown into a wild, bold, powerful, spreading disaffection. Rebecca, while her family were yet young and few, might have been despoiled of her hopeful progeny—might have been left "like Niobe all tears"—no children tied to her revolutionary apron-strings—not one son or daughter of turbulence at her side. Not so now. South Wales is shaken as by an earthquake—the amazonian who traded against turnpikes has become a leader of a thousand yeomen acting in defiance of constables, artillery, and troops. Under the magic of Rebecca's name a regular and organized combination has sprung up, and in its boldness has conceived and matured a system of predatory warfare. Its conspirators are as numerous, as rapid, and as harassing as the far-famed guerillas of Spain. Suddenly and imperceptibly, at the start of rockets and fire-signals upon the hills, they gather into wild freebooting throngs—storm property, destroy turnpikes, and threaten all peaceful dwellers upon the soil who will not participate in their design. Do the military arrive—one flash of flame from the signal mountains, and they are dispersed without leaving trace or track. They are gone with reckless energy to their hiding-places—the lone cottage—the rock chasm—the dark coal-pit—the bush—the ditch—the brake—the barn—the sheltering hedge. The troops are nonplused—the work of mischief has been completed, but the authorities are successfully defied.

Once within the last week, however, there has been a scene of conflict. Some drunken peasant, bribed to betray his comrades with a hundred pounds, disclosed one isolated rendezvous, but the Rebeccaites fought desperately, and in their affray with the constabulary blood was shed and human life sacrificed. Some of the consequences will be prosecution, transportation, and death! This is a dreadful state of things—the whole country is plunged into mad alarm—the participators in the wild movement are many—the non-participators few and insecure. Soldiers, exasperated with fruitless adventure, march the highways and track the fields in vain—justice trembles and is paralyzed—juries dare hardly keep their oaths upon the trials; and at last Government will be forced to the alternative of special commissions, and of sending down London magistrates to sift the ramifications of the frightful conspiracy that is alive.

Yet with all this, be it remembered, the mass of the Rebeccaites do not consist of the idle or depraved lower classes; they are not even confined to the aggrieved peasantry, who suffer under poor-law legislation in the agricultural districts; or the sullen, grumbling labourers who have been thrown loose and penniless upon the country from the coal and iron works and mines; but they have their ranks swelled and strengthened and rendered important by the accession of whole bodies of farmers, who frame a set of general grievances as the reasons of their revolt, and who seek only the alleviation or withdrawal of those grievances to lure them back to order and their allegiance to the laws.

Of course it would be ridiculous to countenance any palliation of the outrageous conduct of these disorderly creatures upon any other ground than that of pitiable ignorance; and when the shedding of blood ensues not even upon that. Nō—we are all emphatically bound to deprecate and abhor their actions, to regret their disloyalty and bad violence, to lament that their festering turbulence has been allowed to grow to a head, and to join in hearty aspiration that they may now be speedily crushed—not without such retribution either as the law will temper with mercy, such punishment as justice will administer with humanity—as an example to the future from the past. But at the same time it becomes also a social duty, for our own example's sake, to look into the source of the evils by which this rude and impetuous people have really been oppressed; and when these riots are crushed utterly, to seek legislative redress for them, as the English people will seek legislative redress for the discontent and illiteracy which finding it crowded with people who knew nothing about the management of a boat, I got up again, and the boat soon afterwards swamped. I heard some passengers eagerly asking the captain what was best to be done; I did not hear his answer, but he did not seem much agitated. Seeing the boat fast sinking, I took off my hat, boots, and stock, and helped myself to two or three fathoms of rope, with the view of lashing myself to something, if I should afterwards be able to do so while in the water. Two rockets and a blue light were burned by order of the mate as a signal of distress. I think about half an hour elapsed from the time the vessel struck till she went down; it was certainly not more. I was standing on the after-part of the larboard paddle-box when she went down, and I sank with her. I was about half a minute under water. I felt myself caught by the legs by some one, but I got quit of them. When I rose to the surface I was free of the funnel and the stern of the quarter-deck were just disappearing. The first thing I got hold of was the accommodation-ladder, which I got astride of. I perceived about eight feet of the foremast standing out of the water, and a carpenter clinging to it. I asked him if there was room for two, and he said there was. I then proceeded to lash the ladder with my rope to the mast-head, and we both of us stood upon the ladder. We remained under water until we were picked up by the Martello. When we left it there was only about two feet of the mast visible. If we had been much longer we could not have held on. Just before the vessel went down I saw a man climbing up the main-rigging; but she must have gone down with the vessel, for I never saw her again."

WRECK OF THE PEGASUS.—See Next page.

It appears that between three and four o'clock on Thursday morning the fishermen of Holy Island observed a vessel on fire in the offing, and when within a short distance of the rock mentioned, were surprised by the appearance of human bodies, articles of wearing apparel, furniture, &c., floating in the sea, much sooner than at the time. Within half a mile of the Goldstone stood a steamer, but not the fated one. Singular to relate, this was the Martello, Captain Blackwood, belonging to the same company as the Pegasus, sailing on the same track at the same time, and which, on her return voyage from Hull to Leith, had arrived at the scene of her consort's destruction within but a very short interval after the awful catastrophe, but not soon enough to avert its most appalling effects. The boats of course immediately commenced to pick up the bodies, along with such property as lay in their course, and in a short time the dead bodies of three females, one man, and one young boy were taken up. Markwell's boat was in time to rescue at least one sufferer from the brink of death; we give the facts from his own lips, and corroborated by his boat's crew. On approaching the spot, they saw a man apparently immersed up to the breast in the sea. They approached, and found him sitting erect in a sunken boat, in a state of frigid insensibility, with the film of death overspreading his eyes. He was taken up, and on some spirits being administered, he began to revive. The first words he uttered were in the form of a question, as to the state of the fires. He was an engine man of the Pegasus, named Duncan Campbell. He, as well as five other survivors, and all the dead bodies, and most part of the property, were immediately taken on board the Martello, which, after it had fished up everything, living and dead, to be found floating around, set sail for Leith.

The following is a list of the bodies which were claimed on their arrival in Leith:—

Miss Barton, from Lincolnshire, who was returning to England from a visit to Miss Banks's establishment, 45, Moray-place. Two ladies, Miss Hopetoun and Miss Floors, pupils of Miss Banks, and were returning home for the holidays, under the charge of Miss Barton, and a little boy, a brother of one of the young ladies.

Mrs. Alexander, widow of R. Alexander, weaver, Paisley.

James Martin, son of Mr. Martin, cabinet-maker and coffee house keeper, Great Russel-street, London (also below).

David Scott, a boy about twelve years of age, son of Mr. Matthew Scott, shawl manufacturer, Paisley.

The following is the list of the cabin passengers booked at Leith: Mrs Edrington, from Edinburgh; Miss Hopetoun, Miss Barton, Miss Floors, (the little boy was along with these three); Miss Briggs. Mrs. M'Leod. Mr. M'Leod; Mr. Torry; Mr. Banks, returning on Mr. Torry (saved); Mr. Elton, the actor, and who appeared last week at the Edinburgh Adelphi Theatre; Mr. Hodgson; Rev. Mr. Mackenzie, supposed from Glasgow; Mr. Banks; Mr. Elliot and son, thought from Dundee; Mr. Moxlan, Mr. Milne.

In addition to these we have ascertained the names of Mr. James Hunter, son of Mr. Hunter, ironmonger, 15, Howe-street; D. D. Whinnerah, late with Messrs. Ireland and Company, Sandyford, South Bridge; Mr. Martin, of Great Russel-street, London, and son. The crew for the most part belonged to Leith, and several of them have left widows and children to deplore their loss. We may state that the Mr. Hodgson, mentioned in the list of the cabin passengers, is the brother of Mr. W. B. Hodgson, secretary of the Liverpool Mechanics' Institution, and who was himself appointed on Wednesday week to a similar situation in connection with the Mechanics' Institution and Literary Society, Leeds. He was a native of Edinburgh. Mr. Torry was an English gentleman of weak mind, who had been in Scotland for the benefit of his health. Dan, one of the two dogs on board, was saved, was in attendance on him. The lamentable fate of Mr. Elton will be deeply felt by that profession of which he was so distinguished a member. His virtues as private life were fully known and acknowledged. He has left a large family to deplore his departure from among them; and we are delighted to find that Mr. Murray, the Edinburgh manager, suggest that the profession should mark their esteem for Mr. Elton by benefits for his orphan children. On Saturday, August 5th, the evening's products will be devoted to that purpose. We also learn that among the passengers was a Mr. Hamilton, a private in the 42nd regiment, on the 25th inquiring, and who was intending to go out to her father in India along with the soldiers of the 56th, who were on board the Pegasus.

The following communication respecting this melancholy wreck will be found of interest, painfully so, but any information from an authentic source is of twofold importance:—

"Berwick, July 22, 1843, 9 P.M.

"Sir,—I have just now returned from Holy Island, and beg to forward you some particulars as to the loss of the ill-fated steam ship Pegasus. I have been off to the vessel, and find she is in ten fathoms water, six fathoms above her rail, and she must be in a dangerous position for vessels to pass.

"It does not appear that she has as yet broken up, as the mast is still standing, and very little wreck wood has yet driven from her.

"It is supposed, among the seafaring people here, that the passengers had rushed aft to the boats and upset them. What makes this wreck more lamentable is, that it was a fine night and clear, with a westerly wind, and the lights seen distinctly, and it is supposed by the people here on the ridge at the time of the wreck. From inquiries that I have made, it appears that the master must have steered between the buoy and rock, and then, standing out again, struck the rock. The vessel is also represented to be so dangerous to pass, that every vessel or coasting steamers prefer, in coming through the Fairway, to steer outside of the Megstone, and thence come inside between the Big Farn and it. This is condemned, as it leads them in their course too near the Goldstone.

"From all that I can learn from the pilots, they state that the leading light through the Fairway is too low, and does not open sufficiently; and that this lead ng light would be of much more service if it were placed on the Megstone Rock, as it would be more distinctly seen, and open better, as the Big Farn light and this leading Fairway light are too near each other.

"I have been solicitous to have a red standing light placed on some point off Holy Island, but there is a difference of opinion as to the spot on which it should be placed.

"All the Farnes Pilots were present in their places, and it is singular that the crew of the Pegasus should not have seen them, the night being clear.

"I understand that an attempt is to be made to weigh the vessel, and preparations are now making for that purpose. The wind is now so easterly, perhaps some more of the bodies may come on shore.

"I am, Sir, &c.,

(Signed by)

"LLOYD'S AGENT.

"To William Dobson, Esq., Lloyds'."

The property picked up by the fishing-boats, and not taken on board the Martello, was deposited with Mr. Ralph Gray, and Mr. Donaldson, teacher, Holy Island. The marks on Mr. Mackenzie, Portion, were given by a friend to Conch." An account (re-printed) to William Milne, Esq., from Alexander Hill, printseller, 67, Princes street, Edinburgh. A portmanteau, bearing the name "J. R. Elliott," and a letter to the captain of the Pegasus, engaging a place on board for himself and little boy. A number of packages of manufactured goods and handkerchiefs, &c. "Barster's Polyglott Bible, inscribed to the Rev. J. M. Mackenzie, as a memento of Portobello, by his obliged and grateful friend, James Cameron, October 28th, 1841." Several other books.

Last of articles found at sea by George Markwell, sen., in a carpet bag, opened in the presence of Ralph Greig, Leonard Watson, and others, viz., Histoire de Zitlemont, Polyglott Bible, Lex Book of Ecclesiastical History, Mesbaim de Rebus Christianorum, London Bible-graphicum, Tomus primus; Lardner's Works, vol. viii.; Fabrisii Bibliotheca Graeca, pocket-book, and loose papers; Christian Bibelen France Balcks; sponge and bag, morning gown, shirt, hair brush, comb, shaving tin, razor, brush, brush powder box, clothes brush, 1 pair carpet shoes, silk handkerchief, pair cloth boots, razor case and materials, 1 pair leather shoes, 3 flannel shirts.

Found on a chest by the party whose name named 1 tin box, addressed, Messrs. Rashael and Nathan, jewellers, 55, Market-place, Hull, containing 3 cartridge boxes, and belts, 2 saber tashes, marked Peninsular, Waterloo, W. R. 6th; 1 parcel, containing 2lbs. 7oz. sewing silk, 1 gross of binding, address, Josiah Brunt and Co., Hull, from Wm. Rew, 39, Hanover-street, Edinburgh, 1 parcel of patterns, for A. L. Goldscommidt and Marcus, Hamburgh, from Mr. H. Schwabe and Gobert, Glasgow.

Picked up by A. Wilson, 1 reticule, basket, and stones; 1 handkerchief, marked John Cook, No 10, and some wreck.

Picked up by Robert Stamp and William Walker, jun., one box, containing the wardrobe of Mr. Elton, Theatre Royal, Richmond, as per memorandum.

The cabin sky-light and two chests belonging to the vessel and a hatch have come on shore. The body of a lady has been picked up by the Beadnell fishermen, and taken to Bamburgh Castle, where the inquest is now sitting on it.

Several of the relatives of the persons who have been lost have visited the scene of the wreck, and the grief that they have manifested has been great.

Some of the French herring fishery boats are supposed to have picked up some of the wreck floating about.

The following is the substance of a communication received from Leith by Mr. Lyall, manager of the General shipping Company, at Berwick:—

"Captain Brown, of the Martello, will be able to inform you of the melancholy loss of the Pegasus steamer, lost last night at half-past twelve, having struck upon the Goldstone, and sunk with all on board, nearly 40 passengers, except the mate, engineer, carpenter, a seaman, and two passengers, who were saved. Six bodies were picked up—three females, two boys, and a fireman."

Mr. Browne, the mate, who still continues very weak, states that previous to getting into the boat in which he was discovered by the Martello, he floated about for three hours on a hen-coop. While he fell in with a hat it was nearly full of water, and it was with the utmost difficulty he could get into it without upsetting it. Steadying himself, however, upon the board he had got, he planted one foot upon the gunwale of the boat and thus preserved its balance until he got both legs in. He then placed the board across the boat and made himself a seat. He describes the scene at the period of the vessel going down as being a most appalling one. The cries of many of the passengers, he says, floated about on the surface of the water for a considerable time, calling upon their Maker to help them in their distress, but they all disappeared, one by one, except himself and the other five who were picked up by the Martello.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.—(From our own Correspondent.)—General Alava, formerly Spanish ambassador in London, died a few days since at Barèges, in the Pyrenees, aged 72 years; the General was with the Duke of Wellington during the whole of the Peninsular war, and was a great favourite of the Duke.

Admiral Mackau has been appointed Minister of Marine and Colonies, in the place of Admiral Roussin. Other changes in the ministry are spoken of.

Two diplomatic agents have been sent to Vienna on a marriage speculation, to persuade Metternich that the only way to settle the Spanish question is a marriage between the Duke d'Aumale and Queen Isabella—it won't do!

Yesterday our Parliament was prorogued. It is intended next session to bring in a bill for granting 24,000*l.* a year to the Duke de Nemours; Guizot hesitates, but Thiers has consented to bring forward the motion and to carry it. Prince de Joinville and his infant son made peaceful bread on the 23rd.

In 1813 there were 45 journals and periodical papers published in Paris, in 1843 there are 498.

The Seine-boats are being built in Paris on the Bastille Canal. There are 24,000 journeymen tailors at the present moment out of employ in Paris. There is a brisk run for fine velvets at Lyons. The celebrated Canadian Paganini is expected staying in Lyons. On the 16th of June there was a heavy fall of snow at Ajt, in the Lower Alps; there has also been much snow near to the Pyrenees.

Thiers has completed the seventh volume of "The History of the Empire;" this interesting work will appear early next winter.

The "Perl" is being played with great success. I must postpone to my next, from press of more interesting matter, the plot and remarks on this ballet.

Another ballet will be soon brought out at the Opera called "Marie," and which will be got up by Mazilier, of the Grand Opera in Paris. Rossini leaves us the beginning of November. Fanny Elssler and Lucile Grahn are engaged at Milan for the next carnival. Rubini is now in Italy, enseging a first-rate troop for an Italian opera at Her Majesty's Theatre. It is probable that Duprarm will be engaged. "Il Conte di Lavigna," the music by Mabellim, much spoken of as an opera of great merit, was brought out with great success at Pergola.

Prince and Princess Joinville will reach Paris on the 27th

AMERICA. The steamer Margaret, which arrived at Liverpool on Sunday night last, bringing the mails and passengers of the ill-fated Columbia, brings a few Halifax papers to the 15th inst., the packages being dated by anticipation, for the Margaret sailed on the 9th. These journals do not contain any news of importance, save that relating to the Columbus. The Margaret has not brought any letters or despatches further intimated in the bags of the Columbia, which have already been anticipated by the packet-ship Oxford. We find the following items in the Halifax Morning Herald of the 15th inst.:—

"Her Majesty's ship Illustrious sails this morning for Quebec with the admiral, who goes up to visit the governor-general.

"His Excellency Lord Falkland, the governor, sailed on Saturday morning, with the Lord Bishop of Nova Scotia, along the eastern shore."

President Tyler had reached Washington in safety, on his return from the Bunker's Hill celebration, and was universally welcomed.

After another of those very extraordinary passages which the steam ship Great Western is so celebrated in performing, we have, by her present arrival, New York papers to the 14th, being 13 days later than previously received. The Great Western, which arrived at Liverpool on Wednesday night, brought 103 passengers. The Royal mail steam-ship Hibernia reached Boston in 13 days, including her stay at Halifax.

LATE AND IMPORTANT FROM TEXAS.—By the arrival of the steamer Sarah Barnes, at New Orleans, papers from Galveston, as late as the 24th ult. had been received, containing the proclamation from General Houston, President of the Republic of Texas, and Commander-in-Chief, declaring the establishment of an armistice between Mexico and Texas.—The propositions from Santa Anna were brought to Galveston by the British brig Scylla, which arrived there on the 9th ult.

RIO DE JANEIRO. May 24, 1843.—A British steamer arrived from Buenos Ayres and Monte Video on the 22nd instant, but brought no letters. The officers report that there was a great probability of Governor Rosas arriving in the neighbourhood of the Irish residents at Buenos Ayres, on account of the [illegible] having received the [illegible]

[illegible] packet-ship Oxford, Captain Hoxie, from London, which sailed, when last reported, New York Packet List, on the 5th instant, in latitude 37, longitude 71, whale ship Henry, of and from Stag Harbour, for Cape of Good Hope, and took from her Captain Hoxie, mate, and crew of the schooner Drusilla, from Boston, bound to St. Domingo. The Drusilla had taken fire on the night of the 6th, in lat. 40, long. 70 40. All attempts to quench it proving ineffectual, the captain and crew were obliged to take to the boats, in which situation they were picked up by the Henry.

[illegible] on a certain part of the island of the Alcabala Pass, has caused a [illegible] of two weeks, by a spark from a locomotive getting into a bush, there. The cars were [illegible] in the quicksand pieces, and the huge masses of rock, which were disengaged, filled the tunnel to such an extent as to render it impassable for a day or two.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Lord BROUGHAM withdrew his motion for calling Mr. Browne, of the Kennel Gazette, to the bar of the house, having, he said, received a letter of apology from that gentleman.—The Bankruptcy Court Bill was read a third time and passed.—Some routine business was transacted, and their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The Fines and Penalties Bill was read a third time and passed; the Customs Bill was read a second time; as were also the Slave Trade Treaties Bill, the Bills of Exchange Bill, the Bankruptcy Court Bill, and some others. The house then went into committee on the Irish Arms Bill, and a motion arose as to the length of time the bill should continue in force, it being contended by Mr. Ross, Mr. R. O'Connell, and other hon. members that it should only last for one year, the Government proposition being for five years: it was at length suggested by Lord ELIOT that the period should be three years. Two divisions took place, but eventually, after some remarks from Sir R. Peel, it was agreed that it should be for two years, and to the end of the following session, which in effect will make the period three years.—The remaining clauses, together with the postponed clauses having been agreed to, the house resumed, and, in reply to questions from Mr. S. O'Brien and Lord J. Russell, Sir R. Peel said he would take the Irish Poor law Bill after the report on the Arms (Ireland) Bill, on Thursday, and the Scotch Church Bill on Monday next.—On the bringing up the report of the committee on the excise duties which recommended a reduction of the additional 1*s.* per gallon duty, and 1*s.* on Irish spirits when the income tax was levied on that country, Sir R. Peel assented to the proclamation from General Houston, President of the Republic of Texas, and Commander-in-Chief, declaring the establishment of an armistice between Mexico and Texas.—The propositions from Santa Anna were brought to Galveston by the British brig Scylla, which arrived there on the 9th ult.

RIO DE JANEIRO. May 24, 1843.—A British steamer arrived from Buenos Ayres and Monte Video on the 22nd instant, but brought no letters. The officers report that there was a great probability of Governor Rosas arriving in the neighbourhood of the Irish residents at Buenos Ayres, on account of the [illegible] having received the [illegible]

[illegible] packet-ship Oxford, Captain Hoxie, from London, which sailed, when last reported, New York Packet List, on the 5th instant, in latitude 37, longitude 71, whale ship Henry, of and from Stag Harbour, for Cape of Good Hope, and took from her Captain Hoxie, mate, and crew of the schooner Drusilla, from Boston, bound to St. Domingo. The Drusilla had taken fire on the night of the 6th, in lat. 40, long. 70 40. All attempts to quench it proving ineffectual, the captain and crew were obliged to take to the boats, in which situation they were picked up by the Henry.

[illegible] on a certain part of the island of the Alcabala Pass, has caused a [illegible] of two weeks, by a spark from a locomotive getting into a bush, there. The cars were [illegible] in the quicksand pieces, and the huge masses of rock, which were disengaged, filled the tunnel to such an extent as to render it impassable for a day or two.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Lord BROUGHAM withdrew his motion for calling Mr. Browne, of the Kennel Gazette, to the bar of the house, having, he said, received a letter of apology from that gentleman.—The Bankruptcy Court Bill was read a third time and passed.—Some routine business was transacted, and their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The Fines and Penalties Bill was read a third time and passed; the Customs Bill was read a second time; as were also the Slave Trade Treaties Bill, the Bills of Exchange Bill, the Bankruptcy Court Bill, and some others. The house then went into committee on the Irish Arms Bill, and a motion arose as to the length of time the bill should continue in force, it being contended by Mr. Ross, Mr. R. O'Connell, and other hon. members that it should only last for one year, the Government proposition being for five years: it was at length suggested by Lord ELIOT that the period should be three years. Two divisions took place, but eventually, after some remarks from Sir R. Peel, it was agreed that it should be for two years, and to the end of the following session, which in effect will make the period three years.—The remaining clauses, together with the postponed clauses having been agreed to, the house resumed, and, in reply to questions from Mr. S. O'Brien and Lord J. Russell, Sir R. Peel said he would take the Irish Poor law Bill after the report on the Arms (Ireland) Bill, on Thursday, and the Scotch Church Bill on Monday next.—On the bringing up the report of the committee on the excise duties which recommended a reduction of the additional 1*s.* per gallon duty, and 1*s.* on Irish spirits when the income tax was levied on that country, Sir R. Peel assented to the proclamation from General Houston, President of the Republic of Texas, and Commander-in-Chief, declaring the establishment of an armistice between Mexico and Texas.—The propositions from Santa Anna were brought to Galveston by the British brig Scylla, which arrived there on the 9th ult.

RIO DE JANEIRO. May 24, 1843.—A British steamer arrived from Buenos Ayres and Monte Video on the 22nd instant, but brought no letters. The officers report that there was a great probability of Governor Rosas arriving in the neighbourhood of the Irish residents at Buenos Ayres, on account of the [illegible] having received the [illegible]

[illegible] packet-ship Oxford, Captain Hoxie, from London, which sailed, when last reported, New York Packet List, on the 5th instant, in latitude 37, longitude 71, whale ship Henry, of and from Stag Harbour, for Cape of Good Hope, and took from her Captain Hoxie, mate, and crew of the schooner Drusilla, from Boston, bound to St. Domingo. The Drusilla had taken fire on the night of the 6th, in lat. 40, long. 70 40. All attempts to quench it proving ineffectual, the captain and crew were obliged to take to the boats, in which situation they were picked up by the Henry.

[illegible] on a certain part of the island of the Alcabala Pass, has caused a [illegible] of two weeks, by a spark from a locomotive getting into a bush, there. The cars were [illegible] in the quicksand pieces, and the huge masses of rock, which were disengaged, filled the tunnel to such an extent as to render it impassable for a day or two.

would do something worthy of a loud repute; that the soldier would not give up his game as lost, and abandon power and position to those who spoke menacingly, but who, as yet, had plunged into their purpose with nothing of the earnestness of war. The world looked for something like a last struggle, although, for the ends of peace and Christianity, it is as well that it has not been brought about.

In the best informed diplomatic circles the destiny of the Regent has been not unlooked for. It was felt, known, that the sources of his power were undermined—hopelessly and thoroughly corrupted. City after city was passing away from him, pronouncing against him with a daring energy, an open bravado of insolence, which proved not only that his authority was not dreaded, but that it was despised. He had one or two apparently faithful generals, but neither he nor they adopted any imposing course, or assumed any attitude that was likely to strike terror into their foes. There could be no doubt of the untiring perseverance, the almost universal presence of French influence in Spain; there could be no doubt either of the absence of anything like a countervailing support of Espartero by the diplomacy of England; and, indeed, we fear that our own position in this respect has been not altogether creditable to our foreign councils. At last the defeat of Seoane and Zurbano, and the cession of Madrid, have confirmed the predictions of diplomatists; and the spectacle of another foreign revolution, effected almost by a coup de main, has destroyed the prospects of her Regent, and embarked upon a new ocean the flickering destinies of Spain.

And although what has been done wears the curious and inconsistent aspect of a mighty civil change, effected, without conflict or bloodshed, entirely by military agency; and although we now know in whose hands the power is for the moment vested; yet there is only a commotion ended, a change produced, without any certainty about the results of that commotion or the tendency of that change. All is darkness, vain and vague speculation, as to the new order of affairs in Spain. It is impossible to think that order, tranquillity, and firm government will suddenly rise like a phœnix from the ashes of the recent broil. It cannot be believed that anything like permanence and stability of institutions will be at once achieved, or that the power of the state and the administration of its government will be vested in the hands of men who will at once satisfy the varying views of the most fickle and distracted of the human races of the world; so long, too, accustomed to the elements of war and disorder, that they would seem like strangers in a land of peace. For the upshot of their new revolution we must, therefore, wait for the developments of time; and in the interim only hope, with all Christian lovers of tranquillity, that it may speedily, if it will not suddenly, result in a cessation of unnatural conflicts, a loyal adherence to some frame and order of government adapted to the common good, a restoration of the harmonies of society, and a return to the cultivation of the arts of peace.

It should always be a subject of unaffected sorrow to the respectable members of society to find that a deep and far-spread system of dishonesty has communicated itself to any department of public affairs—that it has worked practical mischiefs of the worst order in a spirit lavish of deception, undermining the integrity of the public service, and robbing the country of its revenue and the Government of its just rights. That such a system has long poisoned one of the most important branches of the national exchequer we now have it in evidence to prove beyond dispute. It is not long since there was a sudden and panic-working eclaircissement of the forgeries of Exchequer Bills, and now—by the publication of a "Report of the Commissioners of Public Revenue"—we have an alarming disclosure of organized and long-practised frauds in the Customs, which cannot but produce a deep impression upon the community, and give rise to a serious demand for something like a general inquiry into the detail workings of other departments of the Government in which the national treasure, whether for collection or expenditure, is concerned. It would seem that time has introduced corruptions, which common honesty should insist on rooting out.

The report to which we have alluded really presents an awful front of crime—and crime which, we must say, seems to have derived its impunity from official negligence, that the very acute wicked blindness of public servants who will not take the trouble to see. These are men who should have their eyes opened at once by the punishment of dismissal. Next to want of honesty, want of zeal is the greatest iniquity of which a servant of any kind, public or private, clerk or officer, can be found guilty. It is a wickedness utterly without excuse. But to return. The frauds in the Customs, disclosed by the reports of the commissioners, are of the most extensive kind. They have been not isolated nor individual, but imply the long practical exercise of efficient organization, artfully contrived in the first instance, and afterwards most vigorously pursued. The system has been worked by the most confidential officers of the Customs Board, in conjunction with commercial houses, by whose gold they had been corrupted, and whose responsability was evidently held as nothing to their gain. And furthermore, its operation may be said to have been countenanced by negligence; for had the otherwise innocent parties been personally vigilant, as well as personally honest, speedy discovery must have followed upon the nefarious transactions which were taking place, and the indelible disgrace of the report before us would never have fixed its stigma upon the establishments in which they serve. Let it serve as warning, however, to public servants in all departments of the state. In the words of a contemporary, "Let the lessons taught by its revelations be deeply pondered by all whose duties comprehend a watchful superintendence and inspection of the official conduct of others." Negligence in the superior invariably leads to delinquency in the subordinate; it involves dishonesty equally, if not more extensively, criminal as the fraud which is perpetrated by its means, and deserves punishment as severe as the transgression which it occasions.

We shall now present to our readers, at one startling glance, the official digest of the means by which the vast public robberies that have been discovered have been so long, and with such utter misdemeanment of principle, carried on. Ecce signum.

"1. The granting of false certificates by the export officers whose duty it is to ascertain what goods . . . shipped.

"2. By granting a false certificate of the quality, or of the existence of goods for exportation, to obtain an amount of drawback of duty far exceeding what is legally due, or a drawback for an imaginary exportation of articles.

"3. The dummy system, or the substitution of a package of low-duty goods for a package of high-duty goods. Passing cigars, for instance, under the denomination of marks.

"4. By the negligent or wilful under valuation of goods where they are subjected to ad valorem duties, and the dishonest or careless and faulty enumeration of the goods when their amount is to be stated.

"5. By the improper computation of the tares of packages.

"6. An undervaluation and under account of goods, so that an under duty is paid by means of making a proper entry into the rough books on examining the goods, and obliterating that entry so soon as they were safe in the warehouse of the importer, substituting, in place of the proper entry, a false and insufficient entry of the goods, denoting a low duty which was paid, instead of the proper duty to the Crown.

"7. The fraudulent entries of goods by the substitution of fresh leaves for the original leaves in the landing-waiter's 'Blue Book,' with mis-items of the handwriting of the registrar's clerks, with false entries, and with false sales.

"8. The obliteration of the entry in the 'Blue Book' by a chemical process, and the substitution of a false for the real account in it."

We have no time to go into the vast mass of evidence by which the above propositions are established—proved by most searching expositions of baseness—by most painful disclosures of systematic dishonour and depravity, organized and disciplined in its career of crime. The case of one man—a first-class landing-waiter, remunerated to the liberal extent of four hundred pounds per annum—is horrible to contemplate; and it seems that his wickedness was fortified by that of four and twenty culprit comrades in his department of the Customs alone—all landing-waiters, like himself. This man's name was Homersham, and his revelations, like those of a William Burnby before him, are most astounding and appalling. We shall not pause here to describe the detail depredations of this Homersham, whom shame, remorse, and dishonour have already punished even unto death. After his exposure he literally grieved his way into the tomb, and society has had its retribution. Let his fate be a warning for ever to those who find honesty yielding to deserved difficulty—integrity giving way before the profligate's pressure by the pound. We shall not pause here to describe the detail depredations of this Homersham's survivors, numerous as they are, what shall we say? Why this, that as public robbers they are branded, as members of society disgraced; and that they have been, or will be, most probably, brought to justice for their crimes. At all events they are dismissed from an honourable calling dishonourably pursued, and turned outcasts upon the world. But this is not the pith and matter of the public concern. It is that neglect should be so glaring, vigilance so base, idleness so unblushing in our public offices, that staring delinquencies should flourish undiscovered over a series of years; that public treasure should be wasted, revenue defrauded, and confidence betrayed, because the eye of zeal was blind and the soul of energy inactive and asleep—in a word, because public men did not do their duty—did not earn their salt! Now, we candidly confess our fear that this same fault, this great and corrupt evil, has long invaded many branches of the public service besides the Customs; and we have taken up the subject because we truly think that the Exchequer Bill panic, and this more recent discovery and exposure of revenue frauds, do present two tangible justifications for an inquiry into the mode of conducting business generally in our public offices, and this inquiry we call upon the Executive to make. It would expose all the filth of a modern Augean stable tenfold more formidable than the fabled one of old; moreover, it would lead to its cleansing by that strong Hercules, justice, and would completely drain and purify and render wholesome all the polluted under-sluices which corrupt and poison the health and integrity of official life.

The letter of our Paris correspondent, which will be found in another page, contains a narrative of the progress made by the military insurrection in Spain since our last publication—an insurrection which, if the annexed telegraphic despatch be correct, has had one of the most unlooked-for and blood-less terminations that has ever yet occurred in that insurrectionary country

"Madrid, July 23.

"The troops of Narvaez and Seoane encountered each other yesterday at Torrejon, and, after an engagement of about a quarter of an hour, the soldiers of both armies fraternized. Seoane and the son of Zurbano were taken prisoners. Zurbano made his escape, and concealed himself in Madrid.

"We are assured that the municipality is going out at this moment to surrender Madrid unconstitutionally.

"The military are returning to their homes.

"The troops of Enna, which pronounced themselves, are in possession of the post. I am informed that Narvaez or Aspiroz will enter Madrid at five o'clock with his division."

In reference to this communication the Globe shrewdly enough observes, that—

"The most rapid conveyance from Madrid to Bayonne is not less than sixty hours; that news of the 24th instant from Madrid could not possibly have reached town through Paris on Tuesday night; and that the events thus reported must apparently have been learned by second sight at the conciliabules of Queen Christina.

"We must besides remark on the manifest improbability on the face of those accounts, that the troops of Narvaez and Seoane should have fraternized in fifteen minutes after firing had commenced."

Our well-informed contemporary, the Times, appears to regard the intelligence as authentic, and observes as follows:—

"Thus ends, then, the first act in this eventful drama; and, however we may deplore a result which is pregnant with the direst-st forebodings for the future, we cannot but rejoice that Spain has been spared the horrors of a long civil war, and that in this revolt the population of her cities and her provinces has been at least of one mind. That such an unanimity should endure long enough to establish a strong Government is what we most desire, and what we at least hope. At no time since the death of Ferdinand have the affairs of Spain worn so decidedly the appearance of revolutionary excitement; and every attempt to predict what may be the strength and character of the Civil Government which may arise out of the present crisis would be premature."

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Queen and Prince Albert, the Duke Ferdinand of Saxe Coburg Gotha, the ladies and gentlemen of the Royal suite and the Household, attended divine service on Sunday morning in the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. C. L. Courtenay officiated and preached the sermon.

The Queen and Prince Albert, the Duke Ferdinand, Prince Augustus and Princess Clementine, and Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg Gotha, inspected on Saturday the Goodwood Cup, the subject of which is Mazeppa, submitted by Mr. Mortimer at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness were pleased to express their approbation. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, with their royal visitor, afterwards honoured the performance at the Italian Opera with their presence.

The King of Hanover honoured the members of the Carlton Club with his company at dinner on Saturday evening. His Majesty left town for Kew in the evening.

HER MAJESTY'S STATE BALL.—The Queen gave a state ball on Monday evening at Buckingham-palace. The vestibule was again lighted by the handsome eight-light gas lustre, on Faraday's venti ating principle, and attracted much attention. The tent of Tippoo Saib, in which the refreshments were served, was lighted by a large and brilliant burner, of a novel construction, with 570 jets of gas, which was fitted up on Faraday's method of carrying off all the burnt air and noxious products of combustion. It was enveloped in the representation of an eastern sun. The grand hall and staircase were very tastefully ornamented with a great variety of the choicest shrubs and flowers. The whole of the state rooms were opened for the occasion; the ball-room and the throne-room were appropriated for dancing, having quadrille bands in each. The grand saloon and the picture gallery were opened for the reception of the general company, the royal family being received by her Majesty in the yellow drawing-room. The general company began to arrive at half-past nine. The King of Hanover arrived at a quarter past ten. The Duchess of Kent, attended by Lady C. Dundas and Sir G. Couper, arrived soon afterwards. The Duke and Duchess of Cambridge and Prince George were attended by Lady A. Somerset and Baron Knesebeck. The Duchess of Gloucester was attended by her lady in waiting. After the arrival of the august and illustrious visitors, her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the King of Hanover, the Duchesses of Kent and Gloucester, &c. &c., left the drawing-room, preceded by the Lord Steward and the Vice-Chamberlain, for the ball-room. Monsi. Julien and Herr Koenig's private band was in attendance in the state apartment, and the Queen opened the ball in a quadrille with Prince George, Prince Albert dancing as a third in the Princess Clementine and Prince Albert. The band afterwards performed several favourite musical novelties—Don Pasquale and Settarino quadrilles, with choral accompaniments; and "The Mecklenburg Strelitz," and "Bird of Paradise" waltzes. The Duke of Wellington, Marquis of Anglesey, Baron Brunnow, Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston, Lady Peel, Lord Morpeth, Lord and Lady Stanley, Earl of Auckland, Earl of Aberdeen, Earl Fortescue, Sir R. Stopford, Lord and Lady J. Russell, Lord Lagdale, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, the Attorney General, and Sir T. Wilde, were among the earlier guests. The Marquis of Lorne and the Chisholm wore the Highland dress. Her Majesty and her illustrious visitors quitted the ball-room at half-past 11, and passed across the picture-gallery to the throne-room. Weippert's quadrille band was stationed here and performed the following new pieces:—Qu drilles—Les Noces de la Reine, Une Fete à Pontoisebleau, La Sentinelle Perdue. Waltzes—Don Pasquale, Ondine, Die Verschwändler. The Queen danced in this apartment. During the evening her Majesty and Prince Albert, the King of Hanover, and the other royal and distinguished guests, occupied the reserved raised seats placed in the recesses of both rooms. To enumerate the parties at this magnificent entertainment would be to copy the Court Calendar, as nearly every person of rank and fashion in London was present.

On Tuesday afternoon her Majesty and her Royal Highness the Princess Clementine of Saxe Coburg Gotha left Buckingham Palace in a carriage and four, and visited the Zoological Gardens in the Regent's Park. Lady Portman and Madame Augelat followed in another carriage. Prince Albert, the Duke Ferdinand, and the Princes Augustus and Leopold, accompanied the Queen and the Princess on horseback, attended by Major General Wemyss and Colonel Bouverie. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Duke Ferdinand, and Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg Gotha, attended by Lady Portman, Hon. Miss Murray, Lord Byron, Baron Wangenheim, Major-General Wemyss, Colonel Bouverie, and Captain Zastock, honoured the Italian Opera House with their presence in the evening.

WINDSOR CASTLE.—The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by their illustrious guests, returned to Buckingham-palace after viewing the Thames Tunnel, at four o'clock. The royal dinner party in the evening included her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the French Ambassador and Countess St. Aulaire, the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, Lady Charlotte Dundas, the Earl of Aberdeen, Viscount Melbourne, and Lord and Lady Brunnow. The band of the Royal Horse Guards was in attendance.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—On Tuesday, at St. George's Church, Hanover square, the marriage of the Hon. William Dawnay, M.P., eldest son of Viscount Downe, and Miss Bagot, eldest daughter of the Bishop of Oxford and Lady Harriet Bagot, was solemnized in the presence of a large circle.

A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday afternoon at the Foreign Office. It was attended by Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Wellington, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Wharncliffe, the Duke of Buccleuch, Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Earl of Ripon, Mr. Gladstone, Sir H. Hardinge, and Sir E. Knatchbull. The Council sat two hours and a half.

Sir James Graham had a dinner-party on Saturday last at his residence in Hill-street. The company consisted of the French Ambassador and the Countess de St. Aulaire, the Russian Minister and Baroness Brunow, the American Minister and Mrs. Everett, the Earl and Countess of Errol, Lord and Lady Mahon, Lord Brougham, Lord and Lady Seymour, Hon. Sidney Herbert, and Mr. Lockhart.

Mr. John Wood, Chairman of the Excise, had an interview with the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Saturday last.

DEATH OF LADY (VERE) BROKE.—Her ladyship died at Broke-hall, Suffolk, on Thursday last, in her 65th year. She was daughter of the late Sir Fowle Middleton, Bart., and sister to the present baronet, and married, 1803, the late gallant Admiral Sir Philip Bowes Vere Broke, Bart., whom she survived two years, and by whom she has left the present baronet and other issue.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—There is no truth in the report of an after season of twelve nights. As soon as the regular subscription terminates, the principal artistes depart to fulfil engagements which cannot admit of postponement.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

The Lord Bishop of Peterborough has instituted the Rev. John Babington, M.A., to the vicarage of Thrussington, Leicestershire, vacant by the death of the Rev. Edward Henry Hoare.

The Lord Bishop of Durham has been pleased to license the Rev. George Herich, M.A., of University College, Durham, to the district church of St. Anne, Durham, on the nomination of the Rev. Robert Green, M.A., incumbent of All Saints, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

The Rev. Arthur Jem, M.A., has been instituted to the vicarage of Rowington, near Warwick, vacant by the death of the Rev. Hugh Laugharne.

The Rev. Richard Herbert, B.A., has been appointed one of the ministers of the Abbey Church, Bath.

The Rev. Richard Crosse, B.A., has been presented to the perpetual curacy of Broomfield, Somersetshire; patron Colonel Hamilton.

The Rev. William Tucker Arundel Radford has been instituted to the rectory of Doun St. Mary, Exeter, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Peter Compys Tucker.

The Rev. C. Melhuish, M.A., has been instituted to the rectory of Highbray, vacant by the death of the Rev. Thomas Upjohn, on the presentation of T. F. Acland, Esq.

The Lord Bishop of Winchester has licensed the Rev. Dr. Hatherell to the perpetual curacy of St. James, West End, near Southampton, on the presentation of the Rev. William Dann Harrison, M.A., vicar of South Stoneham, the patron.

The Lord Bishop of St. David's has appointed the Rev. Edmund Melville, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, to the office of Chancellor of the diocese of St. David's, void by the resignation of Mr. Pechell. The new chancellor has appointed the Rev. David Williams his principal surrogate, and continued him in his office of judge of the episcopal and consistorial court at Llandaff.

The Lord Bishop of Exeter intends holding a course of confirmations for Exeter and the neighbouring parishes, between September 20th and 25th. During the first week, prelate intends holding a general ordination in the cathedral church of his diocese, on Sunday, September 24th.

The Rev. John F. Colls, D.D., of Trinity College, Cambridge, has been licensed by the Bishop of London to the ministry of St. Peter's Episcopal Chapel, Queen-square, Westminster, which will be re-opened for the celebration of divine service on Sunday morning next.

IRELAND.

The usual weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place at the Corn Exchange, Dublin, on Tuesday, after the return of Mr. O'Connell from Tuam. The rent for the week amounted to £2198 18s. 6d.

REPEAL DEMONSTRATION AT GALWAY.—The Galway repeal demonstration took place within two miles of Tuam on Sunday last, when Mr. O'Connell was in attendance, and addressed a the multitude in his usual eloquent and persuasive style. The chair was taken by Mr. Bodkin, a member of Parliament and justice of the peace. Several other magistrates and members of Parliament were present, and took part in the proceedings, which were but a repetition of what had occurred at the other great gatherings throughout the country. The repeal rent amounted to upwards of £200. A dinner took place in the evening, to which upwards of 400 persons sat down. The whole passed off without any disturbance.

EXTRAORDINARY SEIZURE OF CANNON AND AMMUNITION AT WATERFORD.—On Saturday last W. M. Alcock, Esq., one of the landing waiters of the port of Waterford, proceeded on board the William Penn steamer, which had arrived from Liverpool, and seized the following, viz.:—two cannons, one large cask of gunpowder and ball, also three large tin cases for keeping the powder dry; all of which the officer lodged in her Majesty's Custom-house stores. It appears that they were intended to fortify Calier House, the residence of Lord Glengall. It is said that the cannon were neither branded or marked.

The Dublin and Galway mail-coach was upset on the 21st inst., crossing the bridge of Athlone. In wheeling round to take the bridge towards the barrack-gate, the coachman drove up on the pathway, and the vehicle going at a rapid pace, lost its equilibrium, and turned over. Colonel Williams, a passenger, was taken up at Hayes's Hotel, had one of his legs broken. The coachman, whose name is Grady, had also one of his legs broken; and Woods, the guard, was severely cut on the head. The four inside passengers escaped unhurt. Fifteen minutes' delay only took place, as the coach, save one of the panels, was uninjured.

THE CARLAND RIOTS, COUNTY OF TYRONE, Thursday, July 20.—The persons convicted of the riots at this place, belonging to both parties, were several y sentenced to periods of imprisonment, varying from nine months to one month, with hard labour.

POSTSCRIPT.

Thursday the Queen and Prince Albert, and the Princess Clementine and the Duke Ferdinand of Saxe Coburg Gotha, left town at half past four o'clock in a carriage-and-four for Claremont. At a quarter before four o'clock the royal party left Claremont for Buckingham Palace, on their way to the residence of the Queen Dowager. The Queen and the illustrious visitors remained half an hour, and then took their departure for Buckingham Palace, where they arrived a quarter before seven o'clock. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, were taken an airing yesterday in the royal gardens.

THE COURTESS OF HADDINGTON'S ASSEMBLY.—On Thursday night the Countess of Haddington held an assembly at the Admiralty, when several members of the Royal Family honoured her Ladyship by their company, and about 600 of the leading nobility in town.

The Vice Chancellors' Courts adjourn to-morrow (Saturday) for the long vacation. The Vice Chancellor of England has intimated that he will attend in his private room on Tuesday next, and hear any motion that was pressing.

On Thursday the ceremony of the consecration of the new Episcopal church for the parish of Chiswick, called Christ Church, Turnham-green, was performed by the Lord Bishop of London. After the service the bishop, accompanied by the committee, &c., proceeded to the National School, where a splendid déjeûner à la fourchette had been laid out.

FOREIGN.

Telegraphic despatches have been received by the French Government, which announce that the Regent was at Corcora on the 17th; that Brigadier Amettler was at Fraga on the 22nd, with 3000 men and eight pieces of cannon; that 5000 of General Seoane's troops were expected, on the 24th, at Madrid; and that the ex-deputy Ortega, at the head of a column of 1500 men, had attempted to enter Saragossa, but was driven back by its inhabitants.

The Berlin Gazette of the 20th instant announces the demise, at Brunberg, on the 19th, of Prince Frederick William Henry Augustus of Prussia. He was born on the 19th of September, 1779, and was the youngest son of Prince Ferdinand, brother of Frederick the Great.

ARRIVAL OF THE HIBERNIA IN NINE DAYS.—By the arrival of the royal mail steam-ship Hibernia, Captain Judkins, which reached Liverpool on Thursday evening, after the quickest trip on record, viz., eleven days from Boston, and only nine days from Halifax, we have received our usual file of papers, but they are nearly altogether destitute of interest.

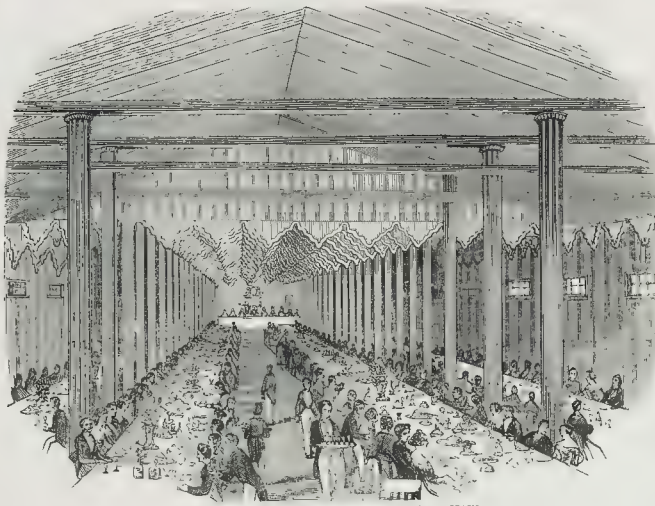
LAUNCH OF THE GREAT BRITAIN STEAM SHIP.

In resuming our account of this great national event, we should state that the annexed illustrations have been sketched and engraved by Mr. E. Landells, who visited Bristol, and witnessed the whole of the proceedings on Wednesday, the 19th, expressly for the purpose of enabling us to present to the readers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS an accurate as well as artistical representation of the leading incidents of the day's fête.

The royal visit to Bath was described in our paper of last week, though we omitted to state that Prince Albert, in his reply to the address read by the Mayor, stated that he hoped at no very distant period that he should again visit Bath, accompanied by her Majesty the Queen.

The presentation of the addresses to the Prince at Bristol was also detailed in our last. The general appearance of the city is allowed in the Bristol Journal to be thus graphically described by a London contemporary:—

"At an early hour all Bristol was astir. The streets were thronged with people, dressed in their holiday attire; and during the morning numbers flocked in from the country around. Bristol is often, too often we think, characterised as an ugly town; but the appearance of its irregular old streets on Wednesday was picturesque in the extreme. Every window of the line selected as the route from the railway to the dock was crowded with eager faces, flags waved from towers and steeples, and from lines drawn from roof to roof. Triumphal arches of evergreens and flowers spanned the streets, their fresh green masses of glancing foliage contrasting well with the antique, lumbering old houses, their high Flemish gables, irregular outlines, rude carving, and projecting stories, while the towers of the churches for which Bristol is so famous, each sending forth its merry peal to mingle with the general hum of enjoyment and excitement, furnished a scene which, when steeped in warm sunlight, formed a very striking and beautiful spectacle."



THE BREAKFAST ON BOARD THE GREAT BRITAIN.

TRIUMPHAL ARCHES.

On starting from the railway terminus, the first object that met the eye was a splendid triumphal arch near Temple-gate, thrown across the whole width of the road, from the George Inn, on one side, to the Saracen's Head, on the other. It was covered with a profusion of laurel and flowers, with festoons of the same, gracefully arranged. On the top ran a line in white letters on blue ground, of "God bless the Queen and Prince Albert," surmounted with a magnificent crown of cut flowers. Above this was a line of flags, flanked at the corners with two banners, one bearing the inscription of "Church and Queen," and the other presenting a view of Redcliff Church. This picturesque arch is represented on the opposite page; and at night it was tastefully illuminated. There likewise two arches spanning the bridge, and seen with striking effect from the corner of Bath-street. The one on the Redcliff side was ornamented with a profusion of laurel and flowers, with stars of cut flowers on each side. In the immediate vicinity of the Exchange was another magnificent triumphal arch, profusely decorated with laurels and evergreens, and bearing an inscription of "Welcome to Prince Albert," in silver letters on a blue ground, in a scroll border above this were the royal arms, beautifully painted, surmounted by a splendid crown of cut flowers. The letters V. R. on each side in wreaths of cut flowers, and the whole lined with various flags and armorial bearings. At the top of the descent from College-green was a tasteful gothic arch, at the top of which was a crown, and the letters V. R. imbedded in moss. The second arch engraved was erected at the Post-office at Clifton, in an apparently more solid and substantial manner than the others, being painted to represent stone; with pilasters, the capitals of which were adorned with gold rosettes. Above the entablature was the word "Welcome," in large letters, with scroll ornaments; the whole beautifully and tastefully shaded with wreaths of laurel, ivy, shrubs, and flowers, and surmounted with large flags. Behind this very tasteful design was a large blue flag, with "Church and Queen" in white letters. At Rownham was a pretty arch, principally composed of boughs of yew, with a well-executed anchor at the top, and a large V. A. of white lilies mixed with yew. On approaching the more central part of Clifton, at the end of the Crescent, was another beautiful arch, surmounted with a gallery, in which was stationed a band of music. The arches were, unquestionably, the most classic features in the route of the procession, which, passing onward to Dowry-parade, and thence to Cumberland-basin, entered Cumberland-road, and passed on to the yard of the Great Western Steam-ship Company, where it was received with hearty cheers by the people. The various objects of interest in the neighbourhood were pointed out to his Royal Highness's attention. The view of Brandon-hill appeared, however, most to attract the royal notice. On the summit of this lofty eminence was fixed a large banner, and the terrace-walk was crowded with a vast assemblage of persons: at intervals cannons were fired, which were echoed again by the opposite rising grounds, and booming over the crowd of vessels in the river beneath. The river at its foot covered with gaily-decked vessels, as if in attendance upon the great leviathan about to be launched, and the countless thousands studding the amphitheatric range of the picturesque locality, from its base to the apex, occupying every part that was available, presented such an appearance as may be imagined far better than described.

FIGURE HEAD OF THE GREAT BRITAIN.

THE BANQUET.

Prince Albert, having completed his inspection of the vast steamship, with the distinguished visitors and the numerous guests who had taken tickets, repaired to the banquet, which was laid out in a spacious pavilion, formerly used as the pattern-makers' shop, and not on board the vessel, as before stated. The appearance of this pavilion was exceedingly elegant. The walls were hung with alternate white and crimson cloth, and from the ceiling throughout the building were appended festoons of the same material. The roof was supported by ranges of white columns, which also were tastefully decorated. From different points were appended various devices and wreaths of evergreens, flowers, &c. On the tables, and at various points of the saloon, were choice exotics. At the upper end of the room was a table in the figure of a horseshoe, called the royal table, which was covered with rare and rich ornaments, as silver salvers, superb silver goblets, and splendid massive candelabra containing choice flowers. In the centre of the royal table was placed a curious piece of mechanism, showing the Great Britain in full sail, contrasted with two other vessels moved by the same piece of mechanism. The banquet was cold, and consisted of chicken, tongues, hams, &c., confectionery, ices, pines, melons, and almost every description of fruit. Champagne, light wines, iced punch, and lemonade were in abundance. The whole was supplied by Mr. Hazard, of Clifton, and was highly creditable to his taste and skill. At the royal table were seated Thomas Kington, Esq., chairman of the Steam-packet Company, who acted as president, having on his right his Royal Highness Prince Albert; Madame Bunsen, lady of the Prussian minister; Ld. Wharncliffe; Mrs. Miles, of Leigh Court; his Excellency the Hon. Edward Everett, American minister; the Marquis of Northampton, the Sardinian minister, the Earl of Lincoln, Lord John Somerset, Lord Charles Wellesley, &c. On the left of the president were Lady Granville Somerset, the Mayor; Chevalier Bunsen, Prussian minister; Mrs. James Gibbs, mayoress; the Marquis of Exeter, the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl of Hardwicke, Lord Granville, &c.

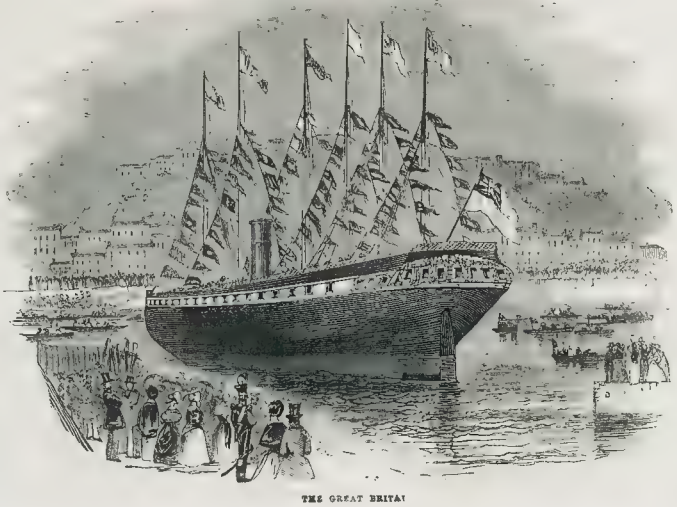
About 600 sat down, more than one half of whom were ladies, and it may readily be imagined that the presence of so large a number of the fair sex gave additional animation to the scene. The company having assembled, the Prince was not long in making his appearance, and the demolition of the various delicacies arranged on the tables quickly proceeded. "It was gratifying" says the Bristol Journal, "to observe that the west country air appeared to have in no wise disagreed with the Royal appetite." The band of the Life Guards, which had previously been stationed on board the vessel, and had welcomed his Royal Highness's appearance on board by playing Prince Albert's waltz, was placed during the repast in an apartment over the banqueting room, and during the morning added greatly to the effect, by their splendid music.

We have not space for the toasts and speeches, except for an extract from the reply of the Hon. E. Everett, the American minister (as reported in the Bristol Journal), on his health having been drunk:—

I feel it, Sir, to be a very great privilege to be permitted to partake of the hospitality of this interesting occasion. We read, in one of the most delightful poetical productions in England, of the Highland Chief who sounded his whistle, and called up a thousand men from the thickets of the Highland glens. His Royal Highness has performed greater wonders to-day—(Cheers). He has literally clothed your hill-sides and your house-tops to the very summits, and the whole surrounding country, not with a thousand, but with a hundred thousand loyal subjects (loud cheers), anxious to testify their attachment to their gracious and beloved Sovereign, through the partner of her affections—(Continued cheers). I rejoice, Sir, as the humble representative of a friendly and allied Power, in the circumstances of this great and interesting occasion. When I stepped on board that wonderful ship this morning, my eye caught at the foremast-head a sight of the flag of my country mingling its folds gracefully with yours—(cheers); and, Sir, I rejoiced that the interests of the people of the two countries, when understood, are as near to each other as their banners on that mast-head—(cheers); and I pray from my heart that their best affections may be as closely intertwined—(Renewed cheering). We read, in other Arabian tales, of the wonders of magic, of flying steeds, and palaces starting from the ground. Sir, let us leave magic to the nursery; give me the magic of the mechanical arts—(Cheers). Consider, Sir, that science has but waved her wand over the iron mine, and that beautiful structure has started up ready to launch on the waves—(Cheers) I rejoice to understand that my native shore is one of the destinations of this beautiful ship; and I can tell you, Sir, that when she enters the Narrows of New York, she will be met by thousands as hearty and cordial as those that hail her departure from this ancient city. . . . A wonder indeed it is of modern art that she will be as able to conduct her course across the Atlantic, and reach her desired haven as regularly, almost as certainly, as that mimic ship which has been performing its round before the table at which we are seated, and is now fast anchored in the presence of royalty—(Cheers).

THE "LAUNCH."

The banquet being now over, his Royal Highness rose, and, accompanied by the chairman and the distinguished guests, proceeded to witness the ceremony of hauling out the vessel, in representing which imposing scene our artist has been very successful. A staircase at the end of the banqueting-room led to a long gallery running parallel with the vessel, at the end of which was a crimson pavilion, in which his Royal Highness took his place, surrounded by the principal guests, a large royal standard being hoisted on the summit of the pavilion at the moment of the Prince's arrival. The vessel was decorated with the colours of all nations, and as far as the eye could reach in every direction nothing was to be seen but flags, banners, and emblems, and congregated masses of human beings. The view from the steamer, exclusive of herself, was very fine. All around rose the masts of ships, dressed out in chequered and flaunting colours. Boats and barges were crowded, and the various adjacent wharfs and quays were lined with anxious spectators: upon the terraces and over-hanging banks rising from the water, and which are covered with alternate clumps of wood, detached houses, and rows of buildings, every spot which commanded a view of the proceedings below, was crowded. From the water's edge upwards rose tier above tier of spectators; the whole presenting a beautifully diversified and broken picture; in the distance of which are seen the Steam-ship Company's factory, and Brandon-hill, covered with not less than 30,000 persons.



THE GREAT BRITAIN

During the banquet, the caisson having been opened, the water had been let into the dock, so that the

GOODWOOD RACES.

PRIZE CUP.

THE GOODWOOD CUP.

PRIZE CUP.

The forty-first anniversary of the noblest and most national of all the popular festivals celebrated in England commenced on Tuesday last, in the princely domain of Goodwood Park. The peculiarity of Goodwood is, that while our principal race-courses have each their characteristics, as Newmarket its business—Epsom its revelry—Ascot its pageantry, and Doncaster its "squirearchy," here all are combined. In sport—such as must content the most ultra professional of those who adopt the turf for profit rather than pleasure—it may fairly compete with all four; while, for good fun, good company, and good fellowship, it can be backed at odds against either.

PORTRAIT OF THE DUKE OF RICHMOND.

All the difficulties that heretofore existed in reaching this delightful locality have been removed, and the vicissitudes of road travelling, so frequently experienced by persons of the highest rank, altogether obviated; this has been effected mainly under the active superintendence of Lord G. Bentinck, the ever-vigilant and pre-eminently successful reformer of the abuses of the turf; and it is but justice to say, that to the comprehensive improvements suggested and carried out by his lordship the interests of the racing community are indebted more than to any man in existence, whether in respect of the character of the racing, or in the extinction of those irregularities that for a series of years have called forth universal reprobation, and which, had not his lordship boldly undertaken to "cleanse the Augean stable," might still have existed, if not increased to an indefinite and, we need hardly say, ruinous extent. The locality of Goodwood, within a moderate distance of two such railways as the South Western and Shoreham, offered facilities of transit which it is only surprising had not previously been adopted, and which this year, for the first time, have been brought into active requisition. The distance from Fareham to the race-course, on the one side, is but twenty-two miles; and from Shoreham, on the other, only a short distance more; and it is but just to state that the directors of the Southampton Railway liberally stepped forward to meet the public convenience by starting special trains at such hours as were well calculated to secure timely access to the scene of action, and, by encouragement offered to coach proprietors (undertaking to convey their horses and carriages to and from Fareham gratuitously) to carry out their plans more effectually. Postmasters and the owners of provincial conveyances quickly foresaw the value of these arrangements; and thus a regular line of communication was established, productive of the best consequences to all parties, and which, in future years, will no doubt be more systematically matured. On Sunday a great number of public carriages and horses were safely transferred to Fareham, and on Monday morning the bustle commenced in earnest; trains of immense extent were quickly filled; that at eleven o'clock, consisting of 36 first-class carriages, with a large proportion of private drags and horses, was so unusually heavy that, although three engines were employed, it was nearly an hour and a half behind time at Fareham, but from the facilities there prepared no time was lost in getting on. The one o'clock train was equally full, and here again no difficulty was felt in obtaining vehicles to proceed to Chichester, at which the arrivals were never more numerous. Bognor was completely thronged, and all the hamlets and villages in the neighbourhood overflowed, while the active exertions of the postmasters in all directions were scarcely sufficient to meet calls on them, and this notwithstanding the state ball at Buckingham Palace, which necessarily kept a large portion of the élite of fashion in London, among whom were included several of the expected visitors at Goodwood. The ministerial summonses for parliamentary attendance also had their influence in detaining many in town till Tuesday morning, when the departures, per the first train, at a quarter before seven, gave a fresh impulse to all classes, and the rush for Fareham was immense, while every other highway and byway proved the excitement that prevailed.

To describe the state of animation in all directions would be a difficult task, but we may say with truth that the magnificence of the scene on entering the park surpassed all former experience. Since our last visit, the practised eye of Lord George Bentinck enabled his lordship to point out and effect many essential improvements, among which the widening of the course full twelve feet, and the removal of some clumps of trees at the upper end of the course, were advantageously conspicuous. In the grand stand, and in all the other appliances for public convenience, no exertions were spared to secure perfect order, and in these plans it was gratifying to remark that the accommodation and pleasures of the humble classes were assiduously consulted.

We may here remark, that in the course of the morning the solicitor of the Duke of Richmond, under directions from "head-quarters," no doubt, served personal notice on a person, presumed to have some indirect connexion with Gorhambury, not to trespass on any part of the property of his grace, on pain of prosecution; and this seemed to have been induced from this person having been incessantly with the horse, and displaying an anxiety scarcely distinguishable from the not very unnatural jealousy arising from the position of an owner. With reference to future years, the most stringent regulations have been adopted to secure the meetings in this park from the encroachments of those who have heretofore by their conduct tended to throw discredit on a sport which, if not sustained by principle, must cease to be national. Every race, of which there were no less than nine, gave ample scope for speculation, and the general satisfaction expressed was the best evidence of the popularity which has been secured. The events came off in the following order:—

GOODWOOD RACES.

The Craven Stakes of 10 sovs each. Mile and a quarter. Eleven subs.
Mr. Griffiths's Newcourt, by Sir Hercules, 3 yrs, 7st (Crouch) 1
Mr. J Day's Ben y Ghlo, 3 yrs, 7st .. .. (J. Howlett) 2
3 to 1 each aget Ben y Ghlo, Era, and Discord; and 4 to 1 agst Newcourt.
Baccna made running at a good pace to the distance, where she was beaten; Newcourt, who had followed her all the way, went on with the running, and won by a length easy. Ben came a bad third, and the others beaten off.
The Drawing room Stakes of 25 sovs each, with a bonus of 10 sovs each, for three-yr-olds; the second received 100 sovs out of the stakes, and the winner paid 25 sovs to the judge. D.R.S. course. Thirty-seven subs to the stakes, and twenty-six to the bonus.
Lord Chesterfield's Parthian, 8st 7lb .. .. (Templeman) 0
Mr. Payne's Maria (late Bessy Bedlam) 8st 2lb .. .. (Nat) 0
Mr. Mostyn's General Pollock, 8st 7lb .. .. (Marlow) 0
Duke of Richmond's Cornopean, 8st 7lb .. .. (Rogers) 0
Duke of Richmond's Orleans, 8st 7lb .. .. (Kitchener) 0
Lord Chesterfield's Greatheart, 8st 7lb .. .. (F. Butler) 0
Betting 6 to 5 on Greatheart, 5 to 2 agst Maria, 5 to 1 agst Parthian, and 6 to 1 agst General Pollock. Lord Chesterfield declared to win with Greatheart.
Odessus made play at a bad pace, followed by General Pollock, Greatheart, and Cornopean next, the others lagging off. They continued with scarcely any change to the turn for the run in, where the front was taken by Greatheart and Pollock, and the pace amended. At the distance Parthian and Maria rushed themselves out, and Greatheart came at a rattling pace, and finished with a dead heat. General Pollock was a bad third. After the race Lord Chesterfield and Mr Payne agreed to a division, and Parthian walked over.
The Ham Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft, for two-yr-olds. T.Y.C. 46 subs.
Col. Peel's c by Touchstone, out of Vulture, 8st 4 lb .. (Nat) 1
Mr. Wreford's f by Sultan Junior, 8st 1 lb .. (J. Day, jun.) 2
Even on Colonel Peel (who declared to win with the colt, and 9 to 1 agst Mr. Wreford's filly. The running was made by Zenobia to the bottom of the hill, where it was taken up by Vulture, the Sultan filly lying with him; a distance and a half from home the latter went in advance, but was repassed at the stand, and the contest at that point of the race continued in so widely separated that the judge placed them all. The winner is named Sandwich.
Sweepstakes of 300 sovs each, h ft, for four-yr-olds. About three miles and five furlongs. Nineteen subs.
Duke of Richmond's b c Eaglesfield, 8st 7lb .. (Rogers) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Mine ditto, 8st 7lb .. .. (Nat) 0
Duke of Bedford's c Envoy, 8st 7lb .. .. (R. Edwards) 3
Betting—6 to 4 on Eaglesfield. The running was made by Misdeal at a moderate pace, Eaglesfield following him to the distance where the run in; the three then closed, and ran nearly abreast to the stand, where Envoy was beaten. The others, both of the Goodwood stable, disputed the race with great spirit to the end, the Richmond colours proving triumphant by a neck only.

THURSDAY.

The Goodwood Cup Stakes of 10 sovs each. Craven Course.
Mr. J. Day's gr h Partisan, 5 yrs, 11st 6lb .. (Mr. J. Day) 1
Mr. Hirck's Usk, 5 yrs, 11st .. .. (Mr. R. Oliver) 2
Lord G. Bentinck's Yorkshire Lady, 4 yrs, 9st 9lb (Lord March) 3
Duke of Bedford's gr h Curry comb, 6 yrs, 12st 4lb (Capt. Williams) 0
Count Batthyany's Monarch, 6 yrs, 10st 6lb .. .. (Owner) 5
Betting—3 to 1 each agst Usk, Partisan, and Curry comb. A capital start, and a close race to the distance, where Partisan finished a winning job by taking the lead from the Yorkshire Lady, and winning cleverly by a length. Monarch was beaten off.
Match for 90 sovs, h ft. D.R.S.C.
Colonel Peel's Rook's Nest, 7st 5lb .. .. .. (Nat) 1
Sir W. W. Wynn's Remnant, 8st 11lb .. .. .. (Mann) 2
Betting—5 to 2 on Rook's Nest, who won by a neck.
The Gratwicke Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft, for three-yr-olds. Mile and a half. Forty-one subs.
Mr. Bowes's Cotherstone, 8st 7lb .. .. (F. Butler) 1
Sir G. Heathcote's Khorassan, 8st 4lb .. .. (Chappell) 2
Mr. Gratwicke's Mary, 7st 13lb .. .. (Bell) 3
Lord G. Bentinck's Gasper, 8st 4lb .. .. (Rogers) 4
Betting—5 to 1 on Cotherstone. Mary made the best running, and could round the clump, and was then passed by the favourite, who went on with it to the end at a good pace, and won in a canter by two lengths.
The Levant Stakes of 50 sovs each, 25 forfeit, for two-yr-olds, 8st 7lb; and fillies, 8st 5lb. The winner of the July or Chesterfield Stakes, or either of the Two-yr-old Stakes at Ascot, to carry 5lb extra. The second saves his stake. Thirteen made. Twenty-one subs.
Mr. Wreford's b c by Camel, out of Wadastra .. (J. Day, jun.) 1
Lord Chesterfield's Dog Billy by Ratcatcher .. (F. Butler) 2
Betting—Even on Wastara, who made the running, and was beaten by a length; Emerald, Best Bower, and Mr. Gratwicke's colt were well up.
The Wester Stakes of 20 sovs each; for three-yr-olds 10st 2lb; four, 12st 4lb; five, 12st 12lb: six and aged, 13st. Craven Stakes Course. Gents riders. Eight subs.
Mr. John Day's St. Lawrence, 6 yrs .. .. walked over.
Match, 2 sovs h ft; Colonel Anson's Guy Napier received forfeit from Lord Glasgow's Anti Dickens, 8st 7lb each. Craven Course.
The Innkeepers' Plate of £50, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each.
Mr. Gulestson's Devil amongst the Tailors, 4 yrs (Butler) 0 1 1
Mr. Beresford's Henri Quatre, 5 yrs .. .. (W. Boyce) 1 5 0
The races terminated a few minutes after 5.
The weather was fine up to three o'clock; and afterwards, for an hour or two, showery; clearing up, however, towards the close of the races.

WEDNESDAY.

The weather was again favourable, and although the assemblage on the course was not so numerous as on Tuesday, it was highly respectable, and the stand presented a goodly array of beauty and fashion. The passengers per train were again in good time, and the expressions of satisfaction as to the quantity and character of the sport universal. The bill of fare embraced six races, of which the most important was the Goodwood Cup, which Lord G. Bentinck undertook the task of starting the horses, and all got off on favourable terms except Blue Bonnet, who turned restive at the post, and was left behind. The Irish horse Bacchus was the favourite, but his admirers committed an egregious blunder, as he was beaten nearly a mile from home, and walked in, to the great chagrin of many, but to the delight of those who were not disposed to adopt all that the Irish division suggested as gospel.
The Queen's Plate of 100 guineas; three-yr-olds, 7st 4lb; four, 8st 2lb; five, 8st 11lb; six and aged, 9st 1lb. About three miles and five furlongs.
Mr. J. Day's Ben y Ghlo, by Emilius, 3 yrs .. (J. Howlett) 1
Col. Charrtie's Gauger, 4 yrs .. .. (Rogers) 2
Duke of Richmond's Rosamond, 3 yrs .. .. (W. Howlett) 3
3 to 1 on Ben y Ghlo. Gauger made all the running to the distance, when the favourite took it from him, went on solus, and won in a canter by two lengths.
The Stewards' Cup, added to a Handicap of 5 sovs each. T.Y.C. 31 subs.
Lord G. Bentinck's Yorkshire Lady, 4 yrs, 6st 4lb .. (Kitchener) 1
Duke of Richmond's Rosinda, 4 yrs, 7st .. .. (Adidale) 2
The Goodwood Stakes of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, and only 5 if declared, &c. Cup Course. One hundred and sixty-one subs, 113 of whom declared, &c.
Mr. Forth's Lucy Banks, 4 yrs, 7st 7lb .. .. (Bell) 1
Lord Minown's Scantern, 4 yrs, 7st 7lb .. .. (Francis) 2
Mr. Meekins's Aristotle, 4 yrs, 8st 11lb, and 7lb extra (Temp eman) 3
Betting—4 to 1 each Bacchus, 6 to 1 agst Tamboureil, 9 to 1 agst Lucy Banks, 10 to 1 agst The Waxler, 12 to 1 agst Sobarek, 10 to 1 agst Aristotle, 12 to 1 agst Jack Sheppard, 14 to 1 agst Scaiteen, and 15 to 1 agst Give him a Name. Won by half a length. Aristotle a good third, Emilius fourth, and Tambourin a bad fifth. The favourite was nearly last.
The Cowdray Stakes of 25 sovs each.
Mr. Sadler's ch f Alice Lowe, by Defiance, 2 yrs, 6st 4lb (T. Day) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Tripoli, 4 yrs, 9st 7lb .. .. (Rogers) 2
The Stand Plate of £50, added to a Sweepstake of 5 sovs each. Mile heats.
Mr. J. Day's St. Lawrence, 6 yrs, 8st 12lb .. (J. Day, jun.) 1 1
Duke of Richmond's Misdeal, 6 yrs, 8st 12lb 2 2
Both heats won in a canter.
The Members' Plate of £50, with 50 added by the Ladies. Heats, once round.
Lord Exeter's Jamie Foree, 6 yrs .. .. (Q. Nobie) 1
Mr. King's f, by Bran out of Eliza, 3 yrs .. .. (Mann) 2
Won easy.

THURSDAY.

Match for 100 sovs h ft.
Mr. Copeland's f 9l, by the Prime Warden, out of Peg, beat Lord G. Bentinck's b by Cowick, out of Vacuna, 8st 7lb each. T. Y. C.—Won by a length.
Sweepstakes of 25 sovs each, for two-yr-old colts.
Col. Peel's c by Touchstone, out of Vulture .. (Fatrman) 1
Mr. Lichtwald's b c Leander .. .. .. (Butler) 2
Betting 5 to 2 on the winner.—Won by a length.

The Racing Stakes of 50 sovs. 26 subs.
Col. Anson's ch c Napier .. .. .. (Butler) 0
Duke of Richmond's c Cornopean .. .. (Rogers) 0
The second beat, Napier beat Cornopean.
Match for 200 sovs h ft.
Lord G. Bentinck's Here-I-go-with-a-Rye-out, beat Lord Glasgow's Muley Moloch, dam by Actieon, out of Georgiana, 8st 5lb each. T. Y. C.
The Goodwood Cup, value £300, by subs of 20 sovs each, the surplus in specie, with 100 sovs added from the fund. Cup course.
Hyllus, aged, 9st 7lb 1
Sircol, 3 yrs, 6st 10lb 2
Won by a head.—13 started.
Match, 300 h ft.—Lord Glasgow's b f by Retainer, out of Purity, and Lord G. Bentinck's br f by Bay Middleton, out of Malvina, ran a dead heat, 8st 5lb each. T.Y.C.
The Molecomb stakes of 50 sovs each. 24 subs.
Mr. J. Day's b c the Ugly Buck .. .. .. (J. Day) 1
Mr. Gratwicke's b f by Elis .. .. .. (Bell) 2
The Stockwell Stakes of 20 sovs each. 8 subs.
Duke of Richmond's b c Lotharo .. .. .. (Rogers) 1
Mr Ongley's bl f Queen of the Gipsies .. .. (Sly) 2
The Buckwell Stakes of 25 sovs each. 9 subs.
Mr. Treen's bl f Barricade .. .. .. (Chapple) 1
Col. Peel's f Zenobia, 3lb .. .. .. (Flatman) 2
The Duke of Richmond's Plate (handicap) of 100 sovs. Free for all horses.
Duke of Richmond's Pastoral 1
Lord Eglintoun's Egida 2
12 started. Won by a neck.
The Anglesey Stakes of 50 sovs each. 17 subs. Gents. riders.
Mr. Hook's Una .. .. (Capt. Oliver) 1
Lord Maidstone's Misdeal .. .. .. (Lord March) 2
Match.—Lord Chesterfield's c Beelsman received £50 from Sir F. Collier's Saturday Night.

FRIDAY.

Match, £500, h ft. Old mile.
Mr. Theobald's c. Highlander 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Partisan 2
The Chesterfield Cup Stakes of 15 sovs each, Thirty-eight subs.
Lord Mitown's Scaltern, 4 yrs, 7st 10 lb .. .. (Dunn) 1
Mr. Forth's Alice Lowe, 3 st 11b .. .. (Butler) 0
Lord Exeter's Wee Pet, 3 yrs, 6st 10lb .. .. (Petty) 0
The Nassau Stakes of 50 sovs each. Sixteen subs.
Mr. Payne's br. Maria .. .. (Flatman) 1
Lord Exeter's b. Maria Diaz .. .. .. (Petitt) 2
The March Stakes of 10 sovs each. Gentlemen riders.
Second Class.
Lord G. Bentinck's African, 4 yrs, 10 st 1
Lord G. Bentinck's St. Jean d'Acre, 4 yrs, 10 st 5 lb 2
Second Class.
Lord G. Bentinck's Misdeal, 4 yrs, 10 st 4 lb 1
Duke of Bedford's Curry comb, 6 yrs, 11 st 2
The Challenge Stakes.
African .. .. (Lord Maidstone) 1
Rieus .. .. (Gilbert) 2

Annexed is a portrait of the Duke of Richmond, the noble owner of Goodwood Park. His grace is the fifth Duke of Richmond, and is the son of the fourth duke by the eldest daughter of the fourth Duke of Gordon. His grace was born in 1791; married, in 1817, the eldest daughter of the first Marquis of Anglesey: he succeeded to the dukedom in 1819; and assumed the name of Gordon on the death of his maternal uncle, the fifth duke, in 1836. His grace was at Waterloo, and was aide-de-camp to the Duke of Wellington at the latter end of the war: he has been Postmaster-general and a member of the Cabinet: he is lord-lieutenant and vice-admiral of Sussex, colonel of the Sussex militia, aide-de-camp to the Queen, and high steward of Chichester. His grace was one of the founders of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, of which he was the second president, and is now a trustee.

PRIZE CUPS.

The "Goodwood Cup" has been manufactured at Messrs. Storr and Mortimer's, in Bond-street, after a design by Mr. Baily, the Royal Academician. It is a representation, in frosted and burnished silver, of the flight of the wild horse with Mazeppa bound to his back. The horse has been modelled by Mr. M'Carthy, and the wolves are by the same artist. The horse is at full speed, pursued by the wolves; the group is finely conceived, and executed in the most elaborate manner. The agony of the unfortunate victim bound on the horse is shown in every muscle and muscle, and in the contortions of the face; whilst the energy of action in the horse, the joint effect of terror and desperation, is delineated in a most masterly manner: there is all the fire and animation that can be communed in a real horse, depicted exceedingly the effected ideal. The mane and tail is caricatured in fiery dragon. The whole is an admirable piece of miniature art, and full of taste and genius.

The two other cups engraved on the preceding page, designed by Mr. Cotterill, and manufactured by Messrs. Garrards, are remarkably fine and elaborate. They consist of groups cast in silver, an improvement on the old system. One of these compositions is founded on an incident related in the "Wilde Jager," of the German poet Burger: that, after the death of a cruel Wildgrave, the people adopted a superstition that they still heard the cruel Wildgrave's hounds, and the well-known cheer of the deceased hunter, the sounds of his horse's feet, and the rustling of the branches before the game; the pack and the sportsmen are also distinctly discriminated, but the phantoms are rarely, if ever, visible. The group is composed of the Wildgrave, who is represented spearing a deer, who has died for succour to the very foot of the altar, and a venerable hermit, who appears protesting against such a desecration of the altar. The composition is full of animation and spirit. The other group represents an incident in the novel of "Ivanhoe," where King Richard places himself at the head of the outlaws, in order to attack the castle of Reginald Front de Bœuf. The characters introduced are Richard, the Clerk of Copmanhurst, and Wamba the fool. The expertness Mr. Cotterill exhibits in the delineation of both his human and equine characters is extraordinary. In other works of this class we hear of the design being made by one, the human figures executed by another, and the horses by a third artist; but the groups of which we are speaking owe their principal charm—those of consistence between the design and execution, and a well-sustained spirit throughout—to the fact of their being the work of one artist alone.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

This week has given us the beau ideal of our text—the meeting at Goodwood being such a sample of its national sport as no other country under the sun could furnish. Racing during four successive days as would supply half the "crack" courses all over the country, and the manner of the arrangement was faultless. There was infinitely better sport than one meeting everywhere else, with none, or almost none, of the ordinary drawbacks. Loose balled singers and indecent mountebanks were neither to be heard nor seen; and if the tumble-ing division manœuvred pretty freely, men learn experience from them, which is the only teacher after all. The prospective influence of Goodwood is now its sole importance to the newspaper reader, and of that we come to speak.

According to all the rules knowing, the fashion in which Cotherstone came to the post and cut his horses to chips makes the St. Leger of 1843 a foregone conclusion: "Pits all over but shouting" is in everybody's mouth, and vox populi vox dei, is a sage suggestion. Still we cannot counsel a friend to back him at such prices as the sanguine cash at about him. Its barely worth winning by a horse if one must go through the agony of seeing him run in a field of a score, backed to beat them all sweet samia! it is a thing to move you to tears, to look on a gentleman, who has left fond wife and tender babes in his rear (paradventure in Mayfair, or quietly dozing in the parish of Bloomsbury, or else at Pancras), shivering in his shoes on a bankrupt moor, while a company of ruthless Yorkshire tykes are getting up an inconceivable and inconceivable devilments to upset the chance of a favourite on which he stands "to be, or not to be"—a living agonizer. Ugly looks, baby faces, and the sackers the amendment on the ground that a greater reduction would neither be conducive to the welfare of Ireland, nor to the increase of the revenue. After some observations from Captain JONES in support of the amendment, Mr. F. BARING said he was of opinion that the duty on spirits should be kept as high as it could be maintained without giving encouraging ment to smuggling, and keeping this principle in view he thought the reduction proposed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer quite sufficient.—After a few words from Sir R. FERGUSON in reply, the amendment was negatived without a division, and the report was agreed to.—Lord G. HENRY GORDON then gave notice of a bill founded upon the resolution.—On the motion that the Admiralty Lands Bill be committed, Mr. BARNARD opposed the motion as arbitrary and unconstitutional. It gave a perpetual power to the Admiralty to appropriate lands by purchase, giving only five or six months' notice to the proprietors. —Mr. HUME took the same view of the bill, and moved that it be committed that day six months.—Mr. B. HALL said that the bill through much less power to the Admiralty than had been already given to the Ordnance and Excise.—Mr. WILLIAMS, Sir C. NAPIER, and Captain PECHELL opposed the bill.—Sir J. GRAHAM said that there was a security against any improper use of the power the bill would confer, for every bargain for land must be sanctioned by a vote of the House of Commons in committee of supply.—Mr. HUME thought the right hon. baronet, for the Government on which took possession of land under the bill would always have a majority in the house to sanction it.—The house then divided, and the amendment of Mr. Hume was negatived by a majority of 29 to 28.—The bill then went through committee, after considerable opposition from Mr. BARNARD, Mr. HUME, and Mr. WILLIAMS.—The other orders of the day were then disposed of, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Grand Jury Presentment (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.—The Earl of ABERDEEN laid some papers on the table relative to slavery.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE moved for certain correspondence on the subject of the apprehension of offenders in France.—The Earl of ABERDEEN said he was not aware of the existence of any such correspondence.—The Earl of GLENGALL presented a petition respecting the Irish fisheries; a subject which Lord MONTEAGLE deemed highly important, and deserving of serious consideration.—The Duke of WELLINGTON said he would take care that it also did be attended to in the proper quarter.—Their lordships soon after adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The Stock in Trade Bill, the Slave Trade Treaties Bill, and the Militia Ballots Suspension Bill, severally went through committee.—Mr. GLADSTONE, in reply to a question from Mr. LABOUCHERE, said he should, if possible, bring on the Exportation of Machinery Bill on Thursday.—Mr. CHRISTOPHER asked Mr. Gladstone when it was his intention to give an opportunity of a discussion of the Customs Duties Bill, one clause of which had an important bearing on British agriculture. In reference to which clause he wished to ask if it was the intention that the agricultural produce of the state of Maine, in America, should be admitted into this country at a nominal duty?—Mr. GLADSTONE said that an opportunity for the discussion of the bill should be given. With respect to the second question he must be allowed to give only a limited answer. The intention of the clause was to give effect to the third article of the treaty of Washington. Any further explanation he would reserve to a future opportunity.—Mr. G. CLEAK gave notice that in committee of supply, on Friday next, he would move additional supplies for Canada and China, and also a vote for compensation to those whose opium had been seized by the Chinese.—In reply to questions from Mr. EWART, the Earl of LINCOLN said that the committee on the subject of metropolitan improvement would not close its sittings till the end of the present session, nor would they lay any report relative to the embankment of the Thames on the table during the present session.—Mr. HUME then moved for leave to bring in a bill for the establishment of schools to promote a sound education for the young generation of the United Kingdom, at the public expense, without wounding the feelings or injuring the rights of any sect or class of the community, but confining the business of the schoolmaster to the secular and moral training of the children, and leaving all religious instruction to religious teachers distinct from the school; to the end that general instruction and a spirit of Christian brotherhood and good will may be disseminated amongst all classes and denominations. The hon. gentleman said his object was to confine the duties of the schoolmaster to moral instruction, leaving the religious and scriptural portion of it to the clergy of the sect to which the children might belong.—Mr. EWART seconded the motion, but while doing so the house was counted out.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY.

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

Mr. GIBSON asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government had considered the propriety of extending to persons abroad the economy on the security of mail or other corkeable articles the privilege now enjoyed by bond fide purchasers.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that the Government had not.—The second reading of the Report of Machinery Bill was fixed for Thursday week. Mr. BANNERMAN wished to ask whether the professors who had joined the Free Church had been removed from their professorships.—Sir J. GRAHAM said that many had voluntarily resigned the appointments, but the appointments in different universities were held under different tenures. In some the parties were not required to hold office, as in the Greek professorship in Glasgow, which was held by an Episcopalian.—The Coroners Bill was then re-committed, and some alterations having been agreed to, the house resumed, and the report ordered to be received on Thursday.—Mr. F. MAULE moved for a return of the names of the different corps of yeomanry cavalry which have been or are to be established on permanent pay under the estimate of the present year.—Sir J. GRAHAM said he had not the slightest objection to the production of the papers moved for, but at the same time he must bear testimony to the good conduct and gallant and loyal behaviour of those corps when called upon, during the late disturbances which had taken place.—He read a letter from the Duke of Wellington in praise of their zeal, loyalty, discipline, and forbearance, and requesting that the Queen might be solicited to honour them with an expression of her approval.—The house then adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Their lordships met at five o'clock.—Mr. Greene and others from the Commons brought up the Slave Trade Treaties Bill, the Controverted Elections Bill, the Bills of Exchange Bill, the Municipal Corporations (2) Bill, and other bills.—The debate on the Libel and Defamation Bill was, after a short conversation, adjourned till Monday next, and their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The Marriages (Ireland) Bill was read a third time, and passed.—On the order of the day for bringing up the report of the Arms (Ireland) Bill being read, Mr. S. CRAWFORD moved an amendment to the effect that the unrestricted power of having, carrying, and using arms, for all legal purposes, was a right enjoyed by the people of Scotland, and was one of the essential safeguards of freedom. That to limit or withhold this privilege, as regards Irishmen, created an unjust, impolitic, and insulting distinction, and was a violation of that equality of rights which can be the only safe and just basis of Imperial legislation. That, therefore, it was the duty of the house to reject any measure which would impose or continue such restriction.—Lord ELIOT opposed the amendment. Strangers were then ordered to withdraw, and the house divided, when there appeared—For Mr. S. Crawford's amendment, 44; against it, 99: majority against the amendment, 55. —Lord ROSSELL moved another amendment, to the effect that no more flexible search should be made for arms, except in such districts as had been proclaimed by the Lord-Lieutenant in Council. The house again divided, when the numbers were—For Lord J. Russell's motion, 65; against it, 109: majority, 44.

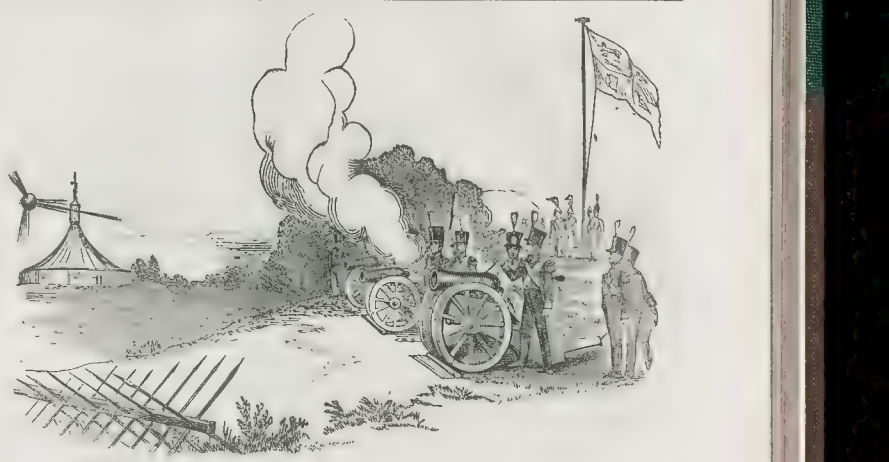
HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

Their lordships assembled at four o'clock, for the purpose of hearing the royal assent given by commission to various bills.—The LORD CHANCELLOR took his seat on the woolsack at five o'clock.—The Cathedral Churches (Wales) Bill, the Loan Societies Bill, the Bills of Exchange Bill, and the Stock in Trade Bill were read a second time.—The Militia Ballot Suspension Bill was read a third time and passed.—After the transaction of some other business, their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. FRIDAY.

Mr. Bright, the newly-elected member for the city of Durham, was introduced by Dr. Bowring and Mr. Brotherton, and made the declaration provided by the Act for the Society of Friends, and took his seat. The hon. gentleman was cheered by the Opposition side of the house.—Mr. WARD presented a petition from Lord Grosvenor, praying for alterations in the Irish Church.—Mr. WAWN presented a petition from the coal merchants of Gateshead, against the Coal Whippers Bill.—Mr. I. DUNCOMBE presented a petition from a body of COBDEN and watch makers, against clause 10 of the Customs Bill.—The Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Continuance Bill passed through committee.—The Slave Trade Suppression Bill was read a first time.

MARRIAGES IN HIGH LIFE.—On Thursday last the nuptials of Lady Jane Grant, only daughter of the Earl of Seafield, and Captain Edward Wyatt Forester Walker, of the Scots Fusilier Guards, son of Major-General Walker, K.C.H., were celebrated at Cullen House, county Banff, in the presence of a numerous family circle. There were great rejoicings on the Earl of Seafield's estates in Banffshire and Inverness-shire, and both at Castle Grant and Cullen House the departments of his lordship were liberally regaled. At St. Andrew's Hall, Banff, the inhabitants testified their respect for the noble family, by celebrating the interesting event by a public dinner, and on the surrounding hills large bonfires were lighted at dusk, being the Highland mode of rejoicing.—Amongst the many marriages in high life rumoured in the beau monde, two weddings are spoken of in more positive terms. We hear that the beautiful and accomplished Miss Ambrose is engaged to a son of Mr. Frankland Lewis, and that the wedding is to take place on Thursday.—One of the loveliest and most powerful of aristocratic belles, Lady B. C——, the daughter of the Marquis of S——, it is no less positively asserted, is shortly to be united to the heir of large estates in Scotland, Mr. B——, son of Mr. J. B—— and Lady E. B——.



THROWING SHELL FROM HOWITZER.

ANNUAL INSPECTION OF THE ROYAL HORSE ARTILLERY.

On Monday morning, immediately after guard mounting, the Royal Horse Artillery, under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Cobbe, and the field batteries, under the command of Colonel Cleveland, assembled in heavy marching order on Woolwich Common, where they were minutely inspected by Lieut.-General Lord Bloomfield, G.C.B. and G.C.H., commandant of the garrison. On Tuesday the whole of the nine battalions of Foot Artillery, with the recruits attached to them, assembled on the parade-ground, under their respective commanding officers, when his lordship inspected them in line, and afterwards in battalions, and received the reports of the state of the battalions and conduct of the men, which was very satisfactory. On Wednesday a review of the Royal Horse Artillery took place, in the presence of Major-General Brotherton, C.B., commanding officer of the Leeds district, and a select party of ladies and gentlemen. On Lieut.-General Lord Bloomfield, attended by Brigade-Major Cuppage, arriving on the ground, he was received with the usual salute by the three troops of Horse Artillery, under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Cobbe; and the troops afterwards marched and trotted past, and then at full gallop, in excellent style, and went through the whole of their evolutions with admirable regularity, during which they fired about fifty rounds. The troops then marched past to their barracks, and the visitors proceeded to view the models and curiosities in the Rotunda, and on the repository grounds. At a quarter to one o'clock practice was carried on at the mortar and howitzer battery, under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Frazer: of this scene we subjoin an engraving. The firing on this occasion was good, several of the shells falling at the base, or within a few feet of the flag-staff, at 850 yards distant. The company, on leaving the garrison, proceeded to the residence of Lord Bloomfield, in the Royal Arsenal, and partook of an elegant déjeûné. Shortly after two o'clock ricochet and rocket practice was carried on in the marshes, the former under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Kirby, and the latter under Lieut.-Colonel Cobbe.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

Among the items in the Canada papers we notice one which requires to be made generally known, viz., that after the 5th of this month the importation of American reprints of English copyright publications would be strictly prohibited—as well those coming through the Post-office as by any other mode of conveyance.——In the French Chamber of Peers on Friday, the Orleans and Tours Railroad Bill was removed from the orders of the day, and consequently postponed to next year. The Greek Loan Bill was adopted.——The Cork Examiner states that, within ten days, wheat has risen in that city from 25s. to 32s. per barrel, and flour in the same ratio.——We regret to hear that the Duke of Rutland has for some days past been suffering rather severely from inflammation of the lungs. It is satisfactory, however, to be able to state that his Grace is considerably better, and there are no grounds for apprehending danger.——The gross revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall for the year ending December 31st, 1842, were £32,935 13s. 4½d., salaries and expenses £12,833 13s. 4½d., leaving £20,100 for the Prince of Wales.——It is now generally stated that the Houses of Parliament will not be prorogued until the last week in August.——Rumours having been circulated, that it is the intention of Mr Alderman Copeland to retire from the representation of Stoke-upon-Trent at the next dissolution of Parliament, the hon. gentleman has given the most decided contradiction to such reports, by declaring them wholly destitute of foundation.——The authorities of Eton College have added a week to the length of the vacation at the solicitation of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge on account of the Princess Augusta's marriage. The vacation commences on Monday and will be prolonged to the 11th of September.——A piece of plate, value £200, was last week presented by the inhabitants of Stratford-le-Bow, Essex, to Mr. J. Tucker, for his exertions in opposing the tram-road, from the Thames to the Eastern Counties Railway.——The official report of the commissioners appointed to investigate the recent fraudulent transactions in the port of London has just been published. We regret that we cannot find room for even an abstract of this document. It proves clearly that fraud to an undefined and unknown extent has been habitually and systematically carried on in the port of London, of which revenue-officers of a high class have been the chief instruments.——Mr. Gilbert Henderson has been appointed Recorder of Liverpool, in place of Mr. James Clarke, who had resigned.——So great was the opposition to the vendors of vegetables in Sheerness last week, that green peas were actually offered for sale at three farthings per peck.——Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to confer a royal charter of incorporation on the School of Medicine and Surgery at Birmingham, with the privileges, immunities, rank, and title of the "Queen's College, Birmingham."——The special train on the evening of Thursday week, from Southampton to London, engaged for the conveyance of the Duke of Saxe Coburg and his illustrious relatives, performed the journey, seventy-seven miles, in one hour and 39 minutes.——The weather throughout France during last week was on the whole cold and stormy. On Saturday evening and on Sunday much rain fell in Paris. The crops throughout the country were most promising, but required sunshine and heat to bring them to maturity. ——The Count de Torreno, grandee of Spain of the first class, formerly minister of Queen Christina, has arrived at Brussels from Germany.——Mr. Hall, chief magistrate of Bow-street, left town a few days since by the direction of Government, for Wales, for the purpose of instituting a rigid and searching inquiry and examination into all the circumstances connected with the "Rebecca riots" and disturbance in that part of the kingdom.——Madame Caroline de Pichler (née Greiner) one of the most popular novel writers of the age, and withal one of the most amiable and charitable ladies, died at Vienna last week at the advanced age of seventy-four. Several of her works, we believe, for instance "Ursgalia," have successfully been introduced into our literature.——General Alava, who was formerly ambassador of the Queen of Spain in Paris and London, has just died at the Baréges Waters.——The report is spread in the German states that Queen Victoria of England intends paying a visit to her relations in Germany.——The dean and chapter of Wells Cathedral have made arrangements for the thorough repair of this beautiful structure, at an expense of £70,000.——The Palais Royal, so famous some years back, is now every day losing favour with the public, and the numerous passages in the neighbourhood threaten it with complete decay. Eighteen or twenty arcades are now to let. Twenty-two others are occupied by the venders of ready-made clothes, and some of the principal cafés and restaurants, the goodwill of which used to be worth 300,000 f., have been closed, because they did not clear their expenses.——A duel with daggers took place last week at Châlons-sur-Marne, between two Spanish refugees, which terminated in the death of one of them, a young man named Oyarsaval. This person was employed at a confectioner's, and was looked on as a quiet inoffensive man.——The inhabitants of Deal intend to get up a grand regatta in honour of her Majesty's contemplated visit to Walmer Castle, at the close of the ensuing month, similar to that which the Queen witnessed on her former visit to the castle, last year.——The distraints upon the Society of Friends this year, chiefly for ecclesiastical purposes, are about £10,000.——Admiral Duff has announced to the committee of the Protestant Association, a donation to that body of one thousand guineas. He had originally left the same sum to the association in his will, but he now thinks it may be advisable to place it at once at the disposal of the committee for maintaining and promoting the great ends of the institution.——At the opening of the Bedford assizes the high sheriff was unable to attend in consequence of a domestic calamity, and the under-sheriff, E. C. Williamson, Esq., was also unable to attend, having lately experienced a severe accident.——During his recent visit to Liverpool, the Rev. Theobald Mathew administered the pledge to upwards of 30,000 persons.——The Rev. Geo. Crabbe, vicar of Bredfield, near Woodbridge, Suffolk, son of the celebrated poet, having become a convert to corn-law repeal, has transmitted a subscription of £1 to the National Anti-Corn-law League.——Mr. Barlow, who sowed the first fields of wheat ever cultivated west of Utica, is still living. This important event occurred fifty-seven years ago, and Mr. Barlow is now in the full enjoyment of health at 91.——There has been a mutiny on board the American whale ship Sharon, in the Pacific, and two men killed.——On the 10th instant, at Colombia, Missouri, two slaves, man and wife, were hung for the murder of their master.——There were about twenty men killed in suppressing the recent riots on the Beauharnois Canal, in Canada, and fears are entertained that there will yet be other strikes for wages and outbreaks.——A parliamentary return just published shows that the sums paid, or to be paid, on account of the war with China, amount to £2,829,873, of which sum £804,964 are required to be voted in 1843-44, as balance due to the East India Company. ——We regret to hear that Mr. Baron Alderson, who is at present on the Norfolk circuit, has had a return of the illness which a short time since almost threatened his life. It is feared that the learned and esteemed judge will not be able to resume his judicial functions during the present assizes.——A letter from Rome, in the Cologne Gazette, says:—"From the discourse of the Polish priests who have arrived here, there is little doubt that the Czar persists in his intention of substituting the Greek Church for the Catholic in Poland. We also hear repeated complaints of the oppressions to which the Catholics in Poland are subjected.——The Earl of Cawdor, Lord Dynevor, and the Hon. Colonel George Rice Trevor, M.P., and most of the gentry of South Wales, have, in consequence of the Rebeccaite disturbances, determined to build barracks at Carmarthen, for the military, by public subscription, to add to the security of that district.——The mortal remains of the Lady Mary Louisa Lennox were interred, on Friday last, in the ancestral mausoleum of the Richmond family, in the Ladye Chapel at Chichester Cathedral. The funeral was quite private.——The Prize Essay, of twenty guineas, of the Linendrapers' Society, upon the "Evils of the Late Hour System of Trade," has been awarded to Mr. J. W. Davis, a student in Highbury College.——The Protestant Association, at a meeting held on Tuesday, adopted a memorial, which has been signed by the President, Vice-Presidents, and other persons connected with the society, addressed to the Archbishops and Bishops of the united Church of England and Ireland, directing their attention to the fearfully rapid spread of Tractarianism, and praying their lordships to exert their influence in opposing its extension.——A return, published on Thursday morning, states that £1,281,211 13s. 3d. will be required to make good to certain holders of opium surrendered in China, in March 1839, the amount of compensation due to them under Art 4 of the treaty of peace. The above amount, however, includes a sum of £29,289 11s. 9d. as a claim by the Parsee firms of Heerjeebhoy Rastomjee and A. and D. Furdonjee, the settlement of which depends on further explanation.——Up to Saturday evening last, 18,000 persons took the pledge from Father Mathew in Manchester. On Sunday it was administered to 30,000, and on Monday and Tuesday to 32,000, making in all a total of 80,000 pledged teetotallers in Manchester. Of these there are 4500 infants, 3000 of whom belong to the St. Patrick's district, a part of Manchester principally inhabited by the Irish.

THE REVIEW IN HYDE PARK.—THE CHARGE.

REVIEW OF THE GRENADIER GUARDS IN HYDE PARK.

Annexed are three illustrations of the review of this fine regiment in Hyde Park, on the 20th inst., which was briefly noticed in our last week's paper.

At a few minutes after nine o'clock three battalions of Grenadier Guards, numbering nearly 2000 men, entered the park under the command of Colonel Grant, and took up their stations near the Magazine Barracks. The ground was kept by a company of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), under the command of the Hon. Captain Pitt. Two companies of foot—the one the Coldstream, and the other the Fusilier Guards—assisted in this duty.

Precisely at 11 o'clock, Field Marshal his Grace the Duke of Wellington, Colonel of the regiment, entered the park, accompanied by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge and Prince George. The Duke of Wellington was attended by the Marquis of Worcester, the Earl of March, the Marquis of Douro, and Colonel George Anson, Aides-de-Camp to his Grace, and among the officers present were Sir Hercules Pakenham, Sir Willoughby Gordon, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, Colonel Cochrane, Lord Paulet, Lord Combermere, Lord Charles Wellesley, General Higgins (Inspector-General of the Cavalry), Sir John Macdonald, Colonel Henry Bentinck, Colonel Clive, &c. The Duke of Wellington's carriage, in which was the Marchioness of Douro, was drawn up near the square in a spot set apart for those who had been fortunate enough to obtain tickets, and there were assembled a very numerous attendance of fashionably-dressed ladies.

The Duke of Wellington, accompanied by the Duke of Cambridge and the other general officers, first rode up and down the lines, and having retired to the centre of the square the manœuvres commenced. The troops first broke up into column, and marched past in slow time before the assembled officers. This completed, the same movement was gone through in quick time, after which the troops re-formed in squares. Two companies of the first battalion were next selected to take up their position as skirmishers on the southern side of the square, and the firing immediately commenced. The second and third battalions marched up in line and fired by file. This was kept up for some minutes, and was succeeded by the remaining eight companies of the 1st battalion marching up in support and firing a volley. The three battalions then retreated, and forming into squares kept up a rapid fire by the right of faces. The signal was then given (by sound of trumpet), "Prepare to receive cavalry, front rank kneeling." The front rank presented an array of bristling bayonets, at an angle calculated to meet the chests of horses charging on them, the rear ranks firing in quick rotation over the heads of their comrades in front. This was the last evolution performed. All the manœuvres were gone through with great precision and effect, if we may except the marching past in companies, when it was found necessary to pass the angles formed by the throng of spectators, every company, with one exception, failed to bring the right shoulder forward with that degree of exactness the military eye expects from a well-drilled regiment. A finer body of troops could not be collected; but we have seen regiments of the line go through the most difficult evolutions with greater regularity.

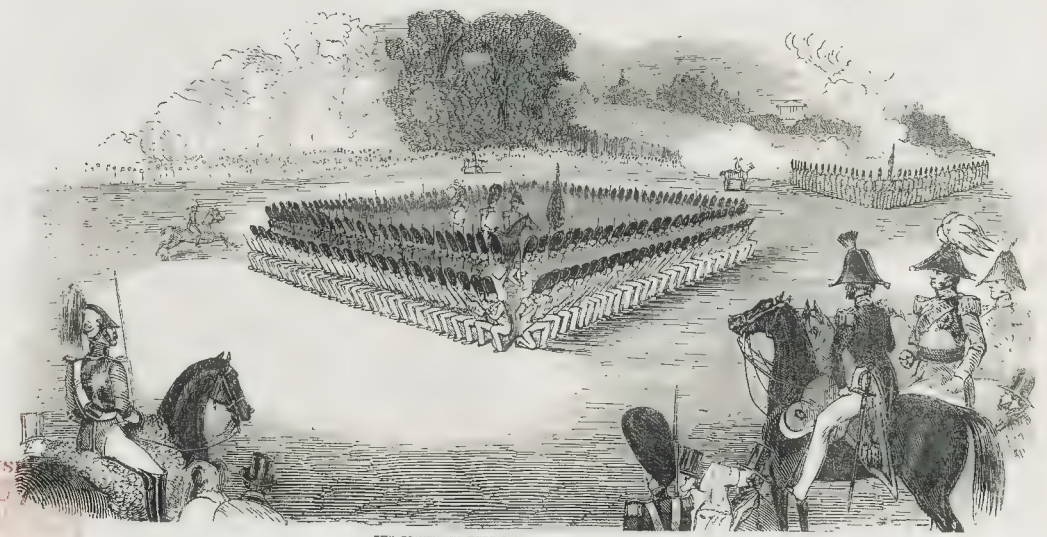
ENSIGN.

From the beginning of the reign of George III. to the present moment, it appears that upwards of two hundred leading duels have taken place, including, of course, four hundred principals and as many seconds. In three of these both combatants were killed; in the others, about eighty were killed, about one hundred and twenty were wounded, one half of which number desperately, and the other half slightly; and the remaining numbers escaped unhurt. It is estimated that in duels one-fifth part is killed, and one-half, more or less, severely wounded. Rather more than twenty trials, in all, have occurred, in which some were found guilty of manslaughter, and four of murder. Two were justly hanged, and the others too mercifully imprisoned. In the catalogue of duellists, or disciples of the succession of Cain the fratricide, duellist, and blacksmith, are found the names of York, Norfolk, Richmond, Shelburne, Macartney, Townsend, Exmouth, Talbot, Lauderdale, Lonsdale, Malden, Camelford, Paget, Castlereagh, Belgrave, Pitt, Fox, Sheridan, Canning, Tierney, Burdett, Wellington, Londonderry, &c.; and after these a prodigious number of play-actors, lawyers' clerks, shop-apprentices, butlers, and a few dustmen.

At half-past nine o'clock on Saturday morning, the 22nd instant, a splendid whale, of the species Balæna physalus, was killed at the North Queen's ferry, by Mr. Mason, the superintendent of the passage, and his men. The chase and battle lasted about forty minutes, and no language can describe the animation and excitement of the conflict, or worthily record the deeds of daring performed by the gallant assailants, who, when landed with their huge victim, could scarcely be recognised, being stained with gore and mud, drenched with sea water, and breathless and exhausted with the glorious strife. The Caledonian Mercury says:—"We can assure the lovers of sport that horse racing, steeple chasing, and driving even the Defiance coach—nay, the Spanish bull fight itself—are all as nothing when compared with the smiling of one of the gigantic guardsmen of Neptune's throne. Van Amburgh himself would have preferred the job to the taming of lions, and the teaching of tigers to be amiable and polite." The whale was 51 feet in length.

Take a lord, now, and visit him to his country seat, and I'll tell you what you will find—a sort of Washington State-house place. It is either a rail old castle of the genuine kind, or a gingerbread crinkum-crankum imitation of a thing that only existed in fancy, but never was seen afore—a thing that's made modern for use, and in ancient style for show; or else it is a great, cold, formal slice of a London terrace, stuck on a hill to a wood. Well, there is a lawn, park, artificial pond called a lake, deer that's fashionabilized and civilized, and as little natur in 'em as the humans have. Kennel and hounds for persicutin' foxes; preserves (not what we call preserves, quinces and apple-sarce, and preserves done in sugar, but preserves for breeding tame partridges and pheasants to shoot at), b'aviaries, hive-eries, h'yew-veria, hothouses, and so on; for they put an "h" before every word do these critters, and then tell us Yankees we don't speak English.—Sam Slick in England.

At Udina, in Friule, a poor man suffering under the agonising tortures of hydrophobia, was cured with draughts of vinegar given him by mistake, instead of another potion. A physician at Padua got intelligence of this event, and tried the same remedy upon a patient at the hospital, administering a pound of vinegar in the morning, another at noon, and a third at sunset, and the man was speedily and perfectly cured.



THE REVIEW IN HYDE PARK.—FORMING SQUARES.

ASSAAD Y KAYAT.

The annexed is a portrait of that truly philantrophic Syrian, Assaad Y. Kayat, who, under the auspices of the Church of England Society for Promoting Christian Education in Syria, has lately delivered gratuitous lectures in London, in the English language, with the object of promoting this laudable design.

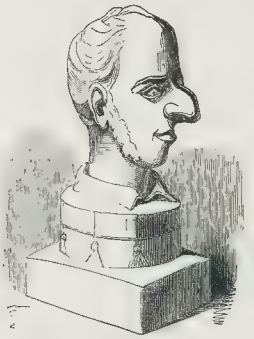
Assaad first visited this country in 1835, in the suite of the two Persian princes, who, at that time, attracted much attention; and he did so at the recommendation of Mr. Farren, then British Consul-General in Syria, and who, being struck with the extraordinary religious enthusiasm evinced by this young man, as regarded the prosperate condition of the Syrian Christians—who approach the nearest of any others (and indeed with scarcely any difference,) to the English Protestant Church—was thus instrumental in affording Assaad the opportunity of bringing the subject before the British public.

His views are warmly supported by the Bishop of London, the Earl of Chichester, Lord F. Egerton, Lord Bexley, and many other eminent persons, who are vice-presidents of the society. For the present state of Syria, it is considered that the best plan for ameliorating the condition of the Syrian Christian Church, is by affording education to its youth; and schools have already been established at Beyrout, where 600 pupils are educated, while eight young Syrians are now receiving education in or near London.

PORTRAIT OF ASSAAD Y KAYAT.

It is very remarkable that a remnant of the primitive Christian Church, as established by the Apostles, has continued to exist to the present day in Syria, as also that its chief cities, such as Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Damascus, Antioch, &c., remain under the exact names by which they were known in the time of our Saviour, notwithstanding the repeated attempts which have been made to extirpate the religion and to change the names of the cities. This fact is unparalleled in the history of any other nation or community whatever.

The whole subject cannot fail of being especially interesting to all thinking Christians, at a time too when this country has recently sent a Protestant bishop to Jerusalem, under whose superintendence a Protestant Church is now erecting in that city.



TAMBURINI (AFTER DANTAN).

There must be something innately belligerent in this accomplished artiste, for go where he will he has a quarrel, or something very like it, with his entrepreneur. He has just had a meritatelligence with the manager of the Marseilles theatre, and relinquished his engagement. Dantan, the Gallic Cruikshank, seems to have been quite aware of this propensity of the inward man when he made the above draught of the vocal drummer.

THE YACHT EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.—A passenger by the Havre steamer reports having fallen in with one of the divisions of this squadron, consisting of seven sail (cutters), which happened to be manœuvring when they were passed. When first seen the division was closehauled on the starboard tack. A signal was flying. The headmost yacht put about, her second astern continued her course for some little distance, then tacked, and the third yacht, followed in succession by all the remainder, did the same, so that the division next appeared on the larboard tack in bow and quarter line. The leading yacht soon made another signal, and all the yachts kept away a little, edging down, till they got into the wake of the leader, thus again, as at first, forming in line ahead, closehauled. In ten minutes, or thereabouts, more bunting was abroad, and the whole division tacked and retacked to ge her, commencing the two motions of this manœuvre at the very moment when a gun was discharged by the headmost vessel. The sternmost yacht (which mounted four brass swivels) next bore to; making sail again when the division had passed on ahead to perhaps four cables' length, when the next sternmost yacht did the same, and so also the others throughout the line, from rear to van, which brought the whole into open order. A long communication then took place by telegraph, and, when last seen, the yachts, which had shown no ensigns, were standing towards the French coast, formed in two columns in line ahead.

TEETOTAL FESTIVAL AT ROCHE ABBEY.

This interesting fête was held on Tuesday the 18th instant, in the grounds of Roche Abbey, by permission of the noble owner, the Earl of Scarborough; when the picturesque scene represented in the engraving was sketched by a correspondent. The meeting was addressed by several able speakers from a platform erected at the east end of the Abbey, where was displayed a banner bearing a painting of Father Mathew addressing the Irish people. The festival was attended by several persons in carriages, which were gaily decked with flags and garlands of flowers; whilst three bands of music from neighbouring towns played several beautiful airs. In the afternoon a somewhat ludicrous incident occurred to one of the retailers of Sir John Barleycorn, who had brought for sale a cartload of strong drink (contrary to the injunction of the teetotallers); and, while he was preparing to wait on his customers, the horse suddenly took fright, and upset the cart, and all the drink into the river, which proved a source of much merriment to the teetotallers.

CANAL ACROSS THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.

At a recent meeting of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, M. Arago made a communication of the steps that have been taken towards the great work of the cutting through the Isthmus of Panamá, which has been so long talked of, but which many persons have regarded as chimerical. According to this communication, a contract has been entered into by Messrs. Baring and Co., of London, with the Republic of New Grenada, in virtue of which the republic is to cede to them the line required for the projected canal, with 80,000 acres of land on the two banks, and 400,000 acres in the interior of the country. Messrs. Baring and Co. had, it is said, in the first instance, fixed the amount of toll for the navigation of the canal at the exorbitant price of 18f. per ton, but they have reduced it to 8f. The work, upon which from 4000 to 5000 men are to be employed, will be completed in five years.

The Isthmus of Panamá, the reader will recollect, constitutes the most eastern and the narrowest portion of the long isthmus or neck of land by which the two Americas are united. Its geographical position will, however, be best illustrated by the annexed chart. When measured along its curve, the length from east to west is nearly 500 miles, but its width varies from 30 to 100 miles. It may cover a surface of about 30,000 square miles, or considerably more than the extent of Ireland. It contains several considerable towns, the capital of the isthmus being the city of Panamá, beautifully situated upon the shores of the Pacific. It was formerly a place of some note: but, shortly after the visit of Ulloa, about a century ago, it may be said to have reached its zenith. The remains of the buildings evince wealth; but they are now fast falling into decay. The port is seldom visited by vessels of any size, and the fortifications, which originally were admirably constructed, are rapidly following the fate of the houses. The population is chiefly a mixed race: few Spaniards are to be found. One Englishman and the American consular agent comprised all the society met here by Sir Edward Belcher during his visit in 1836; but, Sir Edward prophetically adds, "this, doubtless, will change the instant the steam navigation is in force. Inns and lodging-houses must then arise for the accommodation of those pursuing this route. There is every facility for erecting a substantial pier, and improving the inner anchorage, which must follow the arrival of the steamers, unless they still submit to the miserable landing at the seaport-gate, which is as filthy as it is inconvenient. Panamá affords the usual supplies which are to be obtained in these tropical regions, and at moderate prices; but vessels wishing to procure water, bullocks, &c., can obtain them more readily at the island of Taboga." We should here acknowledge our obligation to Sir Edward Belcher's important narrative of his voyage for the originals of the annexed illustrations.

VIEW OF PANAMA.

Panamá stands on a tongue of land shaped nearly like a spear-head, extending a considerable distance out to sea, and gradually swelling towards the middle. The principal streets extend across the peninsula from sea to sea. The houses are of stone, and the larger ones have courts. The public edifices are, a cathedral, four convents, a nunnery, and a college. In 1827 the town had nearly 11,000 inhabitants, and it carried on a considerable trade with several ports of South America, especially with Guayaquil.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE;

OR

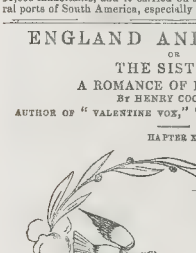
THE SISTERS.

A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

By HENRY COCKTON,

AUTHOR OF "VALENTINE VOX," "STANLEY THORN," ETC.

CHAPTER XVIII.



It will not in all probability, appear marvellous that Darnley should have expected Caroline to visit him that morning; but, however it may appear, it is a fact that he did expect her, and that, in order to receive her at once, he had been cautiously pacing the front ward for hours. When, therefore, she tremulously inquired at the judge for Mr. Darnley, she to rakey immediately pointed him out, and before she had time to descend the steps Darnley approached her

"My dear Lady Loveland," he exclaimed, with an expression of mingled amazement and shame. "what could have induced you to visit me here?"

"Your note. But can we not retire? Those persons are watching us."

"Highly as I appreciate your goodness," said Darnley, with his eyes filled with tears which he had always at command, "I wish that you had spared me the humiliating sight."

"Come, come," said Caroline, "all will be well. I have scarcely a moment to stay, but for heaven's sake lead me from this crowd."

Darnley then placed her arm in his, and proceeded to a room which was neatly though scantily furnished, and having led her to a clear near the window, which overlooked the racquet ground, seated himself opposite and sighed.

"Mr Darnley," said Caroline, "I feel may I know that I have done very wrong in coming here, but my object is to ascertain why I may not mention this affair to Sir Arthur."

"I would not have known it for the world" replied Darnley.

"Why not? I am sure there is no man on earth whom he would feel greater pleasure in serving" Why should he not know?"

"Because I should then be for ever deprived, Lady Cleveland, of your sweet society."

"Mr. Darnley," said Caroline, somewhat confused, "let us speak to the point."

"That is the point," repeated Darnley, "you know the sensibility of your own sex, but you do not, cannot know the unmanliness of mine. For have no conception of the change which is produced in the mind of a man by the knowledge of anything like pecuniary embarrassment being reduced to poverty. It is an instantaneous transformation. Even in the midst of a benevolent man, friendship in such a case turns to pity, and pity soon resolves itself into contempt."

"If you imagine, Mr. Darnley, that any such feelings would result from Sir Arthur's knowledge of your position, you do not know him. He would feel pious to render you whatever assistance you might require. Be sure of it."

"I am sure, perfectly sure, that if he knew my position, he would aid me; but as I am not sure that his esteem for me would outlive such aid, I would not place in peril that happiness, of which his friendship is the source, for the world."

"Mr Darnley, he assured that his friendship for you would be firmer than ever."

"I cannot see, assured Lady Cleveland, of that. I am so apprehensive of losing his esteem, that I rest in an agony of suspense. I am aware that, however it to knowing where I am besides, there is no necessity for running so great a risk. The sum is not enormous.—it is but three hundred pounds!—and I have no doubt that the magistrate Goode that I shall be able at a short time to raise it."

"But of that you are not sure; and until it is raised you must remain in this horrid place. Now let me prevail upon you to allow me to name it? To him the sum is nothing! He would send a cheque for it with pleasure and would feel annoyed only in consequence of your not having sent to him before. Let me therefore speak to him at once."

"Do not urge me, Lady Cleveland: pray do not urge me to consent. I am sorry, very sorry, that in a moment of weakness I was induced to yield to you. Of my being here, I should not have done it: believe me I should not have done it—but that I felt apprehensive that you might, perhaps——"

"Darnley!" exclaimed Caroline, with an energy which amazed while it delighted him, "You must not, shall not, remain in this place."

"Darnley!" re-echoed, apparently much affected "You call me 'Darnley.' Thy day on which I have call you 'Caroline' will be one of happiness indeed."

Caroline blushed. The consciousness of having confessed that which she had been anxious to conceal, embarrassed her painfully. Recovering herself, however, almost on the instant, she observed, 'All I mean, Mr Darnley, was this, that neither you nor any other friend shall remain in a place like this, while I have the power to prevent it."

"I beg of you, my dear Lady Cleveland, to think nothing of it. I do not intend to remain. In a few weeks I shall be a free man."

"Why not before at once? I am not quite sure that I ought not, even without your consent, to name the subject to Sir Arthur!"

"My dear Lady Cleveland, I entreat but you will not. I would trust you with my life—nay, I have already trusted you with that which is dearer to me than life—and therefore I cannot be apprehensive of that secret being revealed. You will not disclose it?"

"Mr Darnley, I will not. But something must be done"

"And something will be done," thought Darnley, "without much delay."

"However," continued Caroline, rising, "I must leave you now, but you shall either directly or indirectly hear from me soon."

"I cannot know how to thank you for this kind visit; I know not how to express to you the gratitude I feel, but that I do feel grateful I beg of you to believe. And now I must say farewell: but I have still one favour to ask a favour which, if granted, will make me happy"

"What is it?"

"It is," replied Darnley, bending his knee gracefully and kissing her hand, "that you will not for, offended at this."

"I sincerely know," said Caroline, "whether I am offended or not. I must take time to consider."

Darnley then accompanied her to the lodge, and after playfully apologising for his manifest want of gallantry in not even attempting to see her to the carriage, he blessed her, and fervently bade her adieu.

Approving that her servants might think her prolonged absence somewhat strange, Caroline entered the market, and having hastily purchased two immense bouquets, directed the man to follow her with them to the carriage. She felt that these would sufficiently account for her absence, and congratulated herself upon her tact in this particular; and when she had given the word "home," the carriage turned, and in the usual style dashed up Fleet street.

Sir Arthur—who was still at the window, although his patience had been for a long time exhausted—no sooner saw the carriage dash past, than he left the hotel and hastened to the Fleet.

He had been there before, and therefore knew how to enter; but as he passed through the lodge the first person upon whom his eye rested was Darnley, conversing with one of the turnkeys.

"Oh!" groaned Sir Arthur in a state of intense agitation, "it is as I expected: you are here Has lodge has Lady Cleveland left you?"

"Sir Arthur," said Darnley, who could not for the moment collect those faculties which his friend's unexpected appearance had scattered. "will you do me the favour to step this way?"

"No, sir! I wish to hold no conversation with you at all. Answer my question and I have done with you. How long has Lady Cleveland been gone?"

"Really, Sir Arthur, this excitement is totally uncalled for! Do me the favour to walk into the yard and I'll explain."

"I wish for no explanation," cried Sir Arthur while descending the steps: "you would deny"—he could not proceed, carried away by his passion—"I know you would: you could you would say that she has been here at all. But no, sir —that will not do!—I am not to be deceived, sir!—I know that she has—deny it, sir!—deny it, if you can."

"I have really no wish to deny it. Why should I deny it? She has been here, and with the purest and most honourable motives that ever actuated woman."

"Liked!" cried Sir Arthur with a sneer, of which the expression seemed to shake his whole frame—"Indeed,—You are a villain!" he added, foaming with rage, and shaking his fists with great violence—"a villain! a treacherous villain. I could strangle you! crush you —triangle upon you—I could tear you like a dog!"

Here his voice became so loud, and his gestures so violent, that the prisoners crowded round, and appeared to enjoy the scene highly. One of them, what Sir Arthur was explaining was what he could do, lifted his hat up behind and let the front part fall over his eyes, but Darnley so soon saw that feat performed, that he flew at the fellow and struck him to the ground. "He may insult me, and I may bear it," he exclaimed, "but I'll not allow him to be insulted—Sir Arthur," he added, "I am not the villain you suppose. You either deceive yourself, or have been deceived."

"I have been deceived," said Sir Arthur, returning to the gate, "I have been deceived—I have—I have."

"But hear me explain?"

"I'll have no explanation. It is already too clear—too clear" And as the turnkey opened the gate at this moment, he passed out in tears, leaving Darnley so enraged at not having been allowed to explain that he instantly returned to the unhappy prisoner who had snatched Sir Arthur's hat, and inflicted upon him a chastisement so severe, that in less than three minutes his every feature was buried in one obscene mass of pulpy bruises.

How he gained the prison, Sir Arthur, being then in a state of most violent agitation, knew not what course to pursue. That Caroline was false he now no longer doubted. He felt sure of it.—perfectly sure But then, how was he to act? Should he return to his own residence, and there, in solitude, endeavour to forget her as soon as he could—or more? To whom could he apply for advice in this dreadful emergency?—warm, noble, generous Charles! Charles! he exclaimed in tones of agony, "what would I not give, my poor boy, to have you here"

Being utterly irresolute and nearly exhausted, he returned to the hotel with the view of deciding upon something, but here his mind continued to be so distracted that he was unable to bring it to bear upon any one point. He sat absorbed in a horrible trance: his wandering memory recalled, with a thousand fancies, his folly, his utterly base affection, jealousy, peace of mind, everything so valued upon earth seemed to have vanished, and therefore, having in his own estimation no life for he felt it would be happiness to die. He had often marvelled how the mind of a man could become so unstrung as to cause him to prefer death to life; he had often looked upon those who contemplated suicide, when not under the influence of delirious madness, with contempt: he had often regarded the entertainment of despair as a proof of the most despicable weakness, wondering that man who did groan beneath the weight of mental misery, instead of bearing bodily up against them But these things appeared no longer marvellous to him then, he could then understand well how a man's mind might be destroyed, how it is spots might sink, how his energies, both moral and personal, might be prostrated, and how despair might rise upon the ruins of hope all having, as he conceived, been in his own case proved.

Reasons himself at length, however, into a more wretched review, he resolved to return home, and demand an explanation, but more with the view of causing known he conviction, than with the hope, however, pausing the process might be, of having that conviction removed.

It was then past the hour at which they usually dined, and Caroline had been wondering what had detained him. She, of course, had no idea of having been watched, that never occurred to her for a moment; she was therefore anxious for him to return, and the more so, because she intended to be particularly affectionate, as a means of obtaining with facility the sum required to set Darnley free. This sum had determined to effect on the morrow, and was engaged in making certain calculations touching the bale which might remain unpaid for a time when Sir Arthur returned

"My dear" were the words, as he entered the room, "where on earth have you been?"

"Where have I been" cried Sir Arthur, regarding her fiercely for a moment, "where have you been, madam?"

"Madam" echoed Caroline, who became on the instant pale as death; "Why do you call me madam?"

"Where have you been?"

"Where have I been."

"Ay, where? I insist upon knowing!"

"You do. I must upon being addressed as your wife, sir, and not as madam!"

"I again demand to know where you have been" cried Sir Arthur, whose agitation now every moment increased.

"And again," returned Caroline proudly, "I demand to know why you call me madam?"

"Whom whom have you been this morning to visit?"

"Where, sir, you have satisfied, but not until then."

"I am resolved to know, madam!"

"Indeed. Sir Arthur Cleveland," she added, with a haughty expression, if you believe that I will endure these and gnashes, if you believe that I will submit to be thus insolently schooled, you will find that belief to be baseless. Why do you treat me thus?"

"Ask your own heart!"

"I ask you! Why am I thus treated? What is it you mean? Why do you not explain like a man?"

"Why do you refuse to explain?"

"I will not explain until I know your motive. What is that motive?"

"Oh, Caroline! Caroline!" exclaimed Sir Arthur, in a voice indicative of strong emotion.

"Oh! me not Caroline, Sir Arthur Cleveland!—do not presume to call me Caroline until your base conduct has been explained. Base is the meaning of this!"

"Lady Loveland, are you not a false woman?"

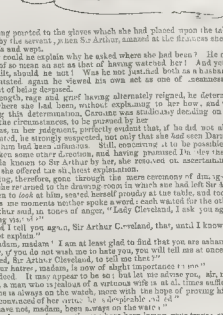
"NO! But you are an odious old man! Often have I been told that you were jealous—often! but I never believed it till now. It is now clear, abundantly clear! I will not, however, stay here to be insulted."

"You do not quit this room, Lady Cleveland," cried Sir Arthur, as she prepared with an air of offended dignity to leave him—"you do not sir! I will

"Sir!" exclaimed Caroline, turning upon him, who her lip curled contemptuously, and her eyes flashed with fiery indignation, "I do not will! I swear, Sir Arthur Cleveland," she added, as she calmly returned and rang the bell. "I dine. You remain and feed your loud imagination, when that is gratified, you may perhaps be restored to reason. Is the Lunch on the table?" she inquired of the servant as she entered.

"It is now being brought up, my lady."

"Very well. Sir Arthur does not dine to-day. Bring my gloves."



Having pointed to the gloves which she had placed upon the table, she left the room, followed by the servant, upon Sir Arthur, amazed at the firmness she had displayed, sank upon the sofa and wept.

How could he explain why he asked where she had been? He could not confess himself guilty of so mean an act as that of having watched her! And yet why, being of innocence of her guilt, should he not? Was he not justified both as a husband and a man? Anon he hesitated again he viewed his own act as one of meanness, and could not bear the thought of being despised.

At length rage and grief having alternately reigned, he determined on stating that he knew where she had been, without explaining to her how, and while he was engaged in forming this determination, the servant entered to announce that dinner was on the table under the circumstances, to be pressed by her

It was, in her judgment, perfectly evident that, if he did not absolutely know where she had visited, he suspected, not only that she had seen Darnley, but that her object in seeing him had been offensive. Still, convinced it to be possible that his jealous thoughts might take some other direction, and having promised Darnley that his position would not be made known to Sir Arthur by her, she resolved on ascertaining the fact beyond doubt before she offered the slightest explanation.

Having, therefore, gone through the mere ceremony of dining—and a mere ceremony it was she returned to the drawing-room to which she had left Sir Arthur, and without deigning even to look at him, rang for brandy at the table, and took up a book.

For a few moments neither spoke a word: each waited for the other to begin, but at length Sir Arthur said, in tones of rage, "Lady Cleveland, I ask you again whom you have this morning visited?"

"And I tell you again, Sir Arthur Cleveland, that, until I know your motive in asking, I will not explain."

"Madam, madam! I am at least glad to find that you are ashamed to tell me."

"Sir, if you do not leave the room this moment, you will tell me at once what you mean. Are you ashamed, Sir Arthur Cleveland, to tell me this?"

"Your horror, madam, is one of slight importance to me."

"Indeed It may appear to be so; but let me advise you, sir, not to provoke it. Heaven knows, a man who is jealous of a virtuous wife is at all times sufficiently contemptible; but when he is always on the watch, more with the hope of proving his wife's dishonour than of being convinced of her virtue, he is despicable and vile"

"I have not, madam, been always on the watch"

"You have, sir—for months you have been laying your traps; and I despise you for it. I was told of your miserable jealousy long ago"

"By whom, madam? Name one person?"

"I will name, my aunt Grange perceived it. She told me of it: and hence, believing it to be false, I have feared her ever since. But my eyes are open now, I now perceive that I am allied to a jealous husband, the greatest curse with which a virtuous woman can be afflicted."

"If I am jealous, madam, have you not given me cause to be so?"

"What cause have I given? Tell me that!"

"Darnley," replied Sir Arthur, with a bitter sneer, "has been absent some time. His visits here have been discontinued. The cry has been, 'What has become of Darnley?' Nb visits here have been discontinued. The cry has been, 'What has become of Darnley?' No one knows where Darnley was! but Lady Cleveland —she knew all along where to find her friend Darnley."

"It is false, sir. I did not know all along where to find him."

"Have you not been to him this very day? I know that you have, therefore do not deny it!"

"Deny it! Why should I deny it? I have been to see him—what then?"

"Shameless woman, you confess!"

"Shameless! Why shame—?"

"Shameless to confess to me your guilt, without a blush."

"Wretch" exclaimed Caroline, darting a look of fury at him. "Odious old man! were it not that my own reputation is at stake I would torture you! I would suffer your infamous threats to engender others still more vile, and, by giving free scope to your diseased imagination, keep you for ever on the rack!"

"This passionate bearing, madam, will avail you nothing. Your guilt is manifest. I have seen the villain since! But instead of wasting words on so wicked a woman, I will go to your father at once."

"Go, sir, to Lady Cleveland, at your peril. Mention a syllable on the subject to any living soul, and that instant I leave you for ever. My honour is unsullied I can prove it to be so; and until I do prove it, sir, speak if you dare."

"Have you not been constantly visiting that villain?"

"No, sir, never till this day Now do I believe him to be a villain. I knew not where he was until this very morning, as I'll prove to you by showing his note."

"Why did he not write to me?"

"Because he could not. Here it is. But recollect, Sir Arthur Cleveland, I do not show it merely to satisfy you. Look at the date, and then at the postscript."

Sir Arthur took the note and read it with all the calmness he could assume, and certainly he saw nothing in it indicative of guilt. "My dear Lady Cleveland" was warm, yet it was but the common acknowledgment of a friend, while the fact of his being anxious to let us few pecuniary embarrassment was no proof that he was actuated was nothing but natural. He surely could have wronged her.

"On receiving this note," resumed Caroline, when Sir Arthur had returned it, "I, believing that you respected him, went to that dreadful place for the purpose of ascertaining why he would not allow me to let you know where he was. I told him not knowing you as well as I know you now that you would be happy to aid him, and begged of him to let you know how he was circumstanced, conceiving that you were actuated by more manly feelings than Charles! Charles!" he exclaimed in tones of agony, "what would I not give, my poor boy, to have you here"

Being utterly irresolute and nearly exhausted, he returned to the hotel with the view of deciding upon something, but here his mind continued to be so distracted that he was unable to bring it to bear upon any one point. He sat absorbed in a horrible trance: his wandering memory recalled, with a thousand fancies, his folly, his utterly base affection, jealousy, peace of mind, everything so valued upon earth seemed to have vanished, and therefore, having in his own estimation no life for he felt it would be happiness to die. He had often marvelled how the mind of a man could become so unstrung as to cause him to prefer death to life; he had often looked upon those who contemplated suicide, when not under the influence of delirious madness, with contempt: he had often regarded the entertainment of despair as a proof of the most despicable weakness, wondering that man who did groan beneath the weight of mental misery, instead of bearing bodily up against them But these things appeared no longer marvellous to him then, he could then understand well how a man's mind might be destroyed, how it is spots might sink, how his energies, both moral and personal, might be prostrated, and how despair might rise upon the ruins of hope all having, as he conceived, been in his own case proved.

Reasons himself at length, however, into a more wretched review, he resolved to return home, and demand an explanation, but more with the view of causing known his conviction, than with the hope, however, pausing the process might be, of having that conviction removed.

It was then past the hour at which they usually dined, and Caroline had been wondering what had detained him. She, of course, had no idea of having been watched, that never occurred to her for a moment; she was therefore anxious for him to return, and the more so, because she intended to be particularly affectionate, as a means of obtaining with facility the sum required to set Darnley free. This sum had determined to effect on the morrow, and was engaged in making certain calculations touching the bale which might remain unpaid for a time when Sir Arthur returned

"My dear" were the words, as he entered the room, "where on earth have you been?"

"Where have I been" cried Sir Arthur, regarding her fiercely for a moment, "where have you been, madam?"

"Madam" echoed Caroline, who became on the instant pale as death; "Why do you call me madam?"

"Where have you been?"

"Where have I been."

"Ay, where? I insist upon knowing!"

"You do. I must upon being addressed as your wife, sir, and not as madam!"

"I again demand to know where you have been" cried Sir Arthur, whose agitation now every moment increased.

"And again," returned Caroline proudly, "I demand to know why you call me madam?"

"Whom whom have you been this morning to visit?"

"Where, sir, you have satisfied, but not until then."

"I am resolved to know, madam!"

"Indeed. Sir Arthur Cleveland," she added, with a haughty expression, if you believe that I will endure these and gnashes, if you believe that I will submit to be thus insolently schooled, you will find that belief to be baseless. Why do you treat me thus?"

"Ask your own heart!"

"I ask you! Why am I thus treated? What is it you mean? Why do you not explain like a man?"

"Why do you refuse to explain?"

"I will not explain until I know your motive. What is that motive?"

"Oh, Caroline! Caroline!" exclaimed Sir Arthur, in a voice indicative of strong emotion.

"Oh! me not Caroline, Sir Arthur Cleveland!—do not presume to call me Caroline until your base conduct has been explained. Base is the meaning of this!"

"Lady Loveland, are you not a false woman?"

"NO! But you are an odious old man! Often have I been told that you were jealous—often! but I never believed it till now. It is now clear, abundantly clear! I will not, however, stay here to be insulted."

"You do not quit this room, Lady Cleveland," cried Sir Arthur, as she prepared with an air of offended dignity to leave him—"you do not sir! I will

"Sir!" exclaimed Caroline, turning upon him, who her lip curled contemptuously, and her eyes flashed with fiery indignation, "I do not will! I swear, Sir Arthur Cleveland," she added, as she calmly returned and rang the bell. "I dine. You remain and feed your loud imagination, when that is gratified, you may perhaps be restored to reason. Is the Lunch on the table?" she inquired of the servant as she entered.

"It is now being brought up, my lady."

"Very well. Sir Arthur does not dine to-day. Bring my gloves."

Having pointed to the gloves which she had placed upon the table, she left the room, followed by the servant, upon Sir Arthur, amazed at the firmness she had displayed, sank upon the sofa and wept.

How could he explain why he asked where she had been? He could not confess himself guilty of so mean an act as that of having watched her! And yet why, being of innocence of her guilt, should he not? Was he not justified both as a husband and a man? Anon he hesitated again he viewed his own act as one of meanness, and could not bear the thought of being despised.

At length rage and grief having alternately reigned, he determined on stating that he knew where she had been, without explaining to her how, and while he was engaged in forming this determination, the servant entered to announce that dinner was on the table under the circumstances, to be pressed by her

It was, in her judgment, perfectly evident that, if he did not absolutely know where she had visited, he suspected, not only that she had seen Darnley, but that her object in seeing him had been offensive. Still, convinced it to be possible that his jealous thoughts might take some other direction, and having promised Darnley that his position would not be made known to Sir Arthur by her, she resolved on ascertaining the fact beyond doubt before she offered the slightest explanation.

Having, therefore, gone through the mere ceremony of dining—and a mere ceremony it was she returned to the drawing-room to which she had left Sir Arthur, and without deigning even to look at him, rang for brandy at the table, and took up a book.

For a few moments neither spoke a word: each waited for the other to begin, but at length Sir Arthur said, in tones of rage, "Lady Cleveland, I ask you again whom you have this morning visited?"

"And I tell you again, Sir Arthur Cleveland, that, until I know your motive in asking, I will not explain."

"Madam, madam! I am at least glad to find that you are ashamed to tell me."

"Sir, if you do not leave the room this moment, you will tell me at once what you mean. Are you ashamed, Sir Arthur Cleveland, to tell me this?"

"Your horror, madam, is one of slight importance to me."

"Indeed It may appear to be so; but let me advise you, sir, not to provoke it. Heaven knows, a man who is jealous of a virtuous wife is at all times sufficiently contemptible; but when he is always on the watch, more with the hope of proving his wife's dishonour than of being convinced of her virtue, he is despicable and vile"

"I have not, madam, been always on the watch"

"You have, sir—for months you have been laying your traps; and I despise you for it. I was told of your miserable jealousy long ago"

"By whom, madam? Name one person?"

"I will name, my aunt Grange perceived it. She told me of it: and hence, believing it to be false, I have feared her ever since. But my eyes are open now, I now perceive that I am allied to a jealous husband, the greatest curse with which a virtuous woman can be afflicted."

"If I am jealous, madam, have you not given me cause to be so?"

"What cause have I given? Tell me that!"

"Darnley," replied Sir Arthur, with a bitter sneer, "has been absent some time. His visits here have been discontinued. The cry has been, 'What has become of Darnley?' No one knows where Darnley was! but Lady Cleveland —she knew all along where to find her friend Darnley."

"It is false, sir. I did not know all along where to find him."

"Have you not been to him this very day? I know that you have, therefore do not deny it!"

"Deny it! Why should I deny it? I have been to see him—what then?"

"Shameless woman, you confess!"

"Shameless! Why shame—?"

"Shameless to confess to me your guilt, without a blush."

"Wretch" exclaimed Caroline, darting a look of fury at him. "Odious old man! were it not that my own reputation is at stake I would torture you! I would suffer your infamous threats to engender others still more vile, and, by giving free scope to your diseased imagination, keep you for ever on the rack!"

"This passionate bearing, madam, will avail you nothing. Your guilt is manifest. I have seen the villain since! But instead of wasting words on so wicked a woman, I will go to your father at once."

"Go, sir, to Lady Cleveland, at your peril. Mention a syllable on the subject to any living soul, and that instant I leave you for ever. My honour is unsullied I can prove it to be so; and until I do prove it, sir, speak if you dare."

"Have you not been constantly visiting that villain?"

"No, sir, never till this day Now do I believe him to be a villain. I knew not where he was until this very morning, as I'll prove to you by showing his note."

"Why did he not write to me?"

"Because he could not. Here it is. But recollect, Sir Arthur Cleveland, I do not show it merely to satisfy you. Look at the date, and then at the postscript."

Sir Arthur took the note and read it with all the calmness he could assume, and certainly he saw nothing in it indicative of guilt. "My dear Lady Cleveland" was warm, yet it was but the common acknowledgment of a friend, while the fact of his being anxious to let us few pecuniary embarrassment was no proof that he was actuated was nothing but natural. He surely could have wronged her.

"On receiving this note," resumed Caroline, when Sir Arthur had returned it, "I, believing that you respected him, went to that dreadful place for the purpose of ascertaining why he would not allow me to let you know where he was. I told him not knowing you as well as I know you now that you would be happy to aid him, and begged of him to let you know how he was circumstanced, conceiving that you were actuated by more manly feelings than Charles! Charles!" he exclaimed in tones of agony, "what would I not give, my poor boy, to have you here"

Being utterly irresolute and nearly exhausted, he returned to the hotel with the view of deciding upon something, but here his mind continued to be so distracted that he was unable to bring it to bear upon any one point. He sat absorbed in a horrible trance: his wandering memory recalled, with a thousand fancies, his folly, his utterly base affection, jealousy, peace of mind, everything so valued upon earth seemed to have vanished, and therefore, having in his own estimation no life for he felt it would be happiness to die. He had often marvelled how the mind of a man could become so unstrung as to cause him to prefer death to life; he had often looked upon those who contemplated suicide, when not under the influence of delirious madness, with contempt: he had often regarded the entertainment of despair as a proof of the most despicable weakness, wondering that man who did groan beneath the weight of mental misery, instead of bearing bodily up against them But these things appeared no longer marvellous to him then, he could then understand well how a man's mind might be destroyed, how it is spots might sink, how his energies, both moral and personal, might be prostrated, and how despair might rise upon the ruins of hope all having, as he conceived, been in his own case proved.

Reasons himself at length, however, into a more wretched review, he resolved to return home, and demand an explanation, but more with the view of causing known his conviction, than with the hope, however, pausing the process might be, of having that conviction removed.

It was then past the hour at which they usually dined, and Caroline had been wondering what had detained him. She, of course, had no idea of having been watched, that never occurred to her for a moment; she was therefore anxious for him to return, and the more so, because she intended to be particularly affectionate, as a means of obtaining with facility the sum required to set Darnley free. This sum had determined to effect on the morrow, and was engaged in making certain calculations touching the bale which might remain unpaid for a time when Sir Arthur returned

"My dear" were the words, as he entered the room, "where on earth have you been?"

"Where have I been" cried Sir Arthur, regarding her fiercely for a moment, "where have you been, madam?"

"Madam" echoed Caroline, who became on the instant pale as death; "Why do you call me madam?"

"Where have you been?"

"Where have I been."

"Ay, where? I insist upon knowing!"

"You do. I must upon being addressed as your wife, sir, and not as madam!"

"I again demand to know where you have been" cried Sir Arthur, whose agitation now every moment increased.

"And again," returned Caroline proudly, "I demand to know why you call me madam?"

"Whom whom have you been this morning to visit?"

"Where, sir, you have satisfied, but not until then."

"I am resolved to know, madam!"

"Indeed. Sir Arthur Cleveland," she added, with a haughty expression, if you believe that I will endure these and gnashes, if you believe that I will submit to be thus insolently schooled, you will find that belief to be baseless. Why do you treat me thus?"

"Ask your own heart!"

"I ask you! Why am I thus treated? What is it you mean? Why do you not explain like a man?"

"Why do you refuse to explain?"

"I will not explain until I know your motive. What is that motive?"

"Oh, Caroline! Caroline!" exclaimed Sir Arthur, in a voice indicative of strong emotion.

"Oh! me not Caroline, Sir Arthur Cleveland!—do not presume to call me Caroline until your base conduct has been explained. Base is the meaning of this!"

"Lady Loveland, are you not a false woman?"

"NO! But you are an odious old man! Often have I been told that you were jealous—often! but I never believed it till now. It is now clear, abundantly clear! I will not, however, stay here to be insulted."

"You do not quit this room, Lady Cleveland," cried Sir Arthur, as she prepared with an air of offended dignity to leave him—"you do not sir! I will

"Sir!" exclaimed Caroline, turning upon him, who her lip curled contemptuously, and her eyes flashed with fiery indignation, "I do not will! I swear, Sir Arthur Cleveland," she added, as she calmly returned and rang the bell. "I dine. You remain and feed your loud imagination, when that is gratified, you may perhaps be restored to reason. Is the Lunch on the table?" she inquired of the servant as she entered.

"It is now being brought up, my lady."

"Very well. Sir Arthur does not dine to-day. Bring my gloves."

Having pointed to the gloves which she had placed upon the table, she left the room, followed by the servant, upon Sir Arthur, amazed at the firmness she had displayed, sank upon the sofa and wept.

How could he explain why he asked where she had been? He could not confess himself guilty of so mean an act as that of having watched her! And yet why, being of innocence of her guilt, should he not? Was he not justified both as a husband and a man? Anon he hesitated again he viewed his own act as one of meanness, and could not bear the thought of being despised.

At length rage and grief having alternately reigned, he determined on stating that he knew where she had been, without explaining to her how, and while he was engaged in forming this determination, the servant entered to announce that dinner was on the table under the circumstances, to be pressed by her

It was, in her judgment, perfectly evident that, if he did not absolutely know where she had visited, he suspected, not only that she had seen Darnley, but that her object in seeing him had been offensive. Still, convinced it to be possible that his jealous thoughts might take some other direction, and having promised Darnley that his position would not be made known to Sir Arthur by her, she resolved on ascertaining the fact beyond doubt before she offered the slightest explanation.

Having, therefore, gone through the mere ceremony of dining—and a mere ceremony it was she returned to the drawing-room to which she had left Sir Arthur, and without deigning even to look at him, rang for brandy at the table, and took up a book.

For a few moments neither spoke a word: each waited for the other to begin, but at length Sir Arthur said, in tones of rage, "Lady Cleveland, I ask you again whom you have this morning visited?"

"And I tell you again, Sir Arthur Cleveland, that, until I know your motive in asking, I will not explain."

"Madam, madam! I am at least glad to find that you are ashamed to tell me."

"Sir, if you do not leave the room this moment, you will tell me at once what you mean. Are you ashamed, Sir Arthur Cleveland, to tell me this?"

"Your horror, madam, is one of slight importance to me."

"Indeed It may appear to be so; but let me advise you, sir, not to provoke it. Heaven knows, a man who is jealous of a virtuous wife is at all times sufficiently contemptible; but when he is always on the watch, more with the hope of proving his wife's dishonour than of being convinced of her virtue, he is despicable and vile"

"I have not, madam, been always on the watch"

"You have, sir—for months you have been laying your traps; and I despise you for it. I was told of your miserable jealousy long ago"

"By whom, madam? Name one person?"

"I will name, my aunt Grange perceived it. She told me of it: and hence, believing it to be false, I have feared her ever since. But my eyes are open now, I now perceive that I am allied to a jealous husband, the greatest curse with which a virtuous woman can be afflicted."

CHESS.

Solution to problem No. 32.

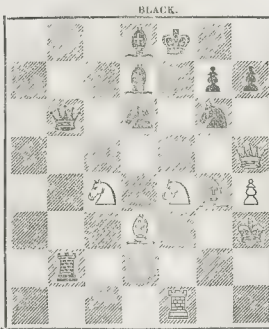
WHITE.	BLACK.
B checks	K takes B
P becomes Kt ch	K to his Q R 4th
P two squares, mating.

PROBLEM, No. 33.

(By W. B.)

White to mate in four moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

Solution in our next.

XII.

No signal-rockets rend the air,
With swift and showery light;
No cannon booms its dull despair
To wake the slumbering night.
On the near, near shore they do not know
Of the wast upon the wave;
And where one hundred hearts would glow,
Stirs not one limb to save!

XIII.

The labouring vessel works and groans
Amid the dismal surge,
That still keeps foaming, as she flits—
The steamer must submerge
With all her living freight beneath
The everlasting sea!
Another plunger in the depths
Of dark eternity!

XIV.

Lower and lower, fast she sinks
Upon her downward way,
While trembling spirits on her deck
Are kneeling there to pray!
God's preacher stands among them all
With awe-inspiring voice,
And in its last hope, bids the soul,
And in its best, rejoice!

XV.

Ah! mark the agonising woe—
The fearful spirits shrink!
The brave ones, with their faint sweet smiles,
As down to death they sink!
The sinful quiver; and the good
Cling hopefully to life,
With all of the heart's trustfulness,
And nothing of its strife!

XVI.

The bark is down! There is no sign,
Save mast-tops on the sea,
To tell it stemm'd the sunny wave,
One time, with buoyant glee!
How -like a child, o'er churchyard flow'rs
That skips—when on the wave
It dane'd upon the very thing
That shines above its grave!

XVII.

The bark is down! but up there rush
Fair living bodies still,
To struggle with the whelming wave,
To dare its mocking will!
Vain! vain! their strong wild agony—
Mad shrieks to surges cast—
The mighty sea has shrouds for all—
All! all! are drown'd at last!

XVIII.

All, save six feeble strugglers, whom
God saved to tell the tale—
"A coffin'd ship without a storm!
A wreck without a sail!"
Six creatures—mourning 'scapers from
The desolation spread—
Six living memories come to give Us records of the dead!

XIX.

* * * * *

Who left us?—Many of the good,
The beautiful—the young!
Fresh registered, Hope says, in Hea'rn,
Where angel harps are strung!
So be't:—'tis holy bliss to know
Their strains are all of love—
We pause o'er one "poor player" who now
May tread the stage above!

XX.

God cares for him, but we for those
Whom he has left behind.
Poor Elton!—all who knew him, knew
Him honest, just, and kind.
The widow's friend—the orphan's trust,
With these his soul had grown
To kindred—he is dead—but leaves
SEVEN fatherless and lone!

XXI.

Make we them kindred—pour we out
Affection's gentler love,
To bless the little crew below
Whose Captain's gone above!
Let us not see them wrecked, altho'
Their father found a grave
In ocean—let the world not whelm
His younglings in its wave!

XXII.

* * * * *

A memory for the perish'd ship!
A love-thought for the drown'd!
A prayer to God for all who sunk
Into the sea-profound!
And in the great bark of the world
May those who stride the deck,
Be ever warn'd of such a fate,
And armed for such a wreck!

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

LEEZ.—This great pianist is at present at Nonnenworth, near Bonne, busily employed in the composition of an opera.

THALBERG.—This rival (in some persons' opinions) of the preceding wonder, was married last Saturday, at St. James's church, to Madame Buchanl, a daughter of Lashiche. Thalberg was born at Geneva in 1812, and took his name from Baron Thalberg, one of the inferior titles of the father, Prince Dmitrichstein.

DUPREZ.—We regret to find there is little chance of hearing this celebrated tenor in London this season.

DONIZETTI.—This 1600-horse power composer has arrived in Paris, to superintend the production of his new opera, "Don Sebastian."

DISTINGUISHED DEPARTURES.—On Saturday last (per Wilberforce, for Antwerp), Spohr and Staudigl. The reception of the former, during his short stay amongst us, has not been, owing to some latent cause or other, of the most hearty kind; and as to the latter, the unrivalled Staudigl, we fear that his generosity outstripped his prudence, for on every occasion he was ready to assist his musical brethren gratuitously. This is not the way in which some, with a tithe of his talent, have amassed fortunes.

M. AUBER.—The immortal composer of "Massaniello," "Gustave," cum multis aliis, has nearly completed a new opera. No doubt it will be "another sunbeam from Apollo's brow!"

LA SIGNORA ANNA BISCHOP.—This cantatrice-has recently appeared at the San Carlos, Naples, in Fecini's opera, "La Fidanzata Corsa," and met with a most brilliant reception.

STATE OF SOUTH WALES.

It will be remembered that the riots which have continued for so long a time to alarm the inhabitants of South Wales, and, in fact, the entire kingdom, by exploits which have been known as the achievements of "Rebecca and her Daughters," originated, in the first place, in the rural districts in the neighbourhood of St. Clears, in Carmarthenshire, and Narberth, in Pembrokeshire. They then gradually extended themselves to Cardigan, Lampeter, Newcastle, Carmarthen, Llandilo, Llandovery, and Kidwelly, and finally they reached the coal districts near Pontypridd, where, on Friday night, a scene was perpetrated that has seldom been equalled in any country not considered in a state of open rebellion. A troop of the 4th Light Dragoons, stationed at Carmarthen, were led out by Colonel Love, the Vice-Lieutenant of the county of Carmarthen, who, in consequence of information received by him of an intended Rebeccaite meeting, deemed it advisable to be present to check any outrages to which they might evince a disposition to commit. Colonel Love, the commandant of the district, and Major Parlby, left Carmarthen about half-past five o'clock in the evening, proceeded through Porthyrod and Llandeilo, a journey nearly to London, and returned to Carmarthen, through Pontyberem and Llangendeirne. During the whole line of march, not the slightest intimation was manifested of a disposition to break the peace, although it was evident that the whole country, so far from being disorganised, was in an extremely well organised condition for mischief. Before the Dragoons had got two miles from Carmarthen a shot was fired from a field by the road side, known as Cyarnog Wood Hill, which was immediately answered from other hills, and which proves that a system of signals was successfully established throughout the whole country. The Dragoons, after their thirty miles' ride, came back to Carmarthen, literally as wise as they went. The following morning, however, the news reached Carmarthen, that within an hour after they had passed through Bethania gate, situated near the Llanddu, on the Llanon road, the Rebeccaites were assembled by the firing of rockets, to the number of about 10.0, and they instantly proceeded to break the gate into pieces, which they accomplished in a very short time. During the progress of their work they testified the fulness of their triumph by beating drums, firing guns, blowing horns, &c. They were not disguised as heretofore in women's clothes, but being principally colliers, and their faces having been already blackened, they needed no further disguise than their occupation had already endowed them with. Bonfires were lighted on all the adjacent hills, and after destroying two other toll-bars on a by-road, they disappeared in the same mysterious manner as they had appeared.

This affair, of course, being more daring than hitherto, created great alarm in the entire neighbourhood; but this alarm has been increased by the incidents which are given below.

Some short time since the Bolgoed toll-bar, near Swansea, had been broken down, and rewards had been offered by the magistrates of Glamorganshire for the apprehension and conviction of the offenders.

On Sunday morning last, a man named Jones, of Cefn-bythyn, went to Swansea, and gave information to the Mayor, Dr. Bird, and the other magistrates, that he was himself at the destruction of Bolgoed bar, and would inform against forty others. Their names having been taken, it was found that most of them were highly-respectable farmers residing near Pontyclouians and Llangyvalloch. Warrants were then granted, and at twelve o'clock on Saturday night, Captain Napier, superintendent of the county police (late of the Rifles), with inspector Rees and two other policemen, left Swansea and proceeded to the hills, where they succeeded in capturing two persons quietly, and brought them into Swansea; they then apprehended a third prisoner, whom they left in the charge of the two policemen, while Captain Napier and Rees went into the house of a farmer named Morgan to arrest the son. They had not been gone into the house a minute before the farmer's wife, Mrs. Morgan, threw a saucepan of boiling water over the Captain, which scalded his shoulder, and then rushed into with the saucepan, with which she beat him about the head, and the son, John Morgan, a very powerful young man, having seized a sickle, also attacked Captain Napier with it, and wounded him on the head in a desperate struggle ensued, and Captain Napier drew one of his pistols, which, however, fortunately was not cocked, the hammer being down, he Morgan immediately grasped the weapon, and, drawing the muzzle of the pistol to Captain Napier's breast, pulled the trigger, but without effect. Finding his life in danger, Captain Napier immediately drew his other pistol and fired, and shot John Morgan, the last prisoner, dead. It is said that the ball had entered just above the groin, glanced upwards, striking the upper edge of the ilium, and lodged itself in the back between the second and third rib, from which place Dr. Bird succeeded in extracting it.

On Sunday, in the middle of the day, the police, accompanied by the mayor and two other magistrates, and 30 men of the grenadier company of the 75th Regiment of foot, again proceeded to Bolgoed to look into apprehended Mrs. Morgan, the farmer's wife, and her daughter, and in the course of the evening apprehended Mr. Vaughan, the postmaster and innkeeper, of Pontyclouals.

During Monday the town of SWANSEA was in a state of excitement, crowds of people filling the streets, particularly opposite the station-house, where the prisoners were confined, and which was guarded by the 75th Foot, and almost an entire stop being put to business.

The following prisoners had by this time been brought in, viz.:—

Griffith Vaughan, postmaster and inkeeper of Pontyclouians.
William Morgan, of Bolgoed, farmer.
David Jones, son of a respectable freeholder.
Daniel Lewis, a weaver
John Morgan, a farmer and freeholder.
Matthew Morgan, his son.
Rees Morgan, his son.
John Morgan, his son, the man who has been shot.
Esther Morgan, the mother, and Margaret Morgan, her daughter.

At nine o'clock a meeting of the magistrates was held at the Town-hall, Sir John Morris in the chair; and the prisoners being brought down, the reporters for the public press applied for admission, but were told that no one could be admitted to the final hearing.

The magistrates sat in deliberation the whole day, and at the close the prisoners were remanded.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO THE THAMES TUNNEL.—On Wednesday, after a lapse of nearly two centuries, Wapping, famed in song, and where the merry Monarch, Charles II., was accustomed to carry on his frolics, was once more visited by the Sovereign of Great Britain; and the day will be long remembered by the east-enders, who, so far as the short notice allowed, testified their loyalty in a manner which must have been very gratifying to her Majesty and her royal consort. It was not generally made known until the middle of the day that the Queen and Prince Albert intended to pay a visit to the Thames Tunnel; and in an incredibly short space of time Wapping, High street presented a very gay appearance, and flags were hoisted from nearly every house, and people were seen nearing their way from all quarters to the shaft on the Middlesex side of the river, where the royal standard was hoisted. The inhabitants of Rotherhithe testified their loyalty in a similar manner; the bells of the old church struck up a merry peal, and the standard was displayed from the upper part of the steeple. As one o'clock by the tunnel was closed against the public; but those who were in it, and among whom were a great number of the nobility and elegantly dressed ladies who had been invited by the directors, were allowed to remain. The Tunnel Pier, on which it was announced that her Majesty and the Prince would land, was covered with crimson cloth, and a temporary ladder was laid on the outer barge for her Majesty and suite to ascend. The middle of the Thames presented the appearance of a forest of masts, as the numerous craft were brought up, under the command of Mr. Evans, the superintendent, to prevent the multitude of boats from pressing too close upon the royal barge. At a half-past three o'clock the firing of guns and the advance of more than 100 small boats announced the approach of the royal barge, which was accompanied by the Admiralty and Navy barges. Precisely at twenty-five minutes before four o'clock, her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their suite, landed on the Tunnel Pier, where the company was more numerous than usual. Her Majesty and the Prince looked remarkably well. Three hearty cheers were given, which her Majesty graciously acknowledged. The royal visitors were received by Mr. Hawes, M.P., the chairman of the Thames Tunnel Company, and the directors; Mr. Chaffer, the secretary; and Mr. Pugh, the acting engineer

ANDALUSIANS.

The Insurrectionary Junta of Grenada refused to receive the Christino General Concha, who entered the city by force, but was obliged soon to retire. It will be amusing and very instructive here to give you the opinion of the Journal des Débats on the subject, and bear in recollection that this journal receives its daily instructions from the Tuileries:—"We doubt not that the sedition," says M. Berlin de Veaux the editor of the Débats "of Grenada will soon be calmed, and that the city, returning to sentiments more reasonable, will receive with honour in a few days a distinguished chief of whose services the insurrection of Andalusia has the greatest need to defend it against Van Halen, Carondelet, and Espartero." Thus we find the organ of the French Government openly supporting the Christino chief, and calling those who refuse to receive him—seditious! Now, who is the General Concha the protégé of the Journal des Débats? The same who last year was condemned to death in Madrid for endeavouring to carry off the Queen.

Even the ultra-Liberals seem to be quarrelling amongst themselves, for I am most positively assured that Lopez, Caballero, Ayllon, and Frias have nominated themselves into a provisional government, holding their sittings at Valladolid, and refusing to transport themselves to Catalonia. So that we have two provisional governments—the one headed by the Universal Minister, Serrano, in Catalonia, and the other in Old Castile. Can such a state of things last? Impossible! Am I not justified in saying that the insurgents are destroying their own cause?

Now let us examine the military operations. It will be useless to say much of the marches and countermarches of the belligerent armies; take their present position. On the 14th Madrid was surrounded by the insurgents, and, bad faith been placed in the telegraphic despatches, its fall might have been daily expected. Narvaez, who, as we are told, is at the head of fourteen battalions of infantry, ten squadrons of cavalry, and two batteries, took up his quarters, on the 14th, at Alcala, and advanced to the gates of Madrid the same afternoon. On the 15th he forwarded the following despatch to General Evaristo San Miguel:—

"Most excellent Sir,—Your Excellency received this morning a communication from me, and yet this evening I have no answer, although my thoughts and my words were conciliatory. I again address your Excellency, but it is to declare to you that, if within four hours after its reception free entry into the capital is not afforded to me, I will occupy it by force, without caring for the blood that may be shed; for, in a struggle which I have not provoked, more the blood of villains and traitors shall flow, more will it be profitable and salutary to the prosperity of our community; and I shall not be sorry that Providence has chosen me as the instrument of its justice and the justice of man.

"RAMON MARIA NARVAEZ.

"Fuencarral, July 15, 1843."

I will only say of this sanguinary despatch, that its author ought to be driven from society. But did Narvaez carry his threat of entering after four hours into Madrid? No. Rolando Furioso retired on Torrejon. The 16th, the National Militia actually attacked the besiegers, who endeavoured to get possession of the houses situated near to the Retiro, and drove them away. Narvaez dared not advance! The 17th, several shots were exchanged, and the militia were permitted, without being interrupted by Narvaez, to erect a battery at the gate of Santa Barbara; the 18th and 19th Narvaez remained at Torrejon; on the 20th retired, and on that day Madrid was no longer in a state of blockade. The same day the militia took possession of all the places previously occupied by the besiegers. General Aspiroz, who also advanced to the gates of Madrid, and actually established his head-quarters at Casa del Campo, a summer residence of the Queen, and only a mile and a half from the capital, on learning that General Enna, the same general whom the telegraph informed us had been abandoned by his army, was advancing, quitted his position, and retired in the direction of Aranjuez, at the head of two battalions of infantry and 400 cavalry. General Urbina, with the garrison of Badajoz, also retired. And whence has arisen this sudden change in the military tactics of the insurgent generals? The approach towards Madrid of Generals Seoane and Zurbano? Surely, taking the French telegraph as giving correct information, those generals ought to have few, if any, troops, for we have over and over again been told that their battalions have gone over to the insurgents. The last telegraphic despatch, dated Perpignan, the 24th, mentions that a squadron of Zurbano's cavalry had joined General Serrano. However, Seoane and Zurbano have advanced, and are on the banks of the Guadalaxara. Narvaez and Aspiroz, supported by Serrano and the Catalonians, Bayona and the army of Castile—the Basque troops—the garrison of Badajoz, and several insurgent divisions, are determined on attacking them. Let us wait the result: it ought to be decisive.

There is one thing that must surprise every one, and that is that notwithstanding the immense desertion of the army and navy, and, according to French news, the general voice of the people, Espartero is enabled to stand his ground, and no one durst attack him! Is he surrounded by some magic power that Narvaez carefully avoided him, and preferred threatening to deinge with blood the residence of his sovereign? Surely there is here some mystery which time only can unravel. The Espartero pretend that the force of Narvaez, as given by the French organs, is greatly exaggerated, and that all the strength of the insurgents capable of being brought into the field does not exceed 18,000 men. The following despatch from General Seoane to the Minister of War would lead us to believe there is some truth in it:—

"Most excellent Sir,—General Zurbano has just arrived, with his troops very much fatigued from forced marches. At 2 A. M. I leave for Calatayud, and shall pass the night at A—muoa. I have just learned that General Narvaez left Calatayud this evening for Madrid at the head of 4000 or 5000 men. I intend to follow him by forced marches, and I hope soon to come up with him. Should he change his direction I will follow him. I assure your Excellency that he shall not remain twelve hours before Madrid without being attacked in his rear, and destroyed. "General SEOANE.

"Saragossa, July 11, nine P.M."

But what has become of Espartero and Van Halen? The telegraphic despatches can inform us of all that is passing in Andalusia of the desertion of the cavalry sent from Cadiz to Van Halen—that the Cortes frigate, the two steam-boats Soberano and Isabella II., and several trincaderos stationed in the Cadiz roads had declared for the insurgents; but it can give no information of the movements of Espartero! This is truly surprising, and would lead us to believe that the Regent is in a better position than it was generally imagined. This much I can state most positively, that all the French news comes from the insurgents—place, therefore, the greater part in quarantine. In my next I am in hopes of being able to forward something CATALANS.

VIEW OF VALENCIA.

GERONA REGIMENT.

decisive; but Spanish warfare is so different from that of any other country that no calculations can with justice be made.

A letter from Perpignan of the 18th says, that "M. Tovar, formerly Spanish consul at Perpignan, and who was dismissed last year for having signed the passport of the insurgent Prim, had been reinstated by the Provisional Government, and had returned to Perpignan. We have, therefore, two Spanish consuls in our town, both tolerated by the French Government. I may say that M. Tovar is protected by our Government; for although the insurgent Junta of La Junquière has declared it will only acknowledge the visa of M. Tovar, that gentleman is in daily conference with the prefet; and I am informed he will be permitted to vise passports."

Another letter, dated the 21st, gives as certain that such is the state of affairs in Catalonia, that 4000 Spaniards, flying from that country and the paternal protection of the insurgents, are now on the French frontiers, and that orders have been forwarded from Paris to receive them.

Christina's political advisers are actively engaged in receiving and expediting couriers. Zea Bermudez is daily closeted with her. Martinez de la Rosa passed through Bordeaux on the 19th, on his route for the Spanish frontiers, and Toreno has quitted Germany for Paris.

The Journal des Déba s has the following paragraph:—"Monday being the fête of Maria Christina, there was a reception at the Hotel Coucelles. All the Spaniards of distinction now in Paris presented their homage to the Queen Mother. At this meeting, naturally the present position of Spain was the general subject of conversation. Her Majesty conversed and replied with a reserve and most perfect tact, expressing her most ardent wishes to see at last peace and unity appear amongst all the subjects of her august daughter, and happiness restored to a country over which she presided more than seven years. Marshal Soult and the Minister for Foreign Affairs were admitted into the presence of Queen Christina at half-past three o'clock. The King, Queen, Madame Adelaide, the Duke and Duchess of Nemours, and the Duke d'Aumale arrived at the hotel at four o'clock, to offer their felicitations to the Queen Mother."

The perfect tact and reserve of Christina is highly to be commended. Her desire for peace and unity is, no doubt, sincere, particularly when coupled with the declaration of her chief partisan, Narvaez, "that it was he who provoked the blood he was determined to shed on getting forcible possession of Madrid."

Every province and class of Spain has its peculiarities, and so widely different from each other, that they almost appear to be inhabitants of two opposite hemispheres. Hence it has been well observed, that "there exists as much difference between an inhabitant of Andalusia and one of Castile or Catalonia, as between an Englishman and a Russian."

The first of our sketches represents the Andalusian peasant guerilla, with his high-peaked hat, gay jacket, flowered vest, flowing sash, and leathern cartridge pouch, loose trousers, and embroidered leggings, whilst over the left shoulder is thrown the cloak.

Next is a group of Catalan muleteras: here we have the eternal cigarette and guitar, the characteristics of southern Spanish life. The female is a neat specimen of the peasantry, in her festa costume.

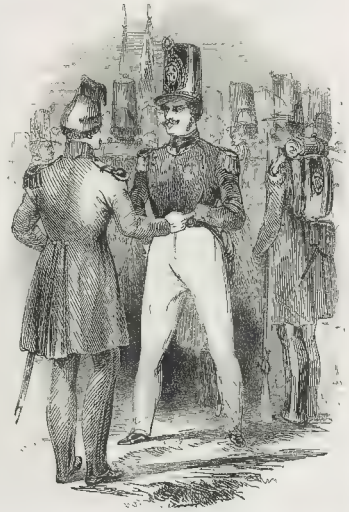
Next are two military groups: first, two privates of the Gerona regiment; and a captain, alferache or lieutenant, and troops of the line.

The view in the centre of the page represents the principal gate and ramparts of Valencia, taken from the glacis, with the characteristic bullock-cart in the foreground.



TROOPS OF THE LINE.

TRIUMPHAL ARCH.

noble ship was now fairly afloat. A rope from her bows was made fast to the Avon, a steamer outside the dock, intended to ply between Bristol and Newport, and propelled on the same principle to which the Great Britain is adapted. On a signal given the enormous vessel moved majestically into the harbour amidst the shouts of the thousands congregated in the yard and neighbourhood. The music of the band and the salutes of cannon which were heard in every direction, added to the interest of the moment. As the immense structure of iron floated on the water, the Prince broke against the bows of the ship a bottle of wine, and pronounced as the name by which the vessel is after to be known, the words, "The Great Britain." The hawser by which the steam-ship was attached to the Avon steamer, however, broke; and the first bottle thrown by the Prince, fell ten feet short of the vessel, which, in being warped out by a larger hawser attached to her, veered towards the royal pavilion. Another bottle of champagne was handed to his Royal Highness, who threw it at the vessel; it struck her bows, and the broken glass and the wine fell upon the heads of the persons below, who were shoving against her sides, and assisting to keep her clear of the walls of the dock. This, the crowning point of the occasion, took place at a quarter past three; and shortly afterwards his Royal Highness made preparation to leave. Having entered his travelling carriage, he proceeded to the railway terminus, the route being along the Cumberland-road, over Redcliff-hill, through Phippen-street and Portwall-lane. His return was greeted by large bodies of spectators, with their cordial cheers.

With the launch itself some disappointment was expressed by many persons. It was not that the scene was not animating or cheering—not that the vessel was not fully as stupendous and magnificent as she has been represented to be; but having been built in an excavated dry dock, the water had to be let in to her, instead of her dashing from her cradle into the river, according to the usual mode of launching, which, however, could not have been effected in the confined harbour. Nevertheless, the sight was most imposing.

His Royal Highness left the Bristol Station on his return at seventeen minutes past four in the afternoon, arriving at the Paddington Station at three minutes before seven (the whole distance of 118½ miles having been performed in two hours and forty minutes). The Prince expressed himself warmly in approval of the attention paid to him by the directors and officers of the railway, by whose marvellous means he had been enabled in the short space of twelve hours to accomplish a journey of above 236 miles, and pass six hours of the time in Bristol.

THE VESSEL.

Having already given a detailed description of the Great Britain and her appointments, we shall only subjoin a few additional particulars. Our first engraving illustrative of this stupendous vessel shows her figure-head, consisting of the royal arms, flanked with a bee-hive, two cog-wheels, a dove, the square, and the caduceus of Mercury, all tastefully executed in bronze on a white ground. The opposite engraving shows the anchor for the Great Britain, constructed on Porter's newly invented patent principle, which has been most satisfactorily tested in the royal navy for the last three years. Next is the stern view of the vessel, in which her beautiful proportions are advantageously shown.

The annexed details are from the Bristol Journal, in which this magnificent affair is very minutely chronicled. The Great Britain was on Wednesday only temporarily rigged. Her standing rigging is to be of wire, but hempen cordage was on Wednesday bent in the same manner in which the wire rigging will be rove. As is the case with all fore-and-aft rigged vessels, her tackling is very simple, presenting no top hamper, and having a look of bareness rather than complication. Our readers are aware that the Great Britain carries six masts besides her funnel, which by the way is of immense diameter, but very short; only one of the masts is a permanent erection—the second from the bowsprit. It is much thicker than are the others, and is meant to carry a square-sail and topsails. The other masts are designed to carry mainsails and gaff topsails exclusively. As they work upon a swivel on deck, they can all be struck in a gale of wind with the greatest ease, and without hampering the deck, thus leaving almost a naked hull for the wind to whistle over.

Large as the Great Britain appears from alongside, one cannot form a just idea of her vast dimensions till he gets upon deck. Then the full proportions of the colossal steamer burst upon him. With the exception of a small forecastle chock forward, the decks are perfectly level. There is no quarter-deck to break the fine sweep from stem to stern. Amongst the internal arrangements we may mention that the whole of the saloon, comprising upwards of 1200 yards, has been laid down with a superb Brussels carpet, expressly manufactured for the purpose by Messrs. Mogg, of Bristol. The fabric takes its name from the vessel it is calculated to ornament, and is of scarlet and royal purple, of dice pattern, the ground profusely covered with small figures.

We understand the total cost of the Great Britain will be about £95,000.

A correspondent, who witnessed this imposing spectacle, has favoured us with the following effusion:—

THE QUEEN OF THE WATERS.

I'm QUEEN OF THE WATERS—the ocean-world
Has never yet seen a sail unfurl'd
Like mine o'er its billowy heaving breast,
Or sea-bird that carried a prouder crest!

I'm QUEEN OF THE WATERS—the crest I bear
Is one to Love and Liberty dear;
ENGLAND, my cradle of Freedom, and—
Next, the SWEET MISTRESS that rules the land!

I'm QUEEN OF THE WATERS—each wind and wave,
Whose storm and swell I'm born to brave,
Frown'd at my birth with wild despair,
And said, "We shall fail in warring there!"

I'm QUEEN OF THE WATERS—though far I roam,
Still—still I'll assert my island home!
Island myself—GREAT BRITAIN SHE—
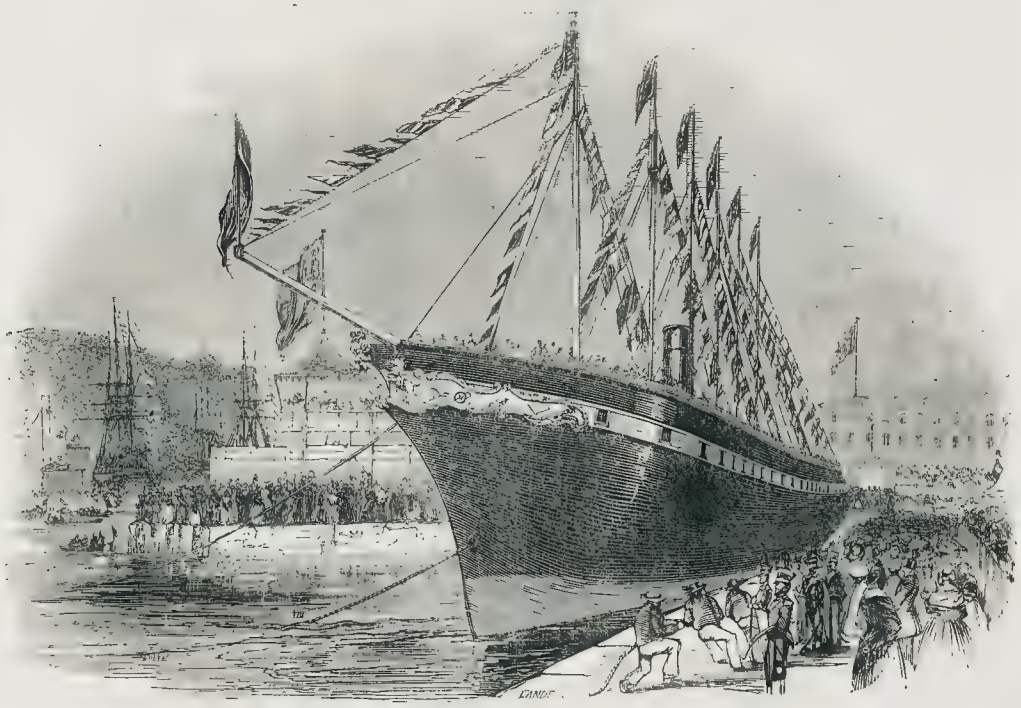
A CONTINENT BOTH BY LAND AND SEA?

W.

ANCHOR.



LAUNCH OF THE GREAT BRITAIN.

TRIUMPHAL ARCH.

RAMBLES IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

Scanty work for the gossips—no scandal—no merry horrors—no laughter-excitement—and very little small talk of any kind. N'importe, we will put the gay face upon it, and have our fling at what there is.

Has any body noticed of late that there is a new and rather eminent hand distinctly and vigorously busy among the leaders of the Times newspaper; that there is a smart, sly, 'cute gentleman there, who, after glancing at all that is going on about him, spices his pen with sprightly and peppery deviliism, and then makes it speak to the public quietly, quizzingly, sarcastically, by the oracular medium of broad columns of burgeois? There is a fresh and lively spirit in Printing House-square, and his keen sense of the foolish, the bombastic, and the absurd will administer to society doses of agreeable amusement, which will be evidently anything but infinitesimal. Now, to give the reader a touch of this boy's quality, we refer him to an article, in Wednesdy's paper, upon Mr. Hume's motion of the previous evening, upon the subject of secular education; or, if our friends would prefer to see it in our own columns, they may get a sort of epitome of it in verse, in the form of a

PARAPHRASE OF A "TIMES" LEADER.

Last night Mr. Hume,
Who will evermore fame
For the general good of the nation,
Put the House in a fret,
Hardly got over yet,
On the question of education.

So much for exordium—and next the grave statement follows:—

For thirty years poor Joey's gladness
Had been disordered by the sadness
Of always thinking that the state
The people ought to educate;
And yet of always knowing also
That still the state did not at all so:
Two facts which he, in spite of thick head,
Was sure made one fact very wicked;
To which conclusion he had grown,
And by a "Cocker" all his own.

Now all these thirty years, alack!
Timidity kept Joey back!
Concealing his consuming passion
Until his theme became the fashion;
No word spake Hume from wisdom's page
Till education grew the rage—
Till it was talked of near and far,
From pulpit grave to gay bazaar,
From sucking senate-house to bar!

Then of a sudden Joey rose—
Joy in his fingers and his toes,
Joy in his hands, his heart, his head
(Where sense did never reign instead);
Joy tingling in his very pence,
And a soul rife with eloquence!

But still he wanted one to whom
He could confide the thoughts of Hume:
His modest nature would not own
The glory of his scheme alone—
Whether deem'd born of sage or calf,
Some dear companion should have half—
Some friendly, daring, dull M.P.
Should share his praise or jeopardy!

Bewildered Joey gazed around,
His glance, much puzzled, sought the ground!
While anxious thoughts his bosom rend,
Of where to look for such a friend.
One little space his eye retrenches,
And now it falls upon the benches!
Higher it soars above them all,
To find (ça va sans dire) the wall!

Lower (ah! now he sees his path,
As Conscience whispers, "go to Bath!")—
Lower!—still lower!—half a span!
It lights upon the very man!
On little Roebuck, Bath M.P.,
A confidant of high degree;
To whom at once he tells his story—
So Hume's "unbuzzom'd" of his glory!

'Tis over!—done! But now, ah! why
Springs pearly tear to Joey's eye?
Why does he pipe and almost cry?

Ah! hear what little Roebuck says:—
"Your scheme, dear Hume, deserves all praise—('Tis worth a guinea Roebuck's sneer,
While he is calling Joey "dear")—
But yet, it strikes me, on the minute,
I can't in honesty be in it.
Your single genius sign'd and seal'd it;
'Tis all your own—to you I yield it."

Hume paused, delayed, retreated—stood,
And nurs'd his woe in solitude;
Determin'd to do nothing rashly,
With Education or with Ashley,
Who, after Joe's Roebuckian killin',
Brought his own Education Bill in;
With which but very little he did,
Till Government's his plan succeeded;
When force of Opposition rattle
Again left Joe the field of battle.

So Hume had patience half sublime,
So did his "genius bide her time;"
All hors de combat now but him!
His project bubbled to the brim.
Tuesday, at once he rushed to name,
For sinking thirty years of blame,
And striking that essential blow
We wanted thirty years ago:
Tuesday he did name—bravo, Joe!

Tuesday arrived, Joe rose to spout!
Thrilling his theme beyond a doubt!
To put all dulness to the rout!
Send ignorance to right about!
Proclaim ..... but what a wicked clout
Joe gets from Fate! Well may he pout,
And frown, and fret, and fume, and flout!
Poor Hume!—THE HOUSE IS COUNTED OUT!
Britain resists his vain endeavour,
And educations' lost for ever!

Such is a verse history of the Times leader prose; and so has another night of the fragrance of "legislative wisdom" been wasted on the desert air. Hume's scheme was, of course, all nonsense; it expressed directly its notion of teaching the rising generation morality without religion, and of making them Christians without Christianity!

Now, we suppose the members of Parliament, Lords and Commons, have sunned their sweet faces in the hospitalities of Goodwood, where kindness is ever as busy as if there were fifty "Richmonds in the field." Beautiful races—beautiful women—beautiful feasts—beautiful groupings of silver sculpture, shining proofs of the glorious progress of Art—beautiful scenery—beautiful weather—all things beautiful, indeed, meet the eye and greet the heart at Goodwood. That is your true paradise of sport, better than Epsom—better than Ascot—better than Newmarket—better than Doncaster.

So sing, what! ho!
To Goodwood go,
To Goodwood go we must;
And if no rain
Suffuse the plain,
Why then by way of a practical lark,
We'll take our friend, Lord Waterpark,
And he shall lay the dust!

Talking of park-watering and road-watering, have any of our readers seen the road-sweep, the patent cart-scavenger—the waggon that takes up the mud as its travels, and fills itself as it goes along? By-and-by we shall have everything done without human aid; and we shall not be surprised to find mankind, at some general convocation of the human race, passing a voluntary act of exile from the world, upon the rational ground that everything that is to be done in it can be done without them! There will not be the slightest occasion for any human race at all! But of the street-cart: was it Duncombe or Bulwer who said that its proprietors could have no license to sweep the streets with it, because they could never carry a cart-blanche?

Since we last chatted with our readers the Queen has given a ball, and the Court Circular furnishes a grand description of all the arrangements.

There was Faraday's light-lustre bright
As the eyes of a royal babe,
And shrubs and flowers bloomed fair, by the powers,
In the tent of Tippoo Saib.

Exotics rare flung scent on the air
As they bloomed in their foreign glory;
They'd a fragrant twig to the nose of a Whig,
Tho' from a Conser*vatory!*

A cool jet d'eau where rare flowers blow
Is a pleasantish thing to view;
But there was the Argand burner there,
With 500 jets de feu!

Away they shone from their gorgeous zone,
In the form of an Eastern sun;
But with far more splendour (over the bender!*)
When all was said and done!

Two thousand guests at the Queen's behests—
The pink of all the land—
Soon came at a call to her Majesty's ball,
To dance to Jullien's band.

Each from his own room to ball-room and throne-room,
Went gay as gay could be,
And many a lady with her marquis
Walked under the grand marquee.

The moment, however, that we get among the company, the affair begins to bang description, and the muse is dazzled in the eyes. We turn to homely prose again, and refer back to the Court Circular.

* * * * *

O'Connell is still going the pace in Ireland; there is no rest for the pilgrim of repeal; and if he had not a tongue of adamant, and lungs of something a little harder, he would long ago have worn them out. But no; they are tough to the core, and though he tells lies enow, he does not even blister them. He is an ingenious dog, and varies his orations with agreeable anecdotes and comparisons. Here is one, par exemple, which we gather from his address to the men of Wexford. Dan loquitur:—

A barber there was in Dublin town,
And a very good barber was he;
His ears he would use for the picking up news,
To give his customers glee!

There were always a plentiful host of fools
To list to this lathering man;
The Times thinks he wasn't the last of his race,
And appeals about that to Dan.

Cried barber one day, in a hurried way,
"I've lots of news to tell!"
"What news, we are craving?"—"Why, I'm just from shaving
The valet of a swell!"

"What did he say?"—"Nothing!"—"Eh?—what!"
"Nothing! I tell you—there!"
But "nothing" means more than anything, mind,
And that's what I mean to swear!

When a great man's valet's being shaved,
And utters no word at all,
Isn't there something then in the wind?
Mustn't there be—that's all!

Now Wellington nothing says, do you note,
And Peel is silent as well;
To speak they are loath, so I liken them both
To the valet of the swell.

And because they are mute with their ways so 'cute
(Divil their manners mind),
I s'pose we'll know "before long ago"
That they've something in the wind!

I'll tell ye what's in the wind, my boys,
For fine ould Ireland's weal;
Then this is what's in the wind, my boys,
Repeal! Repeal! Repeal!

And so the cunning old serpent makes them cheer, and laugh, and shout; and plays with, and tickles, and deludes them; and prates to them of peace and bloodshed, of war and tranquillity, all in the same breath; or sometimes he has a flash of sentimentality, and makes them blubber for the love of their lovely Liberator. Here is a bit of the fustian measured out to Galway:

"He only asked for their exertions in behalf of their country. If it came to a fight to-morrow, would they not give her all their blood, should she require it? (The company rose and cheered enthusiastically.) That enthusiasm, however, was not to be momentary. They should keep it up; and if they did, he, like the Roman orator, would live to see his country free. (Cheers). Oh, Ireland! Ireland!

"'Shall it e'er be my lot, my victor lot to see,
Thy hills, thy dales, thy people free?

That glance of bliss is all I crave
Between my labours and my grave.'"

(Loud continued cheering.)

Pretty pleasant rubbish—but let it go. We supose the time will come when

"The world shall hear the end on't."

* * * * * * * *

What could have put Cobden up to a pilgrimage to Mark-lane—to a voluntary seeking out of the lions' den—to a collision with injured cornbins and revengeful wheat? He must be a daring sprig of his craft, to tempt adventure thus. Certain it is, however, that he did go—but was not discovered until in the act of egress from the market he has so laboriously sought to level. He got, however, sufficiently well pelted with indignant grain to entitle us to some very floury eloquence in his next oration. If he had not departed when he did, they say they would have given him the sack.

The ironmasters have been calling upon Peel, wishing him to play old goosberry with his own currency, and to give them some small notes. The Premier, however, was obdurate, and his obduracy has furnished data for an epigram:—

For the Minister prime—they've a hate sublime,
Oh they love him not a bit;
But they inly feel that an Iron Peel
Is worse than an Iron Pitt!

And now, most tolerant of readers, our Chat is over. Vale.

THE WRECK OF THE PEGASUS.

BY F. W. N. BAYLEY.

I.

The vessel stood from a stately port,
On her far wide way to sea,
When the eventide was fair and bright,
With the sunset on her lee;
The waves light roll'd, in its streaky gold,
And danced to its gorgeous gleam,
As the ship on sped, with its swift wings spread
By the giant arm of steam!

II.

The vessel flew the bright spray thro',
With its freight of human life—
Father and friend for their journey's end—
Bride, mother, sister, wife!
And joys and sorrows were cargoed there,
That with every bound and start,
Woke smiles or tears—like the hopes and fears
That are stirred in the human heart.

III.

The evening grew to its calm sweet close,
And the sunlight on the sea
Kept dying away as the twilight gray
Stole over it placidly;
And drop by drop the gold fell off
From every shining wave,
Till the tired sun his race had run
And the sea became his grave.

IV.

To the waters pale the murmuring gale
Kept singing its vesper song,
Till a foggy haze obscured the gaze
With a veil more thin than strong!
But the flimsy mantle grew with night
Till it chilled the ocean air;
So the young and old forsook the cold,
And went to their cabin-prayer!

V.

The deck was clear'd, and all below
Rock'd fast in their ocean sleep,
With none but the weary crew above
To watch them o'er the deep!
But the traveller's rest is often blest,
However his bark may roam,
With a vision bright of some past delight,
Or thought of a future home!

VI.

So dream they as they sweep along
On their speed-wings through the calm—
So think they while the breeze holds on
Its treasure freight of balm—
There is not a sign of storm above,
Or a wreck-threat on the sea,
That has still a bosom light as love,
And murmurs melody!

VII.

The steamer flies 'neath the hazy skies,
And cleaves the wave with her keel;
No noise—save as her hard wings flap
To the rush of the paddle-wheel.
A stunning, whirring, numbing sound,
As of a torrent's fall,
That makes slumber's chain as strong again,
To those who own her thrall.

VIII.

* * * * * * *

The captain looks from his lofty box,
With a seaman at his side;
The mate keeps watch, and the helmsman steers,
Fearless of wind or tide.
There is one man on the dreary deck,
And one man at the bow;
But no other wight stirs there to-night
From the broad stern to the prow!

IX.

Now Heaven doth send no thunder-storm,
The lightning sweep no flash;
But the thoughtless crew in that calm midnight,
Are startled by . . . . . a crash!

* * * * * * *

One word below, and the engine turns,
And the vessel clears the rock;
And the smiling sleepers in their beds
Have hardly heard the shock!

X.

But the engineer, with a heart of fear,
Looks tremblingly ahead,
And he sees the great wave stealing in
With a slow but certain tread!
And his heart is beating quick and mad,
With a fierce tumultuous thrill;
God's voice seems ringing in his ears,
As he knows the ship WILL fill!

XI.

For the shore—the shore—the harbouring shore
The captain steers his way;
But he does not wake the sleepers yet
On the verge of their judgment day!
A few pale watchers, roused in fear,
Have scrambled upon deck;
But the rest may die, as they dreaming lie
In the wild arms of the wreck!

* Bender we presume to be some Court definition of the grand salon.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

MALTA, JULY 15.—DISPOSITION OF THE MEDITERRANEAN FLEET.—In Malta Harbour: The QUEEN, 110, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir W. C. R. Owen, K.C.B., C.C.H., Commander-in-Chief; Ceylon, receiving-ship, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Sir Lucius Curtis, superintendent of Malta Dockyard, second in command; Vesuvius war-steamer, and Alecto and Prometheus steam-packets. At Gibraltar: The Formidable and, on her way thither from Malta, the Polyphemus steam packet. At Barcelona: The Monarch, 84; Savage, 10; Medea war-steamer; Locust steam-tender. At Malaga: The Lord Warden, tender and, on her way thither from Malta, the Scout, 18. On the Ionian Islands station: The Magnificent, 74. On her way to the Ionian Islands and Patras, the Acheron steam packet. At Athens: The Belvidera, 28; and Snake, 16. At Syra: The Beacon and Magpie surveying-vessels. At Smyrna: D'Aguilar, 84. At Constantinople: The Devastation war steamer. At Beyrout: The Vernon, 50; and Geyser war-steamer. At Alexandria: The Hecla war-steamer; and the Isodus, 76, is supposed to be on her way from Palermo to Gibraltar, having had sealed orders when she left Malta.

The Duke of Wellington is prepared to concentrate the troops in Ireland, and all the small detachments will be called in. Barracan, long unoccupied, are ordered to be furnished for the accommodation of troops, and stations where of late only a company was quartered will have a complete regiment. Far more is doing, and more planning than the country in a state to be defended then merely meets the eye. Troops are at the most convenient points for transmission; and we know that arms and ammunition are disposed of at safe places in this country for their being sent over when required. The regiments which have returned from India within the present month are very strong, but after having discharged their diseased and worn out men, they will be considerably under the establishment of 800 men. The 26th is to go to Scotland, the 41st, it is said, will shortly be sent into the north-east district, and the 66th, on their arrival, to take their place at Canterbury for a short season only.

MORE SOLDIERS FOR WALES.—On Saturday last a troop of the 4th Light Dragoons passed through Abergavenny, en route for the Principality. As described when during another troop arrived, which departed on the following morning for the same destination. Although the lawless acts of Thomas and her Followers are assigned as the cause of the soldiery being despatched into the principality, rumour whispers a very different and rather plausible reason—namely, that the ultimate destination of the Dragoons is Ireland, and that the disturbances in the principality are made use of as a mere pretext of the Government to move those troops nearer to the coast, in case their services should be unfortunately required in the sister country.

TROOPS FOR IRELAND.—It is reported, in quarters generally well informed, that an intimation has been given to each regiment of the Guards (not excepting to the cavalry) to hold itself in immediate readiness for service in Ireland, and it is added, that directions have been issued by the several railway companies to have accommodation prepared for the transport of troops with the least possible delay.

Major-General Sir G. H. F. Berkeley, K.C.B., had arrived at Belfast, and assumed the command of the forces in the Belfast district, on the departure of Major-General FAGNAN, C.B., appointed to the command of the troops in China. Captain C. A. Fitzhardinge Berkeley, the Scots Fusileer Guards, had been appointed aide-de-camp to the General.

Major General Wyndham had arrived, and assumed the command of the troops of the Dublin district, with Major Keye as his aide-de-camp.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

PARTICULARS OF THE LOSS OF THE COLUMBIA STEAMER.

The MARGARET, a spare steam-vessel lately employed by the Boston and Halifax Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, arrived at Liverpool on Sunday night last at half past nine o'clock, under the command of Capt. Hosken, with the passengers, bringing the mails and the greater part of the passengers of the Columbia steamer, which was unfortunately wrecked on the reefs at Seal Island, in a dense fog, on Sunday the 2nd of July. We learn that at the time of the Columbia's departure for Boston, the wind was from the eastward with moderate squalls and thick weather. At eight P.M. of that day the fog became dense with a calm sea, and so continued. The ship proceeded on her voyage without any material occurrence until the 3rd, when she suddenly struck on a rock or ledge at a quarter past nine P.M. At the time when she struck she was proceeding at the rate of about 10 knots an hour; the sea was perfectly calm and the fog very thick. There was no land in sight, and not a rock and breaker in all parts of her. There was not the slightest appearance or intimation of danger one moment before she struck. She ran upon the edge and settled down. In about midships. The captain and crew, when she first struck, considered she had run down a fishing boat in the Bay of Fundy; no one had any idea that she was near land, or that she was ahead of the whole reckonings of the Liverpool officers, and had got to the eastward of the currents and tides into the Bay of Fundy. The fishermen who boarded the ship on her taking the ground, all spoke with astonishment of the very extraordinary set of the tides, and all who knew the navigation declared that for some few days previously it had been greater than for any time for many years. Immediately the ship struck, signal guns were fired, which after some time were answered from the shore, and at about four o'clock P.M. a boat boarded them, from the Seal Island, with three fishermen on board the rock, or ledge, on which the ship had struck was called the "Dyer's Limb," and was situate about a mile and a quarter from the shore, and nearly due south from the Seal Island lighthouse. The distance was about 150 miles from Halifax, and it was about high water when she first struck. Instantly on the vessel striking the engines and cables were hauled aft, the coals thrown overboard, the anchors let go from the bows, and every exertion made to lighten the ship, and get her off. Every attempt failed, and, in order, if possible, to get her off, but all was in vain. She was finally fixed on the ledge at midnight, when Captain Savage was ascertained that at this time there was upwards of twenty seven feet of water at her stern.

At about four P.M. the passengers were, with their baggage, landed on the Seal Island. For some time after the ship struck she was found not to make more water than was pumped out easily, got rid of by two pumps, but on the day following a gale sprung up, with a heavy sea, which cut away the rudder, the main and bilged her, and the water then flowed into the engine-room. Captain Savage, therefore, abandoned the vessel to the underwriters, and the agents of the company at Halifax, were duly forwarded on by her to passengers and mails. On Tuesday morning, the 4th, the MARGARET arrived at the wreck, the agent of the company being on board, and immediately took all the mails, with the exception of some of the officers, the pilot, and crew of the COLUMBIA, who were left with the wreck by the purpose of his conduct.

The Margaret left Halifax on the 5th instant, at half-past five, and made the voyage in thirteen days, stopping at the Cove of Cork one day for a further supply of coals. She has a good complement of sixty passengers.

Besides the thickness of the fog, the distance of the Columbia is ascribed also to the extraordinary current which was running when she struck. Such a strong current of the Bay of Fundy, distinguished as it is for the rushing of its tides, was never known by any of forty voyages, and two or three other vessels are now lying stranded by it in sight of the Columbia. It is no wonder, then, if an error occurred in the dead reckoning of her distance.

A meeting of the passengers was held at Seal Island on the 4th instant, when a resolution was passed, appointing a committee of five to draw up a letter to Captain Shannon, expressing their high opinion of his conduct.

THE LATE FATAL ACCIDENT ON BOARD THE CAMPERDOWN.—Miss Barton, who has been lingering since the fatal accident on board the Camperdown, expired at her residence on Saturday last about six o'clock. Lieutenant Rackmore and James Duke are not yet declared out of danger. The symptoms are favourable in the latter instance.

AN ENGLISH SCHOONER RUN DOWN BY A FRENCH WAR STEAMER.—We have to record another steam-boat accident, in which a British vessel has been the sufferer, by no Mosaic account, and it is to be hoped that the French Government will not be backward in [illegible] the Prince, a brig [illegible] Newcastle, bound to [illegible] Rouen, with coals. She was [illegible] the collision, that the steamer [illegible] pass the stern, rigging, and [illegible] which [illegible] per minute. [illegible] Rouen, with coals. She was [illegible] the collision, that the steamer [illegible] pass the stern, rigging, and [illegible] which [illegible] per minute. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE LAST NIGHT BUT THREE OF THE SEASON.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Sign. COSTA respectfully informs the Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public that his BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY next, August 3rd, 1843, when will be performed the First Act of Mozart's Opera, COSI FAN TUTTI: Fiordiligi, Mdme. Persiani; Dorabella, Mdlle. Moltini; Ferrando, Sign. Mario, Guglielmo, Sign. F. Lablache; Don Alfonso, Sign. Lablache. After which, the Second Act of Rossini's celebrated opera, GUGLIELMO TELL: Principal characters by Mdme. Persiani, Sign. Mario, Sign. F. Lablache, and Sign. Formasari. To which will be added, the Second Act of Donizetti's new Opera, DON PASQUALE, as produced with the greatest success at the Italian Opera, Paris: Norina, Mdme. Grisi; Ernesto, Sign. Mario; Dr. Malatesta, Sign. Formasari; and Don Pasquale, Sign. Lablache. And other entertainments in which Mdlle. Fanny Elssler, Mesdlles. Camille, Pianquet, Gaby, Benard, Mdlle. Guy Stephan, and Mdlle. Carlo, M. Silvain, M. St. Leon, and M. Perrot will appear.

Applications for boxes, stalls, and tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade Doors open at seven; to commence at half-past seven o'clock.

WILL SHORTLY CLOSE,

EXHIBITION.—Sir GEORGE HAYTER'S GREAT PICTURE of the HOUSE of COMMONS, painted on 172 square feet of canvas, and containing Portraits of all the Members, a Portrait of the Queen, and various other historical pictures, in which are more than eight hundred portraits of eminent men of the present day, is OPEN for exhibition, from Ten o'clock till dusk every day, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.—Admission, 1s. each person.

ONLY ONE IN THE WORLD.

GLACIARIUM and FROZEN LAKE.—The Artificial Ice, at the Baker-street Bazaar, seems to increase with the summer temperature its virtue of attracting vast numbers of the fashionable world daily sharing on the Frozen Lake, with the beautiful Panorama at Lucerne, which, when lighted, as it is in the evening, and enlivened with chaste music, is indeed a delightful cool resort. Admittance 1s.

THE CHINESE COLLECTION, HYDE PARK CORNER.—

This unique Collection consists of objects exclusively Chinese, and surpasses in extent and grandeur any similar display in this country. The spacious saloon is 72 feet in length, and is crowded with rare and interesting specimens of taste. This Collection embraces upwards of sixty figures, large as life, varying from nature, appropriately attired in their native costume, from the mandarin of the highest rank to the wandering mendicant; also many thousand specimens in natural history and miscellaneous curiosities, the whole illustrating the appearance, manners, and customs, and wealth of more than three hundred million Chinese.—Open from Ten till Ten.—Admittance, 2s. 6d.; Children under Twelve Years, 1s

THE SHRINE of NAPOLEON, or GOLDEN CHAMBER, containing the coach in which he was conveyed from Elba, the property of Prince Louis, for which Madame TUSSAUD and SONS paid 350, the Cloak of Marengo, the magnificent Cot of the King of Rome; the original Picture of Napoleon, for which he set to Isabey, Marie Louise, by Gerard, his state carriage, the Bellona, from Hôtel Lubersac, for Lefebvre, the celebrated Military Carriage, purchased by M. Bulewski, with the authority of Government, from the Prince Regent, for 2000, the Table of the Marshals, valued at 12,000, the Clothes he wore as an exile—being altogether a matchless exhibition. Madame TUSSAUD and SONS, Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square. Admittance, one large room, 1s.; two rooms of Napoleon and Chamber of Horrors, 2s.

THREE DAYS' HOLIDAY FOR THE MILLION.

MR. NICHOLSON, the Lord Chief Baron of the celebrated Judge and Jury Society, of the Garrick's Head, Bow-street, Covent garden, will offer to the Public a THREE DAYS' FETE at CREMORNE HOUSE, CHELSEA, of a character and scale of magnificence unknown to the country, on TUESDAY, and WEDNESDAY, JULY 31st, and AUGUST 1st and 2nd. The attractions are so numerous, that to describe them would be impossible. The amusements will be under the entire superintendence of Mr. Seyle, Mr. Halford, and Mr. T. Matthews, the celebrated clown of the Theatres Royal Covent Garden and Drury Lane. It is, however, essential to mention that Mr. Alexander Barck's celebrated pony "Bobby" will perform his wonderful feat, viz., trotting seven miles and a half in thirty minutes, ridden by a monkey stirred up jockey boots and breeches.

On the second day, viz., the 1st of August, Mr Charles Green, the celebrated aeronaut, will ascend from the grounds in his new balloon, taking up with him and experimenting in the sight of the company, a model of an aerial transit ship. This experiment is one of the deepest interest, unveiling as it does a proposition of scientific importance. During the day the pastimes and entertainments will not be allowed to stand still. In the evening the gardens and pleasure grounds will be brilliantly illuminated for the concert and ball. The entire arrangement will be devoid of everything of a character of disorder and of that nefarious hitherto unmatched. Refreshments of the first quality and of every description at the most moderate charges. Let those who seek for pleasure at a trifling cost repair to Cremorne House. Admission One Shilling, children half price. Cremorne House can be reached from any part of London by Omnibus, sixpence; Steam boat, fourpence

NEW MUSIC.—FOUR SONGS, &c., with Piano Accompaniment. 1. The Prince's Feathers 2 Loch Leven (on the occasion of her Majesty's and Prince Albert visiting Scotland) 3 Little Gerty 4 Allan Gray, reviews, and a second and third part added to the music, by J. Gray The whole, in one cover, 8s., or, separately, 2s. 6d. each.

CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond-street, London; WOOD and Co., Waterloo-place, Edinburgh.

NEW SONG.—I WILL BE TRUE TO THEE

Composed by ALEXANDER LEE.

If "If A. Lee had never written the Soldier's Tear, Where is the Rover, Come dwell with me, Come then to me, My own Blue Bell, and numerous &c., this song would have established his reputation; it is one of the most enchanting compositions we have ever heard. The melody, fresh and original, will be unlocked, and dwell on the memory, which will always feel refreshed with the remembrance."—Vide Musical Review.

London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

—No. 10, Chatham-place, Blackfriars, London.—Established January, 1819.

PRESIDENT—SIR JAMES RIVETT CARNAC, Bart., Rock Cliff, Lymington.

VICE-PRESIDENT—GEO. PORTHOUSE, Esq., Wimbledon.—With Twelve Directors.

FACILITIES are offered by the long-established Society to suit the views and the means of every class of Insurers. Premiums may be annual, half-yearly, or quarterly, and may be on an increasing or decreasing scale. Or one-half only of the usual rate, with interest on the remainder, will be received for five or seven years, the other half to be paid at convenient times out of the assured. The interest may be applied annually in the profits realised. A liberal commission is allowed to Solicitors and Agents.

DAVID FOGGO, Secretary.

N.B.—Agents are wanted in towns where none have been yet appointed.

A CLERGYMAN, late Scholar (on an open foundation) of his College, Oxford, and who has resided for some years on the Continent, wishes to increase the number of his pupils, two of whom are intended for Woolwich. His instructions include, besides the mathematics and classics, French, German (for which a master also attends), and drawing, with fortification, where requisite. Terms, £100 a year. For the address, apply to Mr. R. W. PAINTER, 345, Strand.

IN a very respectable Establishment, a few miles from Town, YOUNG LADIES are liberally BOARDED, and INSTRUCTED in the English and French Languages, the Harp, Piano, Dancing, Drawing, Writing, and Arithmetic. Terms, twenty-six Guineas per annum. Washing included. There is also accommodation for two or three LADIES, with board, or without it, who might be in delicate health, and require fine pure air; they would have it, with a good garden. The premises are large and commodious. Address, post-paid, to H. B., at Mr. PAYNEAR'S, 19, Mark-lane, City.

RUSSIAN CORN AND BUNION PLAISTER.—By the use of this Plaister immediate benefit will be found, and in a short time a radical cure will be effected, by gradually dispersing the hard or soft Corn, and entirely removing those painful throbbings so severely felt at every pressure of the foot.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d., and 2s., at Sanger's Medicine Warehouse, 150, Oxford-street; and all Medicine Vendors throughout the country.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, FIRE-PROOF SAFES, CASH-BOXES, &c.

CHUBB'S NEW PATENT DETECTOR LOCKS give perfect security from false keys, and also detect any attempt to open them. They are made to all sizes, and for every purpose to which locks are applied. These locks are strong, secure, simple, and durable. CHUBB'S FIRE-PROOF SAFES form a complete protection for deeds, plate, books, &c., from fire and thieves. Cash Boxes and Japan Boxes of all sizes fitted with the New Patent Locks. A large assortment of the above on sale, by C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, London.

AT a commodious PREPARATORY SCHOOL for YOUNG GENTLEMEN, in a healthy situation, seven miles from the Metropolis, are vacancies occasioned by the promotion of pupils to classical and other schools. The establishment is conducted on a liberal plan by three ladies experienced in tuition, and is especially adapted for the children of families resident abroad, or those deprived of parental care at home. Most satisfactory references will be given on application to Madame PAS, 37, Sackville-street; Messrs SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Booksellers, Conduit-street; and BOYTAN and LEE's School Library, 151, Fleet-street.

LONDON and DOVER RAILWAY.—Passengers and parties desirous of continuing their tour of pleasure on the Continent can, by taking a return ticket at the SOUTH EASTERN PAVILION, at FOLKESTONE HARBOUR, conducted by Mons. VANTINI (with a full view of the sea), be open for their reception.—Good refreshments, at moderate prices, ready. Tea From Five o'clock. English and Foreign languages spoken. Omnibuses meet every train, seven times up and down daily, and five times on Sundays, from the station to the Pavilion.—The transit by railway is one of the most delightful in England, Folkestone is rather more than three hours.—Select parties desirous of fixing days and rooms can have any arrangement of their own fully provided by writing (post-paid) to Mons. VANTINI.

A WATCH, AS A GIFT, from its particular properties, is the best expression of the truth and constancy of friendship. It is always with the owner, and always doing him service.—J. JONES, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, Watchmaker to the Admiralty, has on sale a great variety of Watches suitable for all classes. The elegant gold horizontal watches, at £7 each, are suitable for ladies and gentlemen.—Read JONES'S Sketch of Watch Work, sent free for a 2d. stamp

REMOVAL and SALE.—WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Successors and Makers to the Duke of York, have REMOVED from 18, Piccadilly to 3, Berkeley-street, Berkeley-square, and 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, Watchmakers to the Admiralty, has on sale a very large selection of the finest second-hand Watches, by the most eminent makers, examined and warranted, at half their original cost. Also the compensated duplex Watches, on the principle of their Chronometers, to which Government awarded the prize three years in succession. Their detached lever Watches are of the first quality, and will bear comparison in performance and elegance with any manufactured, and the prices equally reduced. A splendid selection of foreign Watches, with the horizontal and lever escapements, of very superior manufacture, examined under their personal attention, and at prices which, for the quality, have never been offered to the public. Such an opportunity may never again occur for so large a selection submitted for inspection. Post letters will meet with immediate attention.—WEBSTER and SON, 3, Berkeley-street, Berkeley-square, and 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House, Watchmakers to the Admiralty.

NOTICE TO COUNTRY BOOKSELLERS.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, WITH THIRTY ENGRAVINGS, supplied weekly, on FRIDAY EVENING, without disappointment, by E. FARRINGTON 3, STATION-LANE, Wood-street, Cheapside, where all Books, Periodicals, Newspapers, &c. may be had.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—The Second Volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is now ready, price 18s., and a prepared Cover, price 1s. 6d., to bind it with the First. Paper and Type have been neatly bound in the prepared Cover; for which purpose the numbers may be sent free through the Post, in one parcel, which must be open at the ends, but which otherwise should be carefully covered in the Mail Van (Vol. I.). All the numbers are also published, or any of them, can be supplied, and may be sent by Post.—Apply to W. DAWSON and SON, London and Country Newspaper and Advertising Office, 74, Cannon-street, City, London. Established 1809

On the 1st of July was published, Part I.,

A HISTORY of the FISHES of MADEIRA. By RICHARD THOMAS LOWE, B.A., Cambridge, Naturalist, Chaplain, and original Figures from Nature of all the Species by the Hon. C. E. C. Morton and M. Young. Price, in 8vo., 2s. 6d. plain; 3s. coloured; or, in 4to., 3s. plain, 7s. 6d. coloured.

London: JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

This day is published, price 9s., 12mo.,

MANUAL of BRITISH BOTANY, containing the Flowering Plants and Ferns, arranged according to the Natural Orders. By CHARLES C. BABINGTON, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. "Mr. Babington is a very valuable contribution to our knowledge of British plants, full of original information and good critical remarks."—The Gardener's Chronicle, June 10.

JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

YARRELL'S BRITISH BIRDS.

A HISTORY of BRITISH BIRDS.

By WILLIAM YARRELL, F.L.S., V.P.Z.S., &c.

This work contains a history and description, engraved expressly for this work, of each species of the Birds found in Britain. The three volumes contain 520 Illustrations. Price, in demy 8vo., 2l. 2s.; Royal 8vo., 3l. 3s.; or Imperial 8vo., 4l. 4s. To omit the commencement of purchasers, the work will still be sold in parts, at 2s. 6d. each, or in volumes. Vol. I., price 28s.; Vol. II., 31s.; Vol. III., 30s.

JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

TALE OF THE COAST GUARD

Will be published with the Magazines, on the 1st of August, Part VI., illustrated, price 1s.,

THE SMUGGLERS; a Chronicle of the Coast Guard. By FRANCIS HUGGINS, Esquire, Lieutenant, Royal Navy. The Sixth Number, completing the first volume.

On the 1st of August, with the monthly part and magazines, will be published, in boards,

The First Volume of THE SMUGGLERS, complete.

All persons desirous of possessing complete copies are requested to make early application to their respective booksellers

WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane, London; and can be obtained of all booksellers.

This day is published, Part III., with upwards of 150 beautiful Illustrations, the First Part of ANIMAL PHYSIOLOGY; including a General Survey of the Animal Kingdom; with special reference to the Physiology of the Human Body; being the Fifth Part of the POPULAR CYCLOPÆDIA OF NATURAL SCIENCE. By W. B. CARPENTER, M.D. The Four Parts already published are:—I. VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY, price 6s. II. BOTANY, price 6s. III. MECHANICAL PHILOSOPHY, price 4s. IV. HYDROSTATICS and HYDRAULICS, price 6s.

 The Illustrations mentioned above are those prepared by M. MICHEL EDWARDS for his "Cours Elémentaire d'Histoire Naturelle," used in the Collège Royal de France.

London: WM. S. ORR and Co., Paternoster-row, and W. and R. CHAMBERS, Edinburgh.

TO CHESS PLAYERS.—"Greco has been justly celebrated as a first-rate player, and his work is considered by good judges as exhibiting great skill and ingenuity, and abounding with brilliant and instructive situations. It has been by some years rather out of date. Lewis, therefore, thought it would be rendering a most acceptable service to the amateurs of Chess to publish a translation of it, with such improvements as it was probable he could bring, and which the work seemed to me to require."—Lewis.

For copies of this work, price 4s., apply to Mr. LEWIS, author of several works on Chess, 12, Chatham-place, Blackfriars; Mr. J. W. BORROW, 130, Houndsditch; or to Mr. J. H. HUTTMANN, 15, Hand-court, Holborn

GILBERT'S MODERN ATLAS.—The approbation bestowed upon this Atlas of the World has induced the proprietor to prepare an improved edition. The letter-press and Maps have been carefully corrected, and the Maps have undergone thorough revision. Two new features have been added—The divisional Maps of the Continents each on a scale showing the true dimensions of the respective countries in contrast with England, exhibiting the difference in their respective sizes. The same Maps also have the Fonts of the Counties, within the circle of whose influence is traced a miniature Map of England, showing the place in which the country is situated, showing at a glance the position and area each particular empire or state occupies in comparison with the continent to which it belongs.

It is without presumption anticipated that the present edition of this unique, elegant, and highly-esteemed work will maintain its reputation, and command as extensive sale.

In regular 4to., with copious descriptive letter-press, and a consulting Index of 45,000 Places, price, half-bound Turkey morocco, only £3 3s.; or without the Letter-press, £2 10s.—London: JAMES GILBERT, Paternoster-row.

AFGHAUNISTAN.

Now ready, the Fourth Edition of HAGHE's beautiful Lithographic Work of the PASSES, FORTS, and CITIES of the SCENE of WAR in INDIA.

Just published, the Second Series of the CHARACTER and COSTUME of AFGHAUNISTAN. By Captain HART, 32nd Bengal Infantry.

MR. OWEN JONES' New Work.

VIEWS on the NILE, from CAIRO to the SECOND CATARACT.

SIR DAVID WILKIE'S TURKEY, SYRIA, and EGYPT. Lithographed by JOSEPH NASH, Esq.

Price: Each Work, Half Morocco, £6 6s., Coloured and Mounted, £10 10s.

London: Published by GAMBART, NUTT, and WARNERS, 6, Pall-mall.

DOUGLAS JERROLD'S SHILLING ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE for August will contain—

I. THE CHRONICLES OF CLOVERNOOK: with some Account of the Hermit of Bellsfolle, and his Ascent to the Kingdom of As-you-like. By the Editor.
II. Eureka.
III. The Adjutator Tank; with Portraits taken on the Indus. By Mrs. Postans.
IV. Arrequipa. By Francis Bond Head.
V. Curfew.
VI. The Folly of the Sword. By the Editor.
VII. The Last Stage Coachman. By Wilkie Collins.
VIII. The Coming Revolution. By Paul Peredegrast.
IX. Love and Friendship. By Catherine Parr.
X. Mr. Jefferies. By Miss Pardoe.
XI. The Old Problem. By R. H. Horne, Author of "Orion."
XII. Dogs' Tales—The Unlucky Dog. By E. B. Peake.
XIII. Polar Lands, Borderlands.
XIV. The Ideal and the Actual.
XV. Modern Accomplishments.
XVI. Literary Review.

The Illustrations by K. Meadows, Hine, Sarrett, Henning, Scott, and Dodgson.

London: Published by DOUGLAS JERROLD, 2, Bolt-court; and by all Booksellers.

Just published, 16 pp. 8vo., price 1s., to be had, by order, of all Booksellers,

AN ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of the BOOKS PUBLISHED by JOHN VAN VOORST, with a Specimen Illustration from each of the following works:—

OWEN'S HISTORY of BRITISH FOSSIL MAMMALIA.
BAPTISMAL FONTS.
SELBY'S HISTORY of BRITISH FOREST TREES.
The VICAR of WAKEFIELD, illustrated by MULREADY.
JENYNS'S MANUAL of BRITISH BOTANY.
BULLAR'S WINTER in the AZORES
GOSSE'S CANADIAN NATURALIST.
AIKIN'S ILLUSTRATION of ARTS and MANUFACTURES.
MOULE'S HERALDRY of FISH.
JONES'S OUTLINE of the ANIMAL KINGDOM.
BELL'S HISTORY of BRITISH QUADRUPEDS.
YARRELL'S HISTORY of BRITISH BIRDS.
BELL'S HISTORY of BRITISH REPTILES
YARRELL'S HISTORY of BRITISH FISHES.
FORBES'S HISTORY of BRITISH STARFISHES.
NEWMAN'S FAMILIAR HISTORY of INSECTS.
Paternoster-row, July, 1843.

CRICKET.—W. H. MASON respectfully announces he has commenced the important undertaking of publishing an engraving of a CRICKET MATCH, worthy of the noble and scientific game it is intended to illustrate. The scene selected is the Ground, Dorset Ground, at Stamford, during the late contest between the counties of SURREY and KENT, introducing Likenesses of all the Principals, and many others, supporters and characters interested in the game. In order to accomplish which, W. H. MASON has secured the services of first-rate Artists in particular as well as in incident and landscape-painting, intending to produce a plate as companion to "The Meet at Ascot," and similar fine rare works of Art. The original Drawing, from which the engraving will be taken, is in hand, and when finished will be exhibited in most of the principal towns where Cricket is the popular amusement. Amongst the many characteristic Portraits will be those of

Charles Taylor, Esq.	G. L. Langdon, Esq.	Pilch
— Napper, Esq.	— Lillywhite	Wenman
— Mynn, Esq.	— Box	Hillyer
— Felix, Esq.	— Hawkins	Adams
— Bailey, Esq.	— Mantle	Mantegazza
Baker, Esq.	— Mulyard	Dorrington
— Whittaker, Esq.	George Pickwell	Colleycourt
— Kynaston, Esq.	Robert Pickwell	Bayley

And about Fifty other Likenesses.

W. H. MASON, Repository of Arts, Brighton; ACKERMANN and Co., London.

COLD-WATER CURE.—THE HYDROPATHIC ESTABLISHMENT, at Stanstead Bury House, near Hertford, is now in full operation, with Baths of every description. The place is delightful, situated on a hill noted for its salubrity, with 16 acres of pleasure ground, and the water, walks, and drives excellent. The director, Mr. WEISS, is thus referred to in CAPTAIN CLARIDGE'S book:—"The principles and system coming the restless to Gruefenberg seemed to be, that Mr. Weiss understood and practised the water cure with greater safety and more undeviating success than any other of its professors, with the exception of PRESSNITZ himself."—A prospectus, price 1s., may be had of SIMPKIN and Co., Stationers'-court, and all booksellers. Mr. WEISS may be consulted professionally, at 32, Sackville-street, every Wednesday, before three o'clock. A report having been circulated that Mr. Weiss has left, the public are informed it is unfounded.

THE ORPHAN FAMILY of the late Mr. E. W. ELTON.—A Committee is formed for the benefit of the Surviving Children. A BENEFIT for the seven fatherless and motherless CHILDREN of Mr. W. ELTON, late of the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, a sufferer in the fatal wreck of the Pegasus. The performances will be announced as soon as possible; in the mean time offers of professional service on the occasion will be gratefully received, as well as subscriptions in money, by CHARLES DICKENS, Chairman.

COMMITTEE.

W. H. Ainsworth, Esq.	T. Greenwood Esq.	Kenny Meadows, Esq.
H. Allen, Esq.	J. P. Harley, Esq.	B. W. Procter, Esq.,
Robert Bell, Esq.	R. Horner, Esq.	Samuel Rogers, Esq.
Bentley, Esq.	Thomas Hood, Esq.	T. J. Serle, Esq.
James Blanchard, Esq.	D. Jerrold, Esq.	F. Stone, Esq.
J. R. Beckstone, Esq.	Robert Keeley, Esq.	G. Stonehill, Esq., R.A.
John Cooper, Esq.	Mark Lemon, Esq.	Mr. Sergeant Talfourd.
George Cruikshank, Esq.	C. Landseer, Esq., A.R.A.	Benjamin Webster, Esq.
J. Dillon, Esq.	Jas. Landseer, Esq.	Charles Young, Esq.
W. Farren, Esq.	Daniel Maclise, Esq., R.A.	And many others.
John Forster, Esq.	Charles Mathews, Esq.

TREASURERS—B. B. Perry SECRETARY—R. R. M'Lan.

Subscriptions already received will be duly announced. Lists are also open at the Freemasons' Tavern, and at the banking-houses of Messrs. Coutts and Co., and Sir Claude Scott and Co

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWING-ROOM, LIBRARY, &c., in Italian Alabaster, Marble, Bronze, and Derbyshire Spar, consisting of Vases, Figures, Groups, Candlesticks, Obelisks, Tazzas, Inkstands, Paper-weights, &c. Imported by J. TENNANT (late MAWE), 149, Strand.—J. T. has an extensive assortment of Shells, Minerals, and Fossils, &c. He also arranges for Students in Geology, Mineralogy, or Conchology, Elementary Collections, from Two to Fifty Guineas each, and gives private instruction in Mineralogy.

DINNER, DESSERT, TEA, and TOILET SERVICES, &c.—SANDER and CO. beg to announce that they have for inspection at their spacious Showrooms, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, a large assortment of New Patterns of the above Services in Porcelain, Ironstone, China, and Earthenware. A splendid selection of richly cut Glass, in table and decanter ornaments, chandeliers, lustres, &c., of every description. Papier maché trays, inkstands, and fancy ornaments in bronze, ormolu, china, &c. &c., to great variety.—Sander and Co., 42, High Holborn, opposite Gray's-inn-gate.

All Goods ordered abroad properly packed and carted to the Docks and Wharfs free.

NOVEL ARTICLE FOR THE TOILET.—MELMOTH'S GEORGIAN EXTRACT is decidedly one of the most useful preparations ever offered to the public: a little of it used twice a day entirely removes from perspiration the unpleasant odour of decomposing animal matter in the armpits. Its application is harmless, its efficacy astonishing; it has never failed in a single instance; those who once use it will never be without it. Sold by the leading perfumers, hosiers, hatters, fancy warehousemen, and warm clothiers. Pamphlets of efficacy and refinement will be sent, if as an inexpensive addition to the toilet.—Sold in bottles, 2s. 6d. each, at J. Sanger's Medicine Warehouse, 150, Oxford street; Messrs. Oxford and Co., 136, Strand; and Mr. Hodgson, 24, Poultry. Sold by Chemists.

MOULD CANDLES TO BURN WITHOUT SNUFFING.—KEMPTON'S PATENT.—These Candles do not require snuffing; they burn longer and are cheaper than any other candle; the flame is steady and brilliant. No unsightly or deleterious matter is used in the manufacture. Price, 8d. per lb. Sold by G. E. Parish, Agent for Exportation, 21½, Bread street, City, and by Sladden and Stocking, 45, High-street, Marylebone; W. Gethen, Broadley-terrace, Blandford-square; W. Evans, Baker; Hanson, Grosvenor-place, George Hotel; Bowyer, Pitfield-street, Hoxton; John Hawkins, grocer, High-street, Whitechapel; S. Gasse, Fish-street-hill; J. Pain, grocer Brunswick-road, G. H. Hooper, 232, Blackfriars-road; C. H. Nicholas, 19, Bolingbroke-row, Walworth; and at the Manufactory, Old Bargehouse, Carnstchurch, Surrey.

GINGER BRANDY.—This invaluable Liquor continues to be manufactured by VINCENT and PUGH, the original Proprietors, at their Distillery, 16, New Parkstreet, Borough, and 49, Rood-lane, City, and may be obtained of all respectable retail dealers in the metropolis, in bottles neatly sealed and labelled.

TO CONNOISSEURS IN BRANDY.—They have also fully succeeded in bringing to public notice their Cognac, which for purity and delicacy possesses equally with the delicacy of character and richness of bouquet natural to Cognac, they being supported in their assertion by the opinions of both the French growers, and the first connoisseurs in the English market.

THE PALE BRANDY is particularly recommended as something extremely curious.

EDWARD DODD, MANUFACTURER to H.R.H. Duke of Cambridge of his ANGLO-ROMAN STEREOTYPES for VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, and HARP, which Strings for power of tone and durability are equal to the best Italian Strings, at one-third the price, and for which he has chose in general use. They have a peculiar property of resisting the ill effects of heated rooms. Testimonials from Messrs. Blagrove, Tolbecque, Lindley, Lodge, Cooke, and Dando. To be had of the above shops, and at the manufactory, 112, Vauxhall Walk, Lambeth. Each bundle wrapped with a blue band, with E. DODD, Anglo-Roman Strings, and the Royal Arms and the E. Dodd's Anglo-Roman Strings. Also in proved Silver Strings, warranted not to turn green.

KETT'S CASTOR OIL POMATUM is the best preparation for encouraging the growth of the hair, and entirely preventing the accumulation of scurf. Its stimulating and cleansing properties eminently adapt it for children. Sold in pots, 1s., 2s. 6d., 5s., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each. Kett's Pine Apple Tooth Paste, 1s. Kett's Hair Dye, 5s. Kett's Eau de Cologne, 4s. 6d. per bottle, at No. 24, Gracechurch-street; and of all Chemists and Perfumers, through Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, Farringdon-street.

PARKER'S ORIGINAL GRECIAN COMPOUND, for changing Red or Grey Hair to beautiful and natural shades of Black or Brown. By a judicious but simple application of the Liquid Dye, any person may, in a few minutes, dye their Hair any shade of Brown or Black they may wish, without the slightest inconvenience or causing the least injury to the skin. Gentlemen will find it the most effectual Dye for Whiskers that has as yet been invented

Sold in bottles, at 3s. 6d., 6s., and 10s. 6d., by J. Sanger, 150, Oxford street, facing Bond-street; GROOM, 43, Threadneedle-street; and of all Chemists and Perfumers, through Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, Farringdon-street.

SELLING OFF.—RETIRING FROM BUSINESS.—GREAT SALE OF SILKS, SHAWLS, LINENS, LINEN DRAPERY, HOSIERY, LACE, GLOVES, RIBBONS, and FANCY GOODS.—W. EDGINTON, 97, Piccadilly respectfully announces to the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in general, that in consequence of his retirement to reside from business, he purposes offering the whole of his valuable and extensive stock at a considerable reduction from the original cost, for ready money, which consists of Rich Brocade, Satin, and Moire Glacé, and Rainbow Silks; Fancy Silks; French Merinos, Mousline de Laines, Linens, Sheeting, Shawls, Lace and Valenciennes Laces, French Threads, Handkerchiefs, together with an immense variety of Fancy Goods, and as every article has been purchased in the first British and Foreign markets for cash, and selected with the greatest care, ladies and families may make their purchases with unlimited confidence, and under the most advantageous circumstances. 97, Piccadilly, opposite St. James's Church.

The Lease and Fixtures to be disposed of.

THE TEA ESTABLISHMENT, 4 and 5, KING WILLIAM-STREET, CITY.—The Overland Mail of this month confirms the account previously received of the favourable state of affairs in China, and of large shipments of Tea to this country. The effect will be a continuance of the low prices of Teas which have for some short time past prevailed in the market; and as it has always been a rule with the proprietors of this establishment to meet the various changes which take place, where those changes, as in this instance, are likely to prove permanent, we have now to announce a reduction of 4d per lb. in good and fine Congou and Souchong, 8d per pound on fine and superfine Hyson, and 8d to 10d per lb. on fine Gunpowder. These descriptions of Tea have never been known so cheap. The Public is earnestly requested to take no trouble to require notice, that the accompanying list of prices the consumer will obtain the full benefit of the alteration:—

BLACK TEAS.

Ordinary to Good Ordinary Congou	..	3s 4d to 3s 8d per lb.
Useful Congou	..	3s 4d to 3s 6d
Good Congou, full flavour	..	3s 8d
Strong Congou, blackish leaf	..	4s equal to former 4s 4d
Fine Congou, Pekoe Souchong kind	..	4s 4d, equal to former 4s 8d
Finest Congou, very blackish leaf, full rich Pekoe Souchong flavour	..	4s 8d, equal to former 5s
Lapsang Souchong	..	5s 4d, equal to former 5s 8d
Fine rich burnt Congou Pekoe, Hyson flavour	..	4s 8d

Besides the above kinds of Black Tea, there is a large stock of Singapore Souchong in the market at 2s 4d to 2s 8d per lb; but as the greater part is unfit for use, we give no quotations.

GREEN TEAS.

Common Twankay, or Hyson Skin	..	2s 6d to 2s 8d per lb.
Fine Twankay, blown kind	..	3s 10d
Fine Hyson kind	..	4s
Good Hyson	..	4s 4d
Fine Hyson	..	4s 8d equal to former 5s
Fine Hyson, fresh and full flavour	..	5s, 6s, to former 5s 8d
Superfine Hyson, rich delicate flavour	..	6s 4d equal to former 6s
Superfine Hyson, bright coarse leaf	..	6s, equal to former 7s
Young Hyson	..	4s 4d to 4s 8d
Preferable ditto	..	5s 8d to 5s
Fine Orleans, small close wiry leaf	..	6s 4d
Imperial Gunpowder	..	4s 6d to 5s
Superfine Imperial, finest Hyson flavour	..	5s 4d
Gunpowder, Canton kind	..	4s 6d to 4s 8d
Gunpowder, small even leaf	..	5s 4 to 5s 8d
Good Gunpowder, Strong burnt flavour	..	5s 8d
Fine Gunpowder, even leaf	..	6s
Finest Gunpowder, small close twisted leaf	..	6s 8d, equal to former 7s
Curious Gunpowder, small bright pearly leaf	..	7s, equal to former 8s

COFFEE.

Triage, or common Plantation Coffee	..	8d to 1s per lb.
Ceylon Coffee	..	1s 2d
Fine Ceylon	..	1s 4d
Fine Company's Java	..	1s 2d
Fine Jamaica Coffee, or picked Java	..	1s 6d
Mocha and Mocha	..	1s 10d, equal to former 2s 2d.

COCOA.

Best flaked Cocoa	..	7½d. per lb.
Finest soluble Cocoa, in ½ lb packets	..	9d

TERMS.—Cash on delivery of Goods To Parties residing in the country, if accompanying their Orders with a respectable reference, a remittance on receipt of their will be duly noticed.

NOTICE.—This establishment was opened for the sale of Teas in October 1838, and on the means of reducing the price about 40 to 50 per cent

It has no connexion whatever with any other house in London The Proprietors think it necessary to make this remark, as several minor houses are in the habit of copying their circulars, evidently with the intention of misleading the public.

July 4, 1843. RIDGWAY and COMPANY, 4 and 5, King William-street, City.

NOTICE.—All communications respecting the transmission or non-arrival of the paper, must be addressed only to the person who sups the paper or who receives the subscription.

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of Farmer and Clayton), in the Parish of St. George, Fleet-street; and published by WILLIAM LITTLER, at 198, Strand, where all communications for the Editor are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, July 29, 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 66.—Vol. III.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

THE LAW OF THE POLICE-OFFICE.

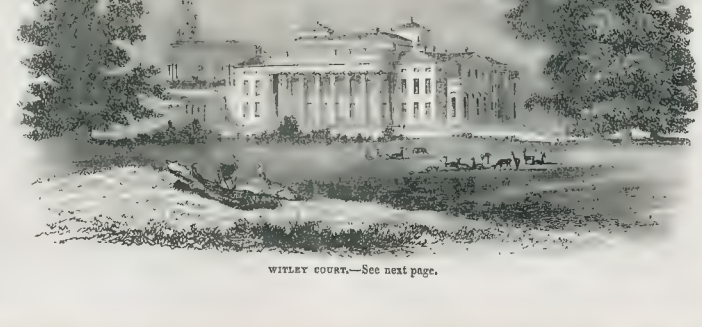
There is a subject upon which the public must naturally feel the deepest interest from its intimate connection with the exercise of domestic justice, or rather the administration of domestic law, and which a recent event in one of our courts of police has made peculiarly prominent at the present juncture. It consists in the nature and extent of magisterial powers, and their corrective effect upon the minor delinquencies of the community.

It is probable that no responsibility is so unequally administered, and so ill-defined as that of our police magistrates, and the daily experience of their courts; and the perusal in the diurnal press of the misadventures that are brought before them must suggest to all reasoning minds the serious anomalies and inconsistencies of the law which arms them with powers often excessive in their extent, but still oftener so restricted and limited as to make it totally impossible that they should deal with the emergency of the moment and grapple with the justice of the case. The shape in which the evil of our practical police-law most frequently manifests itself is in the disproportion of money-fines to the kind of offences which they are meant to punish, and the impossibility of their being connected with anything like a satisfactory retribution upon particular crimes. We say nothing of the way in which the application of these fines to different ranks sometimes becomes intolerable to the eye of justice—the forty shillings, which is a long sentence of imprisonment to the pauper-culprit—and the five pounds, which is but another bauble squandered by the noble delinquent as the price of dissipation—because, although these grievances against truth are sufficiently crying and glaring when they transpire, yet they are more subject to the mere discretion of the magistrate than to any incontrollable evil in the law; but we apply our present remarks to those anomalies which exist in the magistrate's despite, and which, while he may be ever so ardently inclined to render strict and impartial justice, restrain him in his power of so doing, offend his judgment, insult his better sense, and shackle his means of rendering proper homage to the virtuous feelings of the community. The case which has induced these reflections will hardly have escaped the attention of our readers: and we seize upon it as an example of the general mischief of which we complain, because the magistrate himself has thought proper to make it the occasion of professing his own incompetency of doing justice under the law, and of pointing out the strong necessity for some legislative reform in this respect. The case in question was one of cruelty—one of those rare instances of low, abominable brutality towards a child which, thank Heaven, are only exceptions to the rule of orderly conduct pursued by a Christian community—but of which the depravity is not the less shocking for being singular—and of which the infrequency does not lessen the abhorrence in the public mind. Very savage assaults do not often disgrace our civil history; but it is a sin and a reproach upon us that when they do our administrators of the law are not sufficiently armed to punish them, and society goes unvindicated under circumstances by which its feelings of humanity have been most deeply aggrieved. The evil arises thus. Five pounds is named as the maximum fine awarded to the discretion of the magistrate for any offences that are fineable at all; and if they should be regarded by him as of too serious—nay, atrocious—a character for summary conviction, then his alternative is the sending them for trial before a court of criminal judicature. But the experience of police courts proves that in nine of these cases out of ten, though the nature of the crime is definite and palpable—although its commission and its guilt are placed beyond all doubt in the conviction of the magistrate—although he abhors the offence, and properly longs to send the offender to justice—yet, with all these impressions strong upon him, he feels that the case is not sufficiently backed up with technical evidence to make it complete elsewhere; that some legal quibble or opportunity of compromise may present an opening of escape for the guilty parties, and so, in the exercise of a painful, but, perhaps, a sound discretion, he dismisses some unmitigated scoundrel or ruffian with a fine of five pounds, lest the other alternative should let him loose upon society without even that slight and inadequate retribution for his offence. This is a crying grievance which it is plain the magistrate most bitterly feels, and which he very naturally calls upon the Legislature to remedy, by investing him with higher powers in cases of special and distinct enormity.

The case which appeared in Monday's papers is, per se, a sad one—shameful—revolting—humiliating; but its public importance lies in the fact of its having elicited from public writers strong, indignant remarks, and from the magistrate a true and striking picture of the bad condition of the law. A meek child—a little girl and an orphan—had been fiercely and inhumanly assaulted by a ruffian of the name of Woods, a livery stable keeper at London-wall. The man, who had a family of his own, and whose own sons eventually checked his unmanly brutality, beat and terrified the unprotected little creature with the most heartless violence—the most savage ferocity—reducing her to a pitiable condition of wounds and bruises, and dishonouring our common nature by a wild and frenzied abandonment to untamed barbarity. Accident, and the chance exercise of a humane benevolence brought the case under the cognizance of the magistrate, who expressed his horror at the condition of the helpless child, and of the great atrocity of the assault, which, however, he only punished with a fine of five pounds—a sum immediately paid by the wretch who inflicted the injury, and who probably thought that in the flight and agony which he had caused the little orphan he had the full value for his money. At all events the five pounds was no adequate punishment, and so the public felt, for several letters immediately appeared in the public journals denouncing the magistrate in round terms for thus letting off a monster, who well deserved to have been indicted at the sessions, and to have been criminally sentenced for his revolting act. The letters and the sequel to the occurrence, which took place at Worship-street, caused Mr. Broughton to speak in the following terms; and to his remarks we beg to call the earnest attention of our readers.

I shall now avail myself of this opportunity of making a few observations on this case, the circumstances attending which are of a somewhat remarkable description, and have given rise to a great deal of public discussion, remarks, and comments, and which observations I consider to be imperatively called for from me. A long report of the case has been published in the Times newspaper, and on that I have only one observation to make, which is, that it is a very excellent report, and very accurately and impartially given; indeed, as far as the reporter is concerned, I have no fault to find; but that report has given rise to several letters in the Times, one of them signed "Marcus," and another "A Clergyman," the writers of both which letters complain loudly of my adjudication, in inflicting a fine upon the defendant, instead of sending him to prison for his ill-treatment of the child, as they are of opinion I should have done. Now, this is altogether a mistaken notion of these gentlemen, resulting from their ignorance of the law. The fact of the matter is that I had no power to send the man to prison in the summary manner indicated; I cannot imprison any man in such circumstances without a penalty, and if he pays that penalty there my power ends. Had the assault been committed on a police constable, the case would have been different, for there, upon satisfactory proof of the assault, I could have immediately sent the offender to gaol, as I am authorized to do by the Metropolitan Police Act; but in this case I could not. Here I inflicted the utmost penalty on the defendant that the law empowers me to give him. I, moreover, at the time he was before me, visited him with the severest remarks, and shortly stated the law of the case, and the probable result of sending the case to the sessions—the entire escape of the offender without punishment. This was a very bad case, undoubtedly, and no one is more aware than myself that the penalty was totally inadequate. But I could not help that; the fault is not mine, it rests with the Legislature, which so cramps and curtails the power of a magistrate, that he is frequently placed in this unpleasant position, that although he knows he is administering the law, he is likewise sensible he is not administering justice. I know perfectly well, that if I had consented to let this man off by paying, as a compensation for his cruelty, more than £5—the extent I could go—he would have refused to pay it, and paid the penalty to the Queen, for he was obviously actuated by that feeling. I might have sent him to take his trial at the sessions; and what would have been the result of that course? This would have been the result—that, to insure any chance of conviction, I myself must have become the prosecutor, which I have no right to become, and which is a most improper position for a magistrate to be placed in. Moreover, had I done so, the first question asked me would have been, "Who is to pay the expenses?" for this is not like a Crown prosecution: there is no public prosecutor here, as there ought to be in cases of this description, and either I or the officer must have paid the expenses out of our own pockets—a great inducement to further the ends of justice! A case of a similar description to this occurred very lately at this court, exceeding this in cruelty, I think, but at all events a parallel case, in which a father had been in the constant practice of chaining his child, a little boy nine or ten years of age, down to the floor for weeks together, stinting him of his food, and practising other cruelties on him. It was a truly shocking case, and I was so anxious the unnatural parent should be punished that I sent Rowland, the summoning officer, to the parish authorities of Bethnal-green, in which parish the offence was committed, to induce them to prosecute; but Mr. Christey, their relieving overseer, waited on me the next day, and told me that he had submitted the case to the board, and that they had desired him to state that they could not prosecute, as they had no funds to apply to such a purpose. I made some stringent remarks, I recollect, upon that refusal, and expressed my opinion that this was the only country in the civilized world where people in authority refused to throw the shield of protection over injured innocence. Parishes used formerly to prosecute in these cases, but they will not do so now, for they cannot get their accounts passed by the Poor-law auditors with such an item in them, and they therefore refuse to do it. Well, I was still determined to have justice done if I could, and having failed with the parish authorities, I thought I would try my private influence; I therefore wrote to the clerk of the peace, and stated to him my opinion of the case, and that it was one that ought to be prosecuted. That gentleman immediately acceded to my wishes, agreed to forego his own fees, to pay his clerks for preparing the indictment, and to bear the expense of the necessary parchments out of his own pocket. Well, I thought it must be right now; but not so. Rowland, a principal witness in the case, not seeing the child in court on the morning of the trial, guessed there was something wrong, and ran back to the workhouse to see if he had left for the court. On entering one of the wards he saw the boy there, and while speaking to him thought he saw something in his hand; he inquired what it was, and the boy very coolly unfolded a piece of paper, and after turning it about in all directions, as though he were trying to solve a riddle, delivered the puzzling document to the officer, who, on inspecting it, absolutely found that it was the notice of trial; for the father, in order to conform to the law, but in fact to make a complete farce of it, had, incredible as it may appear, actually served the notice of trial upon the child—this mere infant being the prosecutor on his own behalf, as no one else would take it up! So that, but for the activity and presence of mind of the officer, this man, who had been guilty of these manifold cruelties, would have escaped completely scatheless. I adduce this case only as an illustration of the defectiveness of the law, but I could state several others of a similar description, and equally apposite. A great many gentlemen have spoken to me about this case, and among them several members of Parliament, and very stringent commentaries they have made upon what they conceived to be my too lenient judgment; but when I explained the matter to them, and told them what I had done, and what only I was empowered to do, they directly expressed themselves as satisfied, and acknowledged that I had thrown quite a new light upon the subject. They are all most strongly of opinion that a very great alteration of the law is demanded in this respect, and I do most sincerely hope that the attention of the Legislature will be drawn to it, and that they will make such legislative enactments as will place more power in the hands of magistrates for such beneficial purposes as these, and which I will say, as the result of my long experience, are most imperatively demanded.

It will readily be admitted that the above remarks are full of truth, point, and stringency, and that they most properly convey to the general mind of the community impressions upon the condition of the law which ought at once to rouse it into something like a virtuous anxiety for the abolition of evils of which even the law's administrators are found so loudly and eloquently to complain. The address of Mr. Broughton, which we have held it so desirable to print, is most creditable, and puts the whole subject in a broad, bright light, which the public will not mistake. We have deemed it a paramount duty to fix attention upon it, and we do hope that it will be brought to the serious consideration of the Legislature, so that the practical decisions in our minor courts of judicature may be impressed and elevated with something like the pure spirit of truth and justice, and that crime may not be able to cower and crouch away from punishment under a miserable impotence of the law.



WITLEY COURT.—See next page.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—WITLEY COURT.

On Thursday Queen Adelaide left town for Witley Court, Worcestershire, to take up her autumnal residence there, a sojourn in one of our midland counties having been recommended by her Majesty's medical advisers, in lieu of the contemplated visit to Germany.

Witley, or Whitley, Court is situate at the foot of Woodbury Hill, in the parish of Great Whitley, about ten miles and a half N. W. by N. from Worcester, and near to the roads from Worcester to Ludlow, and from Stafford to Hereford. Woodbury Hill is reputed to have been an early British camp; and it was one of the posts taken up by Owen Glendower, in his war with Henry IV.: at its base runs the Teme, which is joined by the Severn below Worcester.

Witley Court has been taken for the Queen Dowager's occupation for a term of three years. The estate was purchased by the guardians of Lord Ward, about two years since, of Lord Foley, whose family had possessed the property above two hundred years: it is, without exception, one of the finest properties in the kingdom. The mansion is placed in a highly picturesque park, which, having formerly belonged to a religious house, pays no tithes: it is an extensive pile, the principal front having, as our engraving shows, a noble Ionic colonnade and balustraded terrace. The interior is handsomely fitted up, and the offices are especially convenient. Certain alterations have, however, been found requisite for the accommodation of the Queen Dowager and Her Majesty's numerous suite.

One of the peculiarities of Witley Court is, that the parish church is made to communicate with the mansion, and is one of the most elegant structures of the kind in this country: it is shown in the left-hand distance of the engraving. This church was built early in the last century, by the first Lord Foley, and Mary his widow, and is worthy of the opulence and taste of their noble family: it contains a superb marble monument to their memory, by Ryabrach. The interior is sumptuously decorated; the windows having been painted by Price, and the ceilings by Wyatt: they were originally designed for the chapel at Canons, near Edgware, at the dismantling of which building, in 1747, they were purchased for Witley, by the second Lord Foley. The communication of the church with the mansion is by a closet north of the altar.

Worcestershire is rife with interesting associations, besides its picturesque hills, the prodigal richness and fertility of its plains and vales, and its beautiful villages. The simple and august cathedral of Worcester contains the tomb of King John, one of the most ancient royal monuments in England; and the great battle of Worcester is one of the landmarks of our history. Malvern was a favourite resort of Henry VII., who built the abbey church; and the village has fast grown in fame and extent since the long visit of the Duchess of Kent and Princess Victoria. The county likewise contains several seats of kindred rank with Witley Court; as Hagley, the "British Tempe;" Westwood, a fine late Tudor mansion; Hewell Grange, of the same date as Witley; Hartlebury, the rural castle of the Bishops of Worcester, Stamford Court, and its luxuriant oak woods; Northwic, modernised by Lord Burlington; and several others. The climate of the county is pure and comparatively equable; and we trust that its restorative influence may be experienced by the illustrious and amiable occupant of Witley Court.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

SPAIN.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, Aug. 1, 1843.—Events of great importance have taken place in Spain since my last communication to you. Madrid capitulated to General Aspiroz, and General Serrano refused carrying out the principal articles of the treaty of Bilboa. The regular troops, as set for the purpose of protecting the country against foreign foes, have disarmed the National Guard, organised for the protection of the inhabitants. General Narvaez, the chief point of discussion, has been pronounced and probably will be created Duke of Madrid; Colonel Prim, the chief of the Ultra Liberals, has been raised to the rank of a count. The Lopez Ministry has been reinstated, and governs the country in the name of the nation. The new Minister for Foreign Affairs has requested the diplomatic agents to address their official despatches to him, and to which no answer has been made. Saragossa is in the point of capitulating, not to the insurgents, but to a new form of government. In short, any one acquainted with Spain would say, the question is settled, the insurgents have triumphed, peace and tranquillity will be restored in the Peninsula; and in my opinion, it is quite the reverse. I may be considered hazarding too much in stating what I do in a manner the most positive, that Spain is at the present moment in a more unsettled state, and that, at no former period, have the most formidable character may be expected. Already have the principal Juntas in Andalusia and La Mancha protested against the employment of the Christino generals Seoane, Iegra, Granada, Alicant, Barcelona, Castellon de Plana, have refused obeying the orders of the Christino Government, to such an extent has dissatisfaction arisen in Catalonia, that the National Guards sent from Barcelona against Reguerro-Cabanas shots were given on the road, actually refused to march, and returned to Barcelona. Narvaez, as Captain-General of Madrid, may for a time keep the capital in a state of terror; but he cannot be sanguine enough to suppose that he can succeed to act on the defensive, and place his resources, troops disorganised, undisciplined, men accustomed to control political movements.

Cadiz, Seville, and Andalusia, are, of course, pronounced from a state of criminal inactivity and retaken Seville. Had the Regent attacked this city a month back Narvaez would never have entered Madrid. He would, I anticipations, I am afraid, even if successful to a certain degree, will not amend his position; he must abdicate or fly: but the question lies not with Espartero but between the Christinos and Liberals. To this point I direct your attention, and watch attentively the march of events; they will be interesting and very important.

[illegible] to the fact [illegible] Narvaez [illegible] after his death, raised to the dignity of a duke, and his wife created Duchess of Victory. Espartero, for his gallantry, aided by the traitor Maroto, driven Don Carlos from the Basque provinces, was created also Duke of Victory! Cabrera, for storming and taking the fortress of Morella, was named Count of Morella; Espartero, for retaking the fortress without firing a shot, was created Duke of Morella: we have now Narvaez, for entering Madrid, after it has capitulated to General Aspiroz, raised to the dignity of Duke of Madrid; and Prim, for retreating from Reuss, created Count of Reuss!

Although Narvaez may be proud of the title of duke, his wife, I am inclined to believe, will never bear that of duchess. I know not whether you are aware that Narvaez, a short time since, married his daughter to a French officer of France, and a relation of the late Queen Hortense. After living with this most amiable and accomplished lady only a few weeks, they separated. And the Duchess of Narvaez are now only waiting for opinion to obtain a séparation de corps and eternal separation. The marriage took place in the chapel of Christina.

There is no truth in the report that Don Carlos intends to abdicate.

FRANCE.—It is generally uneeved that the French Government have determined on sending a fleet to Tunis, and compelling the Bey to give that satisfaction so long demanded and so long refused.

Amiral Mackau, the new Minister of Marine, stands the third on the list of vice-admirals. The Minister is a Peer of France, and Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, and Chevalier of the Order of St. Louis. He is the late Vice-admiral named Minister since 1830. All the other Ministers were Lieutenants-Generals.

The King and all the Royal Family are now at the château of St. Maurice-de-Falcon has returned to Paris: she has completely recovered her voice. M. Banjan, the organist of Notre Dame, and M. Henri Berlin have discovered in the church of Soissons an organ built in 1450.

Balfazzare, first tenor of the Théâtre Italien at Madrid, has quitted Spain, and has been engaged for the Italian Opera at Paris. Meyerbeer has left for Berlin: he will return to Paris towards the end of September. Our Italian Opera opens with "Lucia" and "Belisario;" great preparations are making for bringing out "Maria de Rohan" with splendour. The director intends giving several musical soirées; at the first will be performed Rossini's "Stabat" by Staro, Fornasari, Gras, and Ronzzilla, and Donizetti's "Miserere" by Labiache, Salvi, Ronconi, and Derasi.

It is reported that Rossini intends bringing out an opera in Paris [illegible] same style as "William Tell."

Viscount Chateaubriand has returned to Paris from Bourbonne, his health is completely re-established.

SPAIN.—The following is the latest intelligence from the seat of war:—

MADRID, July 29.—Madrid was tranquil. The municipality was re-constructed with new members maintaining the dominant opinions. The Deputy Domineck was a member of it.

The bombardment of Seville continued actively on the 22nd. The disasters are considerable. At Carmona, the fire ceased on the 23rd, a flag of truce having presented itself. Espartero and Van Halen were still, on the same day, before the walls of the city. The expeditionary forces, which left Madrid for Andalusia, are composed of sixteen battalions, 600 cavalry, and some batteries of artillery.

Men Arabal is still concealed in Madrid. Several members of the late Ministry have quitted Madrid.

The Duke de Bayleu is named tutor to the Queen ad interim.

SARAGOSSA, July 27.—At the date of the last news a commissaire on the part of the municipality of Saragossa, and a commissaire of the National Guard of this place, had entered into a correspondence with M. Gregoir Bahlovao, the commissaire of the Provisional Government, for the purpose of agreeing upon the basis of a Constitutional Government, in which Saragossa should be ralied in the interest of public order.

It was reported on the Paris Bourse on Wednesday that the English Government had notified to the French Cabinet orders had been forwarded to Mr. Aston to quit Madrid and proceed to Seville, the government of the Regent being the only one recognised by England, &c

EGYPT.—(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)—ALEXANDRIA, 29th July.—The London overland mail of the 6th has not arrived here this month, in the extraordinarily short space of twelve days; it did not come by the Aerial Courier Company's steam machine, but by the Oriental Company's steam-ship Oriental. The mail from India having arrived here from Suez on Friday, the steamer Bey immediately on her return therewith. There is nothing new from India or China; affairs were in a quiet and satisfactory state. Within the last few days an impulse has been given to business here, inasmuch as every English vessel in port, of which there are upwards of twenty, has been chartered (although at very low freights), either for the United Kingdom or for ports on the Mediterranean, to load the produce which is now arriving from the interior. The Viceroy has appropriated the whole of his cotton crop to the payment of his tribute to the Porte, and it is going to Trieste, there to be sold by the brother of His Excellency Nubar Bey, Chargé d'Affaires, and the proceeds to be paid to the two bankers at Constantinople, Baltazzi and Alcon, for account of the Porte. Nothing has yet been settled as to an arrangement between the new Egyptian Transit Company and the Peninsular and Oriental Company. If both persist in having establishments for traversing Egypt it must be ruinous to each. The Viceroy patronises and supports the new Transit Company.

TURKEY.—CONSTANTINOPLE, July 17.—A cabinet courier arrived here on the 11th instant from St. Petersburg, and the next day an important communication was made to the Porte by M. Titoff. The Emperor of Russia, he informs it, refuses to sanction the late proceedings in Servia, and still insists on the banishment of MM. Woutshish and Petronowics—while these chiefs remain at the head of affairs in that principality, his Majesty is of opinion that nothing can be established on a satisfactory basis; and if the Porte has not the power to render its authority respected, he will himself take measures for the restoration of order and obedience.

Since the receipt of the above despatches, the Porte has again issued orders for armaments on the scale originally contemplated. The camps at Adrianople and Constantinople are each of them composed of 30,000 men, whereby there will be at Constantinople, when 30,000 men, of all arms, went through various evolutions, which were very creditably executed.

The latest intelligence from Persia is also of a very dubious character. There being reason to fear that the Persian government meditates some treacherous act of aggression by way of reprisal for the attack upon Kerbela.

The Shah left Teheran on the 20th of last month with a small division of his army, accompanied by thirty field pieces. He had made no previous communication to the diplomatic body as to his route and destination.

On Friday the Sultana paid a visit of ceremony to the Captain Pacha, on board his flag-ship the Mahmoudieh, previous to his departure for the Mediterranean. The fleet got under way this morning, and consists of two sline of the line, four frigates, and some corvettes and cutters.

WEST INDIES.—By the fast ship Higginson, Captain Hoare, from Barbadoes, which arrived at Liverpool on Tuesday, we have papers from that island to the 26th of June, fifteen days later than previously received by the last West India steam-ship, mail Falmouth. We find nothing of importance in the papers by this arrival, except the following, which we take from the Barbadoes Globe:—

"The bountiful rains with which we have been blessed during the last [illegible] have been [illegible] the canes, and the [illegible] have been [illegible] the weather [illegible] [illegible] and the James Holmes [illegible] We would [illegible] which brings shipments of sugar for 1843 to about 19,000 hogsheads. On an average, the increase of sugar of this year over that of last will be nearly 5,000 hogsheads."

Arrivals at Barbadoes—the Elizabeth Wood, from Liverpool; the Glanmire, from Dublin; the Farrsboro, from Belfast; the Landman, from London; the Elizabeth, from Liverpool; the Hornby, from Bristol; the New City of Cork, from Cork.

Sailed from Barbadoes—The Frances, for Greenock; the Nancy Munroe, for Greenock; the James Holmes, for London; the Higginson, for Liverpool.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

INDIA.

The Bombay Mail of the 19th of June has arrived. The intelligence which it brings is of interest, and in particular the account of the capture of the newly-acquired province of Scinde. That most fertile district, which under a good [illegible] not and properly cultivated will become a garden, is now nearly pacified by the measures adopted by Sir Charles Napier, the present governor. [illegible] the Indus collected by Shere Mahomed at Sukkurhid has gradually [illegible] and the Ameer himself has accepted terms, and was about to [illegible] country. Sir C. Napier has, it appears, purchased to give him up [illegible] sure and which must be more valuable than either, his [illegible] on condition that he leaves Scinde for ever. Whether Shere Mahomed will fulfil his share of this compact remains to be seen. He is reported [illegible] to be still about Khyrpoor, and it is thought that ere long he would [illegible] at any rate by the field that would "astonish us," and we shall feel anything but surprised if, after the monsoon, he again raise the standard of opposition, and [illegible] Accounts to the 15th of June state that the Ameer's position at Sukkurhid, that General Napier proposed attacking, the Ameer's position at Sukkurhid, [illegible] soon as the arrival of heavy [illegible] would enable him to do so with [illegible] since numerous [illegible] and who must be more valuable than either, his [illegible] on condition that he leaves Scinde for ever. Whether Shere Mahomed will fulfil his share of this compact remains to be seen. He is reported [illegible] to be still about Khyrpoor, and it is thought that ere long he would [illegible] at any rate by the field that would "astonish us," and we shall feel anything but surprised if, after the monsoon, he again raise the standard of opposition, and [illegible] Accounts to the 15th of June state that the Ameer's position at Sukkurhid, that General Napier proposed attacking, the Ameer's position at Sukkurhid, [illegible] soon as the arrival of heavy [illegible] would enable him to do so with [illegible] since numerous [illegible] and who must be more valuable than either, his [illegible]

Lieutenant [illegible] of the 17th Native Infantry, died on the 17th of May, but in an crippled a state from severe sickness, as to be almost useless. Two of the officers belonging to this regiment have already fallen victims to the [illegible] viz., Lieutenant Bridges and Assistant-Surgeon Baxter, of the Artillery, have likewise died of it. Assistant-Surgeon Baxter, of the Artillery, have likewise died of it. These, indeed, [illegible]

[illegible] short space of a month! The 25th Native Infantry had likewise nearly a hundred in hospital, and five officers laid up from the same cause. So intense, indeed, was the heat at Kurrachee that the thermometer ranged as high as 140 degrees in tent, and such, indeed, was the sickness and mortality among the troops at Hyderabad and the posts adjoining, from their greater exposure to the sun's influence, Sir Charles Napier and himself have been laid up in it, but has now completely recovered. Not more than 250 men were fit for duty. Fortunately, the general and already given the idea of attacking Shere Mahomed in the interior of the Beloochistan of the country combining to reinforce any active operation as that is imprudent and impracticable. The Scinde troops, too, had begun to disperse, doubtlessly perceiving the hopelessness of their resistance.

Meer Mooraud Ali, a chief, brought several chiefs a short time ago into the camp at Hyderabad, and took them before Sir Charles Napier. It appeared they had been captured by fraudulent means, and they were at once set at liberty by the general. It is added, that as soon as they regained their freedom they rejoined the insurgents. One of them was the head of the Chandeer tribe, a very powerful body. Meer Mahomed, who had been assembling forces at his strong bazaar, and against whom an expedition was lately sent, has surrendered himself, and likewise seen liberated [illegible] He had [illegible] and on mailing some return for the unexpected [illegible] money, by enabling [illegible] to keep open the communication between Hyderabad and Bombay.

General Napier, it is said, appeal to Lord Ellenborough to be relieved of the government of Scinde, but this is not at all unlikely; for the difficulties of [illegible] but beginning to be apparent, and his genius lends [illegible] may find the task of governing Scinde rather more troublesome than that of conquering it.

Captain Thomas, of the 6th Native Infantry, has been negotiating very successfully with the Rajah of Bhawulpore for certain objects connected with the opening of the Indus "to all nations." He had obtained, it appears, a reduction, to the extent of one half, of the transit duties on boats proceeding up and down the Sadej, within the Rajah's territories, a considerable reduction on merchandize, and the duties not levied on the [illegible] and the opening of the [illegible] road, "which will unite Moultan and Bhawulpore, the most [illegible] with Delhi and Hindostan." For which important [illegible] to keep open the communication between Hyderabad and Bombay.

AFGHANISTAN.—Dost Mahomed left Peshawur on the 8th of April, and [illegible] the Khyber pass in safety, and joined Acbar Khan at Cabul, [illegible] on the 19th, which he left at Kooloom; his son was in the Sufaed Koh range endeavouring to get up an insurrection. The Kohistan had risen in favour of Zeman Khan, and Amen-oolah Khan was in rebellion in the Logur district. Mahomed Akbbar Khan remains at Jelalabad with Shumsoodeen, but they do not agree well together; the latter was offered the government of the Kohistan, but the revolt in favour of the Nawaub interfered with the arrangement. One of Dost Mahomed's first acts was to imprison Nazir Wahab. All is said to be in confusion and uncertainty."

It is said, but with what truth I know not, that the Dost has repaid the kindness and generosity of Shere Singh, by everywhere doing his best to incense the Musulmans of Affghanistan against the Sikhs. One would hardly think he did chief capable of such ingratitude.

TAJ MEHAUR.—Nothing further has been heard of the Maharajah's illness. His highness is still absent from the capital; and, from the information as to his movements furnished by the newswriter of the Delhi Gazette, would appear to be at present in good health. It is reported, that at the durbar, one day, an announcement was made by the Maharajah, to the effect that a treaty had been arranged with Dost Mahomed, binding the latter to the payment of a tribute of six annas in the rupee to the Lahore Government. On hearing this, it is said, Shere Singh intimated his opinion that Akbbar Khan would oppose the execution of the treaty; to which Shere Singh replied, that, should it so turn out, hostilities must ensue.

From this latter statement a strong story current amongst the chiefs of the protected Sikh states to cut off the British regiments in the hills. This at first caused some alarm, but it is now believed to have been quite without foundation.

It appears that Shah Zeman, Futteh Jung, and Shah Pour—all three for a brief period rulers at Cabul—together with other chiefs belonging to the Sudozye family, are now living at Lahore, under the protection of Shere Singh, and supported by his bounty.

GWALIOR.—From this province there is news of some moment. The storm long threatened has at length burst forth, and all is confusion and disorder. At the instigation of a widow of the late Scindeah, the troops have attacked the residence of the minister, Mama Sahib, and driven him from the city, and the direction of affairs is now in the hands of the lady in question. The minister had been long in bad odour with the principal chiefs, and had recently imprisoned—justly enough—one or two of the most refractory, and among them Dada Khasjee, a friend of the Ranee. The troops were at first reluctant to act, their leaders hesitating to obey her highness's orders, but the scruples which influenced them were ultimately overcome. Dada Khasjee has thus again usurped the office of minister, and with his royal mistress, Rookmna Baee, holds the reins of authority. This lawless act is no doubt but the forerunner of disturbances of a serious nature, and the restoration of order will in all probability depend on British intervention. Since the expulsion of Mama Sahib, all intercourse between the British resident and the court has ceased. The infant Rajah and his youthful sister are saved from the late revolt, but surrounded by their present friends, it is doubtful how long they may remain so. It is a pity Gwalior was not added to our territories on Scindeah's death. It would any further disturbance in that quarter, even now be politic to take possession of it. The state rightfully lapsed to us when the late Rajah breathed his last.

HOSHUNGABAD.—On the 14th May a conflict took place at Mahobs, between a portion of the troops composing our outpost there and a body of rebels, about 200 strong, led by Kamud Singh and two other insurgent chiefs. Hearing that the enemy had encamped a short distance from Mahobs, Lieutenant Good, who was in command of a British detachment, moved out to attack them at the head of two companies of the 67th Native Infantry, a troop of the youthful Light Cavalry under Lieutenant Tucker, and one hundred men belonging to the Rajah of Chatterpore. The enemy were posted on a hill covered with jungle, where they had thrown up a breastwork, and fought with determined courage. Our troops arrived at five o'clock in the morning, but from numerical strength to the Bundelas, continued the attack till dark without attaining their object, which was to drive them from the hill. Lieutenant Good now considered it prudent to retire, having left treasure at Mahoba, and the force in camp being scarcely sufficient for its protection. This movement was effected without difficulty, but there can be no doubt the insurgents got somewhat the better of us in the affray. Their loss is variously stated at from four to fourteen killed; ours was two killed and five wounded.

There has also been a skirmish between a party of the rebels (it is supposed the same who were engaged at Mahoba) and the troops of the friendly Rao (or rajah) of Alipara, in which the former were worsted. A detachment of our force was sent off to the Rao's assistance, but arrived too late to be of service.

Again, on the banks of the Dessanon, the followers of the Rajahs of Chatterpore and Jeitpore have been fighting with each other; so that, on the whole, the pacification of Boondelkhund cannot be said to have been yet satisfactorily accomplished.

Seit Singh, the imbecile chief selected to rule over Jeitpore, has arrived at that place, and assumed the reins of government.

As the best means of effectually tranquillising these disturbed districts, it has been recommended that the whole of the inhabitants should be disarmed, which, effected simultaneously with a sufficiency of troops, and the states implicated in rebellion to be proclaimed as being under martial law. These suggestions appear good, and are worthy of attention.

HONG-KONG.—The Canton Mail of May 3rd, per Sesostris steamer, on the 6th of June, and would reach Madras on the 12th, and Calcutta about the 14th.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.—Lord Ellenborough has at length taken his departure from Agra, and is on his way back to Calcutta, with the intention, however, of awaiting at Allahabad the arrival of the Mail from England. His lordship left on the 17th of July, and the preparations for his progress were commenced immediately on the receipt of the London mail of April, it is not unreasonably inferred that his departure has been occasioned by orders received by him by private letters from the home authorities. In reference to this we observe the Bengal and Agra Uhkar says: "We have every reason to know that he (the Governor-General) has by this mail protested against being obliged to remain at Calcutta, and that if a necessity for such a government shall be considered to exist, he will be with him, that they, like himself, should be at Agra." The Uhkar further states that in case the home government should disagree with his lordship on this point, he will at once resign.

Mr. Clerk, late envoy to the court of Lahore, the envoyship having been abolished, has been appointed governor of the north-west provinces, with Agra for his capital, however, as has been usually observed by that functionary. His excellency is at present at Simla, where he will remain till the end of the rainy season. Colonel Richmond, of her Majesty's 31st, accompanies the agent to the north-west frontier.

One of the most remarkable events of the month is the solemn protest of the officers of the army at Hyderabad against the calumnies of the Bombay Times, which paper accused them of having opposed the cession of the Ex Ameers. They presented an address to Sir Charles Napier praying for protection against those calumnies, and they received a decided reply from their generals. The address and reply have been published in the journals of Bombay, and were to be also circulated throughout India.

The Ex-Ameers had been removed from Bombay to Sassoor, near Poonah. The noble appearance of them was a prisoner in the Castle of Surat, where he was well guarded.

The setting of the monsoon was felt through India. The mercury fell to 70 degrees. A gale was dreaded; it came on, and expended its fury in the Bay of Bengal. Several ships were lost on the Coromandel coast. The ship Amelia Thompson, and the brig Union have foundered at sea; and two French vessels, the Leander and Victor, and a native brig have been driven ashore and wrecked. The Braemar has also been stranded. Besides these, the Lord Elphinstone and Champion have been a good deal injured; and five vessels have been seen off the coast, but which the monsoon put to sea ere assistance when its gale commenced have not yet returned, and apprehensions are felt for their safety. A dreadful hurricane was felt at the Mauritius towards the end of April, and several vessels were driven ashore. The heat which was resumed on the 6th of June, when a fine ship, the Thomas Grenville, was consumed. The insurance offices have declined granting heavy policies on native ships until the Lascar crews.

The mail at Bombay was to leave on the 20th of June, the commencement of June, but the monsoon had broken on the night of the 18th, and had cooled the atmosphere. The wing of the 78th Highlanders had suffered from a sort of brain fever, which was attributed to their dress and exposure to the sun, as well as to their careless mode of living in the tropics.

It is with sincere regret that we announce the demise of William Richardson, Esq., the Advocate General of Bengal. Civil Service, and the senior judge of Surat, which took place at that city on the 21st of May. This gentleman's death was occasioned by a complaint of long standing, but which had assumed no alarming character until the morning of his decease, when, having unfortunately fasted to seek for timely surgical aid, he fell a victim to it. Mr. Richardson had served above twenty years in India, and was much esteemed both as a public servant and a private member of society. He was a person of retired habits; but his genuine kindliness of disposition, and his many estimable, though unobtrusive, qualities, had endeared him to all who knew him intimately. At one period of his life he was a devoted sportsman; and in 1835-37 he was Captain Harris's companion in the well-known adventurous expedition undertaken by that officer from the Cape of Good Hope into the interior of southern Africa.

CHINA.

The news from China is extremely scanty. Reports had been circulated of Sir Henry Pottinger's sickness, but they were regarded as exaggerations. He was said, according to the latest news of the beginning of May, to be recovering. On the arrival of the new governor, Keo Ying, who was expected at Canton about the beginning of June. The death of Captain Bremer, of her Majesty's ship Driver, was mentioned. The Phlegethon had been ordered to the north coast of China to look-Keong the 7th of May. The Queen steamer has been ordered to get ready for sea at Calcutta in the beginning of July. Some of the newspapers imagine that Lord Ellenborough is going back to Europe; but this fact may be doubted in the middle of the south-west monsoon.

A letter from Hong-Kong has arrived, dated March 7. From it it appears that business was most active on the north coast. There were seven ships in the Yang-Tze-Kiang, selling openly, at Woosung, opium and British goods. They had been warned off by the authorities, but, having persisted, they were allowed to continue their sales.

The Americans are busy in smuggling. Sir Henry Pottinger sought to stop that trade, but in vain. Captain Hope endeavoured to detain some ships, but they were subsequently released.

The French frigate Erigone is going to Niron, in Cochin China, to demand satisfaction for the persecution of the French missionaries.

British goods are said to be scarce in China; not a piece to be found outside for sale.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Loan Societies Act Continuance Bill and Irish Bridges Bill were read a third time and passed.—Lord CAMPBELL laid upon the table a bill, the object of which is to prevent, for the period of one year, any proceedings having for their object to eject from the Scottish Universities any others not members of the Established Church in that country. The bill was read a first time without remark, and Thursday was fixed for the second reading.—Earl FORTESCUE presented a long petition from Lord Dunmore, the prayer of which was, in so stance, that the house would take measures to have the whole of the church property in Ireland, except menial lands for the clergy of the three denominations, held to the best advantage (preserving life interests), and the produce vested in the Consolidated Fund, the interest to be applied to the support of the Protestant, Presbyterian, and the Roman Catholic religion in proportion to numbers; and enable her Majesty to conclude a concordat with the Pope, thus placing the Romish Church in Ireland on a constitutional basis—that is on a perfect equality with the churches of England and Scotland. The noble earl concluded by moving that the petition do lie on the table.—The Duke of WELLINGTON said he should make no remark on the irregularity of presenting such a petition; he would merely warn their lordships that the prayer of the petition went to subvert the reformed religion as established in the United Kingdom. It was for the house to say whether they should listen to arguments in support of such a proposition.—The Lord CHANCELLOR said the question as to whether the petition should lie on the table or not had been put and agreed to.—The Earl of WICKLOW said the importance of the question should have prevented the learned lord on the woolsack from being so quick.—He was surprised that the noble lord (Oranmore) should have had the petition presented at all, and still more that the noble lord, who had filled the highest official situation in Ireland, should have presented it, for to him was to the subversion of the Established Church. He would not take a farthing from that church, but he would give his support to a proposition to provide a maintenance for the Roman Catholic priesthood in Ireland.—The Lord CHANCELLOR said he had not put the question out of the usual course—not until the petition had been laid upon the table.—The Duke of WELLINGTON said he understood that the petition "had been presented and laid on the table"—had only been made, not agreed to.—Lord BROUGHAM said the petition was certainly been put, and that the contents had it. He did not wish to give an opinion upon so important a matter at that moment, but he was anxious to correct a prevalent delusion namely, that the Established Church was a cause of suffering to the Irish peasantry. The Roman Catholics were only placed in the same situation as the Irish Presbyterians, who paid their minister, in addition to the rent-charge, which was afterwards paid by the state to the Established Church.—After a few words of explanation from Earl FORTESCUE, the Loan Societies Act Continuance and Libel Bill was read a third time and passed; and several bills passed through committee; after which their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

After several unopposed bills had been advanced a stage (amongst which was the Australian Slave Trade Bill) and several petitions presented in favour to Newgate, in pursuance of the report of the Epworth petition, of Samuel Potts, for forgery of petitions presented to the house, the second reading of the Church of Scotland Benefices Bill was moved by Sir J. GRAHAM.—Mr. WALLACE opposed the second reading. He considered that the bill being brought in in the month of July, so late in the session, was as great an affront to the people of Scotland as the Act of Anne, which had been passed with such breathless haste. The bill, instead of removing, would only tend to create doubts and litigation hitherto unknown. He moved that the bill be read a second time this day months.—Mr. R. COCHRANE said that this was almost precisely similar to the unsuccessful bill brought in by Lord Aberdeen in 1840. It threw the power into the hands of the Church courts.—Lord. RUTHERFURD also expressed his surprise at the bill being brought in at this late period of the session. If the bill were to be brought forward at all, it should have been introduced before the secession; but in the present temper of the people it would only aggravate the evils, and drive more of its members from the Established Church. Sir W. FOLLETT differed from the hon. gentleman as to the propriety of introducing the bill before the secession. Nothing could more conduce to the satisfactory settlement of the Non-Intrusionists, as they sought the total abrogation of patronage, and even taught that the Church courts could set at defiance the acts of the Legislature.—Lord ROCKINGHAM also expressed his surprise at the bill having been brought in at this late period of the session. If the bill were to be brought forward at all, it should have been introduced before the secession; but in the present temper of the people it would only aggravate the evils, and drive more of its members from the Established Church. Sir W. FOLLETT differed from the hon. gentleman as to the propriety of introducing the bill before the secession. Nothing could more conduce to the satisfactory settlement of the Non-Intrusionists, as they sought the total abrogation of patronage, and even taught that the Church courts could set at defiance the acts of the Legislature. Sir ROBERT PEEL shore by the fishing-boats. The cabin staircase and skylight were attached to the deck, as also the cabin floor. Below the deck was a writing-desk marked "William Banks, 1836." It was opened in presence of witnesses, and was found to contain a dozen copies of a periodical, entitled "the Church." On the cabin floor the fishermen also found some silver spoons and toody ladles. A cask of whisky came ashore on the same day, marked "Scott and Allan, Leith." A satin cloak, lined with fur, was picked up. A work box has also been picked up, containing knife, scissors, needles, looking-glass, &c., and marked "E. E.;" also, a pocket-handkerchief, a frock, and mits. At North Sunderland some portions of the wreck and light articles of property have been found: amongst them a small box belonging to the mate, containing a note of part of the ship's expenses, and 15s. in silver.

FARNE LIGHTHOUSE.

The following is a statement of the number of passengers and crew of the Pegasus, according to the best information:—

Cabin passengers	..	18
Steerage	.. ..	23
Crew, including firemen		14
Total		55
Saved		6
Drowned		49

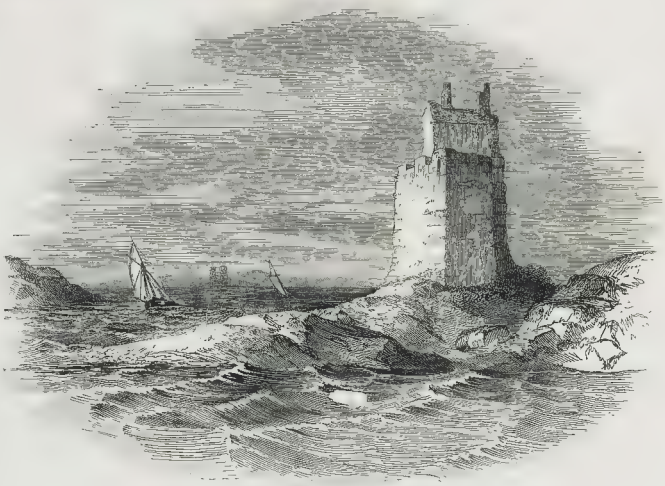
THE LATE MR. ELTON.

This admirable actor, whose melancholy and most unexpected death is now recorded as having happened through the wreck of the Pegasus steamer, was born in the year 1798, and educated with a view to follow the profession of a solicitor; and for a considerable time he was in the office of Mr. Springball, of Verulam-buildings, Gray's Inn; but having imbibed a passion for theatrical representations, he became a member of a private theatre in Wilson-street, Gray's Inn-lane, conducted by Mr. Pym, a place celebrated for having given the first rudiments of the art to several eminent actors among them the late John Reeve. In 1823, after being tried for a short time some of the small provincial towns, he obtained an engagement at the Olympic Theatre, where the late Tyrone Power was then engaged. Mr. Elton remained only a short time; and at the Christmas of that year he engaged himself at the Liverpool Amphitheatre, and not being satisfied with his situation there, he joined the company of Mr. Bunn, then manager of the Birmingham Theatre. On the following Christmas his services were retained by the Liverpool manager to personate the character of Napoleon in the "Battle of Waterloo," which spectacle was acted for three months in succession. Shortly after the manager of the Theatre Royal Liverpool proposed an engagement, and Mr. Elton, already very popular in the town, presented himself on the boards of the legitimate arena as Cominius in "Coriolanus;" here he became most popular, but Mr. Vandenhoff being so long established as the leading actor, Mr. Elton could only obtain a first part occasionally. From Liverpool he went to Chester, Shrewsbury, Worcester, and Manchester, where he attracted the notice of Mr. Charles Young, then playing for a few nights there. That gentleman expressed himself highly in favour of Mr. Elton's talent, and predicted his speedy removal to the metropolis. He afterwards acted for a season at Norwich and Cambridge, and in the year 1831 made his bow to the Garrick audience in Whitechapel as Richard the Third. His success was prodigious: the east-enders hailed him as a modern Garrick; the managers, Conquest and Wyman, liberally advanced his salary, and their treasury was greatly benefited. The Surrey was his next remove, where, after a few months' sojourn, the late David Morris engaged him for the Haymarket Theatre, where he appeared in 1833. He remained one season; and, after various engagements at the London minors, he appeared at Covent garden, under the management of Mr. Osbaldiston, in the season of 1837, January 10, as Walter Tyrrell, in the drama of that name. His claim to the rank of an admirable actor was at once recognised. From that period till his lamented death he continued a member of the theatres royal. Educated and accomplished, he enjoyed the society of the most celebrated for talent in literature and the fine arts, and to his necessitous brother actors his time and purse were open. He was chairman and treasurer of the Minor General Theatrical Fund, to which institution he devoted his best energies. He has left seven children to deplore the loss of an attached and devoted father, the youngest being only eight years of age.

LOSS OF THE COLUMBIA STEAM-SHIP.

In our shipping intelligence of last week we gave the particulars of the Columbia steam-ship, belonging to the Boston and Halifax Royal Mail Steam-packet Company. We now present our readers with a sketch of this fine vessel, just previously to her going to pieces upon Black Ledge Reef, near Seal Island, off Townsend Bay, on the south-west coast of Nova Scotia, on her passage to Halifax. Among the passengers were the Hon. Abbott Lawrence, of Boston, with his lady and daughter. There were 95 passengers, and 73 officers, crew &c., belonging to the ship, in all 168 souls, all of whom were safely landed on Seal Island. Their preservation was extraordinary, for twenty yards on either side of the ship, with a moderate breeze, would have consigned the whole number to a watery grave. The ship lay on an inclined plane of smooth rock, from her paddles forward, while her stern was in deep water, and, as she strained heavily, it was judged fit to land the lady passengers, or about twenty, who, up to this time, had displayed wonderful fortitude and self-possession, nor did it desert them when placed under the protection of a perfect stranger, the master of Seal Island Light, to land on a small rocky island, with only another family besides his own to take from it its desolate appearance. As the tide receded the steam-ship commenced breaking up, and at three o'clock it was supposed she would be a total wreck. The crew remained to the last, having a number of small vessels at hand, with the hope of removing the engines before she was wholly destroyed. Previous to leaving Seal Island the passengers of the Columbia convened a meeting for the expression of the passengers' opinion with regard to the wreck, and unanimously acquitted Captain Shannon of all blame for the loss; and they resolved to raise a fund for compensating the residents of Seal Island for their kind attention and hospitality.

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE MR. ELTON.



HOLY ISLAND.

WRECK OF THE COLUMBIA STEAM-SHIP.

FATHER MATHEW CELEBRATING MASS.

FATHER MATHEW IN LONDON.

On Monday a great concourse of people assembled in the Commercial-road East, to hear and see the Rev. Theobald Mathew, who had announced his intention of administering the total abstinence pledge in the ground lately consecrated by a Roman Catholic bishop, on the south side of the Commercial-road, opposite the George Inn. A temporary platform had been erected for the various persons who intended to take part in the proceedings, and a few minutes before the arrival of Father Mathew it gave way with a loud crash, precipitating about fifty persons who were on it to the ground. This accident created great alarm; but, fortunately, no person was hurt, and the scaffold was soon put up again, and supported in a more substantial manner. At ten o'clock Father Mathew faced a metropolitan auditory for the first time. He was received with loud cheers, particularly by his countrymen, who assembled in great numbers. The Rev. Mr. Mathew is a gentleman about fifty years of age, of mild and expressive features. His unaffected manner and deportment, and the simplicity of his style when addressing his hearers, appeared to make a great impression on every one. There was an evident sincerity about all his words and actions, which spoke more to the feelings of his hearers than all the speeches, and their name was legion, uttered throughout the day. He was surrounded by the leading members of the various Temperance and Teetotal Societies in London. The poles supporting the platform were decorated with flags and banners, bearing appropriate inscriptions.

Father Mathew opened the proceedings by a short but expressive prayer, and then delivered an address, which was listened to with great attention, on the advantage of total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, and the evils of intemperance. The first persons who presented themselves were a Roman Catholic fraternity called the Holy Guild, who came in procession to the ground, bearing crosses. The brothers and sisters of the fraternity, which has been established chiefly for charitable purposes, knelt down and repeated the words of the pledge after Father Mathew, in a loud voice. He then descended from the platform and gave them his blessing, and, after touching them all on the forehead, dismissed them. The same ceremony was repeated about twelve or fourteen times during the day. A batch, having been duly prepared by speeches from Earl Stanhope, Dr. Daley, Mr. Whitaker, and others, and lastly, by Father Mathew himself, knelt down and repeated the pledge after him, and after being touched by the reverend gentleman, were requested to depart and make way for others.

The police, under the direction of Inspector Rutt and Sergeant Parker, of the K division, greatly facilitated the arrangements and prevented much confusion.

Earl Stanhope and Father Mathew shook hands, and the noble lord addressed the multitude for nearly an hour, and said he had been a teetotaller for many years, and invited his hearers to follow his example. He declared his intention of publicly taking the pledge from Father Mathew, and warmly eulogized the rev. gentleman for his useful and patriotic exertions in Ireland, and expressed a fervent hope that his mission in England would be attended with similar results.

Father Mathew then called upon those who were anxious to come forward and take the pledge with Earl Stanhope to do so. A semi-circle was formed, and 300 men and women knelt down and received the pledge. Earl Stanhope, who laboured under considerable agitation, was directly afterwards embraced by Father Mathew, who, in the enthusiasm of the moment, kissed his cheek. The noble earl smiled, and grasped Father Mathew's hand, exclaiming, "God bless you, sir." The delivery of speeches and the administration of the pledge were proceeded with till dusk, when Father Mathew left the ground, having previously announced his intention of attending in the same place for the same purpose every day this week.

PORTRAIT OF FATHER MATHEW.

About 3000 took the pledge during the day, one half of whom were Irish. From the appearance of many of them we should say the total abstinence pledge was very necessary. The conduct of the vast multitude was most orderly.

Early next morning the rev. gentleman resumed his labours in the Commercial-road East. Earl Stanhope again attended, and remained on the platform addressing the people, and exhorting them to take the pledge of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, for nearly four hours. He was very warmly greeted by the multitude, who, at his request, gave three times three cheers for Father Mathew.

The rev. gentleman addressed the people on the evils of intemperance in a very effective manner, and he related many anecdotes, some of a humorous, and others of a very tragical nature, which told well. He paid a high compliment to the London press for the fairness and candour with which it had reported his proceedings, and at the desire of a gentleman on the platform, three cheers were given for the newspapers. At the request of his countrymen, Father Mathew repeated the words of the pledge in the Irish language. Soldiers, sailors, mechanics, and their wives and children, professional men, and several ladies and gentlemen, were among those who took the pledge during the day.

Among those who took the pledge were many with black eyes and bruised faces, who appeared to have been recently making great sacrifices to Bacchus. They were exhorted by Earl Stanhope and Father Mathew not to quarrel with any one again, and not to violate the pledge, and they solemnly promised not to make beasts of themselves any more. At sunset the proceedings terminated for the day. Father Mathew retired from the ground, but not before he had passed another warm eulogium on the newspapers for the fairness with which they had reported his proceedings, and the kind manner in which he had been spoken of. He felt deeply the obligation he was under to the London newspapers, and it would stimulate him to further exertions in the cause of temperance and morality. Father Mathew seems to practise as well as to preach total abstinence. During the twelve hours he was on the ground he never tasted food or drink, and he was hard at work talking and administering during the whole of the time. His speeches were imbued with kindly feeling, and he took great pains to convince his hearers that he did not wish to advance the interests of any particular party either in religion or politics, declaring that the Protestants in Ireland, to great numbers of whom he had addressed the pledge, had received him with the same cordiality as the members of his own church. Father Mathew has won "golden opinions from all sorts of men" by his affability and simple manners, and he is an example in his own person that cheerfulness can be reconciled with total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks. There were upwards of 60,000 persons on the ground during the day.

FATHER MATHEW ADMINISTERING THE PLEDGE IN LONDON.

In No. 39 of this journal we had the gratification of giving a portrait of this truly great man, and in honour of his visit to London we have here presented three two-sided illustrations, which we are satisfied will not be unacceptable to our readers. The personal appearance of Father Mathew is remarkable. The following interesting and graphic account of it is taken from the excellent work of Mrs. Hall, on "Ireland."

No one who sees the Rev. Mr. Mathew will hesitate to believe that he has been stimulated by pure benevolence to the work he has undertaken. The expression of his countenance is peculiarly mild and gracious; his manner is persuasive to a degree, simple and easy, and humble without a shadow of affectation, and his voice is low and musical "such as women men." A man more naturally fitted to obtain influence over a people, easily led and proverbially swayed by the affections, we have never encountered. No man has borne his honours more meekly; encountered opposition with greater gentleness and forbearance; or disarmed hostility with weapons better suited to a Christian. His age is somewhat above fifty, but he looks younger; his frame is strong, evidently calculated to endure great fatigue, and his aspect is that of established health—a serviceable illustration of the practical value of his system. He is somewhat above the middle size; his features are handsome as well as expressive. Our brief interview with him confirmed the favourable impression of his character we had obtained from a knowledge of the results derived from his labours; and we left him with fervent thanks to God, that a man so qualified to sway a multitude had so wisely, so nobly, and so virtuously applied his powers and directed the energies of his marvellously active mind, fearing how dangerous he might have proved if they had been exerted for evil and not for good.

On Thursday the Rev. Mr. Mathew resumed his interesting and arduous proceedings. At nine o'clock the ground the scene of his labours (which has lately been consecrated as a Catholic cemetery) was crowded to a very great extent. The rev. gentleman, however, did not arrive until shortly after ten o'clock, when, on ascending the platform from which he addressed the assemblage, he was most enthusiastically applauded. During the entire day there certainly could not have been less than 40,000 persons on the ground, the greater part of whom were drawn together through curiosity to see the great Apostle of Temperance, and to witness the administering of the pledge. In the second batch that came forward to take the pledge were several policemen, a recruiting sergeant of the 22nd Regiment, and a Highland piper, dressed in full costume. The rev. gentleman having made some appropriate observations, concluded by administering the pledge. Before the close of the proceedings twenty-five batches came forward, each consisting of about sixty persons, making in all 1500. There were several Protestant clergymen present, and also a great number of foreigners. The attendance would have been considerably greater, but for the unpropitious state of the weather, as it rained in torrents during the greater part of the day.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 12th.

Sunday, August 6.—Eighth Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 7.—Queen Caroline died, 1821.
Tuesday, 8. Dryden born, 1631.
Wednesday, 9.
Thursday, 10.—St. Laurence.
Friday, 11.—Dog Days end.
Saturday, 12.—Grouse shooting begins.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending August 12.

Monday.	Tuesday.	Wednesday.	Thursd. 7.	Friday.	Saturday.
M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.
h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.	h. m. h. m.
11 48 0 11	0 34 1 15	1 20 1 56	2 5 2 41	2 45 3 21	3 26 3 59

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"An Admirer.' Lynn.—The engraving referred to is not by the Glyphographic process, but on wood. See the leader on the prize Cartoons, in a late number of our Journal.

"J. G. J.," Newbold Lodge, Leamington.—The drawing shall be returned.

"John."—The executor will, doubtless, write the proper form of receipt for our correspondent to sign

"Observator," Brighton, shall receive our serious attention.

"L. M.," Halifax.—Alderman Wadsworth was Lord Mayor in 1823-24, but did not serve two mayoralties. He sat in Parliament in the years named by our correspondent.

"I. van H.," Innholder-street.—We have not room for the incident, or for "Zeb" on "The Eve Glass."

"A. B."—We will endeavour to make the insertion suggested by our correspondent.

"R. H.," Clifton, is thanked. The correction was made as soon as received.

"A. G. E." 3rd question, yes. The other two next week.

"T. P.," Manchester, is thanked, but we have not room for the subject.

"C. H. B.," Boscastle.—The Charities Commission has, we believe, been dissolved.

"R. M. P."—We have not room for the Whitefield Tabernacle.

"A Constant Reader."—Protestant.

Ineligible.—"The Blind Boy to his Mother," by G. B. F.; "Flowers," by E. F.

We sincerely sympathise with our friend, "Candidus Verax," of Kilkenny, whose exertions in behalf of his distressed countrymen is deserving of more grateful acknowledgments than that which we regret to see he has experienced; this, however, is the common fate of disinterested virtue. Mr. Bateman should send us the drawing, and explain the nature of his invention.

"A Lover of Truth" loses sight of his cherished maxim—"Abuse is not argument." We quarrelled not with the science of astrology, but with the combination of a heartless set of vagabonds to swindle poor ignorant and credulous servant girls out of their hard-earned wages. We have noted his prospectus, and shall watch the progress of the society.

"Clericus Surriensis" is not the only correspondent who directs our attention to the subject of which he complains. He proposes rightly, that the remedy is, to a certain extent, beyond our control; but care shall be taken to render the evil as innocuous as possible.

"A." poetical contribution is declined.

"Smith Smith" will see on referring to our file that we have not been neglectful of the subject to which he refers.

"A Subscriber," Manchester, will find the result of the Durham election in a later edition. Mr. Bright's majority over his opponent was 78.

"G. L. S." should apply to a music publisher.

"H. D. Griffiths" must know that these lines have been by no means lukewarm advocates of the cause which he espouses. Let him send us the paste.

"Zurich's" temperate and judicious expostulation has been received. We shall not lose sight of the subject of his solicitude.

"E. T. C." is nothing if not critical. He cannot have read attentively the article to which he alludes, or he would have spared his strictures. They are taken, however, in good part.

"E. C.," Bristol. We received his benevolent gift of £6, post-office order, which we have forwarded to Mr. Forth at Kingston.

"A."—Persons who encourage the wretched imitations of this journal, must be almost as contemptible as the imitators, and we cannot pity their disappointment.

"F. N. Boy." Bognor, justly complains of the conduct of the newsman in supplying him with a wretched imitation of our Journal, and we certainly think he was justified in removing his patronage for so dishonest an attempt.

"J. R.," Aberdeen.—The post in question is generally thought first-rate.

"A Correspondent," Canterbury.—It is stated "on the best authority" in the "Athenæum" of the 22nd ult., that Messrs. Baring have not undertaken the contract for cutting through the Isthmus of Panama:—"It is quite true that the work of cutting the canal across the Isthmus of Panama is a matter still talked about; but we believe the privilege of executing it remains in the hands of Messrs. Solomon of Panama, to whom it was granted by the Grenadian Republic in 1839. It is said that, under the authority of this privilege, Messrs. Solomon have caused a survey of the Isthmus to be made, and that the result of this survey is to show that a passage may be made between the two oceans, by uniting the rivers Chagres and Grande by a canal of about thirty miles in extent."

A second copy of Mr. Christopher's "Account of the Cape of Good Hope" has been received.

Chess.—"J. E. C."—Three letters received
"D. H." "H. Horn," "Blue Jacket," received.
"G. M. F."—Solution correct.
Our chess article is unavoidably postponed.

The Royal Yacht Squadron Regatta at Cowes, arrived too late for this week; we shall illustrate the event by beautiful drawings taken by R. Landells, Esq.

All, or any of the back numbers, may be had by order of all booksellers; or can be had from our office, 198, Strand, by remitting the amount.

Portfolios, which are sold at our office, we recommend to preserve the numbers.

Books Received.—Dr. Wilson and Gully on the "Dangers of the Water Cure;" Lee on "Animal Magnetism;" Sammarby's "Handbook for the National Gallery;" Sammary's "Excursions out of London;" Ainsworth's "Windsor Castle," 1 vol. 8vo.; "Rome under Paganism and the Pope," 2 vols. "Handbook for Visitors to the Kensal Green Cemetery;" Ainsworth's "Claims of the Christian Aborigines of the Turkish Empire;" Bain's "Applications of the Electric Fluid to the Useful Arts;" Murtin's "Vagaries, a Sequel to the Tale of a Tub;" "A Letter on El Dorado at the Cape;" M. Vemeuil de Beaucun's "Rapport sur la Grammaire Espagnole;" "History of China and India," part vii.; also the following periodicals for August:—British and Foreign Review, No. 30; Fraser, Dublin University, and Illuminated Magazines; Martin Chuzzlewit; Berger's Ladies' Gazette of Fashion.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1843.

The advent of Father Mathew to our English metropolis, for the purpose of diffusing more widely and rapidly the wholesome doctrine of temperance among the general community, finds a record to-day in the columns of this journal, and has been very generally and liberally reported in the daily press. The circumstance is in every way worthy of note, for Father Mathew seems to be no powerless missionary, but a man who brings with him to our shores (from a country where he has almost worked miracles in the change which he has wrought in the domestic habits of the people) the prestige of unexceptionable character—who is said to combine fervid eloquence with enlarged views of benevolence, and whose ambition is neither fame nor money, but the virtuous promotion of the happiness of the human race, by a direct expulsion of a great evil in society, which has, no doubt, entailed upon it some of its sharpest miseries and saddest crimes. The welcome of the worthy father has been warm in the extreme—all creeds and classes have awarded to him a respectful reception—there has been no resort to one of the common expedients to our lower classes towards those who interfere with their habitual enjoyments—we mean the habit of disgusting by insult, or defeating by loud ridicule; but, on the other hand, there has been a cordial acknowledgment of the blessings of temperance, and, therefore, an admission of the doctrines of its active preacher; and Lord Stanhope and other philanthropists of rank and influence have as it were grasped Father Mathew by the hand, and presented him as a general benefactor to their countrymen. There is a good deal in this, as a sign of the favourable spirit which has been engendered towards the temperance cause, and we are not without serious hope that it may lead to the best results, particularly if our pastors and spiritual teachers impress their flocks with the importance of abstinence from excess, to the comfort of their families and the happiness of their homes, as well indeed as to their moral tranquillity of mind. There can be no doubt of the great influence which the introduction, not of abstract temperance only, but even of extended moderation, would have upon the poorer population of our large towns, as well as of the great metropolis—for it would engender new habits, and in thousands of instances would be the means of exchanging the ale-house and the gin-shop for the church, a result which our clergy must surely regard as most desirable indeed. We do not expect so many and such rapid triumphs for Father Mathew in England as in Ireland, because the same facilities do not exist among the people for clearing the way. In Ireland there are very few among the peasant population who do not put themselves, at least once in every Sabbath, in communication with the ministers of their faith; and the exhortations from the altar to follow the wise course which Father Mathew has prescribed for the people were so frequent and vigorous, so earnest and influential, that they could not fail of their effect. Of course the same causes would produce the same results in England, but they do not exist with the same potency; the attendance of the lower class upon Sabbath worship is by no means so general as in Ireland; and perhaps the very intemperance which we are now seeking to extinguish may have grown into a habit with many, that only the most explicit admonition would be the most powerful auxiliary that Father Mathew could receive upon his benevolent pilgrimage, and we confess that we deem the cause quite worthy of such advocacy.

The fact is, that philosophy asserts her majesty in this matter, and it becomes impossible to hide from reason the great truth that temperance must be among the most godlike virtues of a people. It has in it the elements of self-denial and sobriety, and its action upon the domestic social system must be beautiful and beneficial in the extreme. Candour, therefore, at once compels the acknowledgment that Father Mathew is in the right box, and that all the delusions of sophistry cannot put him in the wrong one, and thus it is better that in a family journal like this, devoted both in religion and politics to the higher purposes of Christianity, to the encouragement of truth and the preservation of public morals, we should give in such adherence to a truly virtuous principle as the community cannot but approve, and as may consistently harmonize with the character which we have sought and succeeded to establish. We do not hesitate, therefore, to proclaim our decided sympathy with the cause which Father Mathew has taken in hand, and to express warm wishes for its success; nor are we without hope that the force of example will act with wholesome strength upon the people, and that the benefit in their moral and intellectual condition will undoubtedly ensue. Whether in town or country, let the doors of our poor cease to be darkened by the footstep of the drunkard—let his passion no longer strike fear and his voice sadness into the hearts of his wife and children—let their little pittance go no longer to make his brow haggard and his brain mad—let him exchange the companionship of sots for the gentler presence of his family, and a natural domestic intercourse with those whom he ik bound to love—so shall he find himself more happy, more industrious, and less poor—ko, when poor, shall his endurance of poverty be more patient, and the word's sympathy with it more charitable and strong—so shall his home become a dearer paradise than scenes of most inspiring debauchery—and so shall the little family around wear smiles instead of misery, and be clothed decently with the earnings that else would have been squandered upon drink. Then thoughts of Heaven, too, may creep in upon his intellectual improvement, and he may learn to bend his footsteps and lead his offspring towards the church. Our glance at his changed condition may appear Utopian; but, without exaggeration, the blessings of temperance are sweetening and manifold indeed.

Among the soldiery, too, and in the police, the doctrine will spread with brightening effect; and it is cheering to find how many are ready to practise the self-denial which is likely to secure to them so many gratifying fruits. It was curious to note that, at the great meeting in the Commercial-road, although Father Mathew and Earl Stanhope both fervidly addressed the audience, yet that the most impassioned and eloquent oration of the day was delivered by a private soldier of the Grenadier Guards, who seems to have harangued the people in a strain of touching eloquence.

Now, having gone so far in the expression of our general opinions upon the subject before the reader, we desire emphatically to state that our support of the Father Mathew movement is given purely in a social and moral sense; that we would denounce it directly, did we perceive it surrounded by any party or dishonest devices; that we would abjure it utterly, did we find it tinged with any prejudices of creed, or directed against any institution of religion in a word, did we find it advancing upon any other than the broad principles of general brotherhood, and making its progress for the true and common interest and happiness of the human race. That Father Mathew really preaches his doctrine in this spirit we earnestly believe, from one passage in his speech which we take much pleasure in quoting:—

He had no sectarian objects in view. Though a Catholic priest, he had been received in the most cordial manner by clergymen and lay members of the Established Church, by Wesleyans, Dissenters, Quakers—ay, and even Jews, and he administered the pledge to millions of all sects. He wished to elevate mankind, and to promote the interests of religion, and the good of the community, by that greatest of all blessings, sobriety.

And, therefore, we say, Heaven give speed to his good mission!

RAMBLES IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

Long life to the dear devoted reader! Here we are again, once more shaking hands with him with the firm and honest grasp of friendship, and holding him by the button familiarly again. What is the news? Nous verrons. All in good time we shall begin to interchange our confidence. We have heard, then, something from France, something from Spain, something from India. It is pleasant to know that in the last-named locality, warm and feverish as it is, things are being treated pretty coolly, and society is subsiding into peace. Sir Charles Napier is "establishing relations" (we believe that is the diplomatic phrase, although the genuine old English meaning of establishing relations is nothing more, according to Cocker and Johnson, than being deuced liberal, and "setting one's family up in business") between the British and the people of Scinde. The victory we have gained seems settling down into matter-of-course possession, and the old grumblers about the morality of the war are now only looking out for a share in its advantages. Even the Times appears to think that

'Tis now of no more use to blame
The victory he's now whining,
For 'tis admitted Napier has
More Scinde against than sinning.

Apropos of the atrocity of the last pun, Scinde is not the only Indian name that has been the means of fetching equivoque from a distance. Said an English inquirer to a gentleman from Ghuznee, "When we urge a man to beat his wife in England, we say, 'Give her a good hiding!' What do you say in India?" To which the gentleman replied, "In India we say, 'Hide-her-a-bad!'" (Hyderabad was, we presume, the locale of the joke.)

Lord Ellenborough was getting popular. He has swallowed his camels, and left off straining at his gnats. He has descended from his stilts, and his prudence is setting his jurisprudence all to rights. Nothing can be more effective than the spectacle of the Ellenboroughs amending the Laws.

China is "much as usual," with the opium traffic pretty stiffly reviving; so that while the Ministers are asking here for a compensation for the loss of the trade, the trade itself appears to be gaining considerably. By the way, there was a conundrum in the fleet: "Why will England be the ruin of China?" Answer—"Because the name of her representative is Pot-ingure.

The news from Paris is all about Spanish intrigue and the new intimacy between Guizot and Queen Christina. The marriage plan appears likely to be foiled, and there is a loud talk of a Coburg for Isabella the Second. Another Coburg! Hurrah for the Coburgs! What would become of the queens if it were not for the Coburgs? Meanwhile the little creature in the Palace at Madrid must be dreadfully flurried. Somebody very exclusively in the Globe says they are going to declare her of age at once. This alone is enough to puzzle her a little, but why should'nt heiresses to the Spanish throne be declared of age from the cradle? They might rock and reign at the same time. Espartero is a lost young man: all his mistresses, including his Royal one, have deserted him, and his countrymen are his masters now. Even Sarah Gosser has proved unfaithful at last. Still he has had the temerity to bombard Seville—the Byron city,

Famous for oranges and women—he
Who has not seen it will be much to pity;
So says the proverb, and I quite agree.

However, we cannot see the gist of the bombardment. It is not the most humane way of giving state balls to the inhabitants. The course chalked out for Espartero by the Parisian press is bitter in the extreme. "First Cadiz—then England—next a broken heart—and, finally, a cemetery!" This is a cruelty peculiarly French.

* * * * * *

What domestic? Why, Bright, the Quaker, in for Durham—not in for a penny in for a pound—but in for the Londonderry borough. Dr. Bowring has been facetious upon the subject somewhere.

"Dr. Bowring then rose and said, that he had from the proud privilege last night, accompanied by an honourable friend near him, of escorting his friend Mr. Bright to the table of the House of Commons, and he confessed that some melancholy thoughts came over him when he contrasted the opinion out of doors, from which he had come, with the opinions within doors, to which he went. An old epigram ran through his mind at the moment; and he could not help reverting to it and the comment which at the time he made on it. When Dr. Goodenough was called upon to preach to the house a witty member said—

'Tis well enough
That Goodenough
Should to the Commons preach;
For, sure enough,
They're bad enough
Whom Goodenough would teach.'

He (Dr. Bowring) thought, that—

It was meet enough,
And fit enough
The House should be enlightened;

For, sure enough,
They're dull enough,
And wanting to be Brightened.
(Great cheers and laughter.)

Well, at all events, Dr. Bowring cuts no great figure for a poet. Considering how often the name of Goodenough is repeated, the joke is had enough with a vengeance. Bulwer's verses are better, and these we now publish, for the first time.

One day Mr. Bright,
A queer Quakerly wight,
Whose morals and coat fitted tight on,
To Durham went down,
Just to stand for the town,
Where he set himself up as a Bright-un.

Mr. Bright, we are told,
Did his precepts unfold,
With a heart—than a feather-wing lighter;
Till the crowd with delight,
Said his name might be Bright,
But they vow'd that his wit was far Brighter.

He his principles gave
Out, in manner quite brave,
And swore that no mortal should slur 'em,
So they gave him a cheer,
And a shout as sincere,
And so return'd Bright-un for Durham.

Then Bowring uprose
On the tips of his toes,
Proclaiming himself quite enchanted;
The House might delight,
In his friend Mr. Bright,
For brightness was all that it wanted.

Then up got a wag
With a joke in his bag,
And a voice that proved quite overpowering,
Tho' of bright things he knew
That the Commons had few,
There was nothing too bright about Bowring.

And so progressed very pretty and pleasant electioneering squabbling, and Mr. Bright has taken his seat. He is a very promising person, and we shall see how long it takes him to take his stand. Notwithstanding the defeat of Mr. Parvis, the absence of the Londonderry voters has completely contradicted the assertion of his adversaries, that all his influence was Vane.

* * * * *

Young England!—how young England, as Sam Slick would say, is going ahead. What is young England? Why, rather a nondescript animal—the type of a new class—men who run rather rusty in politics, and very zealous in religion—the politics of independence, and the religion of Puseyism. The main leaders are—

The stiff Captain Rous,
Who two pins for the House
Doesn't care, we believe, or two "tanners;"
With a more gentle boy,
Quite humanity's joy,
Who rejoices in being called "Manners."

Perhaps Dr. Bowring might say his was the first introduction of good manners into the house. Sam Rogers used to call the Commons "the assembly with the manners of a sweep;" and when asked the wherefore, declared that they had always Soot on their Speaker, but since Manners Sutton became Lord Canterbury, the joke has ceased to apply.

* * * * * *

Father Mathew is in England at last, and that for the multiplication of his practice. No more drinking! Lush, the barrister, will lose all his briefs; and Lushington, of the Civil Law Courts, will find his decisions dryer than ever. "I'm afraid, Dennis," said Lord Barrymore to his postillion, when he landed him out of a storm of rain—"I'm afraid, Dennis, you're very wet." "No, place yer honour, but I'm very dry;" and then of course came the "trating." Not so now.

There's Father Mat
Stops Brother Pat,
Who drank like anybody,
With "Don't throw, pray,
Yourself away,
But throw away your toddy."

The "Old Bailey" parody upon "Oh no, we never mention her," will now be verified, and the "Irishman in England" will be able to make a fine lament for his pothéen. We don't remember whether the said parody has been ever published, but we do remember the parody itself.

SONG.

THE IRISHMAN'S LAMENT FOR WHISKY.

I.

Och! no, we never minshun it,
The crater's never seen;
My lips are now forbid to taste
The thimble of pothéen!
From house to house they hurry me,
To swig the heavy wet,
But, och! I get no whisky there,
And how can I forget?

II.

They bid me seek in Hodges' vaults
The gin that others drink,
But, tho' I sometimes take a dram,
'Tis always bad I think.
'Tis thrue the barmaid smiles on me,
As if to say, "Well met!"
But, och! I get no whisky there,
And how can I forget?

III.

For ah! there are so many things
Recal to me the past:
The jingling of the pewter pots,
The spirits overcast;
The swearing of the apple girls,
The men, a dhrunken set;
And everything I look upon
Forbids me to forget.

IV.

They tell me Irish whisky now
Gets cheaper every day;
They hint that men desert it,
But heed not what they say;
Like me, perhaps, they love it
Wid a feeling of regret,
But if they drink as I have drunk,
They never can forget.

All of which is a piece of fine wild Irish minstrelsy, and quite in accordance with the favourite ballad of which it is a paraphrase. It is, however, less in the spirit of Father Mathew than Father Prout. One thing in connection with the "temperance move" we cannot help noticing, and that is, that while Father Mathew is just arrived among us, and is administering more pledges than any pawnbroker in the kingdom, her Majesty gives a state ball at Buckingham Palace, and Lord Delawarr issues seventy tickets to the coachmen and footmen about the carriages of the nobility to enable them to procure beer or brandy at the pot-houses in the purlieus of Westminster. These "tizzies" are not temperance medals, Master Brook, and the court is evidently not sticking up for the abstinence.

O'Connell has got a fresh accession to the repeal rent—Mr. Ward, an antipathy to the Irish Church—Rebecca, two or three more turnpikes—and Mr. Bunn, Drury-lane Theatre. The turnpikes will never open again, but Drury Lane will; and we suppose we may expect another lease of theatrical glory. Meanwhile the little box in the Haymarket is alive, and Lady Emmeline Stuart Wortley's comedy waits the "critic-fist" and the "audience-laugh." We wait the issue of all great things. Render, Heaven bless thee! Au revoir, au plaisir—Oh, dear! Tired, by Jupiter.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Queen and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the royal suite, and the household, attended divine service on Sunday morning in the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. Charles Leslie Courtenay officiated and preached the sermon, taking his text from Galatians, chap. iv., verses 4 and 5.

On Saturday, at half-past one o'clock, the Queen, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and a select suite arrived in New Palace Yard in two plain carriages, for the purpose of visiting the new Houses of Parliament, which are now in a state of rapid progression. The royal party were first conducted through the Speaker's court to the river front. The splendid view that this noble terrace affords was not lost to the royal party; her Majesty especially remarked upon it. The Queen's attention was next directed by Mr. Barry to the river frontage, the whole of which is so rich in architectural embellishments. Her Majesty, as indeed did the entire party, greatly admired the heraldic sculpture. The Queen, previous to leaving the works, was pleased to express her approbation of the talent displayed by some of the new Houses of Parliament, and acknowledged in flattering terms the attentions of Mr. Barry, and Mr. Grissel, the contractor. This was the Queen's first visit to the houses, and it occupied about an hour and a half. Her Majesty appeared in excellent health.

On Monday her Majesty's state ball took place, a full, illustrated, and letter-press description of which will be found elsewhere. (By permission).

On Tuesday the Princess Sophia Matilda visited her Majesty. Same day Prince Albert presided at a meeting at the office of the Duchy of Cornwall, in Somerset House. The Queen and Prince Albert, the Duke Ferdinand, Prince and Princess Augustus, and Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, went in the afternoon to Stafford House, the residence of the Duke of Sutherland, and viewed the interior of this magnificent mansion. After their return to Buckingham Palace her Majesty and Prince Albert and the royal party took a [illegible] drive [illegible] hour. The Duchess of Kent, Lady C. Dundas, and [illegible] Conroy, joined the royal dinner circle in the evening.

On Wednesday the Queen Dowager arrived in town at half-past twelve o'clock from her residence in Bushy Park. Her Majesty, attended by Lady C. Somerset, went to Buckingham Palace in the afternoon and visited the Queen and Prince Albert, and the Duke Ferdinand and the Prince and Princess Augustus of Saxe Coburg Gotha. In the evening her Majesty had a dinner party at Buckingham Palace. The Queen Dowager, attended by her suite, left town at half-past five o'clock for Bushy House, Bushy Park.

The King of Hanover, attended by Captain Sicher, honoured the Earl and Countess of Jersey with his company at dinner on Tuesday at their residence in Berkeley-square.

The King of Hanover has caused cards to be issued for an assembly at St. James's on Wednesday next, the 9th inst. All the invitations are as follow: "H. R. H. the Duke of Cumberland."

DEPARTURE OF THE COURT FOR WINDSOR.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert [illegible] Duke and Duchess of Kent, [illegible] the Queen Dowager, [illegible] Princess Augustus of Prussia, and Prince [illegible] left town on Thursday afternoon for the Great Western Railway station at Paddington, from whence they proceeded in the state carriages, by a special train, to Slough, at half past three o'clock.

At a Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign-office on Thursday at two o'clock. All the ministers were present. The council was summoned by direction of the Earl of Ripon.

MARRIAGES IN HIGH LIFE.—Married, on the 1st instant, at Hurley Church, Berks, by the Rev. Samuel Fox, A.M., vicar of Hurley, Berkshire, Thomas Broughton Charlton, Esq., of Chilwell Hall, Notts, to Fanny Dora, second daughter of John Walter, Esq., of Bearwood, Berks. On Wednesday, St. George's Church, Hanover-square, Mr. George Courtenay, second son of Sir George Chetwynd, Bart., led to the hymeneal altar Lady Charlotte Hill, eldest daughter of the Marquis and Marchioness of Downshire. The Hon. and Rev. Gerald Valerian Wellesley officiated at the ceremony.

DEATH OF THE DUKE OF DORSET, K.G.—We have to announce the death of the above distinguished nobleman on Saturday last, at his residence in Charley-street, in his 76th year. His grace had been for some time in a feeble health, and his death was, therefore, not unexpected. He succeeded to the family honours in 1816, on the death of his cousin, Charles Duke of Dorset, who was killed by a fall from his horse in Dublin, whilst on a visit to the Viceregal Court, during the Lord Lieutenancy of his father-in-law, Earl Whitworth. The late duke was Viscount Sackville previous to his accession; and, dying without issue, the dukedom of Dorset, marquisate of Middlesex, barony of Buckhurst, &c., become extinct. His grace was a personal favourite of King George IV. and King William IV., to both of which monarchs he was Master of the Horse, and from the former he received the decoration of the Garter. The late duke has left an only sister, married to Mr. H. A. Herbert, and a niece, daughter of his late brother, the Hon. George Sackville Germain, married to Mr. William Bruce Stopford, of the Foreign-office.

DEATH OF THE DOWAGER LADY DUFFERIN.—Intelligence has been received in town of the death of Elizabeth Lady Dufferin and Claneboye, which melancholy event took place at Mr D. Stewart Kerr's seat in the county Antrim, Ireland, who married one of her ladyship's daughters.

MORTALITY IN HIGH LIFE.—DEATH OF SIR EDWARD SYNGE, BART.—The respected baronet expired at Cheltenham at the close of the past week. He was born in 1786, and succeeded to the family honours on the death of his father, the first baronet, in 1804. In 1809 he married Mary Helen Yelverton, by whom he leaves issue. His eldest son succeeds the deceased baronet.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

HER MAJESTY'S SUMMER EXCURSION.—On Tuesday the Duke of Wellington, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Lord and Lady Seymour, and a party of ladies visited the dockyard at Deptford, to inspect her Majesty's yacht, which arrived from Chatham on Saturday, for the purpose of having her equipment completed, and to take in the furniture transferred from the Royal George. It has undergone a complete renovation, and is of the most beautiful Spanish mahogany, but plain and neat, consisting of an elegant library of books, wardrobes, state beds, numerous tables, sofas, carpets &c., for her and the Prince's attendants, and three others for the Prince of Wales and the two princesses, who will accompany their royal parents on their marine excursions during the autumn. The yacht is ordered to be ready for her Majesty and Prince Albert by the 15th inst., when it is understood her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert will take their departure for Walmer Castle, where they will remain possibly a month, taking an occasional cruise in the Channel. The yacht was afterwards taken into dock, and hauled alongside the basin. The Black Eagle is getting ready very fast to accompany the royal squadron, and has nearly 300 shipwrights at work on her. She will be considerably lengthened, and have engines of 250-horse power, by Penn and Co., of improved make.

COURT OF COMMON COUNCIL.—On Tuesday a court was held for the despatch of public business. Alderman W. Hunter moved that the court should proceed with the adjourned consideration of the report of the Coal and Corn and Finance Committee on the reference relative to the revenue from coal, &c. A number of extracts having been read from the report, Mr. Burn objected to a paragraph recommending the appointment of an inspector, and moved an amendment, founded on his objection, which was seconded by Mr. Obbard, and, after a discussion of some length, put and carried, and the report, with the amendment, was then agreed to.

THE REV. MR. ROBERTS.—We have received from the unfortunate gentleman, whose painful and distressing case is already too familiar to the public, a printed statement of the circumstances that have led to his reduced and unhappy condition, and, as far as it goes, we are fully satisfied that his case is one deserving of redress by the Legislature. We are happy to find that our notice of the affair had the anticipated effect of procuring friends for this distressed individual, and that we have in no small degree contributed to relieve his necessities. The munificent contribution from Bristol was forwarded to the rev. gentleman, and we are in possession of his grateful acknowledgments.

AËRONAUTICS.—On Tuesday evening, Mr. C. Green made his 286th ascent in his Albion balloon, from the gardens attached to Cremorne-house, King's-road, Chelsea, accompanied by Captain Currie, this being his 41st ascent. About 20 minutes after six o'clock the aeronauts took their seats in the car, when the huge body was released amidst the cheers of the assembled multitude. The ascent was beautiful, being almost perpendicular for several hundred yards. The wind was to the west and nearly a calm, so that the machine went slowly in the direction of the metropolis. According to the account given by Captain Currie it passed to the south of London. On reaching a higher atmosphere it came into a current of air to the south-west, by which its course was directed towards Epping Forest, which was crossed. The greatest elevation attained, was about 7500 feet. The descent was accomplished about 20 minutes past eight o'clock, in the park facing the mansion of Mr. Bramston, Skreen's Park, the member for the South Essex, land being about seven miles from Chelmsford, and the distance gone over from Chelsea being about 37 miles. The adventurers were there most hospitably entertained. The aeronauts arrived at Cremorne-house on Wednesday evening.

HEROIC CONDUCT.—On Monday the body of a man, named William Wright, was taken out of the river, off Millbank, having been drowned the day before under very melancholy circumstances, and it is miraculous that the loss of life did not extend to fifteen human beings; but this is chiefly owing to the heroic conduct of a lad of colour, named Snell, who was the means of rescuing six who were immersed in the water. Sunday afternoon, a party of fifteen, chiefly lads, got a large skiff from a coal-wharf on Millbank, with which they proceeded up the river. When off the Penitentiary wall, the rowers ran the boat across a mooring chain in the river, and almost instantaneously it was upset, and the whole party were precipitated into the water, with a very strong tide, at some distance from the shore. The occurrence was witnessed by many persons on the banks, and the utmost alarm was felt for the safety of the parties, eight of whom, however, were speedily got ashore. Snell got out six of the others by his own unaided exertions, and had actually gone in for the seventh time to secure the rescue of the unfortunate deceased, whom he reached and caught hold of, but finding the suction of the barges too great for him in his exhausted state, and fearing, if he continued, both lives would be sacrificed, he reluctantly made for the shore alone.

IRELAND.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.—At Carrickfergus assizes, on Friday, eleven men were tried for a riot in Belfast on the 16th of July. An application was made by the counsel for the Orangemen to have the prisoners, "orange and green," tried separately. This the judge (PERRIN) peremptorily refused; he could allow no distinctions. It was attempted to be proved that the Orange party were assisting the police. His lordship, in charging the jury, said a defence of this kind he had never before known to be set up in a court of justice. If persons were apprehensive of outrage, they should make an information before a magistrate; and if there became the duty of the authorities to protect these individuals. It was not permitted that any party should come violently together, to repress what they might consider wrong. It was a mockery for persons arrested in an outrageous mob, who were throwing stones, to say that they were not transgressing the law, but were endeavouring to make peace. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty against them all.

REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—The usual weekly meeting took place on Monday at the Corn Exchange-rooms Mr. O'Connell, who did not arrive until three o'clock, handed in several personal subscriptions. Amongst them were £5 from Mr. V. O. C. Blake, justice of the peace (county of Mayo); £1 from Mr. Naughe, justice of peace (county of Meath); £3 from Sir F. R. Musgrave, Bart.; and £5 from Lieutenant-Colonel Wellesley Ashe, of York-buildings, Regent's-park, London. He also handed in £270 from St. John's, Newfoundland; and £18 from West Troy, New York. The week's rent was announced to be £[illegible] 5s.

A great Repeal demonstration had taken place at Cork, or in the West of Ireland, at which resolutions of the ordinary character were passed.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Iris frig- e, Captain G. R. Mundy, arrived at Portsmouth on Sunday last, having been ordered suddenly to Eng.and in consequence of the newly state of health of the officers and ship's company. The voyage home and change of climate have already not very beneficial, and all are going on well.

A TRIAL OF SPEED.—The Racer, 18, sloop, Commander A. Reed, at Deptford, from Cork, a week in her results on the above seas of the Irish squadron, to [illegible] disappointed the expectations which had been formed of her sailing qualities, and did not prove herself the wonderful racer, her admirers asserted her to be. The sloop, built in 1835, and the other crack vessel, of Sir W Symonds's construction, the Dolphin, 3, brig-sloop, lieutenant Commander Hosier, built in 1839, was despatched by the Tyne, 24, Captain Glascock. The Dolphin proved a wonderfully racer, but, like all the surveyor's ships, very wet, and for the most part under water. In the two or three trials the Tyne is said to have taken the lead in all points, and when beating to windward or sailing large, far distanced all our opponents. She carried as much sail on any of her competitors, but there was an appearance of exhilaration to keep over more canvas. The Orestes, 18, Commander Hon. T. S. Cochrane, [illegible] Racer, so much so, that it is imagined her bottom is [illegible] The Racer has been in commission nearly a year, and has been [illegible] Lieutenant Commander J. Hosken, had in 1838, had not the least chance; she was a long way behind on every occasion.

THE 30TH REGIMENT.—The 30th march on the 1st inst. for Dublin.

Government has made a grant of £160 to each officer of the Canadian Provincial forces engaged in the war of 1812.

THE 8TH FOOTERS.—It having been reported that a soldier of the 8th Foot, quartered at Bury, dropped down dead whilst on drill, and that his death was produced by excessive duty and punishment, Sub-Inspector Fortescue satisfied James Dean, Esq. coroner, of the circumstance; and that gentleman arrived there on Friday morning, for the purpose of holding an inquest on the body. Previous to the commencement of the usual investigation, the jury, the late soldiers frequently fainted in the ranks, having become quite exhausted from the length of time they were duty kept on drill, &c., and that suitable assertions were made to that effect by the same corps; consequently, the result of the inquiry was looked forward to with much interest, and considerable excitement prevailed in the town and neighbourhood. After an investigation of some length the jury returned the following verdict:—"That the deceased Patrick M'Manus died by the visitation of God naturally and not otherwise, to wit, of apoplexy, brought on by over-exertion. In no more of extreme violence on the body; but it is the opinion of the undersigned majority (fifteen to three) that drills and parades are carried to an extreme degree of severity in the 8th Regiment of Footers, particularly at this season of the year."—[In reference to this matter the following toss place in the House of Commons on Monday night:—Mr E B Roche said he had been informed that a soldier of the 8th Footers, now stationed in Ireland, had dropped dead on parade; an inquest had been held, and the verdict was that he had died of excessive fatigue at drill. He wanted to know if this were true? Sir H Hardinge said that the fact he had heard of the matter. He should inquire into it, and state the result to the house.

However, in future he hoped, when such questions were about to be put, that he should have notice of them, as he could not reply and the statements would go before the public together. (Hear, hear.)—Let us hope that the explanation will be a satisfactory one, for as the matter stands it is painful to contemplate.]

POSTSCRIPT.

WINDSOR, Thursday.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert, Prince and Princess Augustus of Saxe Coburg Gotha, Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg Gotha, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, and suites, arrived at the Castle at twenty minutes past four o'clock this afternoon, escorted by a party of the Royal Horse Guards, the royal party having been conveyed from town by a special train on the Great Western Railway. The bells rang a merry peal in honour of the return of the Court, and a royal salute was fired from the Bachelor's Arms. Duke Ferdinand of Saxe Coburg Gotha arrived at the Castle later in the afternoon, having accompanied the Duchess of Kent from town. It is not expected that the stay of the Court at Windsor Castle will be prolonged beyond Monday or Tuesday next. The return of the court to Windsor is expected to take place about the following Saturday, the 12th instant. Her Majesty will then remain at the Castle until the prorogation of Parliament.

THE OYSTER SEASON.—The season commenced yesterday morning at six o'clock A.M. There arrived upwards of 30 vessels laden with oysters (formerly there used to be between 60 and 70 boats, but since the establishment of Hungerford Market several vessels now take their cargoes there.

PENDLETON COLLIERY, Wednesday.—A most disastrous accident has destroyed this colliery. Yesterday the water overpowered the pumps laid down to carry off that element, and gained such a head upon the works that the mines, of which four are now in hand, the deepest of the number, the six feet, the five feet, and the three feet mines, were rapidly filled with water beyond all redemption. The engine at the bottom of the main shaft is said to be quite new, and it is not expected that any portion of it will be injured. We are informed that, in consequence of a large coal-pit at Swinton, and another in the neighbourhood (both upon the same stratum of coal) having been flooded out a few weeks ago; and the pumps having been stopped on those mines, the flow of water at the Pendleton colliery became irresistible, and hence the bursting in upon the mines. The three coal pits which we have just referred to supply nearly 1000 tons of coals per day to the Manchester market, and of course their loss will be felt, not only by the workpeople but by the consumers.

FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT.—Four men of the Bapilaw Deep Ash Pit were about to go down the pit to their work, and had nearly reached the bottom, when the rope (a portion of the sawney (small engine), was instantaneously cut, by which they were drawn up again with the most frightful velocity. Stupendous was the effect of the concussion, that the four unfortunate men were projected to a height of 40 yards into the air, and their mutilated and lifeless corpses were discovered at a distance of from 30 to 40 yards from the mouth of the shaft. The names of the unfortunate men are—Richard Boaden, overlooker, aged 65. A wife and large family are left to mourn his loss. Richard Dawson, widower, aged 30, has left two orphans. Francis Malbourn, single man, aged 25. James Roberts, aged 30, has left a wife and three children, and shortly, to all appearance, another will be added to the number. The cause of the accident has not yet been ascertained.

FOREIGN.

SPAIN.—The Paris papers of Wednesday have reached us. Although the telegraphic despatch does not announce the surrender and occupation of Seville on the 23rd ult., there can be little doubt of the fact. A letter from the Duke de Baylen appears in the Madrid Gazette, announcing his acceptance of the post of Commander of the Royal corps of Halberdiers. The Queen held a levee on the 25th, at which all the members of the Lopez Cabinet, the chief officers of the army, and the deputies of several provincial juntas were present, and had the honour of kissing her Majesty's hand. A fire had broken out in the bazaar at Granada, which had consumed an immense quantity of silks. The Duchess of Victory left Madrid on the 24th to join her husband. We gather from a private letter from Madrid that the conquerors are quarrelling among themselves already.

GRAND STATE BALL AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE ON MONDAY LAST.

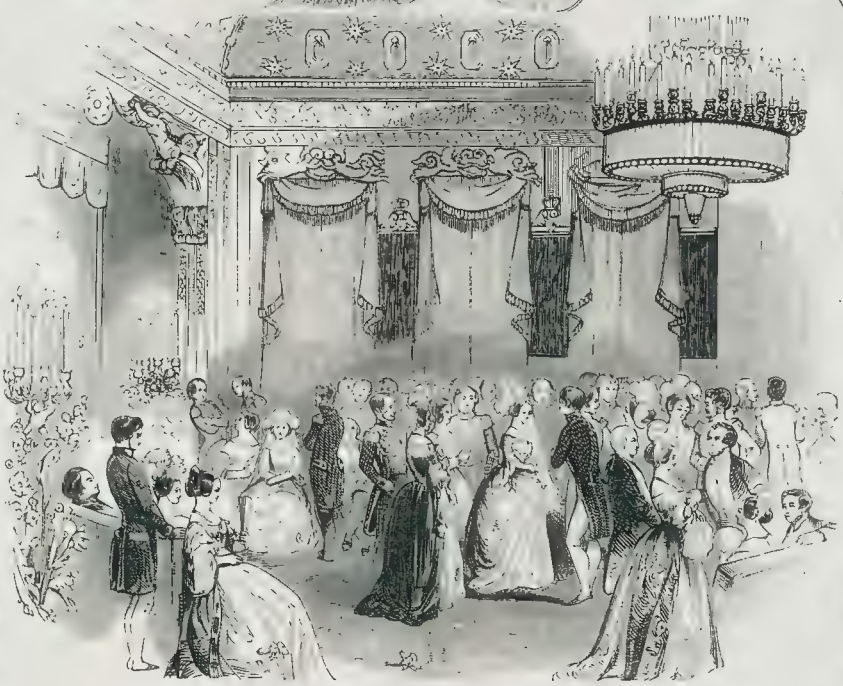
BOW DRAWING ROOM.

ROYAL PIPER.

GRAND STAIRCASE.

ROYAL PIPER.

MARBLE HALL.



BALL ROOM.

REFRESHMENT TENT.

HER MAJESTY'S STATE BALL.

On Monday evening the Queen gave, at Buckingham Palace, the second and last state ball of the season, which, in one essential respect, surpassed its predecessor—the number of guests was more limited. Owing to these fêtes having been so few and far between, they have been crowded to such an excess as to conceal the display of beauty, and destroy at once the freshness of the most brilliant toilettes, and render the quadrille a scene of pressure and confusion, with only the semblance of dancing. At her Majesty's ball on Monday week, in consequence of the extended hospitality of the invitations, the same inconvenience prevailed to a certain extent; but at the fête of last Monday, on account of the lesser number of guests, the beautiful toilettes of the youthful aristocrats, the stars and orders of the dignitaries, the diamonds and gems of their fair and noble partners, were displayed with far greater effect. Accordingly, we have chosen this fête as the best opportunity for presenting to our readers a series of illustrations of the superb intérieur of the palace, which have been obtained for our journal with no inconsiderable difficulty.

The first engraving represents the superb marble hall, entered beneath the central portico, and set out for the ball night. This noble apartment, with the adjoining grand chamber, contains 104 columns, each a single block of white marble, with a Corinthian capital of mosaic gold, which cost £30. The architect has here shown much taste and skill by so arranging the double columns that there is at once attracted to the details, and attention taken from the defect of the lowness of the ceiling by statues, and by the white marble pavement being surrounded by a mosaic border of different marbles, in a Victorian scroll.

The second engraving shows the grand staircase, with the reception of the royal guests. This staircase is of white marble, and consists of a centre and two returning flights; the centre flight beyond the first landing being carried up to the entrance of the armoury, from which the effect is beautiful and theatrical. The staircase, in outline and details—especially the rich mosaic gold scroll-work supporting the hand-rail, and the columns, statues, and reliefs—has a most elegant effect. On Monday evening the grand hall and staircase were lined by the Yeomen of the Guard, with the exons, lieutenant, and clerk of the cheque; the whole presenting a magnificent scene of pageantry and royal state not forgetting the royal pipers.

The third engraving represents the bow drawing-room, with the general company. This superb apartment, in the garden front of the Palace, has a dome supported by Corinthian columns of lapis-lazuli in spandels, the interior of the dome exhibiting the national emblems with rich but light effect. The picture gallery has already been engraved in No. 61 of our journal: on Monday evening it was opened for the general company, and was ornamented with choice shrubs and flowers.

Having crossed the gallery, we reach the throne-room (fourth engraving), most brilliantly illuminated with magnificent chandeliers, candelabra, and branches with wax lights; and the orchestra was covered with splendid drapery of crimson velvet, richly embroidered in gold. This magnificent saloon is 60 feet in length, and 40 feet in height, and its richly-wrought ceiling and decorated walls have been so recently described in our journal (see No. 63), that we pass on to

The fifth illustration, which adjoins the green drawing-room, next to the throne chamber. The windows of this apartment open to the upper or Corinthian story of the grand portico; here was erected Tipuoo Saib's tent, in which during the evening refreshments were served to the company. It was lit by "the Indian sun," eight feet in diameter, set round a chandelier, with a powerful reflector, which threw the light downward upon the gay scene with most brilliant effect.

The company began to arrive at half-past nine o'clock. Among the earlier arrivals were the Duke and Duchess of St. Alban's, the French Ambassador and the Countess de Ste. Aulaire, Sir Charles Napier, the Duke of Wellington, Marquis of Anglesea, Sir Henry Halford, the Lord Chancellor, Sir Edward Codrington, Earl of Shrewsbury, Duke of Bedford, Marquis of Huntley, Marquis of Lansdowne, Earl of Aberdeen, Sir George Murray, Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, Lord Beaumont, Lord Monteagle, Lord Glenelg, Sir George Cockburn, Marquis of Cianricarde, Lord Wharncliffe, Lord Brougham, and Lord Sandon.

The Duke of Norfolk carried the baton as Earl Marshal.

The Duke of Devonshire wore his diamond hilted sword, a brilliant star of the Garter, and the motto of the order also set in diamonds.

The Duchess of Kent arrived shortly before ten o'clock, attended by Lady Charlotte Dundas and Sir George Cowper.

The King of Hanover arrived at ten o'clock, attended by the noblemen and gentlemen of his suite.

The Duchess of Gloucester arrived at the same time. The Duke and Duchess of Cambridge and Prince George were attended by Lady Augusta Somerset and Baron Knesebeck.

The royal guests were all conducted to the presence of her Majesty in the yellow drawing room.

Soon after the arrival of the illustrious visitors, the Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the royal family, the Duke Ferdinand, the Prince and Princess Augustus and Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg Gotha, passed from the drawing-room to the throne-room, the Lord Steward and the Lord Chamberlain conducting the Queen.

A quadrille was then formed, and her Majesty opened the ball with Prince George; the other set being Prince Albert and the Princess Augustus of Saxe Coburg Gotha.

Quadrilles and waltzes were then danced in this apartment. The Queen and the illustrious guests retired to the throne-room at half-past eleven o'clock, when her Majesty, attended by the Officers of State and of the Household, passed across the picture gallery and entered the throne-room. The quadrille band played "God save the Queen" on the entrance of her Majesty. Dancing then commenced in this room.

Supper was served in the dining-room. The plateau on the range of tables included a number of very beautiful porcelain vases, and was lit by numerous candelabras of silver gilt and ormolu. The first of gold plate at the end of the apartment contained numerous specimens of shields, vases, tankards, flagons, cups, sconces, and other articles of the royal collection, richly and elaborately chased, embossed, and sculptured in the most refined taste, in the form of a shell, supported by hippocamps, and richly embellished, forming the centre ornament at the bottom of the buffet, places for twelve two vases (copies of the Warwick vase), containing flowers, are placed upon fluted circular pinths of silver gilt. The choicest exotics in flower were interspersed among the collection, the whole being illuminated by magnificent candelabra, and also by sconces with wax lights.

The band of the Coldstream Guards attended in the marble hall and performed a number of favourite pieces during the night. The Queen's Guard of the Foot Guards was on duty on the palace lawn, and received the royal family on their arrival with the usual honours.

We have not room for a list of the company. Her Majesty's toilette consisted of a robe gauze Iris sky blue, with a tunic fastened with beads and pink roses and diamonds. The Duchess of Kent wore a tulle dress, garnished with white and gold vosants over a dress of white satin Headdress, a garland of diamonds and pink roses and blonde gold. We can only describe generally the other dresses. There were several of damask, with a white ground broche in colours, open at each side, and trimmed with ribbons; skirts in pink crape, with a rich flower stem dress round the bottom with two large volants cut out in patterns, some in Iris gauze, some in vert chou, with three tunics super, osed, trimmed with flowers mixed with diamonds; skirts in blue satin, covered by a blonde dress with two volants, were adapted to the inclemency of the season: as well as those in pink satin with three volants of blonde elagée, and with elegant bows of ribbon. In the way of lighter costume, there were many elegant dresses of tarletan garnished to the excellency of the season: as well as those in pink satin with three volants of blonde elagée, and with elegant bows of ribbon. In the way of lighter costume, there were many elegant dresses of tarletan garnished to the inclem

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Nature has made us not only an amphibious people locally, but also in our tastes. Last week all the world was racing on terra firma, at Goodwood; this week they have been at the same fashion of amusement afloat, under the title of yachting, or rather celebrating a regatta. This masque of merrie mariners will, no doubt, have justice done it in some other part of this journal, whose office it is to give man-of-war written and pictorial notices, de cunctis rebus, et quibus hunc alibi," while in this, our proper eo unto, we set forth the essence of our wit and wisdom touching the instant position and prospects of our insular olympicks.

The quantity and eke the quality of the racing so lately disposed of in the Duke of Richmond's park, has, this time shall have enacted the "sweet restorer," London "go" to the betting division; and as much work has the effect of wearying all sorts of legs, for this reason we had a fiat, if not an unprofitable, Monday to sit, on the closing of July, at Hyde Park-corner. The Doncaster meeting may introduce some spirit into the market, but not in reference to the Leger—that must be a bad betting race had, should it come off according to the anticipation formed of it by the odds; very bad should one or more, laid against as if they were beforehand "come out and win." The October meetings are rarely speculated about till they are under discussion, but their results will have very material effect upon the winter business, both in the metropolis and the provinces. In the meanwhile, seeing that there hath been introduced into the economy of the course a new-fangled fashion of backing horses in training in certain popular stables, under the denomination of "lots," for the convenience of those who follow this sort we subjoin correct lists of such of these as are at present current in the odds:—

LOTS BACKED FOR THE DERBY OF 1844.

SCOTT'S LOT.
Colonel Anson's Massena	Colonel Anson's Joe Lovell
Mr. Bowes's Sadditon	Lord Maidstone's Cockamaron
Mr. Bowes's T'Auld Squire	Lord Normanby's Larmer
Lord Chesterfield's Attaghan	Mr Vane's Valerian
Lord Chesterfield's The Miser Scarve	Mr. Watt's Valtri
JOHN DAY'S LOT.
Mr. John Day's The Ugly Buck	Mr. Wreford, jun.'s colt by Camel
Mr. H. G. Bigge's Theseus	out of Margellina
Mr. John Day's Juvenal	Mr. Wreford, jun.'s colt by Camel out of Wadastra

COLONEL PEEL'S LOT.

Colonel Peel's colt by Slane out of Jason's dam
Colonel Peel's Orlando, late Sanewich, late Valtrre colt
General Yates's Slanderer
Colonel Peel's colt by Tom out of Malibran

LORD EXETER'S LOT.

Lord Exeter's colt by Troilus, out of Marinella.
Lord Exeter's colt by Troilus, out of Amuna.
Lord Exeter's colt by Economist, out of Ve.teten.
Lord Exeter's colt by Liverpool, out of Mavremme.
Lord Exeter's colt by Rockingham, out of Green Mantle.

The average betting of the week may be thus quoted. The Derby, 1844:

Scott's lot, 9 to 2 agst, taken
John Day's lot, 11 to 2 agst, taken.
Col Peel's lot, 10 to 1 agst, taken.
10 to 1 agst the Ugly Buck, taken.
14 to 1 agst Battan.
20 to 1 agst Orlando.
25 to 1 agst Wadastra colt, taken.

CRICKET.

GENTLEMEN v. PLAYERS.—The grand match of eleven gentlemen amateurs against a similar number of professional cricketers, which is played annually, was commenced on Monday at Lord's, in the presence of at least three thousand persons, including a numerous party of the most distinguished members of the beau monde. Among other noblemen, ladies, and gentlemen, we observed the Marquis of Exeter and Lord Burleigh, the Marquis of Stafford and Lord Leveson Gower, Earl and Countess Craven, Earl of Thanet, Count Esterhazy, Viscount Loftus, Viscount Drumlanrig, Viscount Grimston, Lord and Lady Beauclerk and party; Lords C. Russell, William Harvey, Marcus Hill, Edmund Hill, H. Loftus, and Templemore; Hon. Capt. Liddell, Hon. F. Ponsonby, Hon. Capt. Curzon, Hon. Charles Grimston, Hon. General Upton, Hon. Spencer Ponsonby, Hon. Capt. Lawley, Hon. Robert Grimston, Hon. Capt. Stanley, Hon. Francis Grimston, Hon. F. Craven, Hon. F. Bathurst, Sir John Shelley, Colonel Greenwood, Major Udney, Captain Drake, Captain Ellis, Captain Haygarth, Captain Hay, and several other officers of the Horse and Foot Guards. R. Kynaston, Esq. (the honorary secretary), and a strong muster of the members of the Marylebone Club.

The players commenced the game by a defence of the wickets, and scored 137 runs, out of which Wenman, after some very fine batting, cleared 73, being more than half of the entire innings. In the course of his play he made some splendid hits, including a five and a four in first-rate style; also eight threes and eight twos, and ultimately carried out his bat amidst the cheers of the spectators. Hawkins (hit wicket) marked 21, with a four, a three, a trio of twos, and eight single runs. Box (c., Mr. Kynaston) 11; Guy (c., Mr. A. Mynn) 7; Hillyer (b., Mr. A. Mynn) 6; Pinch (b., Mr. A. Mynn) 4; Butler (s., Mr. Anson) 3; Dean (b., Mr. A. Mynn) 3; Adams (b., Mr. A. Mynn) 1; Redgate and Lillywhite were both bowled by Mr. Taylor without clearing a run, and the former had his wicket slightly lowered the first ball. There were seven byes and one wide ball. The bowling of Mr. Alfred Mynn and Mr. Taylor was first rate, and did great execution, and their colleagues were equally active on the field.

The gentlemen then went in, Mr. Walter Mynn and Mr. Craven taking the bats. The betting at this time was all in favour of the players, who were backed heavily at 3 to 1, but a considerable reaction soon occurred. Mr. Craven, who ran himself out, scored but one. Mr. A. Mynn joined his brother, and they commenced batting away in fine style, getting runs very fast. Mr. W. Mynn, after scoring 20, with a four, a brace of threes, a two, and eight singles, had his wicket lowered by a ball from Dean. Mr. Felix was his successor, and who materially increased the score by his bold and scientific batting. At length, Mr. A. Mynn run out, after getting 47 in capital style, comprising a five, three fours, a three, and five twos. Three wickets down for 68 runs. Time was then called, and the play terminated for the evening, Mr. Felix "well in" with a score of about 25.

The game was resumed on Tuesday by Mr. Colson, who played for the Hon. Frederick Ponsonby, facing Mr. Felix, but he was soon disposed of by Lillywhite without making a run. Mr. Taylor then went in, and displayed some splendid batting. He made the enormous score of 69, and would doubtless have materially increased it, had he not put himself out by accidentally hitting his wicket. He made several tremendous hits, comprising a six, a five, six fours, and nine threes. Mr. Felix having been caught by Guy after obtaining 62, with a brace of fours, a couple of threes, a two, and six singles, was succeeded by Mr. Pickering, who run out with a score of 5. Mr. Boudier (who played for the Hon. E. H. Grimston) was bowled by Lillywhite for 10. Mr. Kynaston, caught by Dean, made 7. Sir F. Bathurst, bowled by Hillyer, 28, with a five, two fours, two threes, a couple of twos, and five single runs. Mr. Anson carried out his bat with a score of 17, including a six, got in capital style, a four, and a two. The innings, with nine byes and one wide ball, amounted to 256 runs.

The players in their second innings had 119 to tie, but scoring 99 only, they lost the match, being defeated by the gentlemen single handed, and with 20 runs to spare.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

ROYAL YACHT SQUADRON REGATTA AT COWES.—TUESDAY, AUGUST 1.

THE FIRST FREE CUP, OPEN TO ALL R.Y.S. YACHTS.—The season for aquatic contests having terminated upon the Thames, it has commenced upon the silent sea; upon the principle that when one salle de spectacle is closed another is opened. The anniversary of the Royal Yacht Squadron Regatta began auspiciously with the present month. On Tuesday last six first bona fide races was run, although on the preceding Saturday three subscription cups for a first steamyachtes, proposed last autumn, and postponed till the present year, in which the large ship (as she is called), the Brilliant, the Circassian, and the Fort, ran a course round the island in almost half a gale of wind, which circumstance gave the largest, of course, the greatest chance, though the Circassian having fouled the Fort, the stakes were renounced, and the race declared void by the umpire, the Marquis of Anglesea. The start, on the first day of the regatta, was beautiful in the extreme, the number of vessels engaged, the concourse of others to witness or accompany them, the freeness of the weather, and the crowd of company ashore, greatly enlivening a locality always famous for its varied liveliness of sea and land. The meyer yachts had been originally eighteen, but sixteen only ran for the Cup, and a goodly fleet they were—all sea-set, flaunting in the gorgeous sunlight, and careering Leo dolphins on the Channel waters. It was a "time rare," that is, the vessels won according to their tonnage and time of arrival, and not as they rounded the flag-vessel whom lay in front of Cowes Castle. We subjoin the names and owners of the yachts, and their rates of tonnage:—

			Tons.
1.	Gem	.. Schooner	193	Marquis of Ormonde.
2.	Theresa	.. Cutter	121	Earl of Jersey.
3.	Esmeralda	.. Schooner	180	J. Delafield, Esq.
4.	Fez	.. Ditto	90	Capt. C. Bulkeley.
5.	Wh. o' the Wisp	Cutter	44	Capt. Williams
6.	Nymph	.. Ditto	31	J. Bagley, Esq.
7.	Columbine	.. Ditto	30	Smith, Capt. Esq.
8.	Forest Fly	.. Ditto	35	W. Hornby, Esq.
9.	Gitana	.. Schooner	189	E. N. Harris, Esq.
10.	Clarm	.. Cutter	74	M. Higgins, Esq.
11.	Corsair	.. Ditto	84	J. Congreve, Esq.
12.	Owen Glendower	Ditto	124	J. Worrell, Esq.
13	Brilliant	.. Schooner	393	G. H. Ansell, Esq.
14	Hebe	.. Cutter	88	A. W. Corbet, Esq.
15.	Circassian	.. Schooner	160	W. Lyon, Esq.
16.	Intrepid	.. Cutter	74	Earl of Yarmouth.

The course was round the Isle of Wight—outside of the No-man buoy and Nab Light—passing between a vessel with a large union jack at the mast-head, and Cowes Castle. It was the longest course of the small vessels, and would take in the event of the light winds assuming with which the young flood set in. As the tide rose, however, so did the breeze, and, at ten o'clock, when they started, it was quite enough to fill the light canvas which had generally been bent for the occasion. When the usual signal for the start was given, by a gun fired from the platform of the squadron-house, a boat of the smaller cutters gathered weigh. The Hebe was the first, then the Charm, the Nymph, the Gazelle, in the order they are put down, followed by the Fez schooner and the larger craft. Of course the running fleet were soon almost undistinguishable from the vessels that stood as company with them part of the distance, and of which a great number were collected in the roadstead and harbour on the day preceding. Some Government cruisers and Lord Wilton's schooner, the Amelia, made the whole course; and the latter, we presume had she started for the cup, might easily have beaten some of the cracks—the Brilliant, in particular. The spectators ashore lost sight of the squadron as it here away eastward, passing St. Helen's Point. There was a brisk breeze during the whole of the day, and the general opinion was that the course would be sailed in eight hours, or thereabouts. For this reason an extra cook out was kept at "Egypt" from five P.M., and soon after six it was known that the leading vessels of the squadron were in sight. Although there was a good "cap full" of wind, the ebb was setting down strongly, and, consequently, the arrival was more tardy than the hopes of the eager friends of the craft engaged could well brook. At half-past six, half a dozen—that formed the van—were abreast of Beach Villas, and soon after a salvo of artillery announced the battle fought and won, the fortunate champion being the Marquis of Ormonde's taken schooner the Gem, who did the distance (80 miles, in eight hours fifty two minutes. As the race was run on what is called the "time" system, did we give the return of all the vessels it would scarcely assist our readers to an idea of the relative merits of the yachts. This handicapping of ships may be all very well for the owners, but the public, at least one in a thousand, cannot make head or tail of it. On Friday the club met, the sum-total of close schooner Cup was named for the details of which we shall give next week—that is, on the old-fashioned principle of the early bird finding the first worm.

[Next week and following we shall give illustrations of the Cowes Regatta.]

PROSPECTS OF THE GROUSE SEASON.—We understand that the prospects for the sports men are equally good on all parts of the highest grounds, where the severe frosts in the early part of June had caused great loss at that critical season. A second hatching was not unfrequent, and hence there will necessarily be a good deal of dispersion among the young birds, and a more than usual proportion of cheepers. Where the low grounds afford good shelter, the shepherds report a full average prospect of grouse, but black game are manifestly on the increase.

BRIGHTON RACES.

The weather has been most inauspicious for the races, for, just as the bell rang for adjusting for the Brighton Stakes on Wednesday afternoon, a drenching rain set in. The company, however, was tolerably numerous, including the Duke of Beaufort, the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Chesterfield, Lord George Bentinck, Lord Maidstone, Lord Rosslyn, the Hon. Captain Rous, Mr. Gratwicke, Mr. Ruan, Mr. Payne, and several other distinguished patrons of the turf on the course.

The Two-year-old Stakes of 25 sovs each. (9 subs.)

Lord Chesterfield's Dog Billy	(Nat)	1
Mr. Gratwicke's f, by Rin, out of Margravine	(Bell)	2

A very fine race with three, and won by a head, the second having no greater advantage over the third: the others were beaten off.

The 20 sovs each, 16 st., and 5 only if declared, with £100 added; the second to save his stake. The Old Course. (35 subs., 19 of whom declared.)

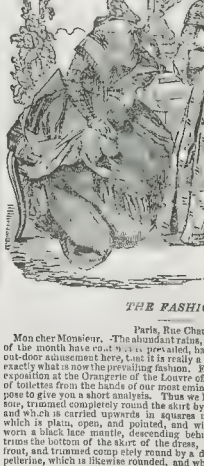
Mr Forth's Vibration, 4 yrs, 8st 2lb	(Bell)	1
Mr. Gardner's Capt. Flathooker, 4 yrs, 7st 9lb	(Nat)	2
Mr. F. Clarke's Arcanas, 4 yrs, 7st 9lb	(Sly)	3

Betting.—2 to 1 agst Vibration; 3 to 1 agst Arcanas; 4 to 1 agst Mary; and 6 to 1 agst Myrtle. Arcanas made running at a bad pace, followed by Argos, Tom Thumb, and Capt. Flathooker, to the turn, where Vibration took the second place, and with Capt. Flathooker at his side, followed Arcanas to the distance, where the latter was beaten; the Captain then became the leader, but was challenged at the stand, and beaten cleverly by a length, Arcanas a good third. The pace was very good from the turn.

The Railway Plate of £50 added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each; the second saved his stake. Ten minute to be sold for £100, &c. Heats, Ten New Courses. (3 subs.)

Lord Chesterfield's Peter the Hermit, 7st 4lb	(Nat)	1 1

Both heats won easy. The winner was sumed.



THE FASHIONS.

Paris, Rue Chaussée d'Antin, August 1, 1843.

Mon cher Monsieur. The abundant rains, which ushered in the commencement of the month have not yet left prevailed, have so far impeded the march of out-door amusement here, that it is really a matter of much difficulty to say exactly what is now the prevailing fashion. Fortunately, however, for me, the exposition at the Orangerie of the Louvre offers us some graceful specimens of toilettes from the hands of our most eminent artistes, of which I now propose to give you a short analysis. First we have a robe of cameleon pouil de soie, trimmed completely round the skirt by a ruche, sculpted at the edge, and which is carried upwards in squares up to the point of the corsage, which is plain, open, and pointed, and with short sleeves; with this is worn a black lace mantle, descending behind as low as the ruche, which trims the bottom of the skirt of the dress, and is rounded on each side in front, and trimmed completely round by a broad black lace; with this are the pellerine, which is likewise rounded, and which fits to the shape. The toilette is completed by a hat, in white point de soie, trimmed with a long yellow plume, and with a little bouquet of roses in the side. Close to this dress, in the same exhibition, we observe another equally pretty—it is a rose in rose-coloured barège, trimmed with a deep flounce en biais, surmounted by a ruche of similar material; the corsage and sleeves are à cœur. The mantelet is in green taffety, rounded behind, lightly scalloped to the height of the arms, and falling down in front in rounded ends, trimmed all round by a plaited frill. It has a little collar also trimmed with pairs of the same material, not going beyond the shoulder, and which comes down and joins in front at the waist. A hat of rose crêpe, ornamented with taffety ribbons, and surmounted with a high fall of rose crêpe, completes one of the most remarkable and tasty costumes that can be conceived. I shall only quote one other specimen of the numerous pretty things to be found at this exhibition—it is a robe of glazed taffety, shot with blue, trimmed at the bottom of the skirt with two very full forming flounces. The corsage is open at the neck, having a berthe of the same trimmed with a fringe. The sleeves are plain, with fringes forming jockeys. The mantelet is of embroidered tulle, long behind, and cut square to the height of the arms, falling down in front in long square ends. All round the neck is a collar of lace, which is fastened in front by a knot of blue taffety ribbon. The hat is in green crêpe, with gathers, intermixed with blonde placed upon the passe. Taken together, the robe, mantle, and hat are extremely original and very becoming, and do much honour to the artiste who invented them. Until the weather becomes more settled, it is quite absurd to expect any great or positive change in our fashions; and therefore, until that event occurs, I must recommend you to be patient. Adieu.

HENRIETTE DE B.

EPITOME OF NEWS.

Lord Stuart de Rothesay, the English ambassador at the court of St. Petersburg, is about to be recalled, and his lordship's place is to be supplied by the Duke of Beaufort.—A wealthy and eccentric Frenchman, named Schikler, recently died in Paris, leaving, among other strange bequests, 500,000 francs (near 100,000 dollars), to Fanny Elssler.—It is said that the riband of the Order of the Thistle, at the disposal of the Premier at the death of Earl Cathcart, is to be conferred on the Duke of Montrose.—At the Devizes wool fair last week, almost all the wool pitched found ready purchasers, in many instances at nearly 1½d. per lb. About 30,000 fleeces were sold.—John Motteux, Esq., the intimate personal friend of the late Duke of Norfolk and the Earl of Albemarle, died at his mansion, in Gloucester-place, at an advanced age, on Saturday.—The Bishop of Worcester consecrated the new chapel of ease at Victoria Spa, near Stratford-on-Avon, on Friday last, in the presence of a very numerous assembly of the clergy of the diocese.—The accounts from the hop districts of Kent are favourable, and there is every prospect of a good average crop.—Among other intelligence received by the Overland Mail, we learn that a comet has been observed at Manilla and Singapore. Though scarcely visible to the naked eye, its tail is described of great extent, and about forty degrees and quite straight.—Mr. Dalton, the French consul at Newcastle, who had been charged by his Government to visit and report on the state of manufactures in the northern districts of England, has, after completing his tour, arrived at Paris.—Wednesday being the first day of the reduction in the fares on the London and Brighton Railway, there was an immense influx of visitors. Nearly 2600 passengers arrived in the course of the day from the various trains, many of which, from the immense length, required three engines to move them. Not the slightest accident occurred.—Blake, one of the landing-waiters implicated in the Custom-house frauds, has been arrested and committed to the Queen's Prison, at the suit of the Crown, on a claim for upwards of £60,000.—The Hon. Abbot Lawrence, late representative of the city of Boston, in the House of Representatives of the United States, has arrived with his family at the Brunswick Hotel, Hanover-square.—A letter from Toulon says:—"The periodical phenomenon of the falling stars is waited for with anxiety by the meteorologists. Its display has not this year been favoured by the weather; but, during the few fine nights we have had within the last month, a considerable number have been seen darting from the north-east to the south-west."—So great has been the anxiety shown by the Welsh against the intrusion of the metropolitan police, that within the last few days nearly all the men sent out to assist Mr. Hall, the magistrate, in the execution of his duty, have returned to Scotland-yard.—Since the conclusion of the coroner's inquest on the body of the late Colonel Fawcett, the widow of that gentleman, in addition to paying all the expenses incurred by Mr. Miles, the landlord of the Camden Arms, on behalf of Colonel Fawcett, has presented Mr. Miles and his wife with a diamond ring each, for the kindness and humanity displayed by them on the admission of Colonel Fawcett on the morning of the duel and up to the period of his death.—The last accounts from the hop districts of Kent are conflicting. In one place all is right, the plants are fine, no vermin; in another all is wrong, nothing but vermin, the plants in the worst possible condition. This is rather contradictory, but it is an average sample of "hop intelligence."—A fancy fair, in celebration of Nelson's victory at the Nile, was held in behalf of the Sailors' Charitable Institution, at Grays, in the county of Essex. On Monday last William Osborn, charged with shooting his wife with a pistol, with intent to murder her, and Richard Petchel, charged with assaulting a farmer, named Budds, from Little Clacton, of a horse, at St. John's Green Fair, on the 5th ult., made their escape from Colchester gaol.—The amount received at the Theatre Royal Haymarket on Wednesday evening, the performances being for the benefit of the late Mr. Elton's orphan family, amounted to upwards of £300.—The great boat-race between the Etonian and Westminster scholars took place on Tuesday, and terminated in favour of the Etonians.—The Master-General of the Ordnance has determined upon making an alteration in the dress of the Royal Foot Artillery. The gallant general proposes to substitute dark blue trousers in the place of the present pattern of light blue. The felt crown chaco is to be superseded by the patent leather top at present in use in the infantry.—By royal ordonnance, dated July 31, his Royal Highness the Prince de Joinville is promoted to the rank of rear-admiral.—The bakers of the metropolis have taken advantage of the rains of the past week to raise the price of a penny the quartern loaf.—The quantity of wheat imported from America into the United Kingdom, as ascertained by the returns just published by order of the House of Commons, during the past year, was 397,177 cwts.—The ceremony opening the Namur and Liege railway from Namur to Charleroy took place on Sunday. The King and Queen of the Belgians were present.—A plan will shortly be adopted by which Chelsea and Kilmainham out-pensioners will be paid weekly instead of quarterly as at present.—Sir John Pirie, Mr. W. Attwood, and a deputation from the General Steam Navigation Company, had an interview with the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Thursday morning in Downing-street.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.—LEICESTER, JULY 31.

(Before the Lord Chief Baron.)

DARING CASE OF SACRILEGE.—Wiliam Bassett and Thomas and William Garlick were charged with breaking open a vault in St. Mary's church, Great Bowden, in Northamptonshire, on the 17th of May last, and stealing a lead coffin, the property of the representatives of Richard Farrer, deceased. Joseph Oakley and George Cooke were charged with receiving the same, knowing it to have been stolen. Mr. Wing conducted the prosecution. Mr. Miller defended Oakley and the Garlicks. Bassett was defended by Mr. Macaulay. It appeared that the prisoners Bassett and the Garlicks were employed in May last, by the churchwardens of the above church, to take up a stone in the floor, in doing which some planks which were placed over vaults beneath gave way, and exposed some leaden coffins to view. The prisoners removed several pieces of lead in burrows to the gas works in Market Harborough, where it was melted down with the connivance of the two latter prisoners, having previously offered it for sale without their being able to obtain a purchaser, upon which occasion they say that they had dug it out of the earth, but afterwards acknowledged, that it was part of a leaden coffin which they had found, but there was not even bones in it, and they knew by the breastplate that it had been buried 140 years. They said they could get a coffin for nothing, and would find any one to bury it. Subsequently one of the Garlicks, alluding to the contents of the coffin, said it was a fine old wench. Suspicion having been excited in the neighbourhood, the prisoners set off a quantity of the lead at new Hall, and agreed deed of the lead stolen from the coffins. A similar attempt had also been made upon a vault belonging to an old family of the name of Harpur, but the prisoners had not succeeded in their object. A great deal of circumstantial evidence was given, which clearly proved the guilt of all the prisoners, and the jury, without hesitation, gave their verdict accordingly. The Lord Chief Baron sentenced them all to be imprisoned twelve months at hard labour.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.—DURHAM, JULY 29.

(Before Mr. Justice Wightman.)

William Ferry, aged 37, was indicted for the wilful murder of his wife, at Monkwearmouth, by striking and bruising her on the head with a poker. Mr. Udall conducted the prosecution. The prisoner was not defended by counsel. On being called upon to plead, and asked in the usual form whether he was guilty or not guilty, the prisoner held up his hands, and addressing the court with an expression of extreme earnestness said, "Sorry am I that I did it, and I never will forget it as long as I live, but I had not my senses about me at the time. I loved her too well, and always did the best I could for her and my family. Sorry am I that I did it!"—Mr. Udall stated the case for the prosecution, and said that the principal question for the jury to try regarded the state of mind of the prisoner at the time the act was committed. If they thought that he was not at that time able to distinguish right from wrong, it would be their duty to acquit him.—It will be remembered, from the particulars of the case, which appeared in this paper at the time of the occurrence, that the prisoner had escaped from a lunatic asylum, and, in what was considered a lucid interval, murdered his wife and daughter in bed. The poor maniac, it appeared, after destroying them, caught up his son a boy about eight years old, but after loosing at him for a few moments as if in doubt what he should do, flung him from him saying, "Nay, I'll not kill thee, thy name is William."—Evidence was adduced to show the state of the prisoner's mind, and his lordship having summed up, the jury, without hesitation, brought in a verdict of "Not Guilty" on the ground of insanity. The prisoner will, therefore, be kept in close custody during her Majesty's pleasure.

FOLKESTONE HARBOUR, SHOWING THE PASSAGE OF A PACKET FROM BOULOGNE.

GRAND BANQUET IN THE SOUTH-EASTERN PAVILION TO CELEBRATE THE OPENING OF THE "SIX HOUR" PASSAGE FROM LONDON TO BOULOGNE.

CELEBRATION OF THE FIRST "SIX-HOUR" PASSAGE FROM LONDON TO BOULOGNE.

The extension of a railway is, under ordinary circumstances, an epoch in the history of civilisation; but, when, as in the case we have here celebrated, its extension comprehends, not merely the bringing a few insulated towns into closer neighbourhood, but has the further effect of conjoining two mighty nations, and making their common interests identical, it becomes an event so great in its consequences, that the happiness of ages and generations—their political peace and their commercial prosperity—seems to be more than promised in its accomplishment. Let any one, ignorant of the civilising power of a railway on a country or countries, make, as we have recently done, the journey from London to Folkestone or Dover—thence to Boulogne or Calais—and he will have, in the improving character of all the intervening places, a remarkable instance of its almost creative energy. The South-Eastern Railway, for two thirds of its course, traverses what might almost be called a new country: for the vale of Tunbridge, the weald of Kent, and the prairies of Romney Marsh are as absolutely separated from the ordinary course of travelled life—the world, its pleasures and adventures—as the steppes of Tartary or the oases of Arabia. Yet this has not arisen from any want in those districts of scenes of commercial interest or natural beauty, for they are of great value both in their industrial and local aspects. In the vales our hops are grown; in the weald and the marsh districts the breeding of the famous Southdown sheep is carried to a greater extent than in any other part of the kingdom. Numerous villages, the centres of local handicraft operations, and a vast number of noble rendences, y-las folis chiteaux—some grey with hard antiquity, and others aiming in the brightness of a recent patent—epitomising in a single glance the history of Britain, are scattered over the fair face of the landscape. The inhabitants of these places were once segregated from each other, fearful of intercourse, and hostile to its extension, strangers to London and to each other, and to a man sworn enemies of their near neighbours the French; but now, the railroad—"the soldier of society," the iron missionary—has banded town to town and kingdom to kingdom in one great fraternity, and by becoming, as it were, the mediator of human prejudices, has so far succeeded, in its purpose as already to have made the class interests of many towns the common interest of all. The rude fishermen of Folkestone, the sturdy farmers of Ashford, the aristocracy of Tunbridge, the peasantry of Edenbridge, the high churchmen of Hever, of Headcorn, of Chiddingstone, and, we may now add, the people "du Nord," once separate, each party dwelling in an isolation of its own, is now forced to mingle, to exchange opinions, to exchange produce, and the consequence is, that provincialism is gone, or going, and as is London so is Folkestone, and, as universal man should be, so are the once divided and consequently ignorant and impoverished neighbours of the line. But great as are these consequences, and they are common to railways, they sink to nothing in comparison of the benefits the line may be expected to confer on the united nations—on England and on France. The time was when our John Lackland won for the British monarchy the perpetual dominion of the Channel, and a proud and necessary thing it was to rule the narrow seas; but it was nevertheless a dominion supported by blood, and its maintenance has continued to this day to be a source of bitterness, of strife, of hatred and opposition with the northern nations. This coerced sovereignty the "rail" and its co-operating marine is resolved to administer and to secure by converting the highway of death into a "path of peace," and in making the "downs" a quiet and pleasant conveyance between France and England. That which Nelson upheld at the expense of fleets, and which Bonaparte attempted to achieve at the cost of millions of men and money, will now be indestructibly accomplished by merely facilitating to its utmost bounds the social intercourse of the two nations.

The first great step to be attained in this movement is the carriage of a mail bag from Paris to London in twelve hours; but till the rails are laid in the direct line from Boulogne to Amiens, and thence to Paris, it has been an object with the English and French authorities to reduce the transit from thirty-six to twenty hours, by the means of conveyance now in ordinary use; and we are proud to say that on Tuesday last, on the opening of Folkestone harbour, it was so nearly accomplished as to leave no doubt of the ultimate success of the experiment. The journey from Paris to Boulogne by coach was made in rather more than twenty hours; from Boulogne to Folkestone, by steam-boat, against a heavy sea, in three hours; and from Folkestone to London, by rail, in three hours more, making the rough total, with stoppages, twenty seven hours; a saving of nine hours on the most recent time, and upwards of twenty on the old route through Calais to Dover, and thence by coach to London.

The solution of this great problem was fixed for Tuesday last, with a view to doing honour to the grand opening of Folkestone Harbour, which was then for the first time used for regular steam-packet communication with Boulogne. On that auspicious occasion the mayor and corporation of Folkestone, and the directors of the South-Eastern Railway Company, gave a public banquet and other festivities to their friends from both sides of the channel. The town, the cliffs, the shingle, and the piers of the harbour were crowded with well-dressed visitors, who seemed to take deep interest in the proceedings. The Church-hill, the breakwater, and the vessels in the harbour were profusely decorated with flags, as were the gables and windows of the fishermen's houses. On the cliff near the Church-rocks, on the town bench, and on the end of the pier, were placed well-served parks of artillery, and these were also surrounded by streamers and signals of all nations. The day being fine, and the scenery of the town and neighbourhood being of the most romantic beauty, the effect of these festive arrangements was very fine. At half-past twelve o'clock the City of Boulogne steamer, gaily dressed with streamers, and having at her mainmast head the union jack and the tricolour tied together, came in from the sea, and bore past the town in gallant style, at the same time firing a grand salute, which was returned with a vast addition of sound from the guns on shore. This boat had left Boulogne with the Paris mail at half-past nine o'clock, and had on board M. Adam, the patriotic mayor of Boulogne, the distinguished civic and government officers of the same place, and two English gentlemen, who, proud of the occasion, had sought permission to accompany the "bags." At this moment the Sir William Wallace, with 74 passengers, left the harbour amid the cheers of the company, the "firing" of the church bells, and a cannonade from the pier head. On clearing the harbour, she steered for a minute in the direction of the City of Boulogne, from whom she received a salute and the lively salutations of the French company, and then, "steam up," took a straight course for Boulogne, and, being a fast and light sailer, was speedily out of sight. The City of Boulogne then came into the harbour, the band on board playing the "Parisienne," and the company uncovered. The embarkation having been accomplished, the mayor and his friends were conducted by Mr. Baxendale and Mr. Cubitt, the chairman and engineer of the line, to the mayor and authorities of Folkestone, who received them with the heartiness of a sailor's welcome. A splendid marquee had been prepared for them at the foot of the pier, where the mayor of Boulogne held a levee. Half an hour afterwards it was determined, as many of the gentlemen had never seen an English railway, that the party should go by a special train to Ashford, to which place they were conducted by Mr. Lewis Cubitt. At Ashford they were met by the down train from London, "hooked on," and returned smoothly and rapidly to the terminus. During this journey they were loud in their admiration of the workmanship of the line; and as small things illustrate great, we may mention that the flexible gas tubes at Ashford, the hinges of the carriage doors, and the furniture of the "first-class" carriages, were subjects of special commendation. At the moment of their return to Folkestone the Emerald arrived from Boulogne with 142 passengers.

The repast, to which nearly 200 persons sat down at four o'clock, was in a very excellent style. The chair was taken by the Mayor of Folkestone, supported on his right hand by Mr. Baxendale, and on his left by M. Adam, the Mayor of Boulogne. The company, in addition to the good things placed on the table, were entertained by a musical band from Boulogne, which, during the breakfast, played some of the national airs of England and France. The Mayor of Boulogne gave the first toast, viz., "The health of her Majesty Queen Victoria," which was drunk with the honours. The Mayor of Folkestone then proposed "The health of his Majesty Louis Philippe," which was also received with cheers, and drunk with all the honours. On the health of "the Mayor of Boulogne" being drunk, M. Adam, in returning thanks, detailed the history of the projected railroad from Paris to Boulogne through the French Chambers, and repudiated all intention of injuring Calais by supporting a communication between Boulogne and Folkestone. There was sufficient traffic for both ports, and enough to render the competition of the one no injury to the other. The festivities were not over till a late hour, and it was nearly midnight before the steamer conveyed the French guests back to Boulogne.

CELEBRATED PAS DE DEUX DANCED ON THE OCCASION OF HER MAJESTY'S STATE VISIT TO THE OPERA.

A lovely pair:—if yet a third appear'd,
It were a new decision for the shepherd.—Old Play.

"Ce n'est que le premier pas qui coute," is an old saying; but never did a first step cost a poor manager more trouble to arrange than the above saltatory duetto concertante between two of the most accomplished dansatrici in the world. Perrot, the composer of the pas, and Mr. Lumley, the entrepreneur, were for several days au désespoir of affording her Majesty the promised treat of seeing Cerito and Elsler together, until it was luckily resolved upon that, as neither would "lead off," they should together "make the assault of Beauty!" This arrangement pleased the rival Graces, and accordingly they stepped forth ensemble, "each one so beautiful, so rare," that if there were a mode of singlefying the vision as there is of doubling it, we could safely swear that Venus' self was present in the beautiful picture before us. To determine, or attempt to determine, between their respective merits as danseuses would be invidious and useless. Each has her own peculiar style, totally unapproachable by the other—"each full of grace and rivalry of charm!" Elssler, perhaps, is more finished of the two in minor details; but Cerito has more breadth and freedom, and seems always to dance, as a bird sometimes appears to fly, in the abstract enjoyment of the exercise. The undulating air is her beloved element, and she revels in it with a Sapphic enthusiasm. Moore's beautiful contrast between Lesbia and Norah Creina will aptly illustrate our notion of the difference between the personal appearance and style of these "yet rivals to each other." The terms "refined," "finished," "exquisitely-wrought," &c., may all, with the severest justice, be applied to the performance of the first executive dancer in Europe, Fanny Elssler; but the bard's song, just alluded to, supplies us with epithets and phrases that would incline one to think he had a Cerito in his "mind's eye" when he talks of "unexpected light surprising," and "floating wild as mountain breezes." To be serious, such a pas de deux was never witnessed before in the memory of the oldest opera frequenter.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

On Thursday evening a new comedy, entitled "Moonshine," was produced at this house for the first time. It is said to be the production of a lady closely allied to our highest aristocracy. The plot is extremely simple, and merely turns, on the one part, upon an elderly lady's anxiety to get her two daughters well married, that is, richly; and on the other, the circumstance of two brothers changing names, in order that the elder, passing for the younger, may, if possible, find a woman who can love him for himself alone. Various characters of different denominations and degrees are introduced (amongst whom not the least amusing are a Mr. de Batenbille (Farren), a speechmaking member of Parliament) and a Mrs. Tramper Turnour, who has "travell'd far and seen much." Baron Munchausen was a fool to her. After a variety of adventures and mishaps, everybody is made happy according to true poetic justice, and for once "the course of true love" is allowed to "run smooth." This dramatic piece (for it is not a legitimate comedy) is more indebted to its expression than comprehension—to its playful dialogue rather than design—to its occasional caricatures of human life rather than correct portraiture of "the manners that be."

Considerable disapprobation was expressed throughout the piece, particularly in the fourth act, when Mr. Webster came forward and appealed to English generosity. This had the desired effect for awhile, but at last the dissentients prevailed; for although Farren came on to announce the piece for repetition, he was obliged to depart in dumb show. We will not enter into details, but there are many passages in this comedy (?) below the standard of the broadest farce, while the chief incidents are only those of a melodrama. The title of the piece, "Moonshine," was most ominous.

SCENE FROM THE NEW COMEDY OF "MOONSHINE."—THE PIC-NIC AT ALBANO. DE BATENBILLE ADDRESSING THE SPEAKER PRO TEM.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

BIRTHPLACE OF BISHOP LATIMER.

The secluded village of Thurcaston, which is situated on the outskirts of Charnwood Forest, and close to Bradgate-park, formerly the residence of Lady Jane Grey, but now in ruins, is about five miles north of Leicester. It is celebrated as the birthplace of Hugh Latimer, Bishop of Worcester, who was burnt alive at Oxford, in 1555, in the reign of Queen Mary, in defence of the tenets of the Reformed Church of England. The house in which he was born (of which we annex a representation) is still standing. It is now occupied by a publican and blacksmith; the front of it has lately been modernised, but the west view of it, which the engraving represents, has been but little altered since the time the father of Hugh Latimer occupied it as a yeoman, and "milked thirty kine." Except the modern parts of it, it is entirely of wood work, and joined together by wooden pins, which protrude considerably from the walls. There are no relics about the house commemorative of its having been possessed by the father of Bishop Latimer. A short time since a curious specimen of petrified oak was discovered in the paved yard at the back of the house, and purchased by Mr. Brown, a bookseller, at Leicester.

But if there is no other memorial of this blessed martyr than the house itself on that site, a very interesting memento exists in the church at Thurcaston, viz., the very font in which Hugh Latimer was baptized, and which is not more to be admired for being the instrument from which he arose to be a valiant and faithful defender of the true church of Christ, than for its architectural beauties. It appears to be about the age of King Edward I., but the south porch and doorway of the church are in the Norman style; other parts are still later, and the east window is a fine specimen of the time of Henry VIII.; but the chancel is greatly disfigured by a low ceiling of plaster, by which some modern architectural empiric has concealed an oak one, in unison with the other parts of the church, and which ought, if good taste be consulted, to be immediately removed.

In the rectory house is a painting of Latimer, in the style of Holbein, which has been bequeathed as an heirloom.

But the great desideratum of Thurcaston church is a monumental memorial to commemorate the birthplace of this noble champion of the Protestant religion, and whose memorable words, when he was tied to the stake, have been so signally verified—"Be of good cheer, brother Ridley, we shall this day kindle such a torch in England as, I trust in God, shall never be extinguished." We call the attention of our Protestant friends to this point, in the hope that some means will be adopted to perpetuate the memory of Bishop Latimer in the parish wherein he was born, and in the church in which he was baptized.

Besides this interesting fact connected with the village of Thurcaston, the picturesque and romantic situation of it will amply repay the expense and fatigue of even a distant traveller; for it is one of the loveliest spots in Leicestershire, and might vie with the more celebrated views of Derbyshire or Wales.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S HARP.

This beautiful Welsh triple harp has been made expressly for his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, by Mr. Bassett Jones, of Cardiff; and it was submitted to her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, at Buckingham Palace, on the evening of the 27th ult., by the Rev. Mr. Price, vicar of Cwmdu, one of the most eminent antiquaries of Wales. The Queen was graciously pleased to permit the Prince of Wales to accept the present; and two Welsh harpers, who attended by the Royal command, performed upon the beautiful instrument. Mr. Price also explained to her Majesty and the Prince the peculiar construction of the harp: it is in the ancient and picturesque form of the national instrument of the principality; stands about six feet high; it is elaborately carved in solid wood, the base of the pillar being supported by the leek, entwined with mistletoe and oak leaves; a wreath of oak leaves goes up the pillar, which terminates in the Prince of Wales's plume, supported by sprays of oak, whence depend three labels, on which are carved, in antique characters, "Albert, Tywysawc Cymru" (or Albert, Prince of Wales). On the side of the comb of the harp is likewise carved, in old characters, the following line from one of the Welsh bards:—"Iaith enaid ar ei thannau" (the language of the soul is on its strings). On the sounding-board are emblazoned the arms of Wales, four lions passant, or, and gules counterchanged, with the red dragon of Wales supporting the shield, and the coronet and plume of the Prince of Wales. Her Majesty, while examining the harp, observed to Mr. Price that she was not a stranger to the tones of the Welsh harp, having heard during her visit to the principality, at the great national festivity it of the Eisteddfod, in 1832. The harpers afterwards performed both on the Prince of Wales's harp and also on their own instruments several of the finest old Welsh melodies, singly and in duets, with which the royal party were much gratified. On the following day the harpers were presented with £20 by her Majesty's command, in testimony of her approbation. They were attired in the picturesque costume of their country, with the silver harp and medals gained in the various trials of skill in which they had been engaged.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE;
OR
THE SISTERS.
A ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.
By HENRY COCKTON,
AUTHOR OF "VALENTINE VOX," "STANLEY THORN," ETC.

CHAPTER XIX.
THE RIVALS.

WHAT Sir Arthur was thought[illegible] old waiter had fled at the[illegible] with not a decent[illegible] of hair, who rolled upon the[illegible] of hats to watch the lady hanging on Caroline had brought him. He felt that he had cruelly wronged her; he feared that she would despise him; and these thoughts were not happy. Even now she did not look up with an casual regard[illegible]; and as these were the roots of a thousand thoughts which branched forth in every direction to shut out the light of hope, the idea of his being able to effect a reconciliation appeared to be fairly indeed. His pride must now be seen to inspire her, by virtue or affection, generosity, and kindness, with the highest opinion of him as a man, and hence the disorder of having proved himself to be just the reverse, deceitful and desperately mean, terrified him almost beyond endurance.

In the morning, however while breakfasting alone, for Caroline would not design to make her appearance, it struck him that if he were at once to release Darnley and invite him to dine there as usual that day, it would prove to her at least that all his doubts had been removed, and perhaps tend to induce her to forgive him.

Having conceived this plan he felt greatly relieved and resolving to adopt it—for he was then in reality more infatuated than ever—he proceeded to his bankers, drew the money that was required, and while at work down to the Fleet

As he entered he saw Darnley pacing the room, with compressed lips and overhanging brows but as he approached him calmly and offered his hand, Darnley's features in some degree relaxed, although he still felt sorely to look angry.

"Mr. Darnley" said Sir Arthur, in a conciliating tone, "I yesterday insulted you here.

"You did, Sir Arthur Cleveland; you called me a villain; a villain I am not; I may be unfortunate but I am not a villain."

"I know it—I feel it—I am sure of it—forgive me. I will offer every apology in my power. I know not what I was saying, I was seized with a paroxysm of folly, the devil was in me, and drove me almost mad."

"You spoke of Lady Cleveland—"

"I did—I know I did—and deeply, I regret it."

"Let me assure you, Sir Arthur, that your motives for visiting me were as pure—"

I was, and, Darnley—I know but they were. But just listen to me for one moment. I happened to see her come into this place, and being utterly unable to conceive what she could want to come here for, I followed her. Her agitation, nervousness, and confusion were also but left, to see if any one were here whom I knew; and as you were the first person I saw, my suspicions instantly aroused. Jealousy once more was born within me, I knew no reason to feel pleased than offended. But I wish," he added, leaving Sir Arthur to his room, "you would either not be not seeing another word about it."

"Well, well, let it drop. But I have not cause to be offended"—we must turn to another point more. Why did you not let me know that you were here?"

"That I knew—I knew it not—well, and my object in stating these things is not to justify my conduct, but to explain to you the feelings by which I was prompted."

"I know it—I am concerned, Sir Arthur, I beg you will not say another word on the subject. I am satisfied as matters—why Lady Cleveland came here. It seemed here [illegible] many man would have done so; the only thing which galled me was the idea of being considered, by one whose esteem I have ever been most anxious to cultivate, a villain, and therefore I am glad that my suspicions have been removed. I have no more reason to feel pleased than offended. But I wish," he added, leaning Sir Arthur to his room, "you would either not be not seeing another word about it."

"Well, well, let it drop. But I have not cause to be offended"—we must turn to another point more. Why did you not let me know that you were here?"

"That I knew—I know it not—well, and my object in stating these things is not to justify my conduct, but to explain to you the feelings by which I was prompted."

"I know it—I am concerned, Sir Arthur, I beg you will not say another word on the subject. I am satisfied as matters—why Lady Cleveland came here. It seemed here [illegible] many man would have done so; the only thing which galled me was the idea of being considered, by one whose esteem I have ever been most anxious to cultivate, a villain, and therefore I am glad that my suspicions have been removed. I have no more reason to feel pleased than offended. But I wish," he added, leaning Sir Arthur to his room, "you would either not be not seeing another word about it."

"Well, well, let it drop. But I have not cause to be offended"—we must turn to another point more. Why did you not let me know that you were here?"

"Solely, as I explained to Lady Cleveland, who strongly urged me to let you know—solely because I was apprehensive of losing your friendship."

"Why what a mean opinion you must have had of me, Darnley, to imagine that I should cease to be friendly, because you required the assistance of a friend."

"In a place of this description, Sir Arthur, friendship is purchased; but as a name when pecuniary assistance is needed, and hence there are but few men here who entertain a very exalted idea of its virtue."

"I [illegible] you ought not to have been so quickly insinuated! You are not a gnat-hor[illegible]

"Thank Heaven, I am not, but throughout the world, Sir Arthur, there are few who can stand that test. In every sphere, from the highest to the lowest, man in general look with contempt upon those who require their aid. Then the rich, instead of coming to the friend who wishes to borrow his money, pay on the mechanic. The tradesman will treat and toast his friend so long as he believes him to be wealthy; but let that friend ask for the [illegible] pounds, and he will be found fearless and beaten no more."

"I [illegible] you what, Darnley, if you remain any longer here, you will be utterly unfit for [illegible] secret out of the apothecaries. I see that you are not to be trusted, and [illegible] I mean to stay. I have enough I think on my pocket to settle this little affair, if I [illegible] it not up to your expectations, what is the amount?"

"Sir Arthur, I really cannot think of borrowing it of you."

"Why not?"

"I shall be out in a day or two."

"I, have you out to-day! Now, what is the amount?"

"Really, Sir Arthur, I wish you would excuse me for not saying the matter."

"I will oblige you in anything but that. Can you not tell me the amount?"

"The amount is three hundred; but you place me in so humiliating a position, that, upon my honour—"

"Now, do not be simple! Do you think that I should hesitate to borrow three hundred of you, if I stood in [illegible] No! Here is the money."

"Really, I do not like to take it."

"You shall, upon my honour, Darnley! I'll not go home without you. Here are six fifties. Now go at once and settle this business, and don't be long about it."

"Well, I'll take the money, because I'll not offend you; but I don't exactly know the debt on which I shall be able to redeem it."

"[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

LAST NIGHT BUT ONE OF THE SEASON.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Under MANCINI respectfully informs the Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public, that his BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY next, August 10th, 1843, when will be performed, last time, Bellini's celebrated Opera, I PURITANI. Elvira, Mdme. Grisi; Arturo Sig. Mario; Riccardo, Sig. Tamburini; Giorgio, Sig. Lablache.—The new PAS DE DEUX (composed expressly for M. Perrot), which Mdme. Fanny Essler and Carlotta Grisi, and M. M. Perrot and Saint Leon will appear. Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box Office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; to commence at half-past Seven o'clock.

ONLY ONE IN THE WORLD.

GLACIARIUM and FROZEN LAKE.—The Artificial Ice, at the Baker-street Bazaar, seems to increase with the summer temperature its virtue of attracting vast numbers of distinguished visitors to witness the excellent skating on the Frozen Lake, the beautiful Panorama of Lucerne, which, when lighted, and is in the evening, and enlivened with choice music is indeed a delightful cool resort Admittance 1s

THE CHINESE COLLECTION, HYDE PARK CORNER.—

This unique collection consists of objects exclusively Chinese, and surpasses in extent and grandeur any similar display in the known world. The spacious saloon is 228 feet in length, and is crowded with rare and interesting specimens of every kind. The collection embraces upwards of sixty figures as large as life, portraits from nature, appropriately attired in their native costume, from the mandarin of the highest rank to the wandering mendicant; also many thousand specimens in natural history and miscellaneous curiosities, the whole forming a perfect museum, manners and social life at once presented to the eye. Admission One Shilling. Open from Ten till Ten.—Admittance, 2s. 6d.; Children under Twelve years of age, 1s.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—CARTOONS of RAPHAEL.—The Series of Original Cartoon Drawings (in Sepia) by Holmes, which were executed for the well-known Engravings of these Cartoons, are now exhibiting, with other additions to the numerous works, both of Art and Science, in this Institution. The Lectures of Dr. Ryan, Professor Sachsehöffer, and Mr. Goddard, are at Twelve, Two, a Quarter to Three, and Five daily, and at Eight o'clock in the evenings. In these Lectures Agricultural Chemistry and every recent Scientific Discovery is explained in a familiar manner. The Colossal Electrical Machine New Microscope (by Cary), Dissolving Views, Diver and Diving Bell, &c. &c. Open Mornings and Evenings, except Saturday Evening. Admission, One Shilling. Schools, Half-price

WILSON'S SCOTTISH ENTERTAINMENTS.—LAST BUT ONE.—At the Music Hall, STORE STREET, on MONDAY Evening, 7th August, at Eight o'clock, MR. ALEXANDER WILSON, Vocalist, will give his last but one season Songs: Welcome Royal Highness to Auld Reekie—Hallowe'en—Meg over the Hills until I die more—Wha's the Fee—Jenny Dang the Weaver—Wha'll be King but Charlie?—Can ye ply Arbolo?—Louis, ye mann gae hame Charlie is my darling.—Part II.—Johnnie Cope—The Women are a' gane mad—Allister M'Allister—Wae's me for Prince Charlie—There was a Bonnie Maiden—The M'Donald's Lament. Theodore, Mr. Alexander. Mr. Isaac HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS.—The LAST MORNING ENTERTAINMENT for the season will be on TUESDAY next, August 8th, at Three o'clock.

BUTCHERS' CHARITABLE INSTITUTION.—A FANCY FAIR and FETE CHAMPETRE, and also the WEST LONDON FLORICULTURAL EXHIBITION for Prizes of Silver Cups and Medals, will be held in the Grounds of the ALMS HOUSES, Walham Green, Fulham, in aid of the BUILDING FUND, on TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY next. Military and quadrille bands will attend, and there will be a regular succession of novel, attractive and interesting amusements. The gates will be opened each day at Twelve o'clock precisely. Admission 1s

4, Dyer's-buildings, Holborn. JAMES NEEB, Secretary.

THE ORPHAN FAMILY of the late Mr. E. W. ELTON.—

A Committee is formed for the purpose of raising a BENEFIT for the most fatherless and motherless CHILDREN of Mr W ELTON, late of the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, a leader in the fatal wreck of the Pegasus. The Committee will be announced as soon as possible, in the mean time offers of professional service on the occasion will be gratefully received, as well as subscriptions in money, by 1, Devonshire-terrace, New-road. CHARLES DICKENS, Chairman.

COMMITTEE.

W. H. Ainsworth, Esq.	T. Greenwood, Esq.	Kenny Meadows, Esq.
H. Allen, Esq.	J. C. Harley Esq.	B. W. Procter, Esq
Robert Bell, Esq.	H. Hassell, Esq.	Shirley Brooks, Esq.
W. B. Bernard, Esq.	Thomas Hood, Esq.	T. J. Serle, Esq.
James Bernard, Esq.	D. Jerrold, Esq.	F. Stone, Esq.
J. B. Buckstone, Esq.	Robert Keeley, Esq.	C. Stanfield, Esq., R.A.
John Cooper, Esq.	Mark Lemon, Esq.	Mr. Sergeant Talfourd.
George Cruikshank, Esq.	C. Lamb Kenney, Esq., A.R.A.	Benjamin Webster, Esq.
J. Dillon, Esq.	T. Landseer, Esq.	Charles Young, Esq.
W. Farren, Esq.	Edward Leman, Esq., R.A.	Charles Zachary, Esq.
John Forster, Esq.	Charles Mathews, Esq.

TREASURER.—R. B. PEAKE. SECRETARY R. R. M'Ian.

Subscriptions already received will be duly announced. Lists are also open at the Freemasons' Tavern, and at the banking-houses of Messrs. Coutts and Co., and Sir Claude Scott and Co.

THE METROPOLITAN LOAN COMPANY.

Offices, 1, Craven street, Strand, London.—Loans are advanced by this Company, to respectable persons on the security of responsible householders, in sums of £10 10s., £15, £21, £31 10s., £42, £63, and £105, on the system of the Equitable Loan Societies, of 5s. weekly, at 7½ per cent., and of 50 weeks, at 5 per cent., to be repaid by weekly instalments. Forms of application, and every information, may be had at the Offices, where all persons who are open to receive an even till three o'clock. If the securities are approved, the loan is granted without delay. Large amounts are granted by the Company upon special agreements with the Directors.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

No. 1, Chatham-place, Blackfriars-road, London. Established January, 1819.

PRESIDENT—SIR JAMES RIVETT CARNAC, Bart., Rose Cliff, Lymington.

Vice-Presidents—The Right Hon. Lord Sondes, and the Right Twelve Directors.

FACILITIES are offered by this long-established Society to suit the views and the means of every class of assurers. Premiums are received yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly, at the option of an increasing or decreasing scale. Or one-half only of the usual rate, with interest on the remainder, will be received for five or seven years, the other half to be paid at the convenient option of the assured. The whole of the profits are appropriated to the profits realised. A liberal commutation is allowed to Solicitors and Agents.

DAVID FOGGO, Secretary.

N.B.—Agents are wanted in towns where none have been yet appointed.

THE VAUXHALL HOGARTHS.—The celebrated Pictures painted by Wm. Hogarth in 1751 for Vauxhall Gardens (lately cleaned and restored by F. GWENNAP, 21, Tichborne-street, Piccadilly) will remain with him for the inspection of the curious but one week longer: also the Gold Admission Medal presented to Hogarth by Jonathan Tyers, then owner of the gardens.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.—Wanted, a Respectable YOUTH, as an APPRENTICE to the Grocery and Italian business, at the West End of town. A premium required. Address Mr. Yeo, 2, Upper Exton-street, Grosvenor-place.

A WATCH, AS A GIFT, from its particular properties, is the most appropriate of all presents. [illegible] Watchmaker to the Admiralty, has on sale a great variety of Watches, suitable for all classes. The elegant gold horizontal watches, at £7 each, are admirably adapted for ladies and gentlemen.—Read Jones's Sketch of Watch Work, sent free for a 30 stamp KITCHEN FURNITURE.—Families Furnishing are solicited to inspect the following low prices of articles of the best manufacture:—Good stove, with 2 boilers, 18s.; ditto, with 3 boilers, 25s.; ditto, with 4 boilers, 30s.; ditto, with iron fenders, 8s. 6d.; fire irons, 3s. 6d.; sets of six dish covers, 8s. 6d.; and every article 30 per cent. cheaper than usual prices, at R. and J. SLACK'S Ironmongery Warehouse, 336, Strand (facing Somerset house.

HAIR RESTORED, its fall prevented, its growth increased and beautified.—Also whiskers produced without fear of failure even in early youth, by COLWELL'S POMADE, which time and experience have proved to be the only true specific for these necessary adornments. It needs but one trial to prove these extraordinary assertions. Sold at Colwell's Perfumery Depot, Oxford street; Smyth and Sapsley, 157 New Bond-street; Sawyer and Moore, 76 Fleet-street, and Regent-circus, Piccadilly, 220, Strand, and by all wholesale dealers in London; and by H. Colwell, Belvedere place, Southwark, by whom all letters and Post office orders for 4s. will be attended to, and a supply, with testimonials, sent free, to any part of the United Kingdom.

NEW LIFE PRESERVERS.—COX'S PATENT SWIMMING STOCKINGS, or PROPELLING LIFE PRESERVERS (enabling persons to progress in water without the aid of the hands) may now be had of Mr. EDWARD BAX, No. 1, Gresham-place, Basinghall-street, and of Messrs. HARRADINE and AYLEN, North Bridge, Edinburgh, at 12s. 6d. per pair

SELLING OFF REFIRING FROM BUSINESS.—GREAT SALE OF SILKS, SHAWLS, LINEN DRAPERY, HOSIERY, LACE, GLOVES, RIBBONS, and FANCY GOODS.—W. EDGINTON, 37, Piccadilly, respectfully announces to the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in general, that in consequence of his intention to retire from business, he purposes offering the whole of his valuable and extensive stock at a considerable reduction from the original cost, for ready money, which consists of rich Brocaded Moire Glaces, and Striped Silks and Satins, Bohemienne, French Muslin, Muslin de Laines, Linens, Shirting, Shawls, Lace and Valenciennes Laces, French Bonnets, Flowers, together with an immense variety of Fancy Goods, which have been purchased in the first British and Foreign markets for cash, and selected with the greatest care, ladies and families may make their purchases with unlimited confidence, and under the most advantageous circumstances.—37, Piccadilly, opposite St. James's Church.

The Lease and Fixtures to be disposed of.

REMOVAL and SALE.—WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty, established 150 years, 3, Burlington-arcade.—W. and Son will REMOVE to more convenient premises in [illegible] next year. In the meantime they have reduced their Stock of Chronometers and Watches, in order that it may be entirely cleared off before the time of removal. The Stock consists of every description of superior Chronometers and Watches, from the most expensive to the lowest, and warranted, at half their original cost. Also the compensated dupatex Watches, or the principle of which Messrs. Webster and Son have had the exclusive use for the last three years in succession. Their detached lever Watches are of the first quality, and will bear comparison in performance and elegance with any manufactured, and the prices greatly reduced. A splendid selection of foreign Watches, with the ornamental and lever escapements, of very superior manufacture, examined under their personal attention, and at prices which, for the quality, have never been offered to the public. Such an opportunity may never again occur for so large a selection submitted for inspection. Post letters will meet with immediate attention.—WEBSTER and SON, 3, Burlington-arcade.

Next Friday, price 5s.,

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION successfully treated with Naphtha. By JOHN HASTINGS, M.D., Senior Physician to the Blenheim-street Free Dispensary. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes street, Soho.

This day is published, in 2 vols. 8vo, price £3, a new edition of

MR. YARRELL'S HISTORY of BRITISH FISHES.—

"The second edition contains thirty-seven new species not included in the first edition, the whole number being now two hundred and sixty-three. Twenty-seven fishes have been newly engraved, and thirty-four new vignettes have been added. The work now contains nearly five hundred woodcuts."

JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

Just ready, in one vol. 8vo., pp. 548, price 12s.,

SELECTIONS, from the WRITINGS of the late J. SYDNEY TAYLOR, A.M., Barrister-at-law (with a Brief Sketch of his Life), made under direction of a committee appointed by the public meeting, held Feb. 9, 1842.

"On this rock we stand, on the immovable basis of Christian principle we would build the whole fabric of legislation, which regards the public morals."—(p. 318.)

London: CHARLES GILPIN, 5, Bishopsgate street-without.

COMPLETION of TYAS'S ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE.—

The first beautiful Edition of the entire WORKS of SHAKSPERE, profusely illustrated with engravings on wood, designed by KENNY MEADOWS, in ten dey (July 31st) completed, by the publication of part 25, costs only a LIFE of the AUTHOR, by BARRY CORNWALL. Two volumes, royal 8vo, and forty-one numbers, price £2 2s. Brown The publisher will hold any sets sent to him, in for finish unexecuted cloth cases expressly constructed, for 7s. the set of three volumes. Single volumes 2s. 6d.

 Subscribers are recommended to make up their sets immediately, many of the parts being nearly out of print. R. TYAS, 8, Paternoster-row.

DR. CULVERWELL'S HAND-BOOKS FOR INVALIDS.

One shilling each, by post 1s. 6d.,

ON COMPLAINTS of the BLADDER, GRAVEL, and other urinary derangements, with nineteen engravings. Also,

ON CONSTIPATION, HÆMORRHOIDS, and other disorders of the bowels, with twenty-six engravings.

To be had of SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street Strand. At home daily from ten till three.

TRAVELLING ATLAS.

Bound in roan, with a tuck, price 16s.,

A POCKET TRAVELLING ATLAS of the English Counties,

With all the Coach and Rail Roads accurately laid down and coloured, corrected to the present time. Engraved on steel, by post 12s. 6d.,

A Tabl beautiful Atlas we have seen for size, portability, and clear engraving. * * The Maps are quarto size, but fold in the pocket, so that the whole, when closed, form a moderate sized quarto volume, bound, in a Spanish morocco cover, exactly the size, without being too bulky for the pocket of a great coat."—Westminster Review.

CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

A POSTHUMOUS NOVEL, by LE SAGE.

THE STORY TELLER, for August, price 1s., Edited by ROBERT BELL, Esq. amongst a variety of interesting papers, will contain a POSTHUMOUS NOVEL, by LE SAGE, published as an Episode in "Gil Blas," with the history of its discovery, and an examination of its claims to authenticity.

 The STORY TELLER, vol. I., is now ready, price 6s., containing Tales, &c., from almost every available source—Chinese, Spanish, Danish, German, English, French, Scotch, Irish, English. For cheapness, variety, and sterling literature, the STORY TELLER has no parallel.

London: CUNNINGHAM and MORTIMER, Adelaide-street, Trafalgar-square, and all booksellers.

WHITTAKER'S POPULAR LIBRARY of Modern and Standard Authors, Boards (uniformly printed, and comprising nearly one thousand Copyright Works, Historical, Biographical, &c., heretofore published at very high prices, but now varying from One Shilling upwards. Large 8vo. s. d.

Arago's Popular Lectures on Astronomy	3 6
Bell's Life of Mary Queen of Scots	3 6
Bigland's Hist cry of the Huguenots	3 6
Carrick's Life of Wallace	3 0
D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation. Translated by W. K. Kelly, B.A. Parts I., II., and III., each	1 6
Inglis's Switzerland, France, &c.	3 0
Inglis's Tyrol	3 0
Inglis's Scottish Walks in Many Lands	3 6
Keith's History of Europe	3 6
Le Hunt's 100 Romances of Real Life	3 6
Lives of the Popes. Translated by W. K. Kelly, B.A. Complete in Three Parts, each	1 6
Hanke's Ottoman and Spanish Empires	3 0
Ranke's Servian and Nations of Southern Europe," cloth	1 6
Smyth's Recognitional Illustrations of St. Paul's Cathedral	3 6
Smyth's Westminster Abbey, uniform	3 6
Stowe's Survey of London. With Notes, &c., by W. J. Thoms, F.S.A., &c.	5 6
The Peasant Boy of Norway. A Tale. Fourth edition	2 6
Thierry's History of the Norman Conquest. New edition, enlarged	7 6

Elegantly bound in cloth and lettered, one shilling each extra.

WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane, London.

THE TARIFF

THE MARK-LANE EXPRESS gives a Return Weekly of the number of Foreign Cattle of every description imported, and furnishes all information that can be procured, calculated to throw a light on this subject, of vital importance to the British Farmer. As an Agricultural Journal it will be found invaluable to the farmer, corn, seed, hop, and provision merchant, miller, brewer, and all persons interested in the correctness of British and foreign corn and cattle market intelligence, which is brought down to the latest hour in each week.

The Mark-Lane Agricultural and Commercial Reports, Correspondence, and other valuable articles on Agricultural and Horticultural Subjects, are obtained from exclusive sources.

The "Mark Lane Express" is the largest Agricultural and Commercial Newspaper published in London every Monday evening, at 4 o'clock post. May be had by order of all booksellers and newsmen throughout the kingdom.

II.

PORTRAITS OF EMINENT BRITISH FARMERS.

A series of Highly Finished Steel Engravings—Likenesses of the most Eminent British Farmers, will be given periodically in the FARMER'S MAGAZINE, price One Shilling and Sixpence.

The following is a list of some of those whose portraits will speedily appear—

DECEASED.

Earl of Leicester	J. Bakewell	C. Collins
Duke of Bedford	J. Tull	J. Hillman

LIVING.

Earl Spencer	H. Handley	C. Hillyard
Duke of Richmond	F. Pusey, M.P.	T. Bates
Earl Talbot	H. Gunnell	H. Chamberlain
Lord Western	James Webb	Col. Le Couteur
Sir C. Morgan, Bart.	J. Price	J. Smith, Deanston.

The "Farmer's Magazine," Vol. IV., New Series, price 10s. 6d., cloth boards, may be had of all booksellers

III.

THE MOST POPULAR SPORTING MAGAZINE EXTANT.—Price 2s.

THE SPORTSMAN is Published Monthly, beautifully illustrated with superb Steel Engravings, exquisitely finished, from Original Designs, by the first artists of the age.

The "Sportsman" is a candidate for the favour of the sporting world, not on mere professions of unapproached pretensions, but on known merits, and on a reputation of which the proprietors honestly now themselves proud.

"This is the cheapest, but certainly not the least talented, of the sporting magazines. The plates are in a very superior style."—Bell's Life in London.

"The Sportsman" we recommend as the most talented and varied publication extant."—York Herald.

The "Sportsman," Vol. VI., new series, illustrated with Twelve Steel Engravings, price 12s. 6d., in 8vo., cloth, may be had, by order, of all booksellers.

IV.

THE NEW MONTHLY

BELLE ASSEMBLÉE, a Fashionable and Literary Magazine, under the immediate patronage of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, is beautifully illustrated with highly-finished Portraits of the Nobility, and contains two Coloured Plates of the newest Fashions for the month, as they arrive from Paris. Price fifteenpence.

"Fine magazine should find its way into every drawing-room in the kingdom."—News.

"In every respect well worthy the distinguished patronage conferred on the work."—Exeter Gazette.

"A great acquisition to the fashionable world" Reading Mercury.

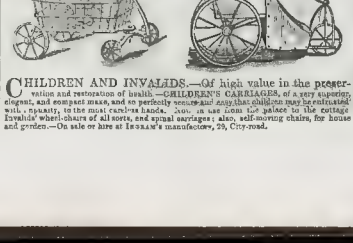
"This elegant and amusing periodical deserves well the patronage of the female sex."—Newcastle Courant.

Now ready, price 1s. 6d., by order, of all booksellers.

Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESSMAKING.—Madame GALLOIS, 41, New Bond street, still continues her superior method of TEACHING the ART of DRESSMAKING. She undertakes to make persons of the smallest capacity proficient in cutting, fitting, and dressmaking in a course finished with, in six lessons, for One Pound. Her superior method can be fully substantiated by references to pupils, and it never been excelled by any system of Dressmaking from eleven to four.

BOARD and LODGING, BRIGHTON; at the PIER MANSION, situated in Manchester-street, which opens on the Marine Parade, nearly opposite the Pier gates. The PIER MANSION, while commanding a view of the sea, is not so close as to suffer from the glare of the sun in summer, or the ill effects of boisterous weather during many parts of the year. Terms moderate, according to accommodation. A satisfactory reference required. For further particulars, apply as above, or at No. 6, Poland-street, London.



CHILDREN AND INVALIDS.—Of high value in the preservation and restoration of health.—CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES, of a very superior, elegant, and compact make, and so perfectly secure that any children may be entrusted with, patiently, to the most careless hands. Also, to be had from the palace to the cottage Invalids' wheel-chairs of all sorts, and spinal carriages; also, self-moving chairs, for house and garden.—On sale or hire at INGRAM'S manufactory, 29, City-road.

SEA BATHING—BOGNOR, SUSSEX.—This fashionable and retired Watering Place, the favourite resort of the late Princess Charlotte, and of our present Queen when her early days. The celebrated Dr. Ridley, owing to its mild and pure air, visited it for many years—the town was much resorted for the purpose he gave it. The shore has no deep cliff to endanger life; the rocks run out for many miles into the sea, which completely break the heavy swell of the water, and the sands form so gently an inclined plane that invalids and children may at all times, without the slightest risk, enjoy that delightful requisite—Sea Bathing. There is an excellent drive and promenade along the shore, recently completed; the soil is of a gravelly nature, so open watercourses in or marshy land for miles near the town; the forest trees and evergreens promise to the wanderer many fine villas surrounded by luxuriant shrubberies and most productive gardens speak plainly as to the mildness of the air. Road exceptionally driven numerous, and may be enjoyed for miles on either side without a turnpike. The town is built in an irregular form, with many detached villas. The lodgings-houses are kept up in a style which does great credit to the proprietors, and are let at a very reasonable rent. The hotels are spacious. There are two excellent libraries and reading rooms, an assembly and billiard room, hot and cold baths. Horses, carriages, and invalid chairs for hire. Provisions moderate, market excellent, and the fine Southdown mutton abundantly supplied. Bognor holds out no particular inducement to the gay, who visit the seaside for amusement, but to the invalid or families who come to the coast for the benefit of their health, it possesses advantages superior to any town along the coast of Sussex.—For further information apply to the Postmaster.

STAMPS and TAXES.—The Person who wrote a letter to the Commissioners from Norfolk, dated 28th July, is requested (if in London) to call on the Chairman of the Assistant-Sorters on the subject of his letter.

TO IRONMONGERS.—To be DISPOSED of, at the West-end, an Established BUSINESS, with a good Connexion. The premises are well situated, and possess every convenience for carrying on an extensive trade. The capital required is from £1000 to £1500. Apply, personally or by letter, to Messrs. BARBER and ANDREWS, Ironplate workers, 61, High-street, Finsbury-square.

SPORTSMEN are confidently invited to examine a NEW MANTLE, which is manufactured expressly for SHOOTING JACKETS, admirably adapted for the purpose, combining strength with lightness, and thoroughly waterproof, without confining perspiration. Also, BERDOE'S VENTILATING WATERPROOF FROCK, which, among a host of imitators and substitutes, has for five years maintained its superiority and preference, as is proved by its extensively increasing sale, particularly among those who require a gentlemanly and respectable waterproof above riding, voyaging, military manœuvres, or requires a garment really waterproof.—Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill (8 doors from Bishopsgate street).

CHANDELIERS for DRAWING-ROOMS, &c., of Crystal Glass, bold in outline, massive in effect, easily cleaned, and, when lighted, either by wax candles, oil, or gas, unrivalled in brilliancy, at the manufactory of F. and C. OSLER, Glass Chandelier Manufacturers, &c. The works to be seen in full operation every Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. No establishment in the city.

CUTLERY.—Twenty per cent. saved by purchasing at GEORGE'S Cutlery Manufactory, 20, Crescent-street, Euston-square, and in Parkstreet, Camden-town, the full set of 35 pieces, with Ivory Handles and Steel Forks, £1 18s.; Very Superior Ditto, £2 2s.; Fish Carvers, Dessert Knives, &c., per pair, 6s. 6d. N.B Every description of Cutlery manufactured to order, on the premises, lower than any other house in London.

An indoor APPRENTICE wanted, with a moderate premium.

KETT'S CASTOR OIL POMATUM is the best preparation for encouraging the growth of the hair, and entirely preventing the accumulation of scurf. It is unrivalled as a cleansing ingredient to the skin, and for children. Sold in pots, 1s. and 2s. 6d.; one pot, carriage free, for 15 stamps, by G. KETT, 23, Fore-street, Barbican, Lady Holford-street, Brompton, and 9, Threadneedle-street. And of all Chemists and Perfumers, through Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street

CORNS and BUNIONS.—PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND is a speedy and sure cure for those painful annoyances, without cutting or paring. It is luxury to the tenderest feet, ensuring the Corn with the most prompt success, producing no discomfort whatever, and may be used in a ball dress. Prepared by JOHN FOX, in boxes, at 1s. 1½d., or, three in one, for 2s. 6d., and to be had of Mr. Fox, No. 38, Berkeley-road, and all wholesale and retail Medicine venders in town and country. The genuine has the name of John Fox on the stamp. A 2s. 9d. box cures the most obstinate Corns.—Ask for Paul's Every Man's Friend.

MOULD CANDLES TO BURN WITHOUT SNUFFING.—M. KEMPTON'S PATENT.—These Candles do not require snuffing; they burn longer, and give a better light than any other candle; the flame is steady and beautiful. No metallic or deleterious matter is used in the manufacture. Price, 8d. per lb. Sold by the patentee, at his manufactory, No. 4, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, and by Sloman, Stirling, 43, High-street, Marylebone; W. Gotham, Broadley-terrace, Blandford-square; W. Evans, Pentonville, No. 70, Aldersgate-road, and all wholesale and retail Medicine venders in town and country. The genuine has the name of John Fox on the stamp. A 2s. 9d. box cures the most obstinate Corns.—Ask for Paul's Every Man's Friend.

TO CONNOISSEURS IN BRANDY.—They have also fully succeeded in bringing to public notice the most perfect article ever offered, possessing both the delicacy of the Cognac and the strength of the Martinique, in bottles nearly sealed and labelled, at 42s. per dozen.

The PALE BRANDY is particularly recommended to the notice of Foreign visitors.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, FIRE PROOF SAFES, CASH-BOXES, &c.

CHUBB'S NEW PATENT DETECTOR LOCKS give perfect security from false keys, and also detect any attempt to open them. They are made to all sizes, and for every purpose to which locks are applied. These locks are strong, secure, simple, and durable. Iron doors and frames, fire proof safes and boxes form a complete assortment of bolts, plate, books, &c., from fire and thieves. Cash Boxes and Japan Boxes of every kind, with New and Improved Locks. An assortment of the above on sale, by C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, London.

EDWARD DODD, MANUFACTURER to H.R.H. Duke of Cambridge of his ANGLO-ROMAN STRINGS for VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO, and HARP, which Strings for power of tone and durability are equal to the best Italian Strings, at 50 per cent. less, and far superior to those in general use. They have a peculiar property of resisting the ill effects of heated rooms Testimonials from Messrs. Blagrove, Tolbecque, Wells, Lindley, Cramer, &c. &c. To be had of the principal shops, and at the manufactory 112, Vauxhall Walk, Lambeth. Each parcel is wrapped with a plan band, signed E. DODD, Anglo-Roman Strings. Please ask for E. D.'s Anglo Roman Strings. Also Improved Silver Strings, warranted not to turn green.

PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, adjoining the BAZAAR, 52, BAKER STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE, London.—Gentlemen about to furnish will find the largest assortment of GENERAL FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, ever submitted to public inspection, at Manufacturers' Prices, and Low Cooking Utensils of Public Culinary, Steel Stoves, Register Grates, Coal Vases, Fenders, Marble Tea Trays, Tea and Coffee Urns, Wire Goods, Lamps, Kitchen and Fire Irons, with Parks of all kinds, Cutlery, Plated Goods, &c. &c. together with Ornamental Iron and Wire Work, for Conservatories, Lawns, &c.; Garden Engines, which are constantly kept on hand by the proprietor, who is a practical man, and in the largest quantities. All articles are warranted of the very best description, offered at exceedingly low prices, for cash only, the price of each being marked in plain figures. Established many Years.

LONDON and DOVER RAILWAY.—Passengers and parcels [illegible] are conveyed to and from Dover and Folkestone, and all places abroad that the SOUTH EASTERN PAVILION, at FOLKESTONE HARBOUR, is fitted by Mr. WAITE, and contains a full supply of refreshments, and is open for their reception. Good refreshments, at moderate prices, are always ready. The French and English languages spoken. Omnibuses meet every train, seven times up and down daily, and five times on Sundays, to convey to and from the Pavilion. The train performs the journey to and from London and Folkestone in rather more than three hours.—Select parties desirous of taking days and excursions have any arrangement of their own fully provided by writing (pre-paid) to Mons. Vantini.

PARKER'S ORIGINAL GRECIAN COMPOUND, for changing Red or Grey Hair to beautiful and natural shades of Black or Brown. As the publicans but simple application of this Liquid Dye, any person may, in a few minutes, dye their hair any shade of brown or black they may prefer, without the slightest exposure or causing the least injury to the skin. Gentlemen will find it the most effectual Dye for Whiskers that has as yet been invented.

Sold in bottles, at 3s. 6d., 6s., and 10s. 6d., by J. Sanger, 150, Oxford-street, facing Bond-street; Low, 330, Strand; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; and all Medicine Venders in town and country.

NOVEL ARTICLE FOR THE TOILET.—MELMOTH'S GEORGIAN PASTE is the most perfect and delightful preparation ever offered to the public. A little at first used for a few days entirely removes the appearance of the unpleasant odour which usually accompanies it. Its application is harmless, its efficacy astonishing. It has never failed in a single instance. Once used it is sure to be used by it. It is invaluable in sick rooms, crowded assemblies, and warm climates. Price 1s. 6d. per bottle, and postage-stamps will be received in addition to the price.—Sold in bottles, 3s. 6d each, at J. Sanger's Medicine Warehouse, 150, Oxford street; Messrs. Gifford and Lander, 101, Strand; Mr. Frost, 229, Strand; Johnston, 68, Cornhill.

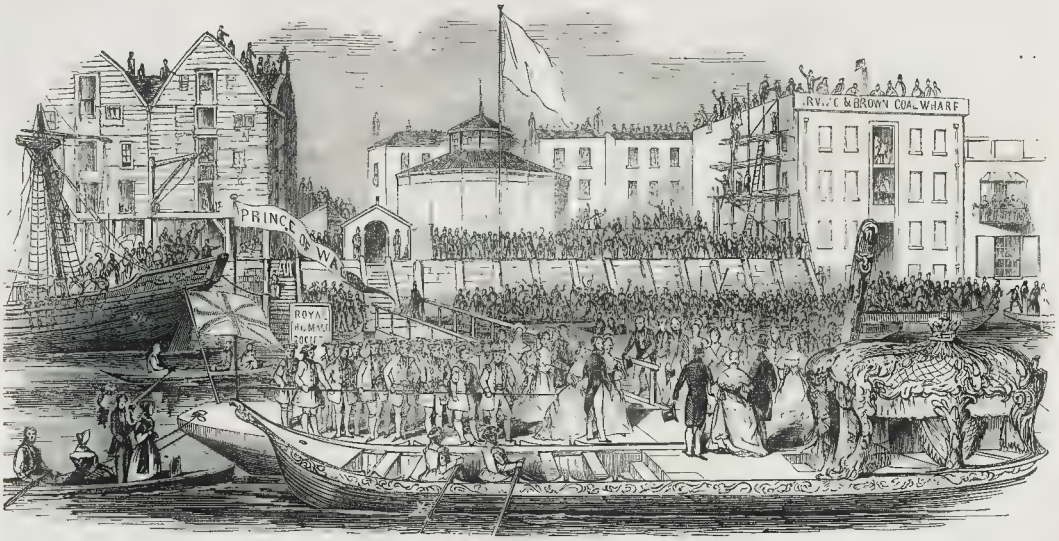
130, STRAND.

GROSSMITH'S INVENTIONS, now in constant use by above Six Thousand Families at London and the country, and obtained genuine at Mr. GROSSMITH'S wholesale and retail warehouse, 128, Strand, London; at their factory, Hoxton, Bricks, or of their appointed agents throughout the three kingdoms. The Hair-Lotion and Perfumes are now approved. GROSSMITH'S READING SHAVING SOAP in large cakes pots, is each, surpasses all other shaving preparations, and does not dry or irritate.—GROSSMITH'S TOOTH POWDER, 2s. 6d. per pot, instantly whitens the blackest teeth, without injury to the enamel, and prevents all decay.—GROSSMITH'S WASH CAKES, 6d. each, are the best and purest toilet soap manufactured for softening and whitening the skin.

TO LADIES.—ROWLAND'S KALYDOR.—Under the special patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, and the Royal Family This elegant and fragrant preparation thoroughly eradicates all Pimples, Spots, Redness, Tan, Freckles, and other Defects of the Skin, bestows a delightful softness to the tone, and renders a chapped and rough skin pleasingly soft and smooth. It imparts a youthful roseate hue to the Complexion, and produces the same, blande, and arch delicately fair and soft.

CAUTION.—On purchasing, see that the words "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," and see that those words are on the Wrapper, without which none are Genuine.

Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.—Sold at the Proprietor's, 20, Hatton Garden, and by Chemists and Perfumers.



LANDING OF THE QUEEN AND THE COBURG FAMILY AT THE TUNNEL PIER.

ROYAL VISIT TO THE THAMES TUNNEL.

Her Majesty's visit to this most wondrous of all London's wonders, on Wednesday week, was detailed in our last paper. We now present the reader with the picturesque scene of this very interesting event, we trust, hereafter to be chronicled in "the history of the Thames Tunnel." Her Majesty, when Princess Victoria we believe, once before viewed the Tunnel works, which were then not half completed. The engraving shows the arrival of the royal barge at the Tunnel Pier, and the landing of her Majesty, with the preparations made at the Wapping shaft for the Queen's reception; altogether presenting an impressive coup d'œil.

The royal barge was steered by Mr. Roberts, her Majesty's bargemaster. The Queen's watermen are the most respectable body of men on the river, and are very proud of the honour of rowing her Majesty and her illustrious consort. We understand that her Majesty's next trip by water will be to Greenwich Hospital, an event that will be hailed with much joy by the veterans of that noble institution.

CITY OF LONDON SCHOOL.

The annual distribution of prizes amongst the pupils of this establishment took place on the 26th ult. A portion of the theatre of the school, in which the ceremony took place, was occupied by the pupils, amounting to upwards of 400 in number; while the remaining space was devoted to the large assemblage of visitors, both ladies and gentlemen, who were attracted by the interesting proceedings of the day. At one o'clock the chair was taken by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, who was accompanied by the Lady Mayoress, part of his family, and by both the Sheriffs. There were also present Lord John Russell, Aldermen John Johnson, Sir George Carroll, and Hunter, Mr. Moon, the Sheriff elect, &c.

The head master, Dr. Mortimer, having made a few introductory remarks explanatory of the system of education pursued in the school, several of the senior scholars delivered orations composed by them in praise of John Carpenter, the founder of the school, in the following order, viz.:—

In Greek, Henry Judge Hose, Carpenter Scholar and Captain of the School.

In Latin, Henry Stewart Fagan, Silver Medalist.

In French, John Horaby, Carpenter Scholar.

In German, William Huggins.

In English, George Fead Lamerte, Carpenter Scholar.

Some Greek Iambic verses on the same subject were also delivered by H. S. Fagan.

The following principal prizes were then delivered:—

I. and II. Two scholarships on the foundation of John Carpenter, each of the value of £35 per annum, besides a premium of £50, after holding the scholarship not less than three years—John Jennings Wilkinson and Charles John Fox.

III. Dr. Conquest's gold medal of the value of ten guineas, to the first boy in general proficiency, not on the foundation—William Emery, "Times Scholar," who is about proceeding to Cambridge.

IV. Sir James Shaw's silver medals and book, of the value of five guineas together, to the best classical scholar—divided between John Hornby and W. Thomas Barry, who were declared to be equal, an extra medal being given by the committee to equalize the division.

V. Sir James Shaw's silver medal and books, of the same value, to the best mathematical scholar—Henry Stewart Fagan.

Other prizes in books were also distributed amongst the best pupils of the several classes.

A vote of thanks to the examiners having been agreed to, Lord John Russell, in a neat and effective speech, proposed a vote of thanks to the masters of the school, which was seconded by Mr. Wire, and agreed to unanimously.

Dr. Mortimer having returned thanks, Mr. Hale, the very efficient chairman of the committee, proposed a vote of thanks, which was carried unanimously, to the Lord Mayor, for his kindness in having presided.

"God save the Queen" was then sung by the pupils under the direction of their singing master, and after three cheers in honour of the Lady Mayoress and the other ladies present, the company dispersed.

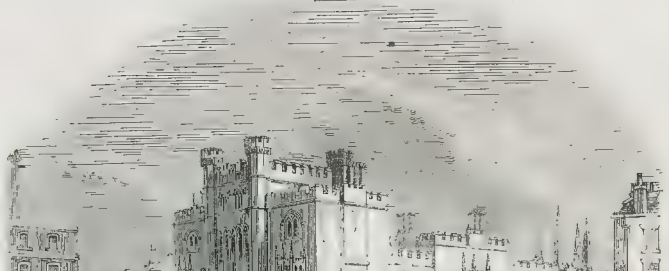
The annual dinner, in connexion with these proceedings, took place at five o'clock at the Brunswick Tavern, Blackwall, which was attended by upwards of 60 gentlemen. The Lord Mayor was to have presided, but his Lordship was unavoidably absent. Mr. Hale took the chair, supported by Sir Peter Laurie, Sir J. Duke, Mr. Alderman Hunter, Mr. Alderman John Johnson, Mr. Cotton, the Governor of the Bank of England; Mr. Moon, the Sheriff elect; Mr. Laurie, Dr. Mortimer, Dr. Conquest, &c. The usual loyal, national, and other toasts were drunk with the honours, and the entertainment was highly characteristic of the hospitality of the corporation of London.

The present is a fitting opportunity for submitting to our readers an outline of this excellent institution, of which we annex an engraving.

The City of London School was established by the corporation, under the authority of an Act of Parliament, in 1834. It is erected on the site of Honey-lane Market, immediately at the rear of the houses facing Bow Church, Cheapside, and whereon formerly stood the two parish churches of Allhallows and St. Mary Magdalen, which were both destroyed in the great fire of 1666. Some remains of these churches were discovered in digging for the foundation of the school; the first stone of which was laid by Lord Brougham on the 21st of October, 1835. The architect of the building was Mr. J. B. Bunning; the design was adjudged the best of forty-two drawings: it is in the late Tudor style, the principal windows and entrance being of an earlier period, and more enriched character. The west or principal front has a rich arched doorway or porch, surmounted by a lofty gable pediment; and immediately above this entrance is an open gallery of five trefoiled-pointed arches, on lofty slender pillars. Higher up are two mullioned and labelled windows, and above them an enriched and embattled parapet, this central compartment being flanked with two octagonal buttress turrets, 70½ feet high. The entire cost of the structure, including fittings and furniture, was nearly £20,000.

The object of the school is to furnish a liberal and useful education for the sons of respectable persons. The general plan of instruction accordingly includes the English, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French, and German languages; besides writing, arithmetic, book-keeping, geography, mathematics, history, &c. The mode of admission is by a recommendation by some member of the corporation, either alderman or common councilman. The school is open to all—Dissenters of every shade, Protestant and Catholic, Jew and Gentile—all are admitted to the same advantages.

In honour of John Carpenter, as the founder of the school, eight free scholarships have been established, as rewards for proficiency and good conduct. The appointment to these foundation scholarships is determined at the annual examination; the advantages of each are equal to £35 per annum, besides a premium of £90 on leaving the school.



CITY OF LONDON SCHOOL.

"Such of the foundation scholars as proceed from the school to the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or London, are allowed to retain their scholarships, and receive the sum of £25 per annum each. A scholarship of the value of £30 per annum, called "The Times Scholarship," is also attached to this school for the benefit of pupils proceeding thence to the University of Oxford or Cambridge. The sum of £400, paid by Thomas Tegg, Esq., as a fine to be excused from serving the office of sheriff, has also, by consent of the corporation, been appropriated towards establishing an exhibition to one of the universities, to be enjoyed by students who have been pupils in this establishment. A separate fund has been established for providing other prizes.

CHURCHES OF THE METROPOLIS.—No. XXXIII.

CHRISTCHURCH, TURNHAM-GREEN.

This newly-erected church for the parish of Chiswick is situate on the south side of the Great Western road, near to the five mile-stone, a d in the centre of Turnham-green. The ceremony of its consecration was performed, on Thursday week, by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of London, in the presence of a numerous assemblage of the neighbouring clergy and a most respectable congregation.

The church is in our own pointed, or early English, style of architecture, from a design by Messrs. Scott and Moffatt, of Spring Gardens; and it has been well executed, in dark flint, with stone dressings, by Messrs. Bird, builders, Hammersmith. The plan is cruciform, with a tower at the western end, surmounted by a lofty spire, with a vane. Beneath the tower is the principal entrance; and at this end also are two other entrances, north and south. The body of the church, exclusive of the chancel and transepts, is 72 feet long and 44 feet wide, and it is calculated, with the galleries, to contain 950 persons, a larger portion of the sittings being free. The chancel termination is of hexagonal form; and within, the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Commandments are within arches, and are in beautiful illuminated characters. The organ-gallery is recessed over the western entrance, and opens into the church by a massive arch; while the roof is open, showing the timbers with good effect. The cost of the erection, &c., is estimated at nearly £6000, of which sum £5000 have been already raised by the subscriptions of the inhabitants, &c.; and we doubt not the liberality of the Christian public will shortly enable the committee to realize the whole amount. After the conclusion of the service, the bishop, accompanied by the committee, the clergy, &c., proceeded to the large room of the National-schools, on the south side of the green, where a splendid déjeûné à la fourchette had been laid out.

NOTICE.—All communications respecting the transmission or non-arrival of the paper, must be addressed only to the person who supplies the paper or who receives the subscription.

LONDON: Printed by HENRY PALMER (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 10, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and published by WILLIAM LLOYD, at 198, STRAND, where all communications for the Editor are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, August 5 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 67.—Vol. III.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 12, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

THE LORDS ON IRELAND.

On Tuesday last, upon the occasion of the presentation of a petition by Lord Roden on the subject of processions in Ireland, a debate ensued in the House of Lords which presented many remarkable features, and which now invites us to bring the question of existing Irish disturbance once again under the consideration of our readers.

The public who have patronised this journal cannot have forgotten that the tone adopted by us upon the vitally important subject of home legislation for Ireland—we mean legislation by Great Britain, of which Ireland is, under our common constitution, so fair and beautiful a part—has been marked strongly by an absence of party feeling—by strict impartiality of purpose—by freedom from prejudice—anxiety for justice—and an ardent aspiration after truth. We freely declared, in the outset of that frank companionship with our readers which grows dearer to us the longer it endures, our keen appreciation of the wrongs and evils which have marred the prosperity of the sister isle. We admitted the sin of long misgovernment in Ireland—we deprecated the great social miseries which for generations have been suffered to grow into monstrosity upon her soil. We did not deny a sort of mis-appreciation of the spirit of her people by those intrusted with their rule; nor did we shrink from the responsibility of declaring our conviction that the best energies of British statesmen, and the best sympathies of the English of every degree, were fairly due to Ireland, to alleviate her sorrows, to raise her prospects, to promote her happiness, and to improve her soil. We spoke out boldly in favour of particular reforms, and, although we knew and felt that much had been granted, we urged further concession with a free and honest voice. We spoke of the social grievance of absenteeism as one that we would gladly attack with energy until something like a natural and filial sympathy should be engendered among the richer children of their mother-land; we upheld the great vexata quæstio which has so long raged between landlord and tenant as a very signpost to legislation; cautious, but immediate—careful, but without delay—we implied a belief that even religious concessions might be advantageously blended with civil benefits; and we struck at the hateful Poor-law with all the humble power of our pen, aided by the force of our heartfelt convictions that it was wretchedly, radically bad. And in doing all this we believed, and believe still, that we were only plunging into the tide of purely English feeling, and going with the common stream. We know that the condition of Ireland is sympathetically regarded all England through; we know that English generosity admits, feels for, and is ready, so far as the general people are concerned, to remedy all her wrongs; we know that, to accuse them of callousness to the welfare of the sister-land, is to libel them most falsely; and we know also, that all the precedents of modern history are before us to tell what the English have done for the Irish in every great movement for improved, or supposed improved, legislation, and to make the past a criterion for present and future goodwill. We are sure that the English are the natural friends of Ireland, and that with an honesty of purpose which it would be ungrateful to deny.

Assured of this, and assured also of our own sincerity in advocating the welfare of the sister isle, we had the less hesitation in giving our unqualified opposition to the insanity for repeal—in repudiating the diatribes of O'Connell against the Sassenach and the Saxon—in declaiming the fierce agitation of the distracted kingdom to be the curse which delayed legislation and frightened capital from its shores—in urging blended energy and conciliation upon the Executive—and in appealing to the voice of reason and religion to lead our Irish fellow-countrymen into the paths of peace. We were glad to find that the temper with which we bound up our principles with the real good of both countries and the general integrity of the empire, was acknowledged and applauded by all the thinking classes in Ireland, and that the article in which we most loudly protested the inviolability of the Union, was that which found most general circulation through the Irish press.

We now earnestly repeat our previously declared opinions, and shall seek to support them by directing strong attention to the debate of Tuesday evening in the Lords. We shall not go into the question of processions, which was the peg of the discussion; nor revert to Lord Roden's picture of the condition of Ireland, because the party bias of years is so strong in the mind of that nobleman as to make his statements not exactly couleur de rose—but Orange colour, to say the least. His motive was to stop all other processions as Orange processions had been stopped, or else to permit Orange processions with the rest, a question of local expediency which we shall not take upon ourselves to moot. But we turn to the speeches of the Duke of Wellington and Lord Brougham, and these are pregnant with meaning and good sense: that of the soldier-Minister giving us more confidence in the passive conduct of the Government than we could ever bring ourselves to feel before; while the beautiful oration of the noble lawyer abounds in practical wisdom, and combines the power of eloquence with the value of truth and common sense. First, however, let us assure public feeling, and quell a fast-growing alarm upon the subject of the repeal agitations by an extract from the Duke of Wellington's speech:—

I say, as I said before, that I am willing to admit the truth of my noble friend's description of the state to which these agitations, these criminal agitations I would call them (loud cheers), have brought the sister country—the extreme injury which they are doing to that part of the empire, and most anxiously desirous I am to see an end put to them. (Cheers.) My lords, I am also aware that the Government are responsible for every act they do, and for all the omissions to which the noble earl has referred. I will not go into a detail of these circumstances, because I am not, on this occasion, able to state what the intentions of Government are on this subject. My lords, I do not think it desirable that they should be stated; but what I do say is this—that I, whose duty it is to superintend one of those offices on which the execution of the measures of the Government depends—I feel confident that everything that could be done has been done, in order to enable the Government to preserve the peace of the country (cheers), and to meet all misfortunes and consequences which may result from the violence of the passions of those men who unfortunately guide the multitude in Ireland. (Cheers.) My lords, I do not dispute the extent of the conspiracy, I do not dispute the dangers resulting from organization in that country—I have stated it publicly on more than one occasion—I do not deny it is notorious, it is avowed, it is published in every newspaper all over the world. I do not deny the assistance received from foreigners—not from foreign Governments—I have no right to say so—but from foreigners of nearly all nations; for there are disturbed and disturbing spirits everywhere (a laugh), who are anxious to have an opportunity of injuring and deteriorating the great prosperity of this country. (Cheers.) I don't deny all this; but still I say, I feel confident that the measures adopted by the Government have been such, as that they will be enabled to resist all, and ultimately to preserve the peace of the country. (Loud cheers.) And if it should turn out that that is the case, I believe it is best that we should persevere in the course in which we are proceeding, and not attempt to adopt other measures until it becomes absolutely necessary to adopt them. (Cheers.)

From any other Minister of the Crown, or person associated with the Government, this declaration might be treated as the expedient of the moment to satisfy the public mind; but from the Duke it comes with all the weight of sincerity, and we cannot doubt its truth. And if it be so, how heartily do we rejoice that conciliatory policy seems even in the stern eye of the uncompromising soldier a sufficient resistance to an agitation so vast, so wild, so stormy, so impetuous and overflowing with romantic nationality and passionate pride as O'Connell has organized under the banners of Repeal.

OPENING OF THE OYSTER MARKET, BILLINGSGATE.—See next page.

With regard to the beautiful speech of Lord Brougham, we shall not select from its declamatory portions, but take an extract upon the subject of the exclusion of capital from Ireland by agitation and ceaseless broil—the source, beyond doubt, of a large share of the miseries of the land:—

Is it likely (said the noble lord) that any capitalist will send his capital to a country where he does not know that there may not be an outbreak before he gets his first quarter's payment? But suppose even that those persons have no fear of a rebellion in Ireland—I myself think there is no fear of such a result—but it is clear that the present state of things may lead to great mischief, and it stops the improvement of that country, which was going on at a great pace, and which it now at a stand-still. Suppose, however, that the capitalist, as I said, has no fear of a rebellion, and is satisfied with the course taken by the Government, still it is likely he would say, "I should like my capital to be invested in a place where I can go over and look after it, and where, if necessary, I can send a person to attend to it without the fear of his being mobbed, and where there is no reason to fear that the next cry may be for fixity of capital, as it already been for fixity of tenure; for that may be the next cry; and as the tendency to fixity of tenure is to convert the tenant into the landlord, so the tendency of "fixity of capital" ought be to convert the foreign capitalist into a native. (Laughter.) The capitalist does not like to send his capital to a country where a doctrine like this might be established on the model of another so very similar which has already been set up there. (A laugh.) We are laughing at this, my friends, but it is a very serious matter. The capitalist does not like such a state of things, and therefore declines to send his capital to a country so situated. Yet there is such a glut of capital in the city of London, that notwithstanding that natural repugnance of men to send their money beyond seas, and invest it in foreign speculations, we see every day capitalists sending their money to be employed in foreign railways, when they certainly would much rather invest it in Ireland in similar undertakings, or in agricultural speculations. Those capitalists can scarcely have confidence in the persons who call themselves exclusively friends of the people of Ireland—those agitators who profess for them a friendship violent, vehement, and absorbing—who profess to monopolise all the feeling and sympathy of the people of Ireland—in virtue whereof, I suppose, it is that they bring from the Irish peasant, from his goods and chattels, his wretched pittance towards their associations, [illegible] Conciliation Associations, and towards their repeal rent; all these associations being connected with these agitators, and all employed in the service of such agitators. Such agitators tell the people tend towards the increase of what remains in their pockets. (A laugh.) The capitalist may be told that persons who act in this way are the only real friends of Ireland, and are those who will put an end to the mischievous state of things there; but yet the capitalist does not like such persons. (Hear.) There is also this other thing which alarms capitalists. They hear these friends of the Irish people boasting of their numbers, and of their being able to command their hundreds of thousands [illegible] the power which they th as boast of used for the purpose [illegible] the most vehement attacks on the Government, and the most [illegible] upon which those capitalists themselves belong [illegible] little, and the poverty excessive (a laugh), and the [illegible] capital of the Saxon being extreme—the wise Celt having for his object to lessen that excessive poverty, and draw some portion of the Saxon capital to supply the Celtic wants—this wise and judicious friend of Ireland, in order to effect his object, deals from regard of the one to the other in the most gross and unrestrained abuse of everything Saxon, and proclaims Saxon England as the determined enemy of Celtic Ireland. This is the truly way of inducing English capitalists to send over their money to Ireland. Now, when my noble friend behind me talks of sending capital into Ireland, I cannot help thinking that one way of facilitating that object would be to secure the cessation of that feeling of excitement and impression which appears to form the burden of every composition addressed by those friends of Ireland to the people—of every composition, whether written or spoken. (Hear.) These capitalists, I say, hear those friends of the people boasting of their command over the masses; they hear them boast of their meetings, sometimes of hundreds of thousands—never, mark, less than 100,000 (a laugh), sometimes, as in one case, amounting even to 700,000. But your capitalist is rather a suspicious sort of person. He cannot understand what sort of a thing such a gathering as 200 000 or 300,000 persons could be; he cannot understand that, nor believe in it, any more than I can do—(laughter); but, at all events, he believes that there has been some great meeting. He does not suppose that all these statements can be wholly without foundation; he is sure I think that it always is as it was in one case lately, where it was said that a meeting in Ireland had been attended by between 100,000 and 200,000 people, when a gallant friend of mine was curious enough to measure the ground on which it was professed to have been held, and found that, even if it being able to hold fifteen persons in a square yard, it could not hold even 5000 However, that was a rare instance of exaggeration. No doubt 20,000 people have been got together at these meetings, and on one occasion—that of the meeting at Tara—I believe there were as many as 70 000 present. Therefore, at all events, large masses of men have been assembled together. Now, your capitalist likes large masses of produce. He likes to see large masses of people in the lump, as he likes to see a good bill, with approved names to them (laughter); but he certainly [illegible] not fancy large masses of people (hear, hear), and large masses of [illegible] too, who are collected without reference to any object. He does not necessarily be false. For when a man tells me of his addressing 200,000 men, I find it impossible to believe him; if he told me he had addressed 20 000 or 30,000 I could understand it. But when he tells me that he has 200 000 men whom he proposes to address meet calmly to discuss a great national question, I at once turn with contempt, scorn, and disgust from such a statement, because I know it to be physically impossible that at a meeting composed of such immense numbers anything like discussion can take place. Well, then, the capitalist very well knows that no meeting of the kind can serve the purposes of discussion; and if so, there must, of course, be some other object. Where such numbers assemble the object cannot be a harmless one. I very well know what that object is, but the capitalist thinks it is for the purpose of breaking the peace. I do not myself believe so. I think that so long as the agitators can hold the issue of those meetings in their hands (hear), they will be the last to risk their own safety. (Hear.) I put their virtue at the highest (laughter), and rather higher (a laugh), and, therefore, that they will not break the peace if they can help it. (Hear, hear.)

It seems impossible not to coincide in the general sense of these observations; they are most impressive; and we would not detract, by observation, from their force. Our limits, however, warn us to conclude this article; and we do so with the expression of satisfaction that an Irish debate in the Upper Chamber of the Legislature should, in the danger and excitement of the times, have produced speeches so fortifying to our reliance upon order and security as that of the Duke of Wellington—so temperate and full of practical excellence as that of Lord Brougham. Both have a direction in favour of good government, and a tendency to laugh the crotchet of repeal of the Union to scor .

OYSTER-DAY.

Yesterday week, August 4, was, in metropolitan parlance, "Oyster-Day," i. e., the day on which oysters are first brought into the London market at Billingsgate. Formerly the commencement of the sale on the 4th was so punctually observed, that the market was opened immediately after the clock had struck twelve on the night of the 3rd, when, in the rush to obtain the first supply of oysters, it being dark, a life or two was lost annually. This injudicious practice of opening the market at midnight was, therefore, discontinued, and the time fixed at 6 o'clock on the following morning. On Friday, Billingsgate was crowded with vendors of shell-fish. Mr. Goldham, the clerk of the market, and his assistants, adopted the usual precautions to prevent accidents and robberies. Barriers were erected at convenient distances, and boards inscribed, "Take care of your pockets," "Beware of pickpockets," in imitation of Mr. Goldham, who has completely reformed Billingsgate, the name of the oysters composing each cargo was exhibited on the rigging of each vessel, so that it was impossible to impose on the buyers. The supply was below the average, and the demand was not so brisk as usual. There were fifty sail of vessels at market from Feversham, Whitstable, Essex, and the Chepney rock, near the Isle of Sheppy. There was one vessel from Torbay, rather an unusual circumstance. The inferior oysters, which had not been laid on the beds to fatten, were reduced from 8s. to 10s. per bushel; the "Commons," an oyster usually vended by the retail dealers at the stalls, 14s. per bushel; [illegible]rls, £1 12s.; the Kellys, 16s.; and Scotch, £1 10s. There were no supplies from Queenborough or Faversham. Lawsuits have been going on respecting the oyster fishery at the former place, and the beds at the other are represented to be in a state of bankruptcy. In the evening, other vessels arrived laden with oysters, and the prices were nearly the same.

We have not the means at hand of ascertaining the number of vessels at present employed in the British oyster fisheries; but in 1840, there were 74 English cutters, and 41 Jersey cutters, of about 20 tons each, besides 24 undecked boats of about 6 tons each, employed for dredging from that island for the English market. Nearly 1000 fishermen were occupied in these vessels; and 70,000 tubs were exported to England in one season. Again, we find that, in the county of Essex alone, 15,000 bushels of oysters have been bred and taken in one year.

Every schoolboy remembers how this little island, now the mistress of the world, is referred to in classic history by the Romans, then the world's masters, for the exquisite delicacy of its oysters. Not, however, satisfied with the native delicacy of our oysters, the epicures of old Rome fattened them in pits and ponds; they iced them before eating them; and one Montanus, a gourmet of great celebrity, could tell the breed of an oyster by the first bite! The locality whence these luxurious fellows obtained the finest oysters has been precisely ascertained. It was from Rutupia (Richborough), near Sandwich, in Kent, once a harbour and city of note, but now a solitary ruin. Near this spot, too, Cæsar first landed, nearly nineteen centuries since, to add our island to his long list of conquests. He appears to have been a good judge as well as general; for this freak of his ambition was played off in the oyster month (on August 26), on which day Cæsar first "astonished the natives." Probably, the troops, in their encampment, had what is unclassically termed a "tuck out" of oysters prior to their drubbing the "men of Kent." This is a mere archæological speculation; but it is more probable than that oysters were eaten in June, as Wilkie has represented them, in his picture of "Chelsea Pensioners reading the Gazette of the Battle of Waterloo."

The finest oysters in the world are found in England. This is acknowledged even by the French, who are ever ready to dispute our national claims; for, in a brochure published at Paris, and entitled "Le Manuel de l'Amateur des Huîtres," the British oysters are stated to be the best.

It would not be difficult to pile up a mass of facts in the economy, natural and artificial, of oysters. Of the British coasts, the most famous for their oysters are the shores of Kent and Essex. Those found near Milton, in Kent, are "natives," are, perhaps, the very best; they are small, round, plump, and white, and have thin shells, which are easily opened. Next are the beds at Queenborough, in the Isle of Sheppy, and at Whitstable, opposite. In dredging at the latter place, round a rock now called "the Pudding-pan," great quantities of Roman pottery have been discovered. In the creeks and inlets of the Medway, are many valuable oyster fisheries, which are under the jurisdiction of the corporation of Rochester; and a court of admiralty, consisting of the mayor and aldermen, assisted by a jury of free dredgers, possess the power of making bye-laws and regulations relative to the oyster-bed, and the seasons for fishing. The oysters found in the river Colne, on which stands Colchester, in Essex, are also of excellent quality. Massinger has made them classical by causing Justice Greedy, in "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," to say that he had nothing to speak of this morning before breakfast, except a barrel of Colchester oysters. Colchester, by the way, is inferred to be the Camelodunum of the Romans, and its importance may have been raised by its ostreal fame. The Colne here forms a great many arms and creeks, exceedingly well suited for the formation of oyster-banks. The Dorsetshire oysters rank next in estimation to those of Essex, and those of Poole are in high repute; as are those of the Isle of Wight, and of Teuby, on the coast of South Wales; and the finest pickled oysters are sent from Milford Haven.

A very common and very mistaken opinion exists, especially among foreigners, that all British oysters are impregnated with copper—"which they get from feeding off copper banks;" such would be quite as injurious to the animal itself as it could be to us, and the fancy could only have arisen from the strong flavour peculiar to green oysters. This matter has, however, been taken up by scientific men; for M. Valenciennes, in a paper "on the Colouration of the Green Oyster," maintains that the green colour lies in the four divisions of the bronchiæ, and in the intestinal canal. Besides the oysters on the English shores, oyster-banks are common on the northern coasts of Ireland. Edinburgh was, till lately, plentifully supplied with oysters from the Frith of Forth. Nearly opposite to Leith was a large depôt of oysters, formed around or near the islet of Inchkeith. Dublin is supplied with oysters from Arklow, a little to the east; and oysters are conveyed thence to artificial beds near the coast of Wales, where they are said to fatten and colour even more quickly than in the Irish beds. The finest oysters are sent from the cities of oysters, we must not forget the famous oysters taken in the Mossul Bay, at the Cape of Good Hope, to eat which, epicures come four hundred miles from the interior!

The European oyster is found adhering to rocks and stones, or, occasionally, to the timbers of wrecks; but, still more rarely, to be washed away, the oyster beds perish. The fish is viviparous, and the young are produced with a perfectly formed shell. They are, when first emitted, quite transparent, and they swim rapidly by means of a membrane extending out of the shell. They are very delicate creatures, and the severe winter of 1840-41 destroyed millions of young oysters were destroyed by the frosts. It was formerly supposed that the fish fattened during the full moon, and grew thin as it waned; we are not aware that this has been observed in the present day, but it may have happened in particular situations, owing to the difference in the tides. The vulgar opinion, and that on which the restraining laws have been formed is, that the period of spawning is May, at which time the young, or spat, is found adhering to the rocks. But, as the young are found in the parents perfectly formed and alive in the month of August, this is most probably the period of parturition, though it be not till May that they become fixed, or sufficiently grown to be seen by the common observer. At this time, they are about the size of a sixpence, comparatively hard and firm, and have been well compared to a drop of candle-grease in water. In two, or, at farthest, three years they are fit for table. The oyster probably attains a great age; but, after having arrived at its full size, the valves are thickened, instead of being increased in length or breadth. From May to July, both the male and female oyster are said to be sick, and are in thin and poor condition; but, by the end of August they have again recovered their fat, and in season. The sexes are distinguished by the fishermen by the colour of the fringe; that of the male being black, or dark-coloured, that of the female white. The shell is formed of carbonate of lime and animal gluten; and the oyster frequently contains shining intestinal worms, which may be seen by opening the shell to the dark. A sea-star is very destructive in an oyster-bed: it clasps its rays round the shell, and perseveres until it has sucked out the inhabitant. Another enemy to the oyster is said to be the muscle.

The time allowed for collecting oyster-spawn from the sea is May; when the dredgers, (as the fishermen are termed,) may take all they can procure; but after that month it is felony to disturb the spawn. They dredge it up, when, if not too small, they separate it from the shells and stones to which it is adhering; and these they are obliged to throw into the water, to prevent the beds being destroyed. The spawn or spat is then thrown into creeks or into shallow water on the shores to increase in size and fatten, and in such situations is considered private property. The dredgers use a peculiar kind of net, which is very strong, and fastened to three spikes of iron; this they drag along the bottom of the sea, and the force they use to make each boat requires five men, and they dredge in water from four to fifteen fathoms deep.

Oysters are conceitedly said to be in season in every month of the year that has an r in its name, beginning with Septmember, and ending with August. This is a very true, but very ancient saw. Long ago as the year 1804, when M. Balsine contrived the means of sending to Paris, oysters fresh, and in the best possible order, at all seasons alike. Balaine's predecessor in his art was Apicius, who is said to have supplied Trajan with fresh oysters at all seasons of the year; and Apicius deserved an immortal character for such a triumph. Still, we do not enjoy this refinement in England; though the common notion is exploded, by oysters being very fine in August.

The dietetic properties of oysters have not been overrated; they may be safely recommended where great nourishment and easy digestion are required, their valuable quality being the great quantity of gluten they contain; they are, indeed, a concentration of nutritious particles.

With all the dietetic celebrity of the oyster, its shell is worth consideration. The Roman ladies used the calcined shell as a cosmetic and depilatory; just as the fair ones, or rather the would-be fair ones, of our days use talc, pearl-powder, &c. Such stratagems are as old as time, and

The world is still deceived by ornament.

The ostracism of the classic ages likewise proves the importance of the shell in bygone ages; though it be reduced to a street-pastime in our day:

Pray, remember the grotto—only once a year.

Our artist has sketched the busy scene at Billingsgate from the opposite bank of the river, showing the copse of masts at the west-end of the Custom-house, which indicates the only wholesale market in the metropolis for the supply of fish.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

SPAIN.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, August 8.—The Regent of Spain, Duke of Victory, Duke of Morella, the Saviour of his country, as he was called by Christina—Espartero—has fled from Spain, and having embarked on board the British man-of-war, the Malabar, on the 30th ult., landed for Lisbon. Thus has ended the short—I wish I could say glorious—career of the man whom, in 1840, every body, except the Carlists, considered the regenerator of the Peninsula. In the opinion of many impartial observers, Espartero owed his rapid rise more to his good fortune than to his merits; and I am inclined to believe that the historian, in recording his military career, will find matter for serious comment. I have watched the movements of Espartero since the commencement of the war, and certainly speak of him since that period. It was during his government of Biscay, in 1834, that the Carlists first obtained clothing by seizing on two vessels bound from Bilbao for Saint Sebastian, and at the battle of Durango the Carlists, after compelling Espartero to fly, got possession of 2000 stand of arms. These, the first real advantages obtained by the Carlists, gave them courage, and increased their audacity. Shortly afterwards the provinces were transferred by Valdez, and the Carlists became masters—with the exception of Saint Sebastian, Pampeluna, Vittoria, and Bilboa—of the whole of the Basque and Navarre population. On quitting Biscay Espartero was named Commander-in-Chief of the army in the North of Spain, and from that period until his connexion with the traitor Maroto he never gained a single battle of any importance The Carlist army in the meantime increased in proportions marched through every kingdom of Spain, and Don Carlos advanced to the gates of Madrid. The credit of raising the siege of Bilboa is principally due to Colonel Wylde; for it is a fact well known that [illegible] sent [illegible] marching to the relief of that city. During the [illegible] Espartero was at the head of the army [illegible] formed nine battalions of deserters from his troops. Had not Espartero been a traitor in the Carlist camp, Espartero never would have succeeded in driving Don Carlos across the Pyrenées, but he had the good fortune to fall in with a Maroto, and, backed by Lord John Hay, he seduced the Carlist army, and by promising that which he never fulfilled, he persuaded them to abandon the cause they so bravely defended for nearly seven years. Espartero has fallen by the same weapon he made use of to obtain his most brilliant victory. Espartero is a man of undoubted personal bravery, but he neither possesses energy or military knowledge to command an army. As a statesman he is below mediocrity. And yet, had Espartero been well surrounded, he might have done his country much good. His intentions were honest, he laboured to restore peace and tranquility to his unhappy countrymen, but all his acts were misconstrued, and he at length has fallen a victim to a base and foul intrigue. The French press greatly blame him for attacking Seville; but our Gallic friends forget that when he opened the siege, Madrid, Saragossa, Cadiz, Ferol, Vigo, Seo d'Urgel, and many other places of great importance, remained faithful to him. Besides, he imagined that the forces under the orders of Generals Seoane and Zurbano would have driven from Castil e Narvaez and Aspiroz. Whilst Espartero remained at Albacete the French press dared him to attack Seville; the moment he opened the siege, they called him a sanguinary monster! This is French justice. The French now rejoice they have gained the day—and with truth may it be said they gained the victory; but will they be able to maintain their position? Decidedly not; and the hour is fast approaching when United Spain will again fall a victim to the intrigues of the Christinos and Mira-Llerales. Narvaez and the other Christino chiefs have openly declared their intentions to the partisans of Christina. They demand that the majority of the Queen should be immediately declared, and the ex-Queen recalled from France. The Moderado-Liberals, on the other hand, demand a regency composed of three members, and that Christina be the formation of a sovereign central junta. Narvaez will be she, I am inclined to think, to form an alliance with a portion of the Lopez Ministry, and the appointment now current in Paris of Count Toreno as ambassador to Louis Philippe would lead us to believe that he has already succeeded. Thus much is certain, Christina is sure of returning to Spain if at they are packing at the Hotel de Castille. Tell-el-Kebir and Ramnagour are not more decisive battle-fields: they have sent delegates to Madrid to watch the movements of Narvaez, and to protest against the acts of the Lopez Government. The juntas of Valladolid Valencia, Estremadura, Ocaña, Murcia, Leon, Toledo, and others of minor note have recognised the Lopez Ministry; but those of Barcelona, Lerida, Figueras, Gerona, Saragossa, Burgos, Galicia, and many others of minor note have declared a state of siege and declare that nothing would satisfy them short of a "Sovereign Central Junta."

The disputes between the Christinos and Liberals are being turned to good account by the Carlists, Cabrera's branch of the army. Since the day received, I am enabled to state that preparations on a large scale are being made for a formidable rising in the Basque provinces and the principality of Catalonia. Espartero has quitted Paris for Lisbon, and most peculiar chiefs crossed the Pyrenees, and others are on the road; a large quantity of arms and ammunition have been smuggled across the frontiers, and juntas have been formed in every province. A deputation from one of the Carlists to appoint a regency during the imprisonment of Don Carlos: I am in possession of the names of the Regents; but as they are in France I will not disclose them, for fear of giving offence to the present Government. The Carlists have plenty of money; and, should no dissensions arise amongst them, they will cut out work for the disorganised army of Narvaez, Lopez, and Co. It is generally supposed on the Continent that the Liberals of the Basque provinces will secretly aid the Carlists, having a promise that their fueros (ancient privileges) should be restored to them. The Basques are decided enemies to the Ultra-Liberals and Espartenists; they complain, and that not without reason, that Espartero violated the treaty of Bergara, in which he solemnly pledged himself to see respected the fueros; and that one of his first acts on reaching Madrid, after the flight of Don Carlos, was to deprive the Basques of their privileges, and to place the northern provinces under military command. The Basques are sturdy, brave, and persevering; they act, not from the impulse of the moment they reflect; and when they do take up arms they are constant, resolute, and determined. If my information is correct, the Basques have resolved on recovering their pr vileges, and are determined to conquer them at the point of the bayonet. Thus stands Spain at the present time, with the intrigues of Christinos and Liberals, and on the eve of a desperate Carlist and privilege insurrection.

The inhabitants of Madrid are greatly enraged against Narvaez and Serrano, and only wait a favourable opportunity to wreak their vengeance. The little Queen is surrounded with the friends of the Ministry, but she is far from being happy. It is said that on Argueles taking his leave he thus addressed her: "I quit your Majesty's presence with unfeigned and painful feelings, dire necessity compels me; and with sorrow do I inform your Majesty that you are surrounded by enemies determined on driving you from the throne of your forefathers."

The nomination of the royal household was the subject of much discussion in the Ministry; the Christinos proposed and succeeded in nominating the Duke of Rianzares as governor; the Liberals, formerly lady of honour to the ex-Queen Christina, as governess; and Don Eugenio Morino, preceptor. The friends of the Infant Don Francisco de Paulo intrigued in favour of his brother, as governor; the Countess of Belgeda, as governess; and Don N Ventosa, as preceptor. Don Manuel Cantero has replaced M. Heros as Intendant of the Palace.

Seville has suffered much from the bombardment, and many ancient edifices have been destroyed. The following no ea are worth recording. General Figuera, who defended the city, wrote to his wife on the morning of the 26th as follows:—

"My dear Marie,—The enemy has opened his fire. I will increase mine, which already does him much injury. Be not alarmed. Should you, however, fear the bombs, go wherever you think you will be in safety. I am certain of success. Adieu."

The following was the reply of the heroic wife of the general:—

"My dear Francisco,—It is many days since I came to the resolution to wait at my post, as a soldier, the will of God. Here will I, if called on, bind the wounds of my sons and my loving husband. My departure would be an act unworthy of my wife, unworthy of the mother of my children.

"May the Almighty preserve you in the hour of danger, and may glory and success crown your patriotic efforts.—Adieu."

FRANCE.—We have nothing fresh in French politics; it is reported, but believe not true, that Mr. Bankes has protested against the interference of Russia in the affairs of Servia. The King and part of the royal family left Paris yesterday for the Château d'Eu, near to Dieppe; the Duke and Duchess of Nemours are expected there shortly, and the Duke de Montpensier is in the south; everywhere the royal family are received with the greatest enthusiasm. Mr. Hughes, the Bishop of New York, is now in Paris

On Saturday a novel species of embarkation was tried close to the Anjou Quay. A naval gentleman brought from Rouen a cabriolet boat on four wheels, able to carry three persons; the instant it was placed on the Seine it upset, and the marine coachman had to swim for his life.

The number of the inhabitants of Paris who have received relief from the "Bureaux de Charite" have greatly varied since the commencement of the present century. In 1804 there were 86,936 persons; in 1805, 90 705; in 1807, 97,914; in 1808, 116,703; in 1809, 118,202; in 1810, 121,801; in 1811, 116,670; in 1812, 93,886; in 1813, 102,856; at the present moment there are only 62,539.

In a work just published, the following account of Napoleon is given from official documents:—"He was born on the 15th of August, 1769. In 1793, being then 24 years of age, he was, at the siege of Toulon, appointed to the rank of major of artillery; in 1795, when 26 years, he was appointed general in chief of the army of Italy; in 1798, 29 years of age, commander-in-chief, the expedition to Egypt; in 1799, 30 years of age, he was declared First Consul; in 1800, 31 years of age, after the battle of Marengo, he was named Consul for life; in 1804, 35 years of age, he was created Emperor of the French; in 1815, 46 years of age, he abdicated, after the battle of Waterloo; and on the 5th of May, 1821, being then 52 years of age, he died in exile on the island of St Helena."

There is now living near to Lyons five brothers and sisters, by the same father and mother, whose united ages, although inhabiting from their infancy the marshy lands close to the Rhone, amount to 430 years, viz: Louis Joffrey, 92 years of age; Claudine Joffrey, 89 years; Antonie Joffrey, 86 years; Marie Joffrey, 83 years; and Pierre Joffrey, 80 years of age.

The waters of the Rhine have risen very considerably during the last week. At Vieux-Brisach it rose to the steps of the inn situated on the French bank of the river.

There were consumed in Paris, during the month of July, 5370 oxen, 1447 cows, 7099 calves, and 33 316 sheep. The consumption has greatly fallen off, as compared with the month of July last year, as much as 386 oxen, 640 calves, and 4230 sheep; there has, however, been an increase in the consumption of cows to the amount of 152

A letter from Berlin says: "A great change is about to take place in the postage of letters. Those letters which now pay 18 groschen are to be reduced to 6 groschen. The lowest tax is to be 3 groschen for 15 German miles. It is estimated that the public will gain 500,000 dollars by the reduction.

Several military promotions in the higher ranks are much spoken of. General Bergeaud, the Governor-General of Algiers, has been promoted to a Field Marshal.

We are very dull in the musical world. Dupres made his first appearance on Wednesday, on his return from the south, in "William Tell, and met with a warm reception It is a curious fact that during the whole of the Spanish insurrection the Italian Opera at Barcelona did not stop performing a single night. The King of Naples has appointed Mercadante director general of all the theatres in the capital. Donizetti's opera "The Child of the Regiment" and Auber's "Diamans de la Couronne" have been translated into German and will be brought out next month at Vienna.

Thalberg and De Beriot have quitted Brussels for Ems: it is said that the former intends residing in future in the Belgian capital

The ballet "La Peri" draws overflowing houses every night it is brought out. Great preparations are making in scenery and decorations for Donizetti's opera "Don Sebastian." It is said that "Les Martyrs" will be given with great splendour before the end of the present month. Our Opera Comique is in a sad state of disorganization. Madame Rossi and Mademoiselle Descot are about to leave us: Mademoiselle Darcier has lost her voice, and Madame Thelion is very ill.

Coletti has renewed his engagement with the director of the Theatre of San Carlo at Naples for two years; his pay has been doubled. Madame Bishop will appear at San Carlo, having quitted Rome.

Maestro Bruni, a pupil of Zingarelli, has written an opera called "I Montanari Svedesi," for the Theatre Del Fondo, at Naples; the poem by Bidera. It was most coldly received.

WEST INDIES.—By the news received by the last steam-ship from the West Indies, it appears that the war between the Texicans and Campeachians appears over, and commissioners from Campeachy were daily expected at Vera Cruz on their way to Mexico to arrange the matters in dispute. To Cuba it is, we believe, the general opinion that the slaves will not continue long in subjection, their number being so overwhelming and the spirit of resistance spreading. Things are generally improving in the West Indies, and there is favourable weather and a good prospect of crops.

It is supposed that the occupation of Tahiti, by the French, has not been altogether to the liking of Queen Pomare, who writes on the subject to her brother-in-law, with Commodore Dallas and several other officers, to join the United States squadron in the Pacific

The Hon. Lieut.-Col. Keppel, aide-de-camp to the Queen, Capt. Lowber, after a short but extraordinary passage from New York to Liverpool, entered the Mersey on Saturday night in a run of fifteen days from port to port. She brings 28 passengers and New York papers to the 29th ult. being four days later than were brought by the steam-ship Hibernia. The news by the Montezuma is not of much interest. Heavy rains in the south, it is stated, have damaged the cotton crops. In the vicinity of Alexandria, Louisiana, the waters have risen to a fearful extent, and it is added, would destroy hundreds of acres. Influenza was very prevalent in the valley of the Mississippi, from St. Louis to New Orleans. A great Whig dinner had taken place at Philadelphia.

PORT OF LONDON.

The merchants of Liverpool are making a most important movement just now, and are likely to induce the Government to accede to the adoption of a measure which will be highly advantageous to the commerce of the port—namely, to allow a drawback on the duty paid upon imported cotton whenever it may be required for export.

A conspiracy was discovered at Constantinople about the middle of last month, when the persons arrested were carried on board the ship-of-the-line the Mahmoudieh, and, after being strangled during the night, were thrown into the sea. The forms of this terrible execution inspired the crew with so much horror, that some of them attempted to save the wretched, and others threw their own friends into the sea and were drowned.——The silver medal and premium for the best poetical inscription to be engraved on the magnificent candelabra, value £1100, presented to the Hon. Mr. Mostyn by his countrymen, has been awarded to Mr. Owen Wyne Thomas, of Mile-street. There were 105 competitors.—Nine men of the 17th Lancers, a party of revenue police stationed at Killaloe, have been dismissed by order of Colonel Brereton, for having married without permission.

An Anti-Puseyite meeting was held at the Grafton School-rooms, Fitzroy-square, on Tuesday last, when a series of resolutions strongly condemnatory of the Puseyite practices were adopted.——It is now ascertained beyond a doubt, that the Duke of Wellington will visit Scotland in the autumn, and that he will for a few days be the guest of the Duke of Hamilton. Shooting is one object of his Grace's visit.——It is said that a petition is in course of preparation against the return of Mr. Bright for the borough of Durham, and that it will be presented in a few days.——A letter received in Swansea, from Port Phillip, dated in March last, says, "Zephaniah Williams, the Newport Chartist, for killing an old man, has been hanged."——The Messrs. Gurney, of Norwich, and other leading banks in the east of England, have come to a resolution, in consequence of the want of employment for money which has existed now for twelve months past, to lower the rates of interest on deposits to 1½ per cent.——On Thursday, the 3rd of July, Sergeant Corey, of the 3rd Regiment, at Dundalk, cut a leg of mutton suspended by a cord through with one cut, for a wager of sixty guineas.—— On Tuesday last Mr. O'Connell entered on his sixty-eighth year.——On the 17th of last month, the "Old Man," the highest peak in Counton Fell, was partially covered with snow. This is a very rare occurrence so far advanced in summer. Though the weather this year has not, on the whole, been favourable, the number of visitors to the lake districts has been greater than for some years past.——The Gazette de France states that the old report of the Duke de Bordeaux intending to visit England, for the purpose of reconciliation, is now entirely revived.——John Fisher, believed to be the last surviving soldier in Scotland engaged in the first American war, died at Leslie, on Friday, the 18th ult., at the age of ninety-two years.——The Vice-Chancellor (Sir L. Shadwell) will lay the foundation-stone of the new church in the parish of All Saints, Southampton, on the 19th inst.——The foundation-stone of the new church at Hougham, near Dover, was laid on Wednesday, by the Rev. Thos. Morris. It is to contain 1000 sittings, and the trustees are the Archdeacon of Derby, J. P. Dampier, Esq., M.P., and J. Hardy, Esq., M.P.——An act was passed on the 26th ult. to exempt scientific and literary societies from the payment of parochial and other rates. It will not come into operation until the first of October.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

A dreadful suicide was committed on Saturday at the Croydon Infantry Barracks. The victim is Donald M'Gunness, a sergeant-major in the Scots Fusileer Guards, and who had been employed in the recruiting service. The deceased got up at the usual hour in the morning, and nothing was observed in his manner to create a suspicion that he intended committing suicide. At seven o'clock his servant observed blood oozing through the ceiling; the girl at once called in a sergeant, who entered the bedroom, and there found the deceased, with his head nearly severed from his body.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES IN THE METROPOLIS.—On Saturday morning Saturday night no less than four fires took place in the metropolis, by which property to the value of nearly £30,000 was destroyed. The first (an account of which appeared in our Postscript on Saturday evening) took place in the manufactory and warehouse of Messrs. W. Mosely and Son, mechanical tool manufacturers, No. 18, New-street, Covent-garden, by the destruction of which a large number of industrious artisans have been thrown out of employment; the adjoining houses also received great injury. On Saturday night, just before midnight, another fire broke out in the house of Mr. Mial, No. 135, Fore-street, Limehouse. Beneath this house is a coal warehouse, belonging to the Wade's End Coal Company, both of which were entirely consumed.—This fire was scarcely extinguished when an alarm was given that a fire had broken out in the extensive range of buildings belonging to Mr. Bird, the occupier of the well-known steam saw-mills and dock contractor, situate in Love-lane, Old Gravel-lane, Shadwell. The premises were about 150 yards in length, and nearly 50 in depth, and of proportionate height, and were fitted up with steam-engines and the usual costly apparatus. The yard being filled with timber, the fire travelled along the ground, communicating to Mr. Bird's private dwelling, and also to numerous other houses in Love-lane. To give anything like a description of the excitement that now ensued would be impossible. In one street were to be seen the inmates escaping with what property they could save from the flames, whilst in another a great number of persons were rushing out of their houses quite frantic, and almost in a state of nudity. About half-past two o'clock three yards in length, and nearly 50 in depth, and of proportionate height, and were fitted up with steam-engines and the usual costly apparatus. The yard being filled with timber, the fire travelled along the ground, communicating to Mr. Bird's private dwelling, and also to numerous other houses in Love-lane. To give anything like a description of the excitement that now ensued would be impossible. In one street were to be seen the inmates escaping with what property they could save from the flames, whilst in another a great number of persons were rushing out of their houses quite frantic, and almost in a state of nudity. About half-past two o'clock there was a tremendous explosion, which was heard for a moderate calculation, than 10 000 square feet of flame ascending many hundred feet into the air, and [illegible] the metropolis for miles round. To save any part of the premises was utterly impossible, the flames, therefore, contented themselves with trying to prevent its further extension, and in two hours' time had succeeded in effecting its total extinction—At two o'clock on the same morning, and before the premises had completed their arduous labours in Love-lane, a fourth fire broke out at Nos. 16 and 17, Bridge-street, Westminster. The houses were in the occupation of Mr. Villars, surgeon. The fire was discovered on the first floor landing, and happily in time to allow the inmates to escape, but the absence of the fire brigade engines, which had been called off to the fires at Limehouse and G. avel-lane, rendered it impossible to check the progress of destruction. One fire-brigade engine and one belonging to the County Fire-office were, however, procured, but proved of little avail, as the fire burned towards the rear, and soon burst through the windows of Mr. Goldsmith, wine merchant, in Parliament-street, and so seized on the house of Mr. Vacher, law-stationer, the next door. Several gentlemen, resident in the neighbourhood, were on the spot rendering every assistance in their power; and among them Mr. Morgan John O'Connell, M.P., and Mr. Bel any, of the House of Commons. Mr. O'Connell laboured at the engines, and in removing the property from the burning houses, with more than the ardour of a fireman. The flames were got under about six o'clock in the morning.——On Monday morning, at five o'clock, a fifth rapid and destructive fire took place on the premises belonging to Mr. Judd, pastry cook and cabinet-maker, No. 42, London-road, Southwark. Mr. Judd was the first to discover the fire, being awoke by a loud cracking noise, accompanied with a suffocating smoke. That gentleman immediately gave an alarm, and in a very short space of time a number of policemen of the Lambeth division were on the spot, and rendered essential service by helping the persons on the premises to effect their escape. After some time the fire was extinguished, but not until damage to a heavy amount was done.—On Wednesday night, shortly before ten o'clock, the neighbourhood of Whitechapel was much alarmed owing to the sudden outbreak of a fire on the very extensive premises belonging to Mr. Campbell, cooper, &c., carrying on a large business in Campbell's-place, North-street, Whitechapel. The fire originated in the part of the premises known as the warehouse, situated at the eastern end of the building, and continuous to the main entrance, in which nearly forty workmen are constantly employed. The engines were called into requisition, and after one hour's hard working the fire was extinguished, being happily confined to the warehouse. But we are sorry to say the building was nearly destroyed, and the stock very extensively damaged before the conflagration was subdued.

DEATH FROM DROWNING. On Wednesday afternoon a private in the 1st regiment of Life Guards, stationed at Windsor, was drowned while bathing in the Thames, above the bridge, and about a mile from the town. It appears that deceased was bathing with four or five of his comrades, not one of whom could swim, at a part of the river with a shelving shore; and having unconsciously got out of his depth, he at once immediately sank. His comrades, who were placed in almost the same unfortunate predicament, managed with very considerable exertions to scramble into more shallow water, and reach the bank in safety.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday night, about eleven o'clock, a man named Joseph Hunter, 25 years of age, was brought into St. George's Hospital, upon a shutter, in a dying state, from injuries he sustained by falling into an ice-well nearly 50 feet deep, at the house No. 11, Upper Seymour-street, Portman-square. It appears that the poor fellow got in [illegible] for the purpose of bringing out some ice, when the rope by which he was [illegible] broke, and he fell to the bottom of the well, a distance as mentioned above. The evidence, which was continuous at length, elicited the circumstances in which the several squabbles originated, which, however, possessed no feature of interest, and the jury at length found a verdict of "Manslaughter" against the deceased's opponent.

THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH'S DESPATCHES.—A discovery has been recently made, the interest of which it is not possible to overrate, although the extent of its historical value has only hitherto been partially ascertained. In a house in the town of Woodstock there had been lying for many years eighteen large boxes, supposed to contain deeds appertaining to the Marlborough estates, whose dust nobody had ever thought of disturbing, and the existence of which was probably unknown to Archdeacon Coxe, when he had the ransacking of all the documentary stores of Blenheim. These boxes have been lately opened and examined, and they have been found to contain the whole of the correspondence and despatches of the Duke of Marlborough during the several periods of war of our accession. A large portion of them—the letters to Prince Eugene and all the foreign sovereigns, princes, and generals—are in the French language. They form a collection very much resembling the compilation of Colonel Gurwood, and the partial examination which there has been time to bestow has been just enough to prove the very great interest of the matter they contain. We understand that these precious and important documents have been confided, by the present Duke of Marlborough, to the custody and inspection of Sir George Murray.

A violent conflagration burst out on Sunday morning, about nine o'clock, in the convent of the Thérésiennes, at Ghent, and destroyed the church and a part of the building itself. The nuns assembled together in one of the rooms, which soon caught fire, and though implored by the persons who came forward to lend assistance to fly and save their lives, they one and all declared their determination to remain faithful to their vow of seclusion, and refused to leave the precincts of the convent. The firemen on their arrival directed all their efforts to save the room where the nuns were remaining, and speedily succeeded in their endeavours. The flames were at last got under, but not without considerable destruction of property. Fortunately no life was lost.

A novel mode of advertising for a wife has been adopted by an inhabitant of Banbury, Oxfordshire:—A Daguerreotype portrait of the gentleman is placed in a shop, with the following notice underneath:—" Wanted a female companion to the above: apply within."

POPULAR PORTRAITS.—No. XLI.

THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

The family of the Pagets, to which the Marquis of Anglesey belongs, is both ancient and honourable; the first Baron Paget was a distinguished politician during the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Mary; a period during which he could have been put to the most subtle tests of the courtier and the statesman, to maintain his position during changes so rapid that they almost "ebbed and flowed by the moon." A great deal of the courtier has descended to the present head of the family: he unites great elegance to undaunted courage and gallantry in the field, where he has been often tried and never found wanting. In the days of Charles I. he would have been a perfect cavalier: he is one of those aristocratic figures that would have made a fine subject for the pencil of Vandyke; he would have worn his rapier and scarf, and supported his rich velvet cloak in the newest fashion of the time, and not have scorned perhaps, what Prynn the Puritan termed "the unloveliness of love-locks;" and many a grim-visaged and closely-cropped Roundhead would have sneered at the elegant "malignant," making the not uncommon mistake of confounding a taste for refinement and display with an effeminacy of character. And in the "Mall" or by the side of "Rosamond's Pond" the error might have been excusable: it is only times of trial that reveal men's inward qualities; the old Ironsides would have corrected his curiosity at Worcester or Naseby, where he would have seen the rich cloak and the graceful plume in the middle of the fight, battling for the cause, which to him seemed the "good" one, with a spirit and energy not inferior to his own. It was this fiery temperament which Cromwell was obliged to meet by evoking against it a spirit quite as fierce and more enduring. To the fervour of loyalty he opposed the fury of fanaticism—with what result history has recorded. But we have not here to do with what the noble marquis might have been,

Edward East, Sir Charles and Captain Ogle; Captains Dawson, R.E., Vetch, R.E., and Stothard, R.E.; Mr. Field, C.E., Mr. Trozetto, Professor Barlow, Mr. Gillespie, C.E. (New York); Professors Lewis and Everitt. The chair was opened by the Duke of Buccleuch taking the chair, and the Earl of Devon reading the Council's annual address, and a letter from Mr. Chadwick, in which he bore testimony "to the utility of the college and the efficiency of the pupils who had been engaged in the survey of the city of London. Their survey had been made use of by Sir H. De la Beche, of the Ordnance and geological surveys, when acting as a commissioner of the health of towns, and examining the surveyor of the City sewers." The prizes (handsomely bound books) were then handed to the several students selected by the examiners, by his Grace the President, with an appropriate exhortation, in the following order:—

Mathematics.—1st class (three prizes), Messrs. Kingsbury, Brown, and Arnold; 2d class (three prizes), Messrs. Woodfield, Coates, and King; 3d class (three prizes), Messrs. Stephenson, Hartman, and Morse

Physics.—1st prize, Mr. Kingsbury; 2d prize, Mr. Ibbetson; 3d prize, Mr. Bayne.

Chemistry.—Certificate, Mr. Kingsbury; 1st prize, Mr. Sterling; 2d prize, Mr. Bridgeman.

Geology.—1st prize, Mr. Curtis; 2d prize, Mr. Holmes; 3d prize, Mr. Chattock; hill drawing, Mr. A. J. Mahon.

Civil Engineering.—1st prize, 1st class, Mr. Curtis; 2d prize, 1s class, Mr. Kingsbury; 1st prize, 2d class, Mr. Coates; 2d prize, 2d class, Mr. Hume.

Machinery.—1st prize, Mr. Hill; 2d prize, Mr. Devenish; 3d prize, Mr. Wunder

Landscape Drawing.—1st class, 1st prize, Mr. A. S. Mahon; 1st class, 2d prize, Mr. Jenkins; 2d class, 1st prize, Mr. Morse; 2d class, 2d prize, Mr. Castell.

Linear Perspective.—Mr. Minchin.

Geography.—1st class, 1st prize, Mr. C. H. Brown; 2d class, 1st prize, Mr. Stephenson.

Map Drawing.—Mr. Stileman.

French Language.—1st class, Mr. Woodfield; 2d class, Mr. Shilbito; 3d class, Mr. Morse.

German Language.—1st class, Mr. Fraser; 2d class, Mr. Charsley; 3d class, Mr. Allan.

Head Master in Civil Engineering.—Mr. Ibbetson.

Good Conduct.—Mr. W. Coates.

The noble president then addressed the company and students upon the objects and advantages of the institution, and was received with continued cheers.

The company next inspected the workshops, and examined the drawings and models, and some very neatly-executed engines (by students) from one to six-horse power. A great number of elegantly-dressed ladies honoured the College with their presence, and promenaded the grounds; and the day's proceedings terminated very agreeably with a déjeûné, liberally provided by the Council.

BOXTON.—There has been a great improvement in the weather, and the town has assumed a very gay appearance. The number of arrivals encourages the anticipation that Boxton will be honoured with much company during the season. Among those who have lately taken up their residence here are the Right Hon. Viscount and Viscountess Beresford; Sir George Crewe, Lady, and family; Lady Trimbleston; the Hon. William Trench; the Hon. Richard Trench; the Hon. A. B. Hope, Lady Mildred Hope, Hon. Miss Hope; Sir Duncan Cameron; General Sir Evan Lloyd; Major Gordon; and Colonel Hickin.

EPSOM.—The commission for the county of Surrey was opened on Monday last. As usual, before the long vacation, the cause list is very heavy, there being no less than 109 causes entered for trial, 17 of which are special jury cases. On the Crown side there are 20 prisoners for trial, but nearly all he cases are of a trifling description.

IPSWICH.—At a large and influential meeting held on Tuesday, in the Town Hall of Ipswich, the mayor in the chair, it was resolved to take active steps to establish the Eastern Counties Railway from Colchester to Norwich, by way of Ipswich, with branches to Harwich Harbour and Bury St. Edmund's. Mr. Braff, assistant engineer to the Eastern Counties Railway, gave a full description of the proposed line of railway, and stated that the work may be completed at an average of £16,000 per mile, including stations. The length of the proposed line and branches is 84 miles.

LIVERPOOL.—The members of the New Share Brokers' Association, of Liverpool, have adopted a resolution to close the New Stock Exchange at two o'clock on Saturday. The bankers are ready to adopt the custom of shutting at one on Saturday instead of Friday.

SALISBURY.—DEATH FROM FRIGHTENING.—An inquest was held at Salisbury on the body of George Babbage, a young man who came by his death in consequence of a series of fights, or rather scuffles, at a public-house in West Wordsworth. The evidence, which was conflicting, related the circumstances in which the several squabbles originated, which, however, possessed no feature of interest, and the jury at length found a verdict of "Manslaughter" against the deceased's opponent.

THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH'S DESPATCHES.—A discovery has been recently made, the interest of which it is not possible to overrate, although the extent of its historical value has only hitherto been partially ascertained. In a house in the town of Woodstock there had been lying for many years eighteen large boxes, supposed to contain deeds appertaining to the Marlborough estates, whose dust nobody had ever thought of disturbing, and the existence of which was probably unknown to Archdeacon Coxe, when he had the ransacking of all the documentary stores of Blenheim. These boxes have been lately opened and examined, and they have been found to contain the whole of the correspondence and despatches of the Duke of Marlborough during the several periods of war of our accession. A large portion of them—the letters to Prince Eugene and all the foreign sovereigns, princes, and generals—are in the French language. They form a collection very much resembling the compilation of Colonel Gurwood, and the partial examination which there has been time to bestow has been just enough to prove the very great interest of the matter they contain. We understand that these precious and important documents have been confided, by the present Duke of Marlborough, to the custody and inspection of Sir George Murray.

A violent conflagration burst out on Sunday morning, about nine o'clock, in the convent of the Thérésiennes, at Ghent, and destroyed the church and a part of the building itself. The nuns assembled together in one of the rooms, which soon caught fire, and though implored by the persons who came forward to lend assistance to fly and save their lives, they one and all declared their determination to remain faithful to their vow of seclusion, and refused to leave the precincts of the convent. The firemen on their arrival directed all their efforts to save the room where the nuns were remaining, and speedily succeeded in their endeavours. The flames were at last got under, but not without considerable destruction of property. Fortunately no life was lost.

A novel mode of advertising for a wife has been adopted by an inhabitant of Banbury, Oxfordshire:—A Daguerreotype portrait of the gentleman is placed in a shop, with the following notice underneath:—" Wanted a female companion to the above: apply within."

POPULAR PORTRAITS.—No. XLI.

THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

The family of the Pagets, to which the Marquis of Anglesey belongs, is both ancient and honourable; the first Baron Paget was a distinguished politician during the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Mary; a period during which he could have been put to the most subtle tests of the courtier and the statesman, to maintain his position during changes so rapid that they almost "ebbed and flowed by the moon." A great deal of the courtier has descended to the present head of the family: he unites great elegance to undaunted courage and gallantry in the field, where he has been often tried and never found wanting. In the days of Charles I. he would have been a perfect cavalier: he is one of those aristocratic figures that would have made a fine subject for the pencil of Vandyke; he would have worn his rapier and scarf, and supported his rich velvet cloak in the newest fashion of the time, and not have scorned perhaps, what Prynn the Puritan termed "the unloveliness of love-locks;" and many a grim-visaged and closely-cropped Roundhead would have sneered at the elegant "malignant," making the not uncommon mistake of confounding a taste for refinement and display with an effeminacy of character. And in the "Mall" or by the side of "Rosamond's Pond" the error might have been excusable: it is only times of trial that reveal men's inward qualities; the old Ironsides would have corrected his curiosity at Worcester or Naseby, where he would have seen the rich cloak and the graceful plume in the middle of the fight, battling for the cause, which to him seemed the "good" one, with a spirit and energy not inferior to his own. It was this fiery temperament which Cromwell was obliged to meet by evoking against it a spirit quite as fierce and more enduring. To the fervour of loyalty he opposed the fury of fanaticism—with what result history has recorded. But we have not here to do with what the noble marquis might have been, had he been cast upon other times, but what he actually is at present. He is, then, the son of the first Earl of Uxbridge, and, as he was born in 1768, has reached a good old age; but time seems to have dealt very leniently with him, in spite of wounds and the fatigue and wear and tear of military service. As a proof of his bodily vigour, there is not a better equestrian existing: his seat has all the firmness of the cavalry officer, but relieved from military stiffness by that ease which more perhaps belongs to the gentleman. His "noble horsemanship" has often been the theme of admiration. He entered the army on the 11th of March, 1795, when his commission as lieutenant is dated. His promotion was of that rapid description often met with in colonels d'autre fois, especially if born of a noble family, for he was made captain in about three weeks from being a lieutenant, and in less than two months after that a major. Before the end of the following year he was colonel! This is quick work. Let us hope that the path has not often been so smoothed to men far less deserving of honours, for there can be no doubt that the marquis is a gallant and able soldier. He commanded a corps of cavalry at Waterloo, his own regiment being the 7th Light Dragoons. During the whole of that terrible day he did good service; and it was in leading on his regiment in the last charge on the French that almost the last gun fired by the broken and flying enemy carried away the gallant soldier's leg. His country has been by no means ungrateful to him. He is a K.G., a G.C.B., and a G.C.H. He has twice been Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, with all the honours and emoluments of vice-royalty at his command. He is lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Anglesey, constable of Carnarvon Castle, colonel of the 7th Hussars, a general in the army, ranger of Snowdon Forest, and vice-admiral of North Wales and of Carmarthenshire—the last a post of which the necessity may be questioned. We do not well see how a fleet or a vice-admiral could act against "Rebecca and her daughters." His lordship's son has been called to the House of Peers, by his father's barony of Paget. The seats of the family are Beaudesert, Staffordshire; Staibridge Park, Dorsetshire: and Plasnewydd, Anglesey. There is about to be presented to this distinguished nobleman a magnificent plate testimonial, of which we shall, next week, present our readers with a spirited engraving.

PORTRAIT OF THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

SPORTS OF ENGLAND.—No. VI.

GROUSE SHOOTING.

AUGUST the twelfth is the day fixed in the British sportsman's calendar for the commencement of the pursuit of the grouse, which, in his general estimation, says Captain Lacy, "if not deemed the very fox-hunting of shooting, indisputably occupies a very high place, and most deservedly so, whether we consider the extreme beauty, elegance, and gameness of this truly British bird itself; its deep, rich plumage, so charmingly in harmony with the lovely heather it dwells among, whose tender tops it crops for support, and under whose friendly fringed shade it cowers for protection; or whether we turn to its native haunts, whose dreariness it enlivens and ennobles—the isolated majestic heights in some of the most romantic parts of our highly-favoured isle—we are alike induced to regard it with esteem and admiration. Besides, grouse-shooting is not only the most laborious of all shooting, but is a science in itself."

It is universally admitted that grouse are becoming generally more scarce every year in the northern counties of England, where formerly they were wont to abound. This may be attributed to various causes: as the increased facility of reaching the moors, and of forwarding game thence, afforded by steamers and railroad conveyance; thus, in the daily papers of the past week, we find the annexed corroborative announcement:—

GROUSE SHOOTING.—The following steam-ships sailed on Saturday night for Scotland, with nearly full complements of passengers, chiefly sportsmen, with their horses, dogs, &c., on their way to the grouse shooting, which commences on Saturday next, the 12th inst.: viz., the Dundee, Perth, and London Shipping Company's steam-ship London, for Dundee; the General Steam Navigation Company's ship Leith, and the London, Leith, Edinburgh, and Glasgow Shipping Company's steam-ship Royal William, both for Leith; and the Aberdeen Steam Navigation Company's ship City of Aberdeen, for Aberdeen.

Next to the above facilities, are the improvements in guns and shooting; the increased daring maraudings of poachers, who scour the whole country some days previous to, as well as after the 12th. Add to these the facts that, in February and the early part of March, many brace of grouse are shot to order by poachers, as they are then in best feather for stuffing; and that no game is more poached out of season, particularly during the first three months of the year, than grouse.

Grouse shooting in general, and on a subscription moor in particular, is a very different sort of thing in England to what it is in many parts of the Highlands, where the best sport of the kind in the known world is unquestionably to be obtained; "though even," says Captain Lacy, "that varies very materially in different districts; so much so, that it behoves an English shooting party to have better authority than a mere advertisement before they agree to pay a heavy rent for grouse shooting quarters, or 'shootings,' and especially if the intention be to take them on a lease: for, though the hills be represented as abounding with game—the burns and rivers as swarming with trout and salmon, with a plentiful sprinkling of roe, red deer, cocks, and wild-fowl, by way of a refreshing change—the reality is often found to fall not a little short of the glowing description. Moreover, the complaint of late years alleged against the mountain lairds, of not taking sufficient pains to keep a good stock of game on their grounds, is, in general, but too well founded.

GROUSE SHOOTING.

"All dogs for grouse shooting should, at all times, be particularly steady; not a syllable should be required to be spoken to them, but all done by hand-work, unless the whistle be occasionally used as a signal for them to turn, grouse being the most sensitive and the soonest disturbed of all game.

The approaching season is very promising. "We understand," says the Aberdeen Journal, "that the prospects for the sportsmen are excellent upon all but the very highest grounds, where the severe frosts of the early part of June had caused great loss at that critical season. A second hatching was not unfrequent, and hence there will necessarily be a good deal of disparity among the young birds, and a more than usual proportion of cheepers."

In the "Sporting Review" for the present month is a well-timed "Gossip on Grousing and its Associations," by one who has often trodden the moors, and who states the love of the sport to be extending rather than diminishing:—

There is no department of the chase wherein the gun is used as the instrument of capture that approaches, much less equals, it in the quantity of excitement, and of positive enjoyment it affords its followers. The tawny tiger, it is said, once having tasted human blood, thirsts for it evermore, and thereafter is dissatisfied with ignobler prey; the modern shooter, it is known, once having rejoiced in a perfect day's grousing, from that time forward places it highest among his affections, sets a lesser value upon all other kinds of fowling, and naturally seeks occasion for renewing the pleasure as frequently as he may in future.

GROUSE TENT.

Again, whether you choose Scotland, Ireland, the north of England, or Wales, for the scene of your sanguinary exploits, the total change, not merely in scenery, but in the manners, customs, and language of the people, is equally striking and delightful. Accustomed, probably, to town life—or it may be, to the rich but monotonous champaigns of the southern counties—with what vivid emotion do you greet the sky-piercing summit of Ben Lomond, of Skiadaw, or Helvellyn, of Snowdon, or Cader Idris

The red grouse of the principality are notoriously the largest existing. In the south, good red grouse-shooting will be found in the counties of Glamorgan, Carmarthen, and Radnor; in those of Cardigan and Brecon, excellent; also, in Merioneth and Montgomery, in the north. To those sportsmen from the midland and southern parts, with whom brevity of time and distance is a consideration, we would heartily recommend an excursion to Wales, in the full assurance that they will not be disappointed in their object.

Among the equipments for grousing, Edgington's newly-invented tent is entitled to notice, for the success of the contrivance as "a local habitation." It is usually made of stout striped canvas, lined, and eight feet square; and when set up has the very commodious appearance in the next engraving represented.

COLLEGE FOR CIVIL ENGINEERS, PUTNEY.—See preceding page.

IRELAND AND THE IRISH.

BEGGAR-WOMAN AND CHILDREN.

Our attention having been repeatedly drawn of late, by several correspondents, to the social condition of the sister country, with a view to the pictorial illustration of its multicoloured phases, we have procured the annexed series of sketches, which, we are persuaded, will be equally interesting to our English and Irish readers. Before proceeding to their details, we should observe that the several sketches, graphic and descriptive, are the result of recent tours made by the artists and authors.

First, stands impersonated before you in the rags, wretchedness, and recklessness of

IRISH POVERTY!

Do not say "hence," but look her straight in the face, and hear her tale, whilst she tells it in the meek sadness of a breaking heart. The time is come for you, Christian England, to do so, for she is beginning to appeal not so much to your pity as to your peace of mind.

The Irish beggar-woman! Who that has ever seen or heard ever can forget her? Wan, wasted, woebegone, squalid beyond description, she says not unto Jacoby, "Give me children, or I die!" And how many of the rich Rachels of womankind would not give half of what they are worth in this world for even one of those dear suffering infants—one on poor Molly's back, and the other at her breast—her first and tenderest care, who are, as she tells you, "crying with the hunger, and coaxing their guardian angel to soften your heart." Look at Molly's firstborn. He seems half sad, and yet "he's a dra'l boy, every inch of him." He, poor fellow, is addicted to a remarkably spare style of regimen. Give him a potato, and if he is not happy, he is at least content. He once had the audacity to suggest to his mother that a grain of salt would be, in his opinion, a great improvement to the national esculent, "if he could only get it." "Cock you up with dainties, you young vagabond; is it after earning the gallows for yourself you'd be?—the next you'll be after wanting is a glass of whisky to wash it down!" Paddyeen (little Paddy) hears this and every other species of rap and repartee with philosophy. Throw a copper coin down there on the road side, and he'll go through an Irish jig or a hornpipe that would make Perot bite his lip; or twitch the delicate nerves of Taglioni, and beat the Polonaise, the Pas de Basque, the Pirouette, or the Bolero, for it is a wild essence of them all confounded together. Paddyeen's is literally the power, if it be not the poetry, of motion. He does not require your music or your foreign airs. He is his own piper—a sufleur of surpass ng sweetness, with a wild curl in his little waistle as he gives you one of his wildest airs that you may in vain try to equal, although you have in your day and in any part of England whistled at the cart's tail or in the shafts of the plough. Dancing through his destiny, therefore, not wresting with his lot, till the "prima lanuigo," first down of manhood appears upon his chin; take care he don't then dance to another tune and make somebody pay the piper. Rock or Spartacus, a midnight legislator, or a rebellious slave in the open day—look to him in time, for you have neglected him too long. Look to him, especially you Irish landlords, whose very existence now depends on his moral and social amelioration. His condition, as the Premier of England has said, is "a question of morals, not of laws;" and a late Under-Secretary for Ireland said not long ago that "property has its duties as well as its rights." Do you deny the truth of the appeal, and dare you still call on English power and the majesty of the laws to keep up your system? Where is the husband of that wretched, houseless wanderer from door to door—the father of those "young barbarians"—where is he? He is in England, reaping and mowing to earn you seven times the value of his little patch of ground that he may keep the hovel of a homestead which is upon it over his family during the hard winter. This must be given up, if whilst away his wife and children cannot get enough to support life, and should present themselves at the gates of the union workhouse. Not a penny of outdoor relief! And, if they give up their little all, what a fate awaits them within those places of CONNEMARA CABIN.

CONNAUGHT MAN.

"Some natural tears they drop, but wipe them soon;
The world is all before them, where to choose
Their place of rest, and Providence their guide:
They, hand in hand, with wandering steps and slow,
Through Erin take their solitary way."

Those peasant girls, and the Connemara cabin are features in the same picture of Irish poverty. The latter is on the same scale of comfort as the hut of the Esquimaux, or the wigwam of the North American Indian. To have a regularly-built chimney in one end of a hole in the roof, would be to let all the smoke out, which is not the object of the inmates, or, in other words, it would not suit their purpose. They require a portion of it, at least to warm the cabin, to keep out the cold air from the chinks in the mud walls, and to season their fitch of bacon. In that familiar-looking porker, which seems "hail fellow, well met!" with the little boy who is driving him in out of the cold, behold the "spen gregis," the real hope of the family: the bonneen (pig) is the Irish peasant's mainstay. He goes far, if not the whole way, to pay the rent. When we mentioned a flitch of bacon, let not the English reader imagine that the miserable occupants of the cabin "live up" to such luxury. The most they do is to hang it in the chimney, and let it drip on their potatoes, each poor creature in turn pointing a potato to receive the

LEINSTER COTTAGE.

POOR CHILDREN.

For tho' they love woman and golden store,
Sir Knight, they love honour and virtue more."
The contrary has turned out, of course, now and then of—
"Blessed for ever was she who relied On Erin's honour and Erin's pride."

That Connaught man, with the bonnet-like cauheen, the short pipe, curly whiskers, and over-hanging brow, is a dangerous-looking Lothario to trust in your meadows or corn-fields after dark, and looks very like a gay deceiver.

PEASANT GIRLS.

The cottage, in the doorway of which an old woman is spinning, and around which are pigs, poultry, and goats, or cabin it still must be called, when we recollect the general cleanliness and comfort of the cottage homes of England, may be supposed to be in one of the best districts of Leinster, the metropolitan province of Ireland. It is of the same structure and economy now as the cabins were upwards of thirty years ago when Mr. Wakefield visited Ireland. In his work, one of the most comprehensive and impartial ever written on the state of the sister country, he describes the roofs of the cabins in Westmeath without ceiling, supported by two or three props. "The walls," he adds, "were constructed of mud or stones, and sometimes of a mixture of both. The roof is formed by two or three couples, over which are laid, in a cross direction, the boughs of trees not stripped of their leaves. These are covered with turf, which is protected from the effects of the weather by a thatching of straw. A hole in the roof gives venting to the smoke, and the bare ground is the floor and the hearth. A hay-band so neatly twisted as to be almost equal to a tow-rope, is stretched across the cabin, nearly over the fire-place, for hanging the linen to dry; but as the place is generally involved in thick smoke, it may be readily conceived that it will acquire little improvement in colour. A cat and two or three dogs are commonly lying round the fire. An iron pot, two or three stools of the rudest workmanship, a bed deal table, a dresser with a few plates and dairy vessels, are all the utensils and furniture of the family."

Thompson, in his "Survey of Meath," remarks that the clay for the walls and roof is taken from the spot on which the cottage is raised, leaving the surface of the floor and the ground immediately about the walls the lowest part, and of course subject to receive all the surroundin damp; "so much so," he says, "that I have often gone into a cabin and seen a hole dug in the floor to receive the water coming in at the door or under the foundation, from whence it might be baled with greater ease when collected. On this damp floor the family most commonly sleep, generally without a bedstead, none of them having a loft except in town cabins, where the ground for building on is more valuable."

The goat is found to be of profit to the poor cabin-keeper in some districts of Ireland, especially in the north. Sir Charles Coote, in his "Survey of Armagh," states that the milk of the goat, whose food is never taken into account, is equal to one-fourth of a cow's, and that it is richer and exceedingly wholesome. Mr. Tighe, in his "Survey of Kilkenny," states that these animals are kept by many small farmers, but not in flocks, and that a few were to be found among the dairies in the Welsh mountains (a district in that county); and he adds that "the milk of six goats is said to be equal in quantity to that of one cow." Mr. Sampson, in his "Survey of Derry," says with respect to that county, that "there are no herds of goats in the mountains, but they are found individually among the habitations of the lowland poor. You frequently see the milch-goat tied by the head while she browses on the quickest of the land! He has a friend, however, a neighbour; her owner has no hedge—no land! The milk is divided for five or his little ones when he has the shegoat. The kid is divided for five weeks with the kid; the kid is sold as venison, and the goat remains the best succour under Heaven. Where there are many the custom is to fold them at night and keep off the kids, then milk them in the morning, and them at night and keep off the kids, then milk them in the morning, and for his little ones when he has the shegoat. The kid is divided for five weeks with the kid; the kid is sold as venison, and the goat remains the best succour under Heaven. Where there are many the custom is to fold them at night and keep off the kids, then milk them in the morning, and admit the natural client for the rest of the day. In high pastures much must be made of their milk, and their browsing costs nothing."

The cottage of the better class of Irish peasants is to be seen here and there through the provinces of Munster and Leinster; very rarely, indeed, there through the provinces of Munster and Leinster; very rarely, indeed, in Connaught, but chiefly in the north of Ireland. Do not let us be carried away by the usually accepted notion that the more comfortable appearance of the peasantry in the northern province is owing to difference of religion, it being called Protestant Ulster. The reason is, simply, because they have better landlords. The Irish society, for instance (certain guilds of the London corporation), to whom James I. gave the territories of the O'Neils, O'Donnells, and other vanished northern chieftains for the propagation of protestantism, have ever been justly considered the best landlords of Ireland. Independently of this consideration, the greater part of the lower orders certainly are of the old faith of their country. Fifty years ago there was not a Catholic inhabitant within the walls of Londonderry, called the Maiden City, from the gallant and triumphant defence which Governor Walker and the "Prentice Boys" made against James II.'s besieging force. The majority of the inhabitants are now Roman Catholics, including, all those who live in the streets built beyond the walls and ramparts in later years. The small farmer or better class Irish peasant in the better districts—such as the north, to which we have thus made especial allusion, or elsewhere, in Meath, Westmeath, Kildare, Kilkenny, some parts of Limerick, Cork, &c.—is a shrewd, hard-working, sober, honest being; high spirited, hospitable, and happily and peaceably inclined, so long as he considers himself treated. If you treat him with particular kindness you may command his life. From the close of small farmers not a few of the Catholic clergy of Ireland have sprung; and their constant and kind intercourse with it, independently of the old feeling of veneration which attaches to them, is the main reason of their popularity and the main spring of their power. Of the wretched absentees—you cearers of the soil by whole families and tribes—ye moral exterminators—for the time is come for all parties in England to call you by your proper name—if you knew the affections you trample on and destroy, the rich worth you throw away to add a hundred or two to your incomes, or to purchase an artificial importance, you would alter your plan, and try the soothing system. You—the richer and more fortunate property—its duties as well as its rights—you are now finding out that it has its real interests also. You would imitate the "live and let live" system which is acted up to between the English landlord and his tenant. You would get amongst those by the sweat of whose brow you live. You would admi-nister to their wants, and contribute to their happiness. You would learn the pleasure of doing good. You may even learn a wholesome moral lesson by going amongst the poor sometimes; they have rugged virtues which you might imitate sometimes with advantage. In their simple and touching stories your hearts may be edified, and your better nature drawn out:—

IDIOT AND MOTHER.

> "Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
> Their lowly joys, and destiny obscure;
> Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
> The short and simple annals of the poor."

GROUP OF CHILDREN.

The group of children claims particular attention. The description we have given of Padiyeen, the beggarwoman's son, may do for the boys, and yet we cannot chose but look for an instant at the chief figure in the foreground. Nothing can be more spirited—if "reckoning" the Irish call it more free from embarrassment, or more graceful. He stands and looks every inch of him a little man. His shirt, which in its best days was of a rough description, has gotten the doe-down by the wear and tear of experience. Its collar is flung dashingly open, as if to say, "there's a neck for you, my darlings." No white cravat, prim and starched, à la sous Lieutenant, stiffens that neck; no tight Byron collar disgraces the sponge, in general, of our English bobbledehoys—trains it prematurely to exterminate seed-roses. His nether habiliment, like those of Kip Van Winkle's boys in all primitive days, cut out of a pair of his father's cast off pantaloons. Full of holes are the young rapparee's indispensables, not for any purpose whatever, not even for ventilation, as some town bloods bore the roofs of their night hats to let out the ascending fumes of their wine; and rent to the very verge of decorum; "torn and flying," like "Freedom's banner," described by Jerrold. But the young patriot does not "nail his colours to the mast," to point out what he has done; nor for the disgusting exhibition of his last scrimmage by the river's marge, or the edge of a bog-hole; and his right hand is obliged to pay obeisance to the conventionalities of society. Not so with the Irish pauper urchin in proverbial, and his talent for waggery and mischief is of the "gamin de Paris" kind, and something more. He is of merry blood, and was born a forceur. "Did he up to that thief of a magpie," said a young rogue of this description, on finding out that the "gazza ladra" of his father's garret had taken away some of his marbles and certain of his little sister's pawky rags. He watched his opportunity, and when the bird next left her nest on which she had been hatching, he climbed up the tree and took her eggs away. These he very quickly boiled, and, climbing up again, replaced them in the nest. As magpies, although clever birds in their way, and up to a thing or two, do not exactly throw minute time glasses about them, nor patronize egg saucepans, the one in question was totally unconscious, on her return, of the fatal blow which had been given to her phlogentive expectations. "They'll be the first eggs when they're hatched," the little chuckler used to say, for many a day, as he watched the poor unconscious bird patiently endeavouring to bring about which was not to be. There is an anecdote told somewhere of Voltaire that, when very young, he wrote the following epigram on a statue of Idleness, a little boy with a piece of bread to his mouth, which stood in the school-room:—

> "Tu qui semper edis,
> Dic mihi quando bibes?"

Which we translate:

> Thou that art always eating, tell
> When you'll have something to drink as well?

Padyeen eats and drinks whenever he can, and as well as a hand-to-mouth existence will let him; but if you ask him when he works or goes to school, his answer is "when he can't help it." That is not his fault, however. Change the system you have long observed towards him, and his country and his condition will be changed. If he appears the portrait of idleness at ease, his sister, poor child, with the basket of turf on her back, under which she bends, is the reverse of the picture. Her eyes glisten like sloes in her patronne

One of the deepest stains which attach to civilization is the treatment, or rather maltreatment, of the aboriginal natives of the continents or islands on which the so-called civilized man has found his influence or established his superiority. From the time of Pizzaro to the present, the footsteps of European power on the American or African shores have been marked by injustice, cruelty, and blood. England, as the holder of the most extensive foreign possessions, we fear, must bear a proportionate share of the disgrace, as the mode of her acquisition and retention of her territories has afforded no exception to the general rule. The perfidy and injustice by which our west Indian empire has been obtained is notorious, and a matter of history. We fear that in the South Seas we are forming the material of a record not more creditable. In the Colonial Gazette of last week there appears a correspondence between Dr. Hodgskin, in whose house, we believe, meetings of the committee of the Aborigines Protection Society have been held, and Dr. J. B. Thomson, who had gone out as surgeon-superintendent of the Duchess of Argyle, chartered for the emigrants by the New Zealand Commissioners. The latter gentleman speaks strongly of his disappointment, after his recent visit to New Zealand and New South Wales, at the manner in which those poor unconscious and defenceless creatures have been treated—in many instances defrauded of their just rights; and, on the slightest aggression in their self-defence, pursued, persecuted, and shot at like so many dogs. The same gentleman adds his belief of the prevalence of a similar system, not only in the South Seas, as he could learn from authentic and disinterested parties, all over the globe. This, however, is but a small portion of a mass of incontegtable evidence demonstrating the same fact. Poor victims of the unjust usurpation which we, in our self-complacency, call the progress of civilization, the aboriginal natives pay dearly for our presence on their shores. Forced or tricked out of the possession of the lands which they, however rudely, cultivated, they obtain from Europeans only famine and death, habits of dissipation and idleness, and new and aggravated penalties of vice. It is a fact that diseases of European importation are wasting their diminished tribes even more rapidly than starvation or the musket. Of what avail can the labours of the missionary be amongst a people so treated? Of what avail to place before the eyes of the attracted savage pictures of religious beauty, of tranquil piety and unstained holiness, when in our conduct he can trace but the foul lineaments of rapine, turbulence, and crime?

Surely the Government of this country ought to adopt, or the people of this country ought to force the country to adopt, some effectual means of restraining the bad passions of our countrymen, and of exhibiting ourselves to the aborigines of our colonies at length in an aspect of mercy and humanity. The system of protectorships at present adopted has proved utterly a failure. Should not, then, some more effective expedient be adopted, and, if we will spread our power, and our views, and our civilization over the greater portion of the globe, let it no longer be by the attestation of the whole world at the expense of national character?

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

WINDSOR, Sunday.—This morning her Majesty and Prince Albert attended divine service in the Royal Chapel in the Park. In the afternoon her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the whole of the distinguished visitors and suite, rode on the grand promenade on the Terrace. The bands of the 1st Life Guards and Coldstream Guards were in attendance, and the assemblage was very numerous. The Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, appeared at the windows of the Victoria Tower.

The KING of Hanover, accompanied by the Duke of Gloucester, left town on Saturday by the Birmingham Railway for Wolverton, and from thence proceeded to Stowe, the seat of the Duke of Buckingham, on a visit.

His Royal Highness Prince Alexander of Orange, second son of the King of Holland, arrived in London on Sunday from the Hague.

MONDAY.—This morning her Majesty and Prince Albert walked out in the pleasure-grounds.

On Tuesday morning, at half-past eight, the Court proceeded from the Castle to Slough, and thence to town. Previous to going to Buckingham Palace, her Majesty and Prince Albert accompanied Duke Ferdinand and the Prince and Princess Augustus of Saxe Coburg through Kennington, the Camberwell-road, and on to Woolwich. The Queen, on alighting from her carriage, was received by the Earl of Jersey, Master of the Horse, who conducted her Majesty and Prince Albert to the royal barge, which conveyed the illustrious party to the Pluton French war steamer. Her Majesty and her suite having come on board the Pluton, and, after taking leave of their illustrious relatives, returned to Woolwich in the royal barge, attended by their suite. The Pluton left for the French coast, and her Majesty and Prince Albert and suite immediately took their departure from Woolwich for Deptford Dockyard. At Deptford the Queen went on board the new royal steam-yacht (Victoria and Albert), and was received by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, who attended her Majesty and Prince Albert during their inspection of the vessel. Her Majesty and Prince Albert and suite, on leaving the royal yacht, re-entered the royal carriages, and proceeded to town. Her Majesty and Prince Albert were received at Buckingham Palace by the Vice-Chamberlain and Sir Henry Wheatley. The Queen held a Court at four o'clock for the reception of his Royal Highness Prince Alexander of the Netherlands. Her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured the performance of the Italian Opera with their presence in the evening.

The KING of Hanover arrived in town from Stowe on Tuesday.

WEDNESDAY.—The Queen and Prince Albert took their usual walk in the forenoon in the Royal Gardens of Buckingham Palace. At one o'clock her Majesty and Prince Albert left town, in a carriage and four, for Windsor Castle. A party of the Royal Horse Guards, commanded by the Earl of March, escorted her Majesty from Buckingham Palace to the terminus of the Great Western Railway at Paddington, from whence the royal party took their departure by a special train for Slough, and arrived at Windsor at two o'clock.

On Wednesday evening the King of Hanover gave an assembly at his residence in St. James's Palace, which was brilliantly and numerously attended, his Majesty, as Duke of Cumberland, having issued invitations to between 300 and 600 of the principal nobility and gentry.

His Excellency Count Brunnow, the Russian Ambassador at the Court of St. Petersburg, and Lady Stuart de Rothsay, are expected to return to this country in the course of the ensuing month. It is said his Lordship does not intend to return to St. Petersburgh to resume his diplomatic functions. We understand the appointment was offered to a Noble Marquis, but declined.

The Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel had a lengthened interview with his Royal Highness Prince Albert on Tuesday afternoon at Buckingham Palace. We understand the right hon. baronet does not leave town, for Drayton Manor, until the close of the month

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

The Rev. Robert Montgomery, M.A., minister of St. Jude's Church, Gassgow, has been appointed to the ministry of Percy Chapel, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, and will enter upon his duties on the first Sunday in October.

The Rev. E. T. Smith, curate of St. James's, Bermondsey, has been appointed chaplain to the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead.

The Rev. John Davis has been appointed chaplain of her Majesty's gaol of Newgate

The present worthy and venerable incumbent of Bramford Speke, Exeter (the Rev. John Mudge), and his predecessor (the Rev. T. Johnson), have held the above vicarage and fulfilled its important duties for a continuous period of 103 years.

The Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol has instituted the Rev. Henry Snow, M.A., to the vicarage of Bibury, Gloucestershire, vacant by the death of the Rev. Berkeley Lord Stuart de Rothsay, the British Ambassador at the Court of St. Petersburg, and Lady Stuart de Rothsay, are expected to return to this country in the course of the ensuing month. It is said his Lordship does not intend to return to St. Petersburgh to resume his diplomatic functions. We understand the appointment was offered to a Noble Marquis, but declined.

The Rev. W. J. Wise, M.A., has been instituted by the Lord Bishop of Worcester to the vicarage of Grandsbrough, Warwickshire.

The Rev. Henry Bandinel has licensed the Rev. Wm. Maughan, B.A., curate and evening lecturer of St. John's, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, to the ministry of the district church of St. James's, Benwell, on the nomination of the Rev. Wright, incumbent of St. John's, Newcastle.

The Rev. John George Walker, M.A., of Marischal College, Aberdeen, and licentiate in theology of the University of Durham, has been presented by the Rev. J. Dixon Clarke to the perpetual curacy of Belford, in the diocese of Durham.

The Rev. High Davies Owen, D.D., head master of Beaumaris Free Grammar School, has been licensed by the Lord Bishop of Bangor to the perpetual curacies of Benllech and Llanfaes, vacant by the preferment of the Rev. High Jones, M.A., to the rectory of Llandegfan, near Beaumaris. Patron, Sir Richard Bulkeley Williams Bulkeley, Bart., M.P.

The Rev. Walter Alford, M.A., has been licensed by the Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells to the perpetual and augmented curacy of Muchelney, Somersetshire.

The new Church of St. John the Evangelist, Marchwood, Hants, was consecrated on the 1st of August by the Bishop of Winchester, who has pronounced it the finest building he has consecrated. It has been endowed and built by H. Holloway, Esq., of Marchwood Lodge, Southampton, who appears to have given full power for the exercise of the talent of its gifted architect, J. M. Dericke, Esq., of Oxford.

COUNTRY NEWS

BIRMINGHAM.—A most interesting ceremony connected with laying the first stone of a new school for the education of the children of the Jewish persuasion, took place in Birmingham on Wednesday last, which affords great proof of the growing spirit of liberality of the times in which we live. The stone was laid by Sir Moses Montefiore, the mayor and other municipal authorities assisting at the ceremony.

BRIGHTON.—A serious affray took place between the soldiers belonging to the 7th Dragoon Guards and the Brighton police on the race-course at the close of the sports on Friday last; after a dreadful conflict, the parties were ultimately separated. The matter is to be made the subject of a rigorous judicial investigation.

CAMBRIDGE.—On Wednesday last the town and neighbourhood of Cambridge was visited with a storm of lightning, thunder, and hail, such as never has been seen by that best of all authorities, the oldest inhabitant, before. The town in the last-mentioned visitation has been sacked and plundered by a riotous assemblage, as all the houses having a north-eastern aspect have the glass bent out of the frames. The scene at the Pitt Press (University-office) has a pitiable appearance; thousands of panes of glass are demolished, the steam engine and machines being nearly surrounded, were covered with that brittle material; the engine fires were put out, and consequently all work suspended.

CHESHIRE.—Two brothers, of the name of Maddocks, were arrested on Sunday last on suspicion of having been concerned in the murder of Bailey, a few days since, Mr. Wilbraham's gamekeeper, at Cronton, on the borders of Delamere-forest.

IRELAND.

Her Majesty's steamers the Cyclops and Rhadamanthus have arrived in Kingstown Harbour, and will take part in the evolutions to be gone through by the Irish revenue cruisers on the 14th inst.

The Cork Examiner of the 1st says:—Mr. Rose Cox arrived at Dublin on Monday morning from New York. The fugitive treasurer of the corporation, Mr. Fine, had escaped into Texas, whither it was useless to pursue him, as the southern states of America do not recognise British jurisdiction.

At the weekly meeting of the Irish Repeal Association on Tuesday, it was stated by Mr. Steele that the editor of the New York Herald (James Gordon Bennett) wished to be introduced to the association. Mr. O'Connell observed, that a vile gazette was never published; and so the editor did not know. The Liberator said, that the present year should be a year of rest. No step would be taken in the Repeal movement. He would not then more fully advert to the formation of the Protection Association, to be composed of 300 gentlemen. His plans were not sufficiently matured for development, but everything would be done consistently with the law. (Hear.)

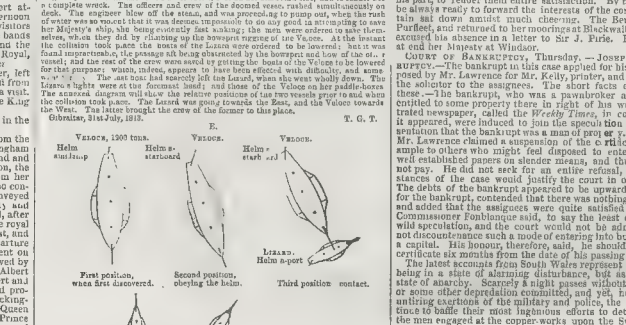
An adjourned meeting of the Repeal Association was held at the Corn Exchange on Tuesday, when the amount of rent received for the week was announced to be £1354 11s. 4d.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

TOTAL LOSS OF HER MAJESTY'S STEAMER LIZARD.

During the night of Sunday, or rather very early on the morning of Monday, the 24th July, when about twenty miles from Carthagena, a light was reported on the starboard bow, left, how of her Majesty's late steamer Lizard. According to Admiralty orders, the officer of the watch (Mr. Pasmore, master of steamers and vessels) put the helm of the Lizard a-port. The master, coming on deck at this moment, inquired if this step had been taken; on receiving an affirmative reply, he immediately ordered the helm to be put hard a-port, whilst the French steamer Veloce (as it afterwards proved to be) put her helm a-starboard, and, so keeping it, the Lizard was forcibly struck by the bow of the former on her larboard paddle-box, a little forward of the main shaft. The shock was such as to carry the Lizard, being so greatly inferior in size to the other vessel, over on her starboard side, and to render her a complete wreck. The officers and crew of the doomed vessel rushed simultaneously on deck. The engineer blew off the steam, and was proceeding to pump out, when the rush of water was so great that it was deemed impossible to do any good in attempting to save her Majesty's ship, she being evidently fast sinking. All the men were ordered to save themselves, when they did by climbing up the bowsprit rigging of the Veloce. At the instant the collision took place the boats of the Lizard were ordered to be lowered; but it was found impracticable, the passage aft being obstructed by the bowsprit and bow of the other vessel; and the rest of the crew were saved by getting the boats of the Veloce to be lowered for that purpose: which, indeed, appears to have been effected with difficulty, and some time after. The last man had scarcely left the Lizard, when she went wholly down. The Lizard's lights were on the foremast head; and those of the Veloce on her paddle-boxes. The annexed diagram will show the relative positions of the two vessels prior to and when the collision took place. The Lizard was going towards the East, and the Veloce towards the West. The latter brought the crew of the former to this place.

Gibraltar, 31st July, 1843. T. G. T.



The Montrose, Captain Lewis, arrived at Falmouth on Friday se'nnight bringing the usual despatches from the Peninsular ports. The Duke of Palmella, who has come to England to renew the tariff negotiations, was a passenger by this packet. The Tweed steam-ship from the West Indies arrived some day bringing the following passengers from Honduras:—Col. M'Donald, governor.—From Jamaica:—Commodore Hon. R. D. Boys, Mr. Bernard Shaw, Purpass, Mr. Hunter, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Sargent, Rev. Mr and Mrs. Hall and child, Mr. H. Armstrong, Rev. Mr. Abbott, Lieutenant Little, R.N., first Lieutenant of the Wiodsview, with despatches from the Pacific.—From Vera Cruz: Mr. J. Kelly, Mr. A. Scott, Mr. S. Platts, Lieut. J. Mansbridge, 3rd Light Dragoons, R.N. Mr. Joseph Stokes.—From St. Lucia: Mr. Master and Miss Miller. From St. Kitts. Mr. Uds.—From Trinidad: Dr. Lance.—From Guadaloupe: Mr. A. M. Rechard.—From Dominica: Mr Preddie.—From St. Thomas: Mr. and Mrs. Hall.—From Porto Rico: Mr. and Mrs. Bernaldi: Miss Harriet Stokes.—From Havanna: Mr. Lawrence Thompson, Mr. Henry Abrahams.—On freight, 945,500 dollars, 168 bales of cochineal.

Another of the unfortunate sufferers by the Pegasus was passed up by the steamer Vesta, from Newcastle, and put on shore at Hull himself. He is in the meagre state of the rest. If gentlemen are so disfigured as to render his identification impossible, on his person was found 13 5s. 6d. in silver, and 3d. in copper. The body has not been stripped, or otherwise plundered, probably he found on some part of his dress: but being in such a state of decomposition renders that operation almost impossible.

EAST INDIA SHIPPING.—Arrived at the Cape of Good Hope, the barque Mischief R. J. Downes, Liverpool to Bombay

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The present week has not earned for itself a white stone in the calendar of our national sport, but there are good things in prospect for the next. For the turtle there will be the Wednesday evening meeting, commencing the Monday; and for the yachter, the Royal Yacht Squadron regatta on Tuesday and Thursday. The weather, afloat, has been more propitious for sailing during the present week than it was the previous fortnight; it is to be hoped there may be a corresponding "lull" ashore. Rumour avers that it has been a little squally among the members of the distinguished club, whose rendezvous is at Cowes. The second R. Y. S Cup for schooners under 140 tons, for which the Flirt, the Peri, the Esmeralda, and the Gem were entered, and which was to have been run for on Friday the 4th inst., was postponed to Monday the 17th, and has since been abandoned, entirely, because the owner of the Flirt has taken dudgeon anent the sweepstakes for which his vessel was damaged on the 26th ult. However these little squalls may have a sunny week in anticipation, of which free records shall be written here; and, in the meanwhile, we shall deal with the business doing in the speculative line on some of the chief issues now in course of discussion at Tattersall's.

The meeting at Wolverhampton, which will extend on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, comprehends but one race of any public interest, namely, the Wolverhampton stakes handicap, for which a very considerable entry has been made, and seven-and-twenty have accepted. Of these only three are free of backing, namely, Queen of the Tyne, 4 yrs, 7st 7lb, at 5 to 2 agst her; Scaltern, a clear winner at Goodwood, 3 yrs, 7st 5lb, 4 to 1; and Rhoncuna, 4 yrs, 7st 5lb, 5 to 1, now said to be amiss, but saying goes for "small" in York. If an average field one of the lot which accepted come to the post, we should not back any of these to their market prices, except perhaps Scaltern, a fine clever nag—one fit to go. The betting on the Criterion, in the Newmarket Houghton Meeting, may seem somewhat difficult of interpretation. For it, they lay 6 to 4 on Rattan, agst the Ugly Buck, while for the Derby the odds are 6 to 4 on the Ugly Buck, agst Rattan. The reason for this is, that Rattan will be at home for the Criterion, which is always a point or two of odds in favour of a run, particularly a 2-year old. Should any of our readers have opened a book on next year's Derby, or have an intention so to do, we recommend caution in laying against any one of the horses now in the market. Among these we would instance Valerian, quoted at 50 to 1. He is one of Scott's lot, a G astlor colt of great promise, and will yet see less than 1st. We shall, however, have many occasions to deal with the Derby betting, and therefore adjourn its further consideration in favour of the St. Leger. In spite of all the winnings of former years, of all former years since its establishment, with the solitary exception of 1800, Champion's year, they lay 8 to 6 it is this time again to be won by the winner of the Derby—Cotherstone. This state of the market has ruined the betting; were it otherwise, the odds would be very likely to ruin the bettors. The St. Leger has now been in existence for sixty-five years, during which period the chance has only once turned up which they are now backing in at odds. That is not the way they regulate the odds at hazard, on the green baize instead of the green sward. The prices, beyond what we have said of them, do not call for more particular notice.

CHESTER REGATTA.—This very interesting annual festival took place on Thursday, when a larger number of boats than usual contended for the various prizes. Next week we shall insert a fine engraving of the pictures in steam, with details of the sport, which was very spirited. Our Chester friends should, therefore, give orders to their respective booksellers.

POSTSCRIPT.

WINDSOR, Thursday.—The Queen and Prince Albert promenaded this morning in the Home Park and Slopes. The royal party left the Castle in the afternoon for a drive: her Majesty, the Princess Royal, and the Duchess of Buccleuch were in a pony phaeton. Prince Albert was on horseback, accompanied by Prince Alexander of the Netherlands and the Duke of Buccleuch. The Duke of Wellington also rode out on horseback.

We regret to state that Major-General Sir Henry Hardinge died at his house, in Montague-square, on Wednesday last, at an advanced age.

The Rev. Dr. Pusey embarked at Dover for the Continent last week.

A troop of Royal Horse Artillery, accompanied by two pieces of ordnance, have left town for Leeds.

The championship of the Thames (amongst gentlemen) was ably contested for on Tuesday last, when Mr Chapman was the victor.

GRAND LAUNCH ON BOARD THE NEW ORIENTAL STEAM VESSEL, BENTINCK.—The directors of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company gave a splendid fête champêtre, on Thursday, on board their fine new and elegantly fitted steam-vessel, the Bentinck (an accurate description and drawing of which will be found in another page), during a trip down the river from Blackwall. The excellent band of Prince Albert, the Royal Scotch Fusilier Guards, under the superintendence of Mr. Blooze, was in attendance, and commenced a performance of several favourite national airs—including "Rule Britannia." The capacious and elegant saloon was laid out in an oriental style, and with much taste, by Mr. Withers, of Bakerstreet. Among the assembled we observed the following noblemen and gentlemen:—Lord Eglinton, the Earl of Lovelace, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Viscount Balgonie, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Sir William Pym, Mr. John Masterman, Mr. W. Cotton, F.R.S., Govern[illegible] Bank of England, Mr. Anderson (friend), M.P., Secretary of the Horticultural Society, Sir John Pirie, Dr. Bowring, M.P., Sir Peter Laurie, Mr. Alderman Moon, Major-General Riggs, Sir James Low Donnaldson, Lord John Pierrepont, Sir Andrew Lamport (Liverpool), and all the Scots Greys, Colonel Aird, &c. &c. After the usual loyal toasts had been given and responded to, Mr. L. Bennett gave the health of Capt. Kellock, the commander of the Bentinck, prefacing it by observing that when, away for hours the vessel would be on her voyage. She had to travel over one-half of the hemisphere to arrive at the scene of her operations, and he was sure that none of the company entertained a doubt of Capt. Kellock's success, and would feel a deep interest in realising of his triumphs. The hon. gentleman repeated the well-known verse—and gave "Health to Capt. Kellock, and success to the Bentinck." The toast was drunk with three cheers, and Capt. Kellock briefly returned his respects. The Peninsular and Oriental Company had leased the [illegible] for the voyage, and his should be speed, and nothing should be wanting on his part, to render them entire satisfaction. By night or by day he would be always ready to forward the interests of the company. The gallant captain then left amidst much cheering, the Bentinck "steaming about" on Purfleet, and returned to her moorings at Blackwall. The Duke of Buccleuch excused his absence in a letter to Sir J. Pirie. His Grace was obliged to attend the Queen at Windsor.

Weel may the boatie row;

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, Thursday. — JOSEPH WHITMORE'S BANKRUPTCY.—The bankrupt in this case applied for his certificate, and was opposed by Mr. Lawrence for creditors, and supported by Mr. Bere, for Mr. James, the solicitor to the assignees. The short facts elicited in evidence were these:—The bankrupt, who was a pawnbroker at Stockport, and who is entitled to the honourable appellation of "Honest Joseph," started a sort of illustrated newspaper, called the Weekly Times, in company with others, who, it appeared, were induced to join the speculation on the faith of the representations that the bankrupt was a man of wealth. It was on a sort of these grounds Mr. Lawrence claimed a suspension of the certificate, in order to set an example to others who might feel disposed to enter into rivalry with other well-established periodicals on similar terms, and thus bring debts they could not pay. He did not seek for an entire refusal, but thought the circumstances of the case would justify the court in ordering a postponement. The debts of the bankrupt were to be upwards of £1200.—Mr. James, for the bankrupt, contended that there was nothing to affect his application, and added that the assignees were quite satisfied with the accounts.—Mr. Commissioner Bainbridge said, to say the least of the case, it showed a wild speculation, and the court would not be administering justice, did it not discountenance such a mode of entering into business with so prescribed a capital. He, therefore, said, he should postpone the bankrupt's certificate six months from the date of his passing his last examination.

The latest accounts from South Wales represent that district as not only being in a state of alarming disturbance, but as rapidly progressing to a state of anarchy. Scarcely a night passes without a toll-bar being levelled or some other depredation committed, and yet, notwithstanding the most untiring exertions of the military and police, the midnight legislators continue to baffle their most lugubrious efforts to detect them. The whole of the men engaged at the copper-works upon the Swansea river have struck. These works are nine in number, and are as follow:—the White Rock, the Middle Bank, and the Upper Bank works, which are situate upon the east side of the river; with the Hafod, the Morfa, the Landore, the Rose, the Birmingham, and the Miners' Smelting Company, on the west side of the river. At these nine works upwards of 4000 people are employed, who receive in weekly wages about £3000, which, to the credit of the masters, is paid wholly in money, not one of the works being at all contaminated by the abominable truck system.

TURN-OUT AT ASHTON-UNDER-LINE.—We regret to state that a general turn-out of the factory hands of Ashton-under-Line, and the adjacent townships of Dukinfield, took place on Wednesday morning last, in consequence of a notice on the part of Mr. Buckley, to reduce the weekly wages 16 per cent. An immense meeting, comprising upwards of 7000 persons, had taken place at the early hour of five o'clock, in the morning, when means were adopted for extending the strike and promoting its continuance

LOSS OF THE SCHOONER HARRIETT.—Information has been received in the city of the loss of the schooner Harriett, Captain Thomas Stanley, which took place in consequence of a collision with the Northumberland on the 26th ult., near Gresham Island. No lives were lost.

Meetings from Worcestershire, Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, Northamptonshire, Hertfordshire, and Kent, speak of the dreadful effects of a violent thunder storm which occurred on the same day, though happily unattended with the loss of human life. It is remarkable that the only evidence of the storm experienced in London was a vivid play of lightning, which streamed from cloud to cloud almost continuously, from nine o'clock on Wednesday evening till about one on Thursday morning.

FOREIGN.

FRANCE.—There is little about Spain in the Paris journals of Wednesday. The Presse contents itself in saying that the King of the French contemplates obtaining the hand of the young Queen for one of his sons. The French Government, says this journal, profess to support the idea of a marriage between the son of Don Carlos and the Queen, knowing that such a proposal would be scouted in the Cortes; and that after the failure of this project, the time would be very propitious for the French party in the Cortes to talk of the advantages of an alliance with France.

FALMOUTH, August 9.—We have had several arrivals to-day from foreign ports, and among them three vessels from Monte Video, Buenos Ayres, and other important news from that quarter, the papers being principally occupied in declamations against Commodore Purvis, of the Alfred, for interfering with and preventing Admiral Brown from blockading Monte Video. The severe animadversions passed on the commodore for this act of intervention, had induced that officer to publish a correspondence between himself and President Orbe, in vindication of his conduct, but which does not seem to have had the effect of appeasing the ire of the Argentines

ROYAL YACHT SQUADRON REGATTA, AT COWES.

In accordance with our promise of last week, we present our readers with the annexed illustrations of the splendid Cup race, on the 1st instant.

A steady whole-sail breeze from W.S.W. accompanied the fleet round the island, and soon after six the leading vessels were descried, covered with canvas, entering the Western Channel. The order was similar to that of their going; the cutters, for the most part, forming the advance. It was a beautiful and exciting scene, the finish of the race. The snore from the promenade at Beach Cottage to the Club-house was thronged with "excellent good company;" the sparkling sea was covered with pleasure craft of all descriptions; while the wager yachts, the white spray flying before their prows, rushed like foam-breathing steeds towards the goal—so close in with the shore to avoid the tide of ebb that, as Jack says, "You might have heaved a biscuit aboard of them." Subjoined is the return of their various arrivals, as furnished by the secretary to the squadron, premising, for the information of such as are uninitiated in the mysteries of a "time" race, that the Gem was the winner. It will be seen from it that the Columbine and the Gitana did not run at the race:—

COWES REGATTA—STARTING FOR THE CUP.

	Tons.	H.	M.	S.
Gem schooner	125 ..	6	52	0
Therese cutter	121 ..	7	8	10
Esmeralda schooner .	130 ..	7	16	15
Feri schooner	60 ..	7	15	40
Will o' the Wisp cutter ..	44 ..	7	4	35
Nymph cutter ..	21 ..	7	34	35
Forest Fly cutter	36 ..	7	18	55
Charm cutter	74 ..	6	15	20
Corsair cutter	84 ..	6	49	55
Owen Glendwr cutter ..	124 ..	7	0	20
Brilliant schooner	393	7	25	30
Hebe cutter	68 ..	7	3	40
Circassian schooner ..	160 ..	7	1	45
Intrepid cutter . ..	55 ..	6	59	15

On Friday there was a private match between the Corsair and the Charm, the former beating the latter by 2 minutes 7 seconds. The Corsair has hitherto outsailed all her competitors, and last year she won the match for 1000 guineas against the Talisman, when both vessels beat down channel in the face of a very heavy gale of wind, as far as the Eddystone lighthouse, which they rounded, and came back to Cowes, the Corsair beating the Talisman in this extraordinary and lengthened race by four minutes only. On Saturday another match occurred, between the Gem (the winner) and the Esmeralda schooner, the former beating the latter considerably; nevertheless, it was a good race, and only tends to confirm the good opinion entertained by all of the superiority of the sailing qualities of the Gem. Both these vessels are fore-and-aft rigged schooners, and are nearly of the same tonnage—about 126 tons. The course was round the Nab light and back, but in returning they were to round the westernmost buoy of the Brambles. There was not much difference in the start, both vessels wearing nearly at the same time, and setting all sail. The Esmeralda took the lead, but the Gem came up with and passed her before they reached the Motherbank, and kept ahead of her throughout the remaining part of the race, which she won by 2minutes 55 seconds.

There are more distinguished families at Cowes than there have been for many years past. The forthcoming regatta is likely to prove very attractive, and the inhabitants of the town are making the most spirited exertions to add to the attraction. They have already subscribed nearly £100 to be expended in prizes for boat racing and other amusements, while the yachts are sailing round the island. The marine band from Portsmouth, and two other bands, have been engaged by them. In the evening of the second day of the regatta there is to be a display of fireworks. The crowning attraction will be the race for the Queen's Cup on the 17th.

The sketch represents the prize chosen by the noble owner of the beautiful yacht the Gem, the Marquis of Ormonde. The cup, or rather claret jug, is of large proportions, the extreme height being 2 feet 3 inches, and the design is spiritedly characteristic. It is manufactured in electro-silver, by the patentees, Elkington and Co., of Regent-street, and is, in every respect, equal in appearance to solid silver. It has hitherto been indispensable to use silver for highly ornamented articles of this description, because, previous to this invention, there was no method of casting or chasing metal, leaving a silvered or "plated" surface. This process not only overcomes this difficulty, but affords the facility of employing a hard white compound metal, having the sound and appearance of silver for the base, upon which the plating is effected. After casting and chasing the white metal, the article is subjected to the electrotype process, and thereby coated strongly with pure silver, every minute detail of the ornament being preserved, whilst the silver covering is in perfect union with the metal below.

THE GEM PASSING THE FLAG-BOAT.

THE PRIZE CUP.

GRAND TROTTING MATCH FOR 10,000 FRANCS.

GRAND TROTTING MATCH.

On Tuesday the trotting match for 10,000 francs, in which the celebrated American horse, Confidence, was to trot in harness six miles in 16 min. 30 sec., in three starts, came off at the East Surrey race-course, Peckham. He was to do it within four hours from the time of the first start to the completion of the match. The course was prepared for the occasion, and during the afternoon there was a large attendance of company. The following is the result:—

1st 2 miles	5m. 26s.	½ D. 4.
2nd 2 do	5m. 35s.	½ D. 7.
3rd 2 do	5m. 45s.	½ D. 8.
	16m. 46s.

The match was, consequently, lost by 16 seconds. Confidence is a fine bay, and stands 15½ hands.

The proprietor, Mr. Gill, was the driver. Much dissatisfaction was expressed by the crowd at the lateness of the hour at which the match was commenced. The course presented a very animated appearance. Among the company were Mr. Batty, in his car, with a band of music, driving his fourteen horses, and followed by the dramatis personæ of "Astley's" on horseback.

THE CARTOONS.—ADDITIONAL PRIZES.

In awarding the prizes to the successful competitors, the committee, appointed for that purpose by her Majesty's commissioners, gave it as their opinion that "the number of premiums was by no means equal to the number of approved productions." This declaration took the nation by surprise; for the people, used only to the contemplation of British art through the meretricious media of overwrought colour and mere prettiness of composition, were not prepared to give our artists credit for the possession of an amount of histrionic talent which, in its essential quality at least, may vie with that of any age or school. Yet such must ever be the effect of liberal and enlightened competition in an opulent, refined, and high spirited country. It is not enough that educational schools of art be founded, or that poets and historians present in turn their products to the painter, with the hope that, left to himself, he may embody them. No; patronage is wanted: the fostering hand of an employer—be that employer a church, a government, or a private individual—is the thing required. For want of this the poor painter has languished, a prey to his own inspirations; and in his destitution has been led to seek his bread in portraiture of horses, dogs, or men; in country-house landscapes for the rich; and in wonderful inventions for the poor. But these days, and the opinions in which they originated, are now happily at an end; and the Government seem disposed to bestow on the arts an enlightened and liberal patronage. They have done so in the case of the cartoons, and the result has been complete success. The exhibition of these works having produced on the first twelve days a sum of £1100, the commissioners determined on apportioning nearly the whole of the money, in sums of £100 each, to the artists of the ten next best drawings. The following are the subjects which have been selected by the judges as entitled to £100 each out of the funds in hand. The figures show the number attached to the cartoon in the catalogue.

THE FIRST NORTHERN BRITONS SURPRISING THE ROMAN WALL BETWEEN THE TYNE AND THE SOLWAY.

11. "Una coming to seek the Assistance of Gloriana; an allegory of the reformed religion seeking the assistance of England."—Spenser's "Faery Queene." Mr. Frank Howard, jun., 22, Tunbridge-place, New-road.

13. "The Seven Acts of Mercy. Una and the Red-cross Knight led by Mercy to the Hospital of the Seven Virtues." Mr. G. V. Rippingille, 55, Berners-street.

16. "The Death of King Lear." Mr. F. R. Pickersgill, jun., 8, Leigh-st., Burton-crescent.

71. "The Angel Raphael discoursing with Adam." Milton's "Paradise Lost." Sir William Ross, R.A., 52, Upper Charlotte-street.

75. "Man beset by contending Passions." He is represented as acted on by Pride, Ambition, and Anger; restrained by Love and Pity; pursued by Grief, Hate, Envy, Revenge, and Fear; buoyed up by Hope; chained to the earth by Despair; Reason overthrown; Horror in the midst. Mr. Henry Howard, R.A., 5, Newman-street.

80. "The Brothers releasing the Lady from the Enchanted Chair." Milton's "Comus." Mr. F. R. Stephanoff, 48, Warren-street, Fitzroy-square.

81. "The Brothers driving out Comus and his Rabble." Mr. John Green Wallen, 20, Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital.

92. "St. Augustine preaching to the Britons." Mr. W. C. Thomas, 39, London-street, Fitzroy-square.

103. "Alfred, putting on the habit of a harper, went into the enemy's camp, where he was everywhere admitted, and had the honour to play before their prince. Having thus acquired a great knowledge of their situation he returned in secrecy to his nobility." Mr. Marshall Claxton, 6, Southampton-street, Fitzroy-square.

122. "The Plague of London, A.D. 1349." The bishops and clergy are represented at St. Paul's-cross praying for the cessation of the pestilence. Mr. E. Corbould, 17, Upper Southampton-street, Fitzroy-square.

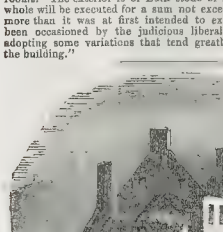
We shall not stay to offer any critical remarks on these works, beyond expressing our surprise that so poor an affair as that by Sir William Ross should have obtained successful notice. To us it appears to be ill-drawn—the extremities remarkably so—poorly conceived, and scratched in with a timid, doubtful hand. Of this we are sure, that we could have pointed out at least half a dozen pictures of much greater merit, and of a class much better suited to the purpose to which they are to be devoted. One such work we have engraved. It represents a party of the Northern Britons surprising the guards of a station on the celebrated wall of Severus, built between the Tyne and the Solway. It stands No. 86 in the catalogue, and is attributed to Mr. William B. Scott.

The exhibition is now open gratis, and is attended by vast multitudes of people.

WESLEYAN THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTION, RICHMOND.—For description, see next page.

WESLEYAN THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTION, RICHMOND.

This extensive building is now completed, and will be opened in the course of the present month. Of the ceremony we shall, in due time, present to our readers a faithful report. Meanwhile, the following architectural details will be acceptable:—"Important for its size, and not for its size alone, this collegiate structure is one that would not discredit either of our universities. A competition for the building took place in the summer of 1841, and the design chosen and adopted was that by Mr. Andrew Trymen. The entire plan is 240 feet by 65 in its greatest depth, and that portion of the front which is between the wings is 165 feet. As what may be called the chief or public rooms are on the ground-floor, that is treated as the principal one in the design: thus a different character (one by no means of an unpleasing kind) is produced from what is observable in collegiate structures generally, where the rooms so situated are low, and with smaller windows than those above them. Besides class-rooms and some others, on this floor are the refectory and lecture-room, each 57 by 21 feet, and the governor's apartments, all which are 17 feet in height. Beyond the entrance-hall (47 feet by 20), which has a groined ceiling, is seen the principal staircase branching off right and left. This leads to the library (35 feet by 20, and 20 high), which is the only public room on that floor, all the rest of it being divided into studies or separate sitting-rooms for the pupils. The library is lighted by a single window at one end, namely, the lofty oriel over the entrance, which, contrasting with the other windows of the upper floors, gives a marked importance to that portion of the front; and it also plainly indicates that this apartment is carried up the height of two stories. The next floor consists entirely of sleeping-rooms for the students, corresponding with their sitting-rooms on that beneath it; and of each sort of rooms there are from sixty to seventy in number. Still higher up, however, there is another room quite at the top of the building, intended to be used as an observatory, and commanding a singularly fine prospect of the beautiful scenery around the college, including Windsor Castle in one direction, and Greenwich and Shooter's-hill in another. Upon the ground floor there yet remains to be noticed the corridor or ambulatory, extending nearly the entire length of the building forming a walk 230 feet in extent. The wings contain several additional rooms on a similar scale to those over the ground one, which, however, does not show itself externally, the general design of the windows corresponding with the others in the lower part of the building, with no other difference than that there is panelled space between the two floors, and that the upper apertures or heads of the windows serve to light the mezzanine rooms. The exterior is of Bath stone of superior quality; and the whole will be executed for a sum not exceeding £11 000, somewhat more than it was at first intended to expend; but the excess has been occasioned by the judicious liberality of the committee in adopting some variations that tend greatly to the improvement of the building."



BIRTHPLACE OF O'CONNELL.

On Tuesday last Mr. O'Connell completed his sixty-eighth year. He was born in the house represented in the engraving; it is situated at a short distance (a ten or twelve minutes' walk) from the town of Cahirciveen, on the road to Tralee, and consists of a plain two-story building.

It has been in ruins some years—since the O'Connells removed to Darrynane, which place came to him by the death of an uncle. The house is built on the brink of the rocky shore an arm of the sea, and the country around is of the wildest description. O'Connell is recollected by the old people about as a fine able young gentleman, fond of all kinds of desarshin, particularly hunting. Even yet, when he comes down to the place, he is at it as much as ever; and, though the country abounds with hares, there are few who would kill one, lest the "Liberator" should fail to have good sport. The town of Cahirciveen is one of the most wretched-looking places in the county, yet appears to have seen better days. Since the establishment of the coast guard the smuggling, which was carried on here to a great extent, has entirely been put a stop to. This may, in some measure, account for the change.

THE FASHIONS.

LONDON, Thursday, August 7, 1843.

Mon cher Monsieur,—The summer of 1843 still continues to resemble a pouting child, who scarcely discusses its chagrin under a gracious smile; in fact, the heat and the cold, the rain and fine weather, follow each other at such short intervals, that, in order to be at all fashionable, the dress must be adapted to the changes of the temperature. Thus, if this uncertainty of the season has its inconveniences, it cannot be denied it has also its advantages; and the variations of the weather, of which we so constantly complain, if they have done nothing else, have served to find employment to our fashionable artistes, inasmuch as fashion, obliged to combine the requirements of health with the exigence of elegance, has been obliged to break through those monotonous habits which regularly signalised the return of our dull season; and to us, whose duty it is to record the changes and improvements of the day, this is really a boon at the present moment. Perhaps I shall best fulfil my mission, by describing some of the tasty things which I was so fortunate as to observe in a visit which I made to the atelier of one of our most fashionable modistes in the Rue Richelieu, whose good taste and whose vogue give the stamp of fashion upon all her creations. In the first place, I should remark that hats of paille de riz are very generally worn; they are trimmed with a light scarf of a bright shade, and have a white or crêpe flowers on them. Lace hats, as also those of tulle, are extremely fashionable; the latter, however, have them formed in transverse gathers, which are placed at moderate distances from each other, and are trimmed with fanciful flowers, with bunches of foliage. The hats or calabage-green tulle had a ruche and bow of the same shade. Upon the outdoor costume, I should observe that a very light lace veil is worn, thrown lightly on one side, and which falls upon the shoulders like a sort of transparent wing. Let me also recall a hat by our famous modiste, Lucy Hocquet, whose taste is so celebrated. It is a hat of Brussels lace, trimmed with marabout feathers of the same shade as the lining of the hat. I assure you nothing can surpass the grace, the coolness, or the extreme elegance of this description of headdress. In our excursions in the Champs Elysées, in the Bois de Boulogne, and at the Tuileries, I have remarked the general appearance of paries de riz, trimmed with ribbons to suit the colour of the dress, and of hats with the feathers made slanting, trimmed with ribbons and with a garland formed by a ruche of tulle of the same shade. As regards robes, we have here really nothing new, or no change which is worth mentioning. It is enough to say that everywhere robes in Aldride's for Bath are eminently trimmed with deep waving bands, or with wide flounces, are to be met with; nor are wide striped muslins at all uncommon. All these dresses are made with the corsage low on the neck and quite plain, with short sleeves, trimmed with small rosettes. I have also observed some few robes of organdi, made in the same fashion and quite plain, but surrounded with a collar of a similar material, forming a berthe. Let me not in the meantime forget a most charming invention lately, with the corsage and sleeves open, but laced with broad bands, the opening bordered with a puffing à la vieille, and with sleeves à la Monica, very pretty and graceful in its effect. I have also, got to the end of my list of novelties, if I say can be so called, which are nothing more than mere modifications of former fashions; and hoping for something more worthy of your attention in my next, I will say,

Adieu,

HENRIETTE DE B.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

On Tuesday the opera of "Semiramide" was substituted for "Don Pasquale," on account of the indisposition of some principal performers, honoured by the presence of their Majesties, accompanied by Prince Albert and the Duchess of Kent, and attended by the Countess of Dunmore, Lord Rivers, Lady A. M. Dawson, Colonel Bouverie, and Colonel Arbuthnot. The house was thronged by a host of fashionables besides.

On Thursday, for Madrid benefit, there was a most magnificent treat in both opera and ballet departments. "I Puritani," "La Sonnambula," "Ondine," "Ithaiai in Algieri," "Le Délire d'un Peintre," besides the celebrated pas de deux, all in one night—of a verity c'était quelque chose de trop; though, if we were called on to curtail, we should not know what to object to first.

A thing of beauty is a joy for ever!—Keats.

Time, which, as Dr. Johnson, says in the conclusion to his "Rambler," brings all things to a termination, has at length completed the labours of the Italian Opera season; and a most glorious season it has been throughout. Ab ovo usque ad mala, the bill of fare has been delicious, from the opening, on the 11th of March, to the close, in the present month, there has been almost a "satiety of sweets" nightly presented to the intellectual gourmand; and nothing ever usque ad nauseam, so very studious was the caterer of the public appetite to avoid repletion or disgust. Many and glorious were the treats produced this season; great and distinguished have been the singers and dancers who appeared in them. The records of her Majesty's Theatre cannot show such a constellation of talent as we have been in the habitual enjoyment of witnessing during the last few months. When did the Opera ever before open with a Persiani or a Dumilâtre, or in the course of its run congregate the first singers and dancers of the world? Never! To individualize perhaps were wrong, but we cannot help noticing a few things en particulier, that loudly call for our most unqualified applause. The orchestra has been, if possible, more vivacious, and better régime than formerly; the wind instruments are superb; in the present clarionet we do not miss Wilman; and the bassoon is of a nature to "create a soul under the ribs of Death." The ensemble is beautifully and rigidly conducted by Palmieri Costa, who at the best musical stentorian we are acquainted with. The choruses have been more, to use a dancing term, à plomb this season than we ever recollect them; and the mise en scène, whether in opera or ballet, more correct and more splendid than during any previous management. The novelties and revivals have been numerous and praiseworthy. The production of the two new operas, Donizetti's, all of which have proved successful in the highest degree, particularly "Linda di Chamouni" and "Don Pasquale." Several new charming ballets and divertissements also have been produced, and in an unusual degree of splendour, especially in the coryphée department, in which we never before had such danseuses as Camille, Plaquet, or Scneffre. To say that such luminaries as Fanny Elssler and Fanny Cerito had "merged their orbs," and condescended to shine in the same sphere, were only to pass another eulogy upon the entrepreneurs for their spirited judgment. Altogether we have never had such an Opera season; and we have no doubt that Mr. Lumley will not be content to let us feed upon the past, but will exercise his ingenuity to still "pamper our whim of appetite" for the ensuing.

STRAND THEATRE.

We recollect reading somewhere of a precocious child being once exhibited to a sour-tempered bishop, who, on the occasion, angrily exclaimed, "Such premature geniuses always turn out to be stupid adults," on which the little urchin sarcastically remarked, "What a clever child you must have been, my lord!" These tales are altered now; for intellect progresses from its outset, "vires acquirit eundo:" there is no going backward, and a great deal coming forward. One of the most clever children we have witnessed since the days of Clara Fisher appeared at this house on Monday evening, in a burletta entitled "The Young Actress of all Work." Miss Fanny Ternan is about seven years of age, and is the daughter of the amiable and interesting Fanny Jarman, now Mrs. Ternan, from whom, no doubt, she inherits her histrionic ability. The little prodigy personated five different and very contrasted characters, viz.: a stage-struck Yankee; Effie Heatherbloom, a Scotch lassie; Victorine, a French nursemaid musician; Margery, a country gauky; and Goody Stubbins, a homely old [illegible]. These parts [illegible] and delivered.

Miss Horsman, Mrs. Fitzwilliam, Mr. Vezer Sandor, Keeley, and Bass, made their first appearance, and were greatly at most deservedly applauded. The new orchestral [illegible] have been formed with the greatest success in the principal cities of Germany, and who no doubt will prove highly attractive here, as their style is extremely novel and curious. A new burletta, entitled "Cousin Campoeu's Courtship," from the pen of Mr. Collier, was decidedly successful, notwithstanding the very imperfect study of the honey Scot, which it was quite evident Mr. Maywood had made. Mrs. Stirling, as Fanny Carr, was extremely interesting. This pleasant little theatre cannot fail to succeed, managed as it is by such tact and liberality.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The remarkably crowded audiences of the closing weeks of the Opera have induced the management to keep this establishment open for three days longer, during the ensuing week, under the final termination of which supplemental season the departure of Elssler for Dublin, Cerito and Labache for Italy, and the general breaking up of the grand corps will close the doors of the Opera, however willing fashion might be to keep them open. Tuesday will give a delightful programme, of which "Il Barbiere," the "Linda," and "Ondine" will form the principal portion. Thursday will also be a brilliant night, when Fanny Elssler will take her benefit. The "Don Giovanni" will be once more given with its present magnificent cast, and the celebrated Minuet de la Cour and Gavotte: Cerito is to be the lady, and Elssler the accomplished cavalier. The pas de deux, which has occasioned so much amiable rivalry, and the poetic "Délire d'un Peintre," will complete the amusements of the evening; and on Saturday the theatre finally closes with the immortal "Don Pasquale."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Marquis of LONDONDERRY asked the Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether it was true that Espartero had taken refuge on board a British man-of-war. The noble marquis strongly condemned the conduct of Espartero, as full of treachery.—The Earl of ABERDEEN said that he had only the same amount of information as was in the possession of other noble lords—namely, that Espartero had been received on board a British man-of-war, and it would very much surprise him if he were not treated on his reception with the respect and distinction which he deserved.—Lord BROUGHAM moved the second reading of the Coroners Bill. The Marquis of SALISBURY opposed the bill, and moved that it be read a second time that day six months. —A short discussion ensued, the result of which ended in a division fatal to the bill. It was rejected by a majority of 31 to 7.—The Intercourse with China Bill was read a second time.—Lord CAMPBELL moved the second reading of the Scotch Universities Bill.—The Earl of HARDWICKE opposed the bill, which was eventually negatived without a division.—Lord MONTEAGLE gave notice that before the close of the session he would call their lordships' attention to the financial state of the country. He had no intention to have introduced the subject on the third reading of the Excise Duties (Ireland) Bill, but the Duke of Wellington having intimated the impossibility of the Earl of Ripon being present on that occasion, he would not have acted upon the table, and some bills on the table having been forwarded a stage, their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

On the order of the day for bringing up the report of the committee of supply being read, Mr. HUME brought the subject of the customs house frauds under the consideration of the house, and complained of the mode in which the commissioners of the Customs were appointed, for, out of the nine commissioners, there was but one who had been connected with the trade. The commissioners should have been made individually responsible, and should have been discharged, as well as the subordinates. He concluded by moving an address to the Crown for a report of the evidence taken before the commissioners appointed to inquire into the frauds in the collection of the revenue of Customs, in order that the extent and nature of the frauds may be known, and means adopted by Parliament to put an end to such proceedings, which were injurious both to the revenue and the fair trader. He protested against the house separating without the production of the evidence.—Mr. FORBES seconded the motion, and concurred with the hon. member for Montrose in thinking that the commissioners themselves were the really blameable parties, and ought to have been dismissed.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said he had no wish to keep back any part of the evidence, but he felt that its premature publication would prevent the prosecution of offenders, and if he had so frustrated justice he was sure that Mr. Hume would be the first to condemn him for it. He was most anxious that the house and the public should know every fact connected with these transactions: and he could assure the house that every attention had been given by Government to the adoption of means to prevent the occurrence of similar frauds in future. After some conversation, Mr. HUME said, as the production of evidence might defeat the ends of justice, he would withdraw his motion.—The report was then received.—Mr. F. BARING at this made a motion respecting the necessity of having all the orders of the Lords of the Treasury, the Board of Trade, and the Commissioners of Customs, relating to exportation and importation, entered in minute books, and lodged in the Long room for public inspection: also that on the first of every month every new order made during the preceding month, by those authorities, be printed and furnished at a reasonable price.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER had no objection to accede to the first part of the motion, but he could not grant the latter part.—On a division, the motion was defeated by a majority of 57 to 19.—The house was soon after counted out.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY.

The house did not sit

HOUSE OF COMMONS, WEDNESDAY.

The Coal-whipping Bill passed through committee, after considerable discussion of the various clauses.—SIR R. PEEL said it was not the intention of the Government to repeal the act preventing religious processions in Ireland during the present session. The act would be in force at the close of the next session of Parliament, and of course the Government would consider whether it was necessary to give it a more extended operation. For his own part, he would feel great pleasure when the time should come for giving such an act wholly unnecessary.—Mr. S. CRAWFORD moved the second reading of the Land-and Tenant (Ireland) Bill, the object of which was to compel the landlord to make allowances or compensation to the tenant for the improvements on his land.—SIR R. PEEL said he hoped that the hon. gentleman would not ask the Government to come to any decision now upon the subject. Whatever course the Government might think it necessary to take respecting the subject of landlord and tenant in Ireland, it was most important nothing should be left in a state of vagueness or uncertainty, but some time should be afforded for the consideration of its details.—After a few observations from several hon. members, Mr. CRAWFORD thanked Sir R. Peel for his pledge to take the question into his consideration, and should now ask leave to withdraw the bill.—The bill was then withdrawn. The house then went into committee, and the usual vote of Exchequer bills was agreed to. The house then resumed.—Lord ELIOT then moved the third reading of the Arms (Ireland) Bill.—Lord CLEMENTS moved as an amendment that it should be read a third time that day six months.—Colonel BERNAL, in seconding the amendment, said it was singular that the present Government should find itself under the necessity of complimenting the Opposition on Ireland, merely because they had not violated the law.—Mr. M. MILNES supported the bill as a necessary precaution measure, though he hoped it was not by an Arms Bill alone that the Government intended to govern Ireland.—Mr. B. WALL and the youngest member of the house would never again see so strong a Government as the present, and yet the Arms Bill was the only measure which it had carried up to the present period, which was so close to the termination of the session.—Mr. O'CONNELL from the charges of the judges in Ireland to this measure, and said it also appeared, from the character of the evidence adduced, one-half. The house was not in the intention to oppose the bill.—D'ISRAELI said that Sir R. Peel had left his party without a guide as to the course of policy with respect to Ireland. He had taken this course in consequence of Lord Stanley's Registration Bill, and having obtained that power, he then turned round and virtually allowed that the former Government was right in opposing the very Registration Bill of which he had himself supported. The country would perceive, was that, having left his party in the lurch, they were now in the possession of supporting leaders without knowing [illegible] and that they were acting [illegible] Government [illegible] of Ireland were a failure, and the repeal agitation a divertissement got up for the purpose of entertainment, and which was to close at the termination of the session. This do-nothing policy, this [illegible] was [illegible] which he deprecated, and which he considered sion in the Cabinet, a state of affairs from which nothing could be expected, for he and required some great man to take decisive steps to bring forward immediately some great remedial measure. The present measure he viewed as contemptible, and the opposition to it equally so, and he should, therefore, give no vote upon the question.—Colonel VERNER said that he was glad that the matter had been in both houses of Parliament to the conduct of the Protestants of Ireland, but at the same time he must say, that they were not satisfied with the apparent inaction of the Government.—Mr. G. BANKES repeated many of his former arguments against the bill, and contended that the general search for arms which it would give rise to, would be well calculated to produce collision and consequent insurrection against the law. Ireland called for a reasonable and just measure, instead of which the Government were tinkering up the little measures of former bits of men, thus perpetuating the misgovernment of that country.—Mr. SHEIL said he in a great measure agreed with Mr. Charles Buller, but his object in rising was to defend the course he felt himself called upon to pursue with regard to these Irish questions. They talked in that house of tranquillity, if the Catholic religion, but he would defy any one to match the intolerance of the Treasury bench, though it did not exhibit itself so strongly, when its majorities could only be counted by units instead of by hundreds. He condemned the do-nothing policy of the Government, and said they ought to seek rather to disarm the misery than the hands of the Irish people.—Mr. SHEIL calles upon the house to contrast the present state of Ireland with its condition under the influence of a Whig administration, and said that even at the period of Catholic emancipation the country was by no means so excited as it was at the present moment. He saw no reason to think that the agitation would subside, supported as it was by the Irish under clergy, who were gratuitously vilified as a low and degraded class in the other house of Parliament. He suggested the possibility of appropriating glebe houses and glebe lands to the Catholic clergy, which would create a sentiment of reciprocal sympathy between the Catholic church and the state. If ministers wished to govern Ireland well, they were bound upon questions exclusively Irish to consult the feelings of the majority of the Irish representatives, otherwise, if the Irish representatives were to be upon Irish questions swamped by English majorities, they might as well stay at home; for in that case, though possessing the power of expostulation, their vote would be worse than useless.—Sir R. PEEL wished to separate the consideration of the Arms Bill from the consideration of the general question of the state of Ireland, with which it had nothing to do, for the Arms Bill was before the last session of Parliament before the agitation in Ireland assumed its present aspect. The opponents of the bill had themselves supported a more stringent measure when brought forward by the late Administration, which was a proof that there was something in the state of Ireland which called for a different legislation from that which was applied to England. He disclaimed all idea of offering any boon to Ireland, he was only anxious to give greater security to life and property in that country. Neither did he propose unequal legislation for the two countries except so far as the circumstances of each were in themselves unequal. The right hon. baronet adverted to the speech of Mr. D'Israeli, and said that if his condemnation of the measure was so strong he ought not to have delayed the announcement of his disapprobation so very long, nor ought he to have refrained from voting against a measure which he deemed so very injurious. Such a course was very strange on the part of a gentleman who so sondly condemned others for doing nothing. He viewed the state of affairs in Ireland with deep and anxious solicitude. He thought that the asperities arising from religious differences in that country were last melting away, and that a better and more wholesome state of things was last arising; but the present agitation might be considered to defeat all his most ardent aspirations. In reference to the suggestion of Mr. Sheil, as to giving glebe houses and glebe lands to the Catholic clergy, he asked how he could reconcile such a suggestion with Mr. Sheil's intention of supporting the motion made a short time since by Mr. Ward, respecting the re-distribution of the property of the Irish Church. No such compromise was then talked of; on the contrary they were told that nothing short of the re-distribution proposed would satisfy the people of Ireland, and yet now it was suggested that a much more modified measure would be accepted. The right hon. baronet concluded by stating that nothing should be left undone by the Government which could tend to preserve the integrity of the empire.—Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL said he had no expectation that the agitation in Ireland would cease, for it was founded upon just dissatisfaction with the Government.—The house then divided:—For the third reading, 183; against it, 59: majority, 66.—The bill was then read a third time and passed.—SIR J. GRAHAM announced that the County Courts Bill was dropped.—The other orders of the day were then disposed of, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Their lordships met at twelve, in order to give judgment on the validity of Irish Presbyterian marriages. Our learned Judges have given their opinion against the validity of these marriages but Lord BROUGHAM differed in opinion, and took a learned review of the older writers on the subject, concluding a most luminous judgment, and one of deep research, by expressing a hope that their lordships would give judgment for the plaintiff in error. If, however, they were not prepared to adopt that course, then he should recommend them not to give the judgment for the defendants in error until they had had the assistance of the judges of the Ecclesiastical Courts, who exercised more especial cognizance on that particular subject.—Lord ABINGER agreed in opinion with the judges.—Lord CAMPBELL was clearly of opinion that the marriages that had taken place were valid marriages. He would advise their lordships to reverse the judgment pronounced in the courts of Ireland, and give it in favour of the Crown.—Lord BROUGHAM said that his learned and noble friend (Lord Denman) was of the same opinion as his noble and learned friend and himself, and would have been there to have stated his opinions but for the illness of Mr. Baron Alderson. He trusted, however, he would have an opportunity of doing so.—On the motion of the LORD CHANCELLOR the further consideration of the case was adjourned sine die. The Lord Chancellor and Lord Cottenham have yet to give their opinions. The final decision in the case is looked forward to with great interest.—Their lordships met again at five o'clock. The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the Spirits (Ireland) Bill, Controverted Elections Bill, United Kingdom Militia Bis 1st Sus pension Bill, the Stock-in-Trade Rating Bill, the Bills of Exchange Bill, several bills for continuing treaties with Mexico, Chili, Austria, &c., for the suppression of the slave trade, the Public Works Ireland Bill, Limitation of Actions (Ireland) Bill, Rose and Cromarty Jurisdiction Bill, and several read and local bill s.—Their lordships then proceeded to several business.—The Arms (Ireland) Bill, the West India Islands Relief Bill, the Copyright Designs Bill, and several other Bills were brought up from the Commons and laid on the table. A petition gave rise to some debate on the Theatres Regulation Bill, but which, it was agreed, should be taken on the second reading.—The bill was then read a first time.—Lord BROUGHAM laid upon the table a bill for the purpose of suppressing sedition and seditious meetings in Ireland. The bill was similar to one which was found to answer in this country some years ago, and his reason for introducing it was in consequence of some insidious attempts made to corrupt the servants of the military forces in Ireland.—The Earl of WICKLOW approved of the bill; but Lord CAMPBELL said he would oppose it on the second reading. The bill was read a first time; and Lord BROUGHAM gave notice that he would next day move that it be read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at twelve.—The Ways and Means Report was brought up, and agreed to.—The Holyrood Park Bill was ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.—The Design Copyright Bill was read a third time and passed.—The house then went into committee on the Irish Municipal Corporations Bill.—The house resumed.—Mr. G. A. Hamilton presented a petition against the return of Mr. Bright.—The Foreign Jurisdiction Bill was read a third time and passed.—The house was summoned to hear the royal assent given to various bills (see Lords).—Several petitions were presented. The Design Copyright Bill was read a third time, and passed.—The Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill went through committee.—Mr. Gladstone moved the second reading of the Machinery Exportation Bill, and stated the reasons which he thought rendered the measure a judicious one. The bill was read a second time, and [illegible] and committed to the Chairman of Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The Lord Chancellor took his seat at five o'clock.—Mr. Greene, from the Commons, brought up certain bills.—Lord CAMPBELL obtained leave for a select committee be appointed to search the journals of the House of Commons, and report what proceedings had taken place respecting a bill which had been sent down from their lordships for regulating the succession to personal property in Scotland.—Lord BROUGHAM fully concurred in the motion. He then withdrew the bill for the suppression of seditions meetings in Ireland, having discovered that there was a local act in Ireland which would answer the end. The house then went into Committee on the Theatres Regulation Bill, and Lord Brougham moved to enlarge the clause prohibiting the performance of Shakspere's plays to any but patent theatres. The clause was postponed, and the other clauses were agreed to, and the report ordered to be received.

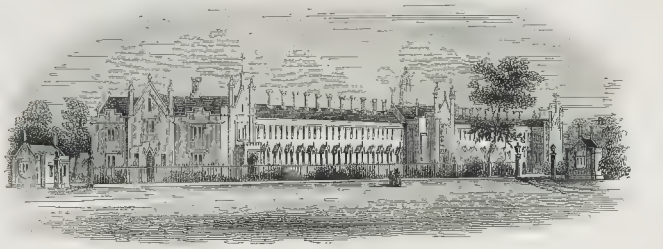
HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at twelve o'clock. The Consolidated Fund Bill was read a second time, and the house went into committee thereon. On the motion for the house resolving itself into committee on the Exchequer Bill, Mr. Machinery Bill Colonel SIBTHORP moved as an amendment that it be committed this day six months. He did not wish to say anything personally offensive to the right hon. gentleman, but he could not help saying that he wished to God the President of the Board of Trade was exported with the machinery. (Loud laughter.)—Mr. BROTHERTON seconded the amendment.—After considerable discussion the house divided, when there appeared—For going into committee, 40; For the amendment, 15: Majority, 25. The house then went into committee, Mr. Greene in the chair. The several clauses were agreed to without discussion, and the bill was resumed.—The house went into committee on the Fisheries Bill.—Mr. E. B. ROCHE moved as an amendment that the bill be committed to a committee of the whole house, and that the Irish members should have the opportunity of opposing it. He could not

THE BENTINCK STEAMER.

June 26th, since which time they have increased two revolutions per minute, then making but 14, at present 16½ nearly.

The Bentinck is commanded by Captain Kellock, an officer of great experience, who has made many voyages to India, and whose skill as a seaman is equalled only by his eminent social qualities. She will proceed from Southampton on the 24th of August, for Calcutta, via the Cape of Good Hope, touching at Gibraltar, Cape de Verde Islands, the Cape, Mauritius, Ceylon, and Madras, and will start from Calcutta on her first trip for Madras, Ceylon, and Suez, on the 15 December next, and will thenceforward continue to ply on the line between India and Suez, in conjunction with her sister vessel, the Hindostan, which has already been for some time on that station. The brief period of time in which her voyage is likely to be accomplished may be calculated from the fact that her average speed on her passage from Dublin to Southampton was 13 miles an hour, and occasionally she ran 14 miles per hour.



THE BUTCHERS' ALMSHOUSES, WALHAM GREEN.

On Tuesday and Wednesday the third annual Fancy Fair and Fête Champêtre, in aid of the funds subscribed for the further erection of almshouses for decayed master butchers, was held on the pleasant spot of ground belonging to the institution, situate at Walham-green, Fulham. There was also a grand exhibition by the West London Floricultural Society.

The grounds, which are naturally picturesque, were fitted up with a temporary ball-room, a profusion of seats and marquees, flags, &c. The amusements were varied and highly entertaining. There were German sifleur, a Wizard of the North, dancing on the tight-rope, antipodean exercises, glee singing, &c. During the day the family of Lord Ravensworth, the family of the Bishop of London, the Hon. Miss Little, and many other distinguished personages and families visited the grounds, and expressed their unqualified approbation. Not the least pleasing sight was that of the old pensioners sitting outside their comfortable homes. In the busiest part of the day there could not have been less than 6000 persons present; and the liberal purchases of the visitors at the different stalls must have greatly contributed towards the funds. The flowers and plants were of the rarest and richest characters, and were well worthy the silver cups and silver medals which the successful competitors carried off. Two splendid bands were in attendance, and played several popular airs.

The Butchers' Charitable Institution was established in October, 1828, for the relief of aged and distressed master butchers, their widows, and orphans: 99 pensioners have already been admitted, of which 51 are now enjoying the charity. The almshouses above represented are in course of erection, only a portion having yet been completed. The design is in the old English style.

The plan consists of a decorated centre, and two wings, with projecting ends. The centre has an ornamental clock-tower; a lofty embellished gable, flanked with octangular turrets; three enriched bay-windows, and entrance porch; and the ends have correspondent details. The building and grounds will be enclosed within iron railings, and at the principal entrances will be erected neat lodges. The entire design is highly creditable to the architects, Messrs. Winterbottom and Sands, of Fulham.

THE NEW AMERICAN LINE-SHIP VICTORIA.

THE NEW AMERICAN LINE-SHIP VICTORIA.

This magnificent vessel has recently made her first passage to this country from New York, where she was built, her architect being her captain—Morgan; and a superb work of structure and design she unquestionably presents. Her extreme length is 170 feet, breadth 36 feet, and depth of hold 22 feet; and she is rated at over 1000 tons. She is named after our beloved Sovereign, and at her head is a whole-length figure of her Majesty, of life-size.

The Victoria presents several important novelties in her construction, which are fine specimens of ship-building skill. The following are her principal dimensions:—Length, 170 feet; beam, 36 feet; depth of hold, 22 feet; burthen, 1000 tons. It required 34 tons of iron, and 6 tons of copper, besides a great number of treenails, to build her; she weighed, when completed, 2,000,000 lb.; 24 tons of hemp to make her rigging; and she spreads something over an acre of canvas. Her mainmast, from the royal truck to the keelson, is 155 feet. There is a good library in the forecastle for the sailors; and she sails on temperance principles entirely.

The American liners have long been noted for the completeness of their interior fittings; and the joiner's work of the Victoria must add to this national reputation. The chief cabin, or saloon, is lined with satin wood, in panels, banded with rose and zebra woods, and American bird's-eye maple; and the ceiling is in white and gold. The seats at the dining-table are ingeniously contrived for the comfort of sitting to the table or turning away from it; the supports of the back-rail are metal uprights, made to hinge below the seat, and thus to admit of being turned over either of the edges. The carpet is well chosen; and, altogether, the appointments of the saloon are in handsome and correct taste. The ladies' cabin is distinguished by the extreme elegance of the fittings; indeed, no drawing-room or boudoir on terra firma presents a nicer specimen of decorative art, or appropriate upholstery, than does this bijou of ship-joinery. The style of the apartment is that of Louis Quatorze or Quinze, in the most delicate white and gold, the carved framework of the panels being well executed. The meubles are in correspondent taste; the couches, fauteuils, &c., being stuffed in silk damask of exquisite pattern and colour—light blue and white, with carpet to match. There is a centre table of choice white marble. The apartment is lit through ground glass; and one of the large panes bears a picturesque view of Windsor Castle, and at the opposite end is Buckingham Palace, surrounded by the rose, shamrock, and thistle. The chastely elegant finish of the entire apartment is remarkably pleasing. The decorator has not, however, lavished all his taste upon this apartment, for the berths are fitted en suite: the ceiling is in white and gold, and the handles of the doors are of glass.

On Saturday last this beautiful ship, then lying in the St. Katharine Docks, was inspected by a distinguished party of visitors; and the vessel, being dressed out for the occasion with various national flags, presented a very gay appearance. Mr. Lawrence, the principal steward, conducted the arrangements. Prince Albert's band was stationed on the quarter-deck, and played selections from "Alma," and a variety of other pieces, &c. The company were received by Captain Morgan, and consisted of some of the leading nobility, members of the corps diplomatique, influential merchants, and other gentlemen connected with the United States and the City of London. Among the persons of distinction present were his Grace the Duke of Sutherland, the Ladies Gower, Lord Blantyre, the Belgian Minister and Madame Van de Weyer, the Portuguese Minister, Bernardo Monconvo, and lady; the American Minister, Mr. Everett, and Miss Everett; the American Consul, Colonel Aspinwall and lady, Sir John, Lady, and Miss Hall; the Hon. Abbott Laurence, member of the American Congress, Mrs., and Miss Laurence; Joshua Bates, Esq., and lady; W. Tooke, &c. After inspecting the ship, and which called forth general expressions of admiration, the numerous party sat down to a déjeûner, consisting of all the delicacies of the season, which the captain had provided on the occasion, the band on deck performing the national airs of England and America, and other animating pieces. The first toast proposed was that of her Majesty Queen Victoria. This was given by Mr. Everett with a degree of warmth and good feeling, and a felicity of diction, that elicited much applause, the honourable gentleman observing that, in the endeavours of his countrymen to produce a barque in every way complete, giving her the best of workmanship and the best of materials, the importance of a good name—as laid down by Shakspere—had not been lost sight of; and hence the imposing one adopted. The health of the President was next proposed in suitable terms, and to which an appropriate reply was volunteered by Colonel Aspinwall. The health of Captain Morgan was given by the Duke of Sutherland; and, after some other popular toasts had been disposed of, the party broke up, evidently much gratified with the novelties of the day, and the very hospitable reception given them by the worthy commander.

ATTEMPTED MURDER.—On Tuesday last a labouring man named Blissard, residing at Chiswick, attempted to murder his son, by striking at his head with a grass hook. The head was nearly severed from the body, but the unfortunate man still survives, and refused to charge his father who now remains in custody. The affray arose from a quarrel with the son's wife.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY.—A shocking accident, resulting in the death of a man named John Robins, a labourer employed on this line of railway, occurred to the down mail train to Birmingham on Saturday night last, within two miles and a half of the Roade station, and nearly midway between London and Birmingham. It appears that the train in question was proceeding at its usual rate of speed, about twenty-five miles an hour, when the engine driver observed at some distance ahead an object apparently crossing the line. The moon was shining very brightly at the moment, and on nearing the spot it was distinctly seen to be a man seated, apparently asleep, on one of the rails of the down line. The engine-man immediately applied the whistle two or three times, the breaks were put in requisition, and every endeavour used to stay the progress of the carriages, but in vain. The poor fellow was not awakened by the alarm, and the buffer of the engine knocking him down, the wheels of the locomotive first and successively of several carriages passed over his legs, nearly separating them from the trunk. The train was backed a quarter of a mile, and the remains of the poor fellow were soon discovered. He was not dead, but the injuries he had received on various parts of his body and head were of such a nature as to preclude the possibility of his life being saved. The York mail train came up within a few minutes of the melancholy occurrence, and the poor man having been placed in one of the carriages, was conveyed to the Roade station. On being taken out, one of his legs, which held only by the integuments, fell from his body. He was, however, still alive, and a policeman employed at the station, on looking at him, instantly recognised him as one of the labourers employed by Messrs. Grissel and Peto, the contractors, at the new works carrying on at Wolverton. He mentioned his name, John Robins, to those around, and the dying man, raising his eyes, made a motion of his head, appearing to signify an assent, and almost immediately after expired. It is supposed that the poor fellow must have been drinking rather freely, and becoming overpowered, sat down on the rail and fell asleep. He has been employed on the railway nearly ten years, and has left a wife and six children. The shock occasioned by passing over the deceased was distinctly felt by the passengers in several carriages.

LE DELIRE D'UN PEINTRE.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

No doubt the story of Pygmalion and his ivory statue suggested the design of this charming petit ballet to the improving fancy of M. Perrot, who wisely transferred it to the canvas, the vivifying of which by the immortal Fanny was never surpassed, if equalled, by any moving piece of poetry in the world. Le Délire that she produces is not confined to the poor artist merely whom her beauty has captivated: all who look upon her become at once suddenly enthralled in a fascination like unto his; and whether she be in the picture-frame as a "mutum poema," or on the wings of her obedient volition as a flying muse, wonder and delight are equally called upon "to gaze and adore." Fanny Elssler is decidedly the greatest artiste in her profession—hers is a perfection which we may call "facta ad unguem" of her little toe. Perrot's pantomime in this ballet is exquisite.

BATTY'S AMPHITHEATRE.

MADAME LEJARS.

This delightful equestrian is not only remarkable for her own wonderful performances, but for the extraordinary invention she is the motive of in others who would attempt to describe them in befitting epithets. To compare her to one of the CHARITES were nothing: she is the three in one, and as the bills say, "from her grace and artistical skill," is "surnamed THE TAGLIONI OF THE RING, THE DUVERNAY OF THE SADDLE, AND THE ELSSLER OF THE MENAGE!" This is a compound compliment with a vengeance; but she deserves it all; for more finish was never yet exhibited, even on the boards, by any dansatrice (not to say on the bare back of a cantering horse), than by Madame Lejars. To describe her innumerable feats of grace, activity, and self-possession is impossible; suffice it to say that, rapidly whirled round as she is, she never for a moment offends the eye by an awkward gesture, or causes you to be solicitous for her safety. She literally floats in the air, although apparently touching the galloping steed, and impresses one with the idea that she could remain there at will even if her footing were displaced. She is a miracle.

MONOPOLY OF PATENT THEATRES.

The following petition from Mr. Macready to the House of Commons was presented to the House of Commons by Sir James Graham, on the 1st inst.:

"The Petition of William Charles Macready, of Clarence-terrace, Regent's Park, in the County of Middlesex, an Actor of Plays,

"Humbly showeth,

"That your petitioner has, from early youth, devoted his time to the study and representation of the plays of Shakspere and other dramatic poets. That, in the exercise of his profession as an actor, your petitioner has had constant opportunities of observing the practical effect and operation of the patents granted to the Theatres Royal Drury-lane and Covent-garden, of both which theatres he has also been at different times the sole lessee and manager.

"That the rights and duties implied in those patents, granted for the exclusive performance of plays, were, for the public benefit and the advancement of dramatic literature, delegated in the first instance to men selected on account of their peculiar qualification for the trust, their theatrical talent and experience, their proficiency and interest in their art—to wit, Sir William Davenant, the dramatic author, Booth, Wilkes, Cibber, Doggett, and other actors of repute. That these patents or trusts have been permitted, contrary to their import and intent, to fall into, or be transferred to, the charge of persons wholly inexperienced in theatrical affairs, generally unacquainted with dramatic literature, and confessedly ignorant of all appertaining to the dramatic art. That these persons have, in consequence, used their trust as a mere piece of property, letting it out to any adventurer who would hire it, without reference to the character or capacity of the individual, or to any other consideration than the price to be obtained. That by these means all kinds of degrading exhibitions, tending not to humanize and refine, but to brutalize and corrupt, the public mind, have been introduced upon the patent stage; with which practices of licentiousness and habits of debauchery, unknown at places of theatrical entertainment in any other civilized country, have also, by the same system, been connected as matters of profit and gain.

"That such misapplication of these patents is an abuse of an important public trust, and a national scandal; and your petitioner is prepared to prove that the persons in whom these exclusive privileges are now vested are, for these reasons, unworthy to possess them—supposing your honourable house should be of opinion that any stronger proof of their unworthiness and incapacity is needed than the condition to which they have reduced the two patent theatres.

"That such condition has been caused by their own misconduct, and is not attributable to the public disregard of dramatic entertainments, is fully shown, as your petitioner submits, by the history of his own connection with those establishments, in capacity of lessee and manager; for in the year 1837, when, through the mismanagement of the patentees and their tenants, the Covent-garden Theatre was sunk to the lowest point of public contempt, your petitioner undertook its direction, and in two seasons it not only attained a high character for its dramatic representations and its regulations in regard to decency and good order, but became a place of great public resort. In like manner in 1841 your petitioner undertook the management of Drury-lane Theatre, when it was in a similar state of degradation, and in two years he succeeded in rendering that establishment also a place of general and respectable resort, and an instrument of public instruction, as presenting the highest class of theatrical representations. And your petitioner submits that the absurdity of these monopolies is further established by reference to the position of Drury-lane Theatre, when he became its lessee, at which time, with a patent right of preventing elsewhere the performance of the masterpieces of Shakspere and other great poets, it was unable to present them itself, having been specially re-furnished for, and exclusively devoted to, musical concerts, announced in a foreign language, and chiefly performed by foreign musicians.

"That, in his management of both the patent theatres, as aforesaid, your petitioner endeavoured, at a great expense of time, labour, and money, to make the patents available to the purposes for which they were originally granted, and always to keep in view the great aim and object of the drama, and that he always found his efforts responded to by the public in general; but that, being unable as lessee of either theatre to meet such demands of the patent-holders, as the great debts and encumbrances entailed upon them by the before-described mis-management and abuse of a public trust had made necessary, he has been obliged to relinquish the management of both; and thus your petitioner is brought to this pass, that whereas these patent-holders are not able either by themselves or their tenants to maintain the national drama in their theatres, yet they are armed by law with power to prevent your petitioner from exercising that his art and calling in any other theatre, and to declare that, unless he live on such terms as they may prescribe to him, he shall not, by his industry and the use of such abilities as he may possess, live at all.

"Your petitioner therefore humbly prays your honourable house to take his grievance into consideration, and provide such remedy as in your wisdom shall seem fit.

WILLIAM CHARLES MACREADY."

This petition was also presented to the House of Lords on Tuesday night by Lord Beaumont, upon which occasion the Earl of Glengall thought proper to assert that "anything so full of vanity, self-sufficiency, and absurdity he had never heard read before." We leave it to our readers to decide between the petitioner and the senator.

MADAME LEJARS.

HEADS FROM AN OMNIBUS.

"Twelve years ago! Is it possible? It seems scarcely more than so many months." How common is this kind of exclamation when we see boys grown up to manhood and misses become mothers. How reluctantly we acknowledge even to ourselves that we are "getting old." How blind to the insidious crows' feet radiating upon that "dear face," which we daily contemplate at the matutinal shave!

What a variety of excuses do we frame for the appearance of the first gray hair; attributing it to the curling-tongs or to the effects of last year's influenza, for, as to its having any right, legal or natural, in our "young" head, the idea is ridiculous—and the unwelcome intruder is plucked out with a tug that does credit to our philosophy.

How old Time must chuckle at our self-imposition, acting as if we imagined that he would forget or overlook us, because we slily rub out his first mark.

Strange it is that this short-sightedness of self-esteem does not extend its palliating influence when our friends are the objects. No! Clear as noon-day is the growing baldness of one, the wrinkles of another, and the visible "breaking-up" of a third.

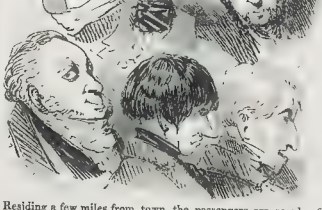
Our children alone convince us, at last, that we are no longer juvenile.

The eldest boy's whiskers, or a wordy war about the street-door key, will infallibly open the eyes; or, perhaps, an agreeable young man is constantly singing duets with your eldest daughter, which ends in an overture on his part for the young lady's hand—and, should you accord, you eventually become a grandfather, which is, of course, a remarkably good joke; but, alas! it proves the finishing stroke, the coup de grace of your long "flitering" youth. In vain, henceforth and for ever, are your struggles; you incontinently become one of the "old people."

How every body considers this to be the singular case of every body else!

We plead guilty!—for, although we are yet a youth, our contemporaries do certainly grow grey, and we occasionally see a pair of spectacles pocketed on the sly, all of which forcibly reminds us that we remember the last great comet too distinctly!

The foregoing reflections arose as we took our places in our morning conveyance, which has, indeed, proved a good indicator of Time's progress.



Residing a few miles from town, the passengers are regular first morning customers, and have become acquaintances from an uninterrupted association of twelve years. Twelve years! is it possible? Yes! and our doubts are reduced to a certainty. At the beginning of that period the majority of them were young men. How changed are they now! The gay, rattling stock-broker, the reteller of city jokes, and the rapid enunciator of the jargon of "the Alley"—the winner of boat races, and the bragger of his wine feasts and bacchanalian orgies—is now bloated and feeble, tremulous and shattered, his eye watery, his hair prematurely gray. With what a tone of conscious degradation he apologises for stopping to take some potent stimulant before he starts, the effect of which fleets in a few minutes, producing a feverish, unhealthy craving for more. "Oh! that a man should put an enemy into his mouth to steal away his brains!"

The next was once the buck of the lot—the lady-killer—the unexceptionable kid-glove man. Time has treated him more tenderly. His foppery has calmed down to a scrupulous neatness. His hat, no longer of the last fashion, exhibits an economical brushing, with the slightest possible degree of wear. This may be accounted for from the supposition that the gay Lothario has become a Benedict; at least we infer so from the sweet little girl sitting on his knee, and the chubby little boy who kissed her on our departure.

His neighbour has been gradually getting into full bloom for some years. He was formerly a fat, fair young man, with habits evidently gastronomical. He has now many tavern scores marked upon his brow, and presents a most inconvenient expanse of waistcoat for a travelling companion. His race in the world has been to him one long course of dinners.

Close beside him sits the regular plodding city man—quiet and respectable, possessing great faith in the firmness of his own banker —an automaton ready-reckoner—an iron safe—who knows more of the price of tallow than the affairs of Greece. He is one of those who quietly accumulate money, living "closely," with the inane vanity of dying worth a plum!

How unlike his opposite friend in spectacles. A nervous speculator, worn to bone and parchment by feverish anxiety, who closes his books at midnight to pass the dreamy hours till break of day, roiling uneasily about in a troubled sea of hopes and fears. Too intently occupied in his own absorbing thoughts to be communicative, and eager to rush to his office or the "lane" to watch the revolving wheel of fickle Fortune.

That smug, gentlemanly old man, lately transformed from a clerk to a partner in the "Firm"—and who boasts of his coming to town with three half-pence in his pocket, is the least changed of all the company. His life has been a path of peace and smoothness, marked out by ledger lines; industry and careful calculation have worked the sum of his happiness—and he has proved it too. He is a good man—" errors excepted."

The gentleman who has just crawled in with a gouty shoe and a crutch-stick was, in our remembrance, a man of bats and stumps, frequently appearing with his cricketting shoes rolled up in his flannel jacket—learned in long stops, round and straight bowling, &c. We fear he has notched his last game Time has battered the batter -and his stumps are worthless. To offer to "give a ball" to such a gouty subject would be an insult.

The old man who has gradually shed his teeth since our acquaintance, although his tongue retains its pristine vigour—the eternal rattle of which we think must have greatly tended to the demolition of his grinders—has gradually resolved himself into a mumbling mummy of reference. He perfectly remembers us all before we shaved, and our fathers before we married. He was formerly a butcher—some time in the reign of Queen Anne, if we may judge by his reminiscences. He is quite independent, but goes to town every day to watch round the market and look at the meat.

The person with the solemn face and large nose is something, we believe in tne "Bank." Time has woefully changed that face, but kindly left untouched that magnificent nose, of which he is not a little proud, invariably introducing it, on thawing him, upon the fire of anything theatrical, as the cause of a link-boy's mistaking him one evening for John Kemble, and politely lighting him to the stage-door. As this anecdote is his only one, we know no more about him, but charitably suppose he is one of those good and inoffensive creatures who throughout life "follow their noses."

Seated next to him is a man who lived but for his whiskers— "happy, happy, happy pair!" tippy, but good-natured; who was perfectly horrified at a parcel, and carried an umbrella as slender as himself. But the whiskers are gone; he now encumbers himself with a blue bag, containing tops and bottoms, ru-k-Howqua, and toys, all for the little troop of urchins that greet him on his arrival with shouts of welcome.

In the corner sits one whom we remember a pert, silly boy, but who is now a married man with one " encyclopædia" of a child. Formerly a retailer of, and a sneerer at, the foolish follies of other people, who talked of their "prodigies" of children, he is now an eternal babbler of his darling's precocity, its wonderful sayings, and its astonishing powers of mind and memory; in fact, he is one of a large brotherhood!

The last is the most changed of all. He was gay and well to do in the world; but he ventured on the wide sea of commercial speculation and was wrecked. He rescued some trifle of his wealth, and—still more valuable—some of his ruin, and occasionally retrieving a fragment that inspires him with a hope that more may be ultimately rescued. Meanwhile Time steals on apace, and his energies are rapidly failing. He will rise no more.

The twelfth man writes this paper, and has amused himself by sketching at various times the heads he here presents the reader. Some are as they were, others as they are.

Pondering upon the wonderful variety of character and fortune enclosed within so small a space, an epitome truly of the hopes, fears, follies, and ambition of the world, we mentally exclaimed, "surely had Shakspere lived there he would have said 'all the world's an omnibus.'" Time the coachman, who drives us on our way, and Death the conductor, who "put us down" at the end of our journey!

POLICE.

BOW-STREET.—Thomas Farrar, a porter, residing in White Hart street, Strand, was charged with wilfully damaging and removing a list of voters from the door of Spring-garden Chapel. The defendant said he thought there was no more harm in taking the paper in question than there was in taking a catalogue from an auctioneer's door. Mr. Jardine said that if he would so act he must take the consequences. Punishment was the only means of preventing such offences. The defendant was then ordered to pay a fine of 5s.

WORSHIP-STREET.—Robert Cowins, a middle-aged person of gentleman-like appearance and deportment, was charged before Mr. Broughton with having embezzled various sums of money, to the supposed amount of £500, the property of his employer, Mr. Daniel Walters, silk manufacturer, Wisson-street, Finsbury. After hearing the evidence the court remanded the prisoner.

I SLINGTON-HALL.—Thomas Hunt, a young man, was placed at the bar, charged with committing an assault upon Mr. Gardiner Dawes, during the progress of a procession of the teetotal-ers to Kennington-common on Monday. It appeared that Mr. Dawes, who was one of the marshals of the procession, was also named Kelly, in giving his evidence, stated that he was not a teetotaller; that he saw Mr. Crane driving down the road at a very quick pace, and, although he saw the train, he drove under the banner, and struck two or three persons with his whip. The whip was taken from him, when the people ran towards the gig, and there appeared to be a very strong feeling against him, owing to the manner in which he drove along.—Mr. Trail said that the evidence was contradictory; at all events, there could be no protection for justifying such an assault as that committed on the complainant. The magistrate, after making some further remarks on the subject, inflicted a penalty of 10s. on the defendant, or, in default of payment, seven days imprisonment. The fine was immediately paid, and the parties withdrew.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE.—There has been only a moderate arrival of English wheat on this market since our last report, yet the sale has been very dull, to the disparagement, the weather for the growing crops, has relied very dull. Fine parcels of home grown wheat may be considered is, other kinds 2s. per quarter lower, and clearances have not been effected. In foreign wheat, of which about 12,000 quarters have come fresh to hand, exceedingly little has been passing, and the quotations have fallen quite is per quarter. Rendri grain has been almost nominal. The duty on wheat is now 19s, but it is expected to fall to 10s on Thursday next. Ten sale for barley has ruled native; but malt has commanded very little attention Oats have come freely to hand, and fallen 6d per quarter. In beans, peas, and flour, we have no alteration to report.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 6770; Malt, 4240; and Oats, 2810 qrs.; Flour, 661d sacks. Irish: Oats, 10,320 qrs. Foreign: Wheat, 7230; and Barley, 4560 qrs.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 34s to 36s, Ditto white, 36s to 38s, Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 32s to 35s; ditto, white 34s to 37s; rye, 24s to 28s, grinding barley, 17s to 20s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Chevalier, 32s to 34s, Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s; brown ditto, 50s to 54s; Kingston and Ware, 58s to 62s; Chevalier, 64s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire fed oats, 17s to 19s; ditto potato, 19s to 21s; Dunghal and Cork, fine, 17s to 18s, ditto white, 18s to 20s; ; ditto to 6s ditto, 20; 34s to 38s, grey peas, 26s to 28s; maple, 32s to 34s; white, 40s to 42s; beans, 40s to 42s per quarter. Town-made flour, 40s to 56s; Suffolk, 38s to 43s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 36s to 38s per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, 36s to 38s. Barley, red, 24s to 26s, white, 28s to 30s.

In Bond.—Barley, 20s; oats, new, 16s to 17s; ditto feed, 14s to 15s; beans, 32s to 36s; peas, 32s to 37s per quarter. Flour, America, 22s to 24s; Baltic, 22s per barrel.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 36s 4d; barley, 23s 4d; oats, 15s 8d; beans, 32s 2d; peas, 34s 6d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 19s; barley, ; oats, 6s; rye, 6s 6d; beans, 10s 6d pea, 9s 6d.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread are from 9d to 9½d; of household ditto, 6½d to 8½d for the 4lb loaf.

The Seed Market.—We have had rather an extensive supply of most kinds of seeds on offer, but the demand for them has ruled inactive at barely late rates.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, new, 39s to 40s. Baltic, crushing, 42s to 43s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 43s to 45s; hempseed, 34s to 36s per quarter; coriander, 12s to 13s per cwt.; canary seed, 42s to 44s; white ditto, 16s to 18s; tares, as to 6s per bushel, English rapeseed, new, £36 to £37 per last of ten quarters; Essex and Kent, English, 42s to 44s; ditto foreign, £7 to £8 10s per ton; rapeseed cakes, £6 5s to £6 per ton; canary, 7s to 8s per quarter.

Teas.—The public sales which have been in progress this week, and which have consisted of of the 30 chests, have gone off freely, but no variation has occurred in the quotations.

Coffee.—The demand has been steady for all kinds of coffees for home consumption, and full prices have been ready obtained.

Metals.—There are but few inquiries of spelters, and £23 per ton is demanded on the spot. In other sanes of metals very little is doing.

Oils The demand is good, and full prices have been paid. Fifty-one casks of Manilla cocoa-nut oil have sold at £31 to £31 5s.

Tallow.—The trade have been large buyers of P.Y.C., at 42s 6d on the spot, and 42s for delivery in the last three months.

Hops.—The plantation accounts are still unfavourable: hence, the demand for most kinds of hops is active, at rather higher rates. The duty is called £100,000.

Wool.—At the public sales held this week the bidd.ngs have been steady; and, in most instances, full prices have been obtained.

Potatoes.—Although the supply of spetatoes is good, the demand is steady, as from £3 5s to £4 15s per ton.

Provisions.—The Irish butter market is still very dull, and prices are again somewhat lower. Foreign butter is also dull. Bacon and ham have dec and in to 2s per cwt., but in the quotations of other kinds of provisions we have no alteration to notice.

Coals.—Adair's, 15s 6d.; Bowes, 15s 6d.; Lambton, 20s; Adamale, 18s 9d.; Hetton, 16s 6d per ton. Ships arrived, 95.

Smithfield.—The supply of beef being but moderate, more than adequate to meet the wants of the buyers, the general demand has ruled slow, at, in some instances, a decline of 2d per 8 lbs. Beef, from 3s 8s to 4s 4d; mutton, 3s 4s to 4s 6d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; and pork, 3s to 4s per 8 lbs., to sine the offals.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—We have had only moderate resupts of country-killed meat since our last, but the supplies of that slaughtered in the metropolis have been good. The trade has, on the whole, ruled dull, yet prices have been supported. Beef, from 7s 4d to 8s 8d; mutton, 7s 4s to 8s 8d; lamb, 8s 6d to 10 6d; veal, 7s 4d to 8s 8d; and pork, 7s to 8s 10d per 8 lbs., by the carcase.

ROBERT HERBERT.

COMMERCE AND MONEY.

The weekly reports from the manufacturing districts continue to be favourable. The sales of cotton wool have been again large, and the purchases have been in a great measure to keep up the previous prices. Some alterations have taken place in the value of yarns, but the woollen manufacturing cities and towns, no rea plausible of want of abundance of employment can be made by any of the industrious classes employed in the production of various descriptions of woollen goods.

From South Wales, and the mining districts in general, the information of the week is not favourable, although a rumour exists here that the Russian Government has within these few days given very large orders for iron, with which to prosecute the railroad operations throughout that empire.

In Mincing-lane, since our last publication, mercantile attention has been naturally attracted to the unusually large quantity of tea which has been brought forward for sale. Events have proved, however, that this addition of supply to the into the market was not greater than the demand required, for much spirit prevailed amongst the tea dealers, and it is extremely satisfactory to their purchases exceed in advance in prices of from 1d to 2d per lb., according to quality. Of sugars, also, for sales have been effected at about late prices, but the amount sent into consumption is very far short of what it was in the early part of the year, when a thing usually the case at the same period of the year.

On the Foreign Stock Exchange, not at the market for Shares, increased business has been done, but it has not been attended by proportionable improved prices.

In the shares of the leading Railway announcements money continues to be invested, London and Brighton at 33¾; Bristol and Exeter at 56½; and Midland Brighton at 25¾. In Mexican Bonds a reaction, from the late is eternal improvement in their value, has naturally occurred, but it does not appear that there are any sellers of the Deferred Shares per Cent. Bonds a decline, to the same extent, has also taken place since our last publication. Spanish Bonds, from 7¾, some confusion in consequence of the different parties having, by the latest accounts, been exhibited in the Chamber of Deputies at Rio de Janeiro. In French Rentes no business can at present be effected under 122, the exchange being 25f. 60c. Russian and Austrian Bonds remain at the rates of our last report, while the former name was sold at 118, and the latter at 114 to 115. Dutch are worth 57, and Portuguese 41¾. On the Foreign Exchanges, since our last publication, the favourable change in the weather has been attended by an improvement in the rates of the foreign exchanges. The supply of bills on the Continent has been again fully as large as the demand for them, and the late decline in the exchanges has therefore been corrected.

The Consols at the conclusion of the operations of the week were not so much inquired after, as they were at the commencement. Some sales were effected on the market for cash, which reduced prices about ¼ per cent. Consols for Money and for the Account were sold at 91 to 91¼; and for the Account, 91¼ to 91½. The East India Bonds were sold at 263 to 264. Bank of England Stock was sold to 1—3. On East India Bonds the premium improved to 7pm. Exchequer Bills sold at to a premium of 1¼, and those bearing interest were sold at to a premium of 1pm. Bank Stock, 182¾ to 183¾. New, 101¾. Belgian Bonds, 104¾; Brazilian do., 79¾ to 7½; Columbia do., 21; Mexican do., 26¾ to 26¾; Portuguese do., 41 to 41¾; Spanish Active, 19½; French Rentes, 122, exchange 25f. 60c.; Austrian Bonds, ..; Russian do., 117; Dutch Fives, 103¾, exchange 12 guilders

Railway Shares.—London and Birmingham, 217 to 219; Great Western, 89¾; South Western, 42; Eastern Counties Scrip, 11 London and Brighton, 34¼; Midland Counties, 71; London and Dover, 20¾; Manchester and Birmingham, 80¾; Union Bank of London, 10¾; Provincial Bank of Ireland, 41¾. Money has come home to us to supersubundance to the close of the week. The current month improved, and, hopes have existed that the quarterly average crop may yet be covered, the general expectation is increased that there will be more plentiful, and more difficult to be profitably employed before the end of the year.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 7.

BANKRUPTCIES SUPERSEDED.—E. L. BECKER and J. L. BECKER, Manchester, cotton printer J. JOHNSON, Manchester, tea dealer.

BANKRUPTS.—R. WILDE and R. DAVY, Oxford street, drapers.—H. W. BRAND, Little Stanhope street, May Fair, cook.—G. SAVAGE, Sheffield, razor manufacturer.—T. PARRY, Monk, Pembroke, draper and grocer.—T. BRIGHTMAN, Thirsk, Yorkshire, linen and woollen draper.—E. BECK, late of Leadenhall-street, of Adelaide, South Australia, out of business agent, merchant.—J. W. GRIFFING, Greenbank, Liverpool, Wapping, Lancashire, S. BOULTON, W. GREENBANK, E. BOULTON, and J. DUNCALF, Tunstall, Staffordshire, china manufacturers.—J. B. BEER and W. H. BASTICK, St. Thomas the Apostle, Devonshire, coal merchants.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 11.

BANKRUPTCIES.—J. MARRIAGE, Newham Cheshire, grocer.—C. J. SPENCER, upholder, Cornhill.—W. H. MATHEWS, wine merchant, Bristol.—H. HARRIS, cheese factor, Cheltenham.—W. J. APPLEBY, ... Lincoln.—J. ... Bristol.—J. E. TON, brick maker, Ashton under Lyne.—J. BROADHEAD, cloth manufacturer, Stalybridge, Cheshire.—HANNAH HARDWICK, Rochdale.—H. WARNER, T. MARSACK, T. and J. MANNING, tyanny and spirit dealers, Liverpool.—R. WATSON, silk mercer, Yorkshire.

PRICE OF SUGAR.—The Average Price of Brown or Muscovado Sugar for the Week ending Aug. 8, 1843, is 24s. 10½d. per cwt., exclusive of the Duties of Customs paid or payable thereon on the Importation thereof into Great Britain.

BIRTHS.

At 17, Albany-street, Regent's Park, the wife of ... Lieut. ... of a daughter.—At Wadhurst, the lady of H. Hoper, Esq., of a son.—At Ludlow, the lady of Thomas Lloyd, Esq., M.P., of House, of a son.—At Hampstead, Mrs. Rees Goe, of a daughter.—The wife of Dr. Bowerbank, F.R.S., Bow-green, London, of a son.—In Russell square, Mrs. Frederick B. Beevor, of a son.—At Addiscombe, the lady of J. S. Newham, Esq., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At Ryton, Monmouthire, N.B., Owen A. Baker Cresswell, Esq., eldest son of Addison J. Baker Cresswell, of Cresswell, Northumberland, Esq. M.P., to A. Seymour Conway, eldest daughter of Sir William Gordon Cumming, of Altyre, and Gordonstone.—At St. Pancras Church, Richard Wyatt, Esq., to Caroline, youngest daughter of the late Wyatt Taylor, Esq., of Grafton street, Fitzroy-square.—At Trinity Church, St. Marylebone, Frederick Kemp, youngest son of Walpole Kemp, Esq., of Brunswick-square, to Caroline, second daughter of Thomas Alexander Reynolds, Esq., of Devonshire-place.—At ... Hanover-square, Francis Tower, Esq., to Grace Mary, youngest daughter of the late Admiral Baker Richards, Esq., of Brighton.—At ... Paddington, John H. Maxwell, Esq., eldest son of Wm. ... Maxwell, Esq., of Dargavel, Renfrewshire, N.B., to Anne, eldest daughter of Thomas Williams, Esq., of Cornwood-cottage, Hyde Park.—At Chigwell, Essex, Manley Hopkins, Esq., of Stanford grove, to Kate, eldest daughter of John Simm Smith, Esq., of Grange-hill, Chigwell, and Trinity-square, London.

DEATHS.

At Alva, Perthshire, Anne Hope, relict of the late surgeon son of Henry and I. H. Drysdale, Esq., of Dingwall.—At Mount Ararat, Lord Oxford.—At Ems, in the Duchy of Nassau, Dowager Countess ... Mr. Spooner, Bombay Presidency, Emily, wife of Metcalfe Lushington, Esq., of the Bengal Civil Service.—At Hampstead, Sarah, the wife of Thomas Wemyss Young.—In the Island of St. Helena, George W. Janisch, Esq.—At Rochester, Lieut.-Col. Hobkirk, late of St. John's College, Cambridge.—At Bedhampton, Hants, Mary Anne Prescilla, wife of Harcourt Firmin, Esq.—At Gloucester-place, Portman-square, Miss Elizabeth Dallas, sister to the late Chief Justice Dallas.—At Newtown, Montgomeryshire, George Green, Esq.—At Malta, Frederick Augustus, Major General Sir Richard Macleod, K.C.B.—At his house at Brompton, Richard Pennington, Esq.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements cannot be received after 7 o'clock on Thursday Evening.

LEA AND PERRIN'S "WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE."—Prepared from the recipe of a nobleman in the county.—The above celebrated Sauce has, from the time of its introduction, been steadily progressing in public favour. Its peculiar piquancy, rich flavour, and superior keeping qualities, have rendered it an object of general demand; and it is now considered by connoisseurs as the most valuable acquisition to the table. Sold wholesale by the Proprietors, Messrs. Lea and Perrin, Worcester; Crosse and Blackwell, Soho square, London; and by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; and retail by Dealers in Sauces generally throughout the World.

WILL SHORTLY CLOSE,

EXHIBITION.—Sir GEORGE HAYTER'S GREAT PICTURE of the HOUSE of COMMONS, painted on 170 square feet of canvass, and containing Portraits of all the Members, a Portrait of the Queen, and various other historical pictures, in which are more than eight hundred portraits of eminent men of the present day, is OPEN for exhibition, from Ten o'clock till dusk every day, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly.—Admission, 1s. each person.

ONLY ONE IN THE WORLD.

GLACIARIUM and FROZEN LAKE.—The Artificial Ice, at the Baker street Bazaar, seems to increase with the summer temperature in virtue of attracting vast numbers of distinguished visitors to witness the excellent skating on the Frozen Lake, with the Glaciarium, Panorama of Lucerne, which, when lighted, as it is in the evening, and enlivened with chaste music, is indeed a delightful cool resort. The skating on Wednesday evening was first-rate. Admittance 1s.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—CARTOONS of RAPHAEL.—The Series of Original Cartoon Drawings (by Hogarth), which were executed for the well-known Engravings of these Cartoons, are now exhibiting, with other additions to the numerous works, both in Art and Science, in this Institution. The Lectures of Dr. Ryan, Professor Bachhoffner, and Mr. Goddard, are at Twelve, Two, a Quarter to Three, and Five o'clock, and at Eight o'clock in the evenings. In these Lectures Agricultural Chemistry and every recent Scientific Discovery is explained in a popular manner. The Colossal Electrical Machine. New Microscope (by Carr), Dissolving Views, Dove and Diving Bell, &c. Admittance to the whole 2s. Schools at half-price daily. Open Mornings and Evenings, except Saturday Evening. Admission, One Shilling. Schools, Half-price.

ROYAL SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—The Fire-Work Display, Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, August 14, 15, and 17, with a matchless variety of attractions, in addition to the daily exhibitions of the unique collection of Zoology, the Gardens will display Grottoes from Dengeish, and the new Colossal Pictorial Tableau of Eden, the firedomed Hindoo Pantheon viz., a Concert Champêtre, followed by the Fire-Work Display (WEDNESDAY) making the Wonders of a Night at Eden, during the celebration of a splendid Hindoo Panorama; and forming the most vast and magnificent combination of the Scenic and Pyrotechnic arts ever attempted.—Open from Ten in the morning. Repeat of the Lions at Five. Concert at Six. Firing at Nine.

THEATRE ROYAL ADELPHI.—MAGIC JUBILEE!!! THUNDEROID NIGHT of the GREAT WIZARD of the NORTH'S Taste Season in London!!! Performed One Hundred and Fifty Nights at the Strand Theatre, One Hundred and Twenty Nights at the Adelphi, in 1841; Fifty Nights at the St. James's Theatre. In all, he has performed Two Hundred and Twenty Nights, in not less than Four Hundred and Fifty Thousand delighted and astonished Spectators! Does not this Fact, which is unparalleled, demand a genius of extraordinary power? Yes! J. H. ANDERSON, the

MORE THAN MODERN CÆSAR.

"VENI, VIDI, VICI."

"I came, I saw, I conquered," briefly wrote
The mighty Cæsar, when of old he smote
With murderous sword, the foes of ancient Rome.
The deed was great, but, ah! how little worse,
Cæsar did but slay what he did nurse:
Whereas this valiant WIZARD of the NORTH
CONQUERS without sword, or spear, or sword,
Those whom he summons to the mystic feast,
HE only nurses his mystic wand, and all obeys,
Ken thou how he is lauded in his sense.

The Wizard is grateful, and in commemoration of the glorious success with which Royalty, the Nobility Gentry, and Artizans have crowned (with Longers more than long) his rare (!!!) performances, he will present, on MONDAY NEXT, August 14, 1843, the LAST he performs in London, on which occasion the Wizard will be expected to be more than wizard! His patrons shall not be disappointed on this never-to-be-forgotten occasion.

The Wizard intends to — Yes, he will, he will—a Quid pro Quo!

Private Boxes, for six, £1 11s. 6d. Parties wishing Reserved Seats can secure them at the Box-office, 8s.; Pit, 3s. 6d.; Gallery, 2s. Second Price at a Quarter-past Nine, Boxes, 5s. 6d.; Pit, 2s.; Gallery, 6d. Doors open at Half past Seven. The Wizard ascends his Mystic Throne at Eight precisely.

HEWITSON'S BRITISH BIRDS' EGGS.

On the 1st of July was published, price 2s 6d., Part 1, of COLOURED ILLUSTRATIONS of the EGGS of BRITISH BIRDS, accompanied with Descriptions of the Eggs, Nest, &c. By WILLIAM C. HEWITSON.

DOUGLAS JERROLD'S NEW WORK.

THE CHRONICLES OF CLOVERNOOK.

With some account of the HERMIT OF BELLTVILLE, &c. &c. By DOUGLAS JERROLD, Illustrated by KENNY MEADOWS.

"Clovernook," with its "Hermit of Belfville," and "Kingdom of As-Ton-Like," lies in a district to my knowledge "Bran" and "Bran" and "Bran" of the Public.—Examiner.

Published Monthly in JERROLD'S SHILLING "ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE." Office, 2, Crane-court, Fleet street.

THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for AUGUST, price 1s., or post free, 1s. 6d., contains twenty-four splendidly engraved and coloured Figures of the Prevailing Fashions, consisting of Morning, Evening, Walking, and Ball Dresses, Fancy Hats, Caps, Turbans, and an almost endless variety of Summer Novelties and Fashionable Millinery. With ample descriptions. At the head of fashion appears in the "Ladies' Gazette" a month earlier than in any other work.

G. Berger, 59, Holborn-hill, and all Booksellers, Stands.

Of whom may also be had, Thompson's correct and popular Editions of the Laws of England, each twenty-four, price one shilling, of all the Statutes on the subject, so far as applied last year of each reign, viz.:—The Laws of Landlord, Tenant, and Lodger, with the new Law of Ejectment, price one shilling. The Laws of Debtor and Creditor, the Assessed Taxes, and Bankruptcy, price one shilling. The Laws of Wills; the New Insolvent Act, the Income and Property Tax, and the Metropolitan Police Acts, are now ready, price 6d. each, or post free, 8d.; also, price 1s., or post free, 1s. 6d., Thompson's Key to the Long Sessions, by which time to obtain at the lowest rate of interest from fifty mortgage or five hundred pounds.

This day is published, in royal quarto, with 12 Plates and 58 Woodcuts, price 21s

DIOPTRIC; or, the GEOMETRIC PRINCIPLE of BEAUTY ANALYSED. By D. R. HAY, Decorative Painter to the Queen, Edinburgh. Lately published, by the same Author,

The NATURAL PRINCIPLES and ANALOGY of the HARMONY of FORM. In one vol. royal quarto, with 18 Engravings and Woodcuts. Price 10s.

The LAWS of HARMONIOUS COLOURING adapted to INTERIOR DECORATIONS. The Fourth Edition, with Eight Coloured Diagrams. Octavo. Price 7s.—WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and SONS, Edinburgh, and T. Cadell, London.

AMERICAN PERIODICALS.

This day is published, and may be had, by order, through all booksellers in the kingdom,

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, No. 120, for July, 1843, 6s., containing:—The Character of Thomas Paine, 2. Colonel Cox, Lawyer, and Member of Congress. 3. Stephens' Travels in Yucatan. 4. Dr Drake's Northern Lakes and Rivers. 5. Massachusetts Boundary. 6. Professor Peirce's Physical Geography, &c. 7. The School and the Study. 8. Lives of the Queens of Christian. 9. Sears, Edwards, and Felton, on Classical subjects. 10. The Army of the Somers, and other critical matter.

The DEMOCRATIC REVIEW, for July, 1843, 2s. 6d. Containing.—The Sandwich Islands. On the Present State of Society. 3. O. A. Brownson. 4. Poetry. 5. Mr. Calhoun and Texas. 6. Mr. Clay and the Tariff. 7. Speech of Mr. Hunting. 8. Mr. Tyler's Annual Message. 9. Political Miscellany, &c. &c. Now ready, and sent, interesting articles.

The AMERICAN BIBLICAL REPOSITORY, for July, large paper, 7s. 6d; small, 5s. Containing: 1. Pantheism, its Nature and Design. 2. The Mosaic Account of the Unity of the Human Race confirmed by the Natural Hist ory of the Human Species, by Dr Pickering. 3. The Divine Attributes, as exhibited in the Sacred Poetry, by Professor Lewis. 4. On the Atonement, by Rev A. Whitlock. 5. General Review of the Principles of Church and Church Government, with criticisms on some of new works

The MERCHANTS' MAGAZINE and COMMERCIAL REVIEW, for July, 2s. 6d. Contains valuable papers on Trade, Commerce, and Manufactures. On Peace with Wealth. Commercial Statistics of the United States and Foreign Nations, &c.

The AMERICAN NATIONAL PREACHER, for July, 8d.

The NEW ENGLANDER, for July, 4s. 6d

WILEY and PUTNAM, Booksellers and Importers, Stationers' Hall court, London

NEW AMERICAN BOOKS.

In a few days will be received and ready for sale, and may be had, by order, through all Booksellers in the United Kingdom,

LIFE IN THE WILDERNESS.

By ... author of "The New Purchase," &c. ... and a life I years in the Far West By ROBERT ... Esq. ... 2 vols. ... "... narrative ... and highly entertaining."—New York Courier and Enquirer.

A NEW HOME—WHO'LL FOLLOW? By Mrs. MARY CLAVERS. Post 8vo, price 6s. 6d.

DR. OLIN'S TRAVELS IN THE EAST.

In 2 vols. 8vo, with 12 Illustrations, price 18s.

TRAVELS IN EGYPT, ARABIA-PETREA, and the HOLY LAND. By the Rev. STEPHEN OLIN, President of the Wesleyan University.

"A better work than either those of Mr. Stephens or Dr. Robinson."—American Review.

MENTAL HYGIENE; or, an Examination of the Intellect and the Passions, designed to illustrate their influence upon Health and the Duties of Human Life. By WILLIAM SWEETSER, M.D., Professor of Medicine, &c., New York. Post 8vo, 7s.

MUSIC EXPLAINED; or, How to understand Music and enjoy its Performance. By J. J. TETTS, Director of the Musical Review of Paris, translated for the Boston Academy of Music.

INTELLECTUAL AND MORAL FACULTIES

Illustrated by ... Cases, &c.

FACTS and ARGUMENTS on the TRANSMISSION of INTELLECTUAL and MORAL QUALITIES from PARENTS to OFFSPRING.

"No truth is altogether ... that when appears at first sight simple and trivial, often conceals ... —Quarterly Review.

CASTE and SLAVERY in the AMERICAN CHURCH. By A CHURCHMAN. 8vo, 1s.

"Unparalleled ... —Boston Recorder.

THE NORTH-EASTERN BOUNDARY.

In 8vo, price 2s. 6d. with a copy of the July Map

A MEMOIR on the NORTH-EASTERN BOUNDARY, in connection with Mr. Jay's Map. By the Honourable ALBERT GALLATIN, LL.D., with a Speech on the same subject delivered in the ... by the Honourable DANIEL WEBSTER, LL.D.

WILEY and PUTNAM, Booksellers and Importers, Stationers'-hall-court, London.

Just published, price 8s.,
PULMONARY CONSUMPTION successfully treated with NAPHTHA. By JOHN HASTINGS, M.D., Senior Physician to the Blenheim-street Free Dispensary. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

SPORTSMAN'S DIRECTORY.
Lately published, price 5s., cloth lettered,
MAYER'S SPORTSMAN'S DIRECTORY, and Park and Gamekeeper's Companion; containing Instructions for Breeding, Feeding, and Breaking Dogs: Hunting, Coursing, and Shooting; Fishing, Preserving Game and Decoys; Breeding Pheasants, Partridges, Pigeons, Rabbits, &c.; a description of all kinds of Poaching, how to detect Poachers, and to destroy their works; directions for trapping; and destroying vermin, &c. By JOHN MAYER, Gamekeeper. The Sixth Edition, carefully revised and corrected, and a large portion re-written, by an eminent contributor to the "Sporting Review."
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and C., Stationers' Hall-court.

THE CROTON AQUEDUCT.
In one volume, royal 4to., with 21 engravings, price 25s.
ILLUSTRATIONS of the CROTON AQUEDUCT, being a History and Description of this celebrated undertaking, with an account of other similar works, ancient and modern. By F. B. TOWER, of the Engineer Department.
The Croton Aqueduct, forty miles in length, and supplying the city of New York with pure water in, perhaps, unsurpassed by any similar undertaking in any age or country. Its cost was nearly two millions sterling.
WILEY and PUTNAM, Stationers' Hall-court.

PARLEY'S TALES ABOUT ANIMALS.
In one very large Volume, square 16mo., price 7s. 6d. bound in cloth,
TALES ABOUT ANIMALS. By PETER PARLEY. The Ninth Edition greatly enlarged, with upwards of Five Hundred Woodcuts, many Portraits of Animals from Life.
"The number of articles is nearly doubled . . . the letter-press is more than doubled, and two hundred new cuts have been . . . The author has taken to make the volume accord as much as possible with its title, [illegible] Animals, and to give it a tendency to inspire in the minds of the young a spirit of mercy and kindness to the brute creation."
London: Printed for THOMAS TEGG, Cheapside, and may be procured of all other Booksellers in the United Kingdom.

WORKERS FOR A PENNY!
THE BEST AND CHEAPEST ALMANACK.
OLD MOORE'S ALMANACK, FOR THE YEAR OF HUMAN REDEMPTION, 1844.
96 Pages, with 17 Engravings containing Rules for the Preservation of Health; List of New Acts, the Whole Mass of Useful Information; Prophetic Hieroglyphics adapted to the Times, Stamp Tables; Table to calculate Wages, Corn-law Scale; Table of Wars since the Revolution in 1688; Prophecies and Proverbs; Summary of the British Parliament, the British Navy; Gentlemen's Calendar; Farmer's Calendar; the Weather, calculated from never failing data; Eclipses, Moon's Rising and Setting; and all that can be expected in an Almanack.
London: INGRAM and COOKE, Crane-court, Fleet-street.
[illegible] the Trade supplied.

FREEMASONRY.
Shortly will be published, price 10s 6d., demy 8vo., 15s., royal 8vo.; a New Edition of THE ANTIQUITIES OF FREEMASONRY; comprising
[illegible]

THE HERMIT OF BELLYFULLE.

LITERATURE.

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE. Edited by DOUGLAS JERROLD. No. 4.

This is, beyond comparison, the best number that Mr. Jerrold and his collaborateurs have yet produced. It opens with a racy article, by the editor, entitled "The Chronicles of Clovernook," a sort of Utopian romance, in which is conveyed a great deal of quiet, and therefore effective, satire. The chronicler is "The Hermit of Bellyfulle," and the story, "The Flying Bottle." The annexed quotation, graphic as well as literary, will show how cleverly the artist (Kenny Meadows) and the author work together:—

The hermit appeared between fifty and sixty—nearer sixty. He would have looked tall, but for his breadth of shoulder and bow of belly. His arms were short, thick, and sinewy; with a fist that might have throttled a wild boar or a sharp attorney. Altogether he was a massive lump of a man, hard and active. His face was big and round, with a rich, larder look about it. His wide, red cheeks were here and there jewelled with good living. As gems are said by some to be no more than a congelation of the rarest essences attracted and distilled from mother earth, so were the living rubies burning in the cheeks of the Hermit, the hardened, incarnated juices of the deer of the forest—the volatile spirits of the vine. The Hermit had no nose; none, ladies, none. There was a little nob of flesh, like a small mushroom, dipt in wine, which made its unobtrusive way between the good man's cheeks, and through which he has been known to sneeze: but impudence itself could not call that piece of flesh a nose. The Hermit's mouth had all the capacity of large benevolence; large and wide, like an old pocket. There seemed a heavy unctuousness about the lower lip; a weight and drooping from very mellowness—like a ripe peach, cracking in the sun. His teeth—but that he had lost one, as we afterwards learned, in active service on a Strasburg ham—were regular as a line of infantry, and no less dangerous. His forehead was large; his black hair waning into grey, save that one lock, which grew like the forelock of old Time, was raven still. His eyes were small, and so deep in his head, no man ever saw the whites of them: there they were, like black beads sunk in scarlet flesh. Such is the poor, weak picture of the glorious living face and then every bit of it shone, and though it had been smeared with sacrificial fat. The hermit's voice was deep and clear; and he had a sweet, heart-warming chuckle, which came like wine gurgling from a flask. The very pope of hermits was the Hermit of Bellyfulle.

This worthy anchorite wore no weed of grey—not he. He had a capacious gown of faded scarlet damask, worn—much worn: yet there were traces in it of past beauty: goodly bunches of grapes, antique flagons, and Cupids flaying a buck. This robe was girded about the waist with a thick silken rope; a relic, as he told us, picked up in a pilgrimage. It had been a bell-rope in the best hostelry of Palestine. The nether anatomy of the recluse showed, as we thought, that all the vanity of the world had not died within him, for he wore black velvet breeches; and, moreover, seemed to throw an approving glance at his leg, cased in unwrinkled silken hose of ebon black. His feet were easily lodged in large slippers of cramoisy velvet, with here and there a glimmering of old gold lace.

Had we space, we would quote further from this brilliant paper. It is followed by a very dreamy affair, entitled "Eureka." Next is "The Alligator Tank," which is strangely out of place here. "Anesquetta," both tale and illustrations, are likewise very poor. This is followed by a redeeming gem, "The Folly of the Sword," by the editor, of which we cannot speak too highly. "The Old Problem," by the author of "Orion," is far beyond our solution. This is succeeded by a genuine piece of humour, entitled "Dogs' Tales," by R. B. Peake, which every sporting reader will heartily enjoy; and we strain a point to quote from "The Unlucky Dog's Tale," with a most characteristic illustration by Kenny Meadows. To many mishaps succeeds the following, while the narrator attends his master on a fishing ramble:—

Notwithstanding the rebuffs and beatings I had endured, I followed my master with sincere pleasure; but being unused to go out with any one, it happened that he was always stumbling over me, treading on my paws, or kicking me out of the way. When we got into a field, I saw for the first time in my life a cow, with her calf. I own I was rather frightened at so large an animal as the cow appeared to me; but thinking that the calf was a maid-looking little heifer, I went up to have some fun with it; when, somehow or other, the cow got her horns under my ribs, and I soon felt myself flying in the air like a bird, only I came down at some distance heavily on my back. I got up and shook myself. Turning round to have another look at the calf, I saw the cow coming at a canter again after me, flourishing her tail in all directions; so I prudently wriggled myself under a fence, out of her reach.

I perceived that my master admired my ingenuity, for he smiled. After a couple of hours' run, during which I caught a butterfly, and fell into a muddy ditch, we arrived at the stream where the angling was to be commenced, and my master, with great patience, unpacked his tackle, but nothing could induce me to keep at a sufficient distance from the water but another flogging with the rod.

My master then baited his line with some oxbrains he had brought in a trypot with him, and started off on his pastime, ever and anon favouring me with a menacing look, if I gave the slightest indication of following him.

A turn in the river took him out of sight, behind a plantation of osiers, when observing that he had left the pot of brains on the bank, and that the flies were beginning to buzz and hover over it, I went to drive them away, and unluckily smelt the bait; in two seconds the whole of it was licked up and swallowed.

Presently I saw my master returning; he had walked nine miles; there was no possibility of procuring more bait; he had no brains, and he had nine miles to go home again; his time and his sport lost, and all through me, accursed, unlucky puppy! He resolved to shoot me.

Sullkily he put up his angling apparatus, and returned towards his domicile by a different route, for the purpose of procuring some bread and cheese and ale.

He accordingly entered a small inn, and called for what he wanted, and was served in a very dilatory manner by a red-haired, blowsy female, who seemed distressed by having too much to do.

I scented something in the house of exquisite savour, which proved to proceed from a dinner of the parish officers of Great Framingham, who had met to arrange their accounts and affairs, and to fix the day for the next feast, as well as to settle a very considerable diminution of the allowance of food and clothing to the paupers, in conjunction with a rise of the poor's-rate, to meet the tavern bills. These worthy functionaries had despatched a substantial repast, at which a turbot from Billingsgate had assisted; and were now taking their wine and punch, while deeply deploring the severity of the times.

I saw master munching his bread and cheese moodily; he was too savage at my conduct to deign to throw me a crumb. so, finding that he was not communicative, I took the earliest opportunity of wandering out of the room.

In the passage, on a wooden bench, stood a pile of about three dozen dirty plates, placed on each other, that certainly had been very incautious y deposited there; for on the bottom plate but two was the picked drumstick of a fowl, which put the whole quantity of crockery rather out of proper equilibrium.

I had not partaken of anything since the brains. The leg of the fowl was extended from the plates most temptingly, and I made a snap at it, pulling it away—it was mine, but what was the consequence? Down came the three dozen plates off the bench smash on the tiled floor. I never heard such a clatter in my born days, so I voluntarily dropped my tail between my legs, and scampered off with the bone.

The remaining papers are cleverly illustrated, particularly Pole's scene—the Friary; and altogether the number is as cheap as it is prodigal of talent.

THE UNLUCKY DOG TELLING HIS TALE.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

AMWELL, HERTS.

The lonely sylvan scenes
Of Amwell, which so oft, in early youth,
While novelty enhanced their charms,
Gave rapture to my soul; and often still
On life's calm moments shed serener joy.—(JOHN) SCOTT.

A pleasant place is Amwell, whether for the indulgence of such sweet fancies as teem within the poet's brain, or of those graver contemplations and loftier speculations wherein philosophy delights. Very pleasant it is in the shadowy stillness of the evening twilight to shake off for a time the load of care that hath fettered us during the garish day, and here resign ourselves to a dreamy reverie. The simple church, the lime-shadowed graveyard, the precipices shaded by drooping willows, the murmuring spring, all lovely, all its utter quietude, conspire to render it the very model of an English village. Justly to appreciate its beauties it should be visited at the witching hour of eventide,

When the last red light of the sunny day
From the rock and the river is passing away,— in the "leafy month of June," moreover, when the rich trill of the nightingale is floating through the woods, and the music of the spreading waters as they ripple over the pebbles in their course falls lullingly upon the listening ear. Then, how solemnly does the old church seem to lift up its reverend head in an atmosphere of rich and rosy light! how does the splendour of the crimson sunset seem to invest it with a hallowing glory! and how much of sanctity, of tranquil beauty, and even of majesty is there in the mien of that grey pile! There is, too, in the aspect of everything around a something that involuntarily inspires a feeling of devotion. Nature wears her greenest garb, and her most placid smile; all things, from the lowly church to the rippling river, from the shadowy elms to the flower-starred tombs, breathe the beneficent spirit of a living Deity. They appeal to us silently but eloquently, and gradually, yet surely, they coil themselves around the heart, moulding by a mystic influence the world-weary spirit anew, and giving to it a loftier tone and purer aspirations than it possessed before.

But Amwell has imperishable associations connected with its name. Its churchyard is rendered still more sacred by the remains of genius. Warner, the author of "Albion's England," and Reed the able commentator on Shakspere, both lie within its precincts. The village has been honoured by having had among its residents Hirle, the translator of Tasso, Isaac Walton has made it memorable by his angling rambles; John Scott, that rara avis, a Post-fraud, has celebrated it in what hon at Josiah Ge'des reads "verses well approved of, even in the world;" while the placid river flowing hard by suggests the memory of Middleton, and recals to mind the patriotic beneficence of a true "citizen of the world," whose unwearying perseverance, undaunted spirit, and utter disregard of pecuniary sacrifice in the prosecution of a vast undertaking, must rank him as one of London's greatest benefactors, and entitle him to the admiration and esteem of posterity. Need we add more to secure for Amwell a worthy place among the Nooks and Corners of Old England?

NOTICE. All communications respecting the transmission or non-arrival of the paper, must be addressed only to the person who supplies the paper or who receives the subscription.

LONDON: Printed by ROBERT PALMER (at the office of Palmer and Clayton), 10, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and published by WILLIAM LLOYD, at 198, Strand, where all communications for the Editor are requested to be addressed.—SATURDAY, August 12 1843.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 68.—Vol. III.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 19, 1843. [Sixpence.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND.

YOUNG ENGLAND.

Young England! How many a staid and thorough-going reader will start at the word! How many a sincere and hard-thinking country politician will muse inquiringly over the mystic definition! How many a cheerful-hearted and bluff creature of stolid independence, who never has cared, and never can care, for any country but Old England, will marvel innocently of the whereabouts of the new; wonder where Young England can be; what Young England is. Thousands and thousands of persons, moreover, of good ordinary reading and intelligence—educated families—communities, mercantile and agricultural—familiar congregations of men in daily companionship and intercourse—in short, half the living and bustling world in this country know nothing of Young England yet. Her ground is to them a terra incognita—her people, a race of strangers—her religion—her politics—her manners—but of these anon. But "Young England" is a term which, although it has not reached the uttermost corners of the kingdom, and passed fairly into the mouths of the million, has, nevertheless, been loud upon the lips of many, and, in circles, political and diplomatic—in cities, metropolitan and provincial—in Parliament, ministerial and opposition—in the press, party-armed or independent—has gathered an incipient renown—has created some noise and more speculation, and as a catchword and a novelty has gone soundingly into the social ear. Its principles, too, have taken root in many minds, and in some instances the front and bearing of its living types and founders have commanded an extensive and deserved admiration.

Now, we shall endeavour to discourse such general information about this "Young England" as may give the reader an unprejudiced instruction of its nature, and how far it has been developed in Old England up to the present time.

It will have been remarked by all wanderers in the path of history, and especially by all watchers of the progress of modern countries, that tendencies to change produce new and distinct classes among a people—classes which have often been the forerunners and often the fruits of revolutions. This fact has been peculiarly observable since the fearful French Revolution which preceded the last—and more so since the last itself—the short, stern, decisive July struggle. In the political strifes of Ireland the nomenclatures of new orders have rather succeeded each other than become simultaneous: your Ribbonmen have followed your Whiteboys, your Repealers your Precursors, and so forth. In Spain the presence of perpetual discord has kept many sections of the people with conflicting ambitions and various distinctive names; in England your parties had hitherto been two opposing ones only—such as your Cavalier and Roundhead—your Whig and Tory, until the first French Revolution gave birth to Radicals, and the last to Chartists, and a sort of blending of more moderate politicians to Conservatives; so that we have now our fair share of popular definitions and divisions. But still neither England nor Ireland nor Spain can pretend to anything like the number of divided bodies which, with distinct principles, leaders, aims, dress, manners, and representatives, form in France, or rather in Paris, an olla podrida of constituencies, all mixed up together, but all equally ambitious of shining apart. Of all these, not the least remarkable from political opinions, social predilections, and personal peculiarity, was that division of the community which called itself, and was called by all the others, La Jeune France—"Young France." The term "Young" we presume to have been adopted, because the party assumed a doctrine of national regeneration, the principle of a rejuvenating philosophy, the idea of an ancient people fresh clothed by civilization with the green leaves and bright armour of youth. You knew Young France in the senate by its mode of talking theory; in the café by its freedom of diction; and everywhere by its dress.

You will sometimes see in the advertisements of printsellers some new effort of the same artist's imagination, following one which his genius has already stamped with popularity, with the words added, "painted as a companion picture to the above." Now, a "Young England" has sprung up in "Old England," but not as a companion picture to the "Young France" of "Old France." No, its principles are dissimilar; and although its name is borrowed (the sect was christened by Joseph Hume, who is a far better hand at borrowing than inventing anything), and it is said to have adopted white cravats and waistcoats as the costume symbols of its order; yet in all it abides by, and in all it would achieve, it is directly opposed in its nature to "La Jeune France." Nevertheless it is as much, perhaps, the offspring of a changing condition of society as was Young France itself, although no symbol of a coming, or offbranch of a past revolution.

Let us attempt to describe, with our wonted impartiality, this "Young England"—and perhaps it will be as well to typify it inferentially—by its leaders. These, then, appear to consist of a few members of the Commons House of Parliament, arrived, as it would seem, at years of pretty sound discretion, although not yet silvered with the snow or the wisdom of years; who, although arrayed principally in the ministerial ranks, have thought proper to throw off the trammels of party, and, in an unchecked, spirited, and manly tone of independence, to give vent to their honest feelings and convictions upon the condition of the empire, without asking any other leave than the permission given them by their own conscience to say or do whatever they believe to be instrumental to their country's good. They acknowledge the general principles of the side with whom they sit, but they will not pledge themselves to party dictation or to individual acts; nay, they will criticise their own leader, and blame him for doing nothing, or too little, or too much, as their convictions flash, in the belief that so to do is not only one of the privileges, but one of the duties of free Parliamentary representation. They think, too, that they violate no proprieties by occasionally propounding some measure of their own to stem the cruelties of political economy, to promote the growth of charity and religious feeling, and to alleviate the condition of the poor.

In all this they are right—manifestly, constitutionally, excellently right—and their agitation in the Legislature is so good in purpose, that, save when it should tend to clog the wheels of government, it must be good in effect. They have their failings, too, which we shall not be chary to mention; the principal of which is, that they have no design in common, no general plan, but that they act nearly as independently of each other as they do of their political chiefs. Sir Robert Peel, however—we think, somewhat improperly—regards them as refractory members—propounds the silly principle that those who are not with him are against him—says he does not want them, and tells them, to use the words of Mr. Baillie Cochrane, "Non tali auxilio—walk over to the other side." If this is to be right when they are wrong, most assuredly it is to be wrong when they are right; and as for the most part they adhere to his general principles—and are young, vigorous, enthusiastic, and sincere, notwithstanding their independence—they are of an order to propitiate and to respect. In a manly way, too, they will work more national good than the followers of any party who vote at command, and in the Legislature are both silent and blind. The present representatives of "Young England," acting, as we have said, individually, and not in concert, but falling within the definition which the public has chosen to accept, are as follow:—Lord John Manners,

PRIZE CATTLE, EXHIBITED AT THE HIGHLAND SOCIETY'S GRAND SHOW AT DUNDEE.—See next page.

1. Kyloe. 2. Angus Cow. 3. Galloway Ox. 4. Ayrshire Cow. 5. Ayrshire Bull. 6. Shetland Bull. 7. Argyll Ox.

Mr. Smythe, Mr. Baillie Cochrane, Mr. Monckton Milnes, Mr. D'Israeli, Mr. Peter Borthwick, and Captain Rous; the two latter, perhaps, hardly belong to the order; but Mr. Borthwick is trying the experiment of an association with the same; and the free, sailor-like frankness of Capt. Rous has prompted him to speak his mind with just the sort of manly independence which "Young England" is described to possess. Lord John Manners is an amiable nobleman, with a literary turn of thought, and, we believe, a spirit in unison with the generous philanthropy of Lord Ashley in softening the wrongs and sorrows of the poor. His recent pamphlet has in it some odd crotchets, which we need not be required to defend; but his attack upon the law of Mortmain, which fetters benevolence, and limits the exercise of charity, was noble and just; and we have no doubt that the credit of erasing that law from the statute-book will yet give lustre to his name. In his anxiety to extend public charitable foundations he, however, expressed a hope of the revival of monastic institutions. That is one of the point-blank errors of Young England. Protestant England does not want the revival of monastic institutions, and would not tolerate it; and this gives us occasion to remark that Puseyism, or, as many regard it, a tendency from the Church to the Vatican, seems to have insinuated itself into the religious doctrine of "Young England," which we pronounce at once to be not nearly so useful as the political. Mr. Monckton Milnes is a young legislator of a stamp similar to that of Lord Mahon, and, if not a powerful orator, is entitled to respect for his ability to think and write. Mr. D'Israeli is in literary attainments a grade higher, and if his voice has not as much vigour as his pen, he is still a correct speaker, and guards his manner with a knowledge of the matter in dispute—carefully acquired, and not frivolously despattered against the sense and feeling of the house. It is admitted on all hands that he has devoted himself worthily to diplomatic questions; and would be the most unseemly in the young members of that house to say a word personally insulting to the members of the Government which they professed to support. (Cheers.)

Mr. D'Israeli said, in explanation, that he was not in the practice of saying anything personally offensive to any member of that house; and as the noble lord had accused him of using terms of gross contempt and insult [illegible] Government, he wished the noble lord to state what those terms were.

Viscount Sandon said that he could not perhaps quote the words, but he could appeal to the house if the hon. member had not used language of great contempt—the word gross, perhaps, was too strong—towards the Government.

Mr. D'Israeli said he could not recall to the noble lord to state the words, as the noble lord having failed to do so, he hoped that he [illegible] (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Hume said he [illegible] part of Sandon's indiscretion that [illegible] to answer to such a taunt.

Mr. [illegible] much to discuss the general question as to the [illegible] had been used by the noble lord (Sandon [illegible] member for Shrewsbury, and in reference to the [illegible] who [illegible] their opinions independently in that house. [illegible] noble lord had said that the member for Shrewsbury had used terms of great contempt and insult towards the Government of that house; but the noble lord had further failed to justify the language which he had made use of towards the hon. member for Shrewsbury. He [illegible] that hon. member's right to give the most perfect independent opinions on any question that might be before that house.

This observation of Mr. Smythe contains the gist of the principle of freedom of discussion which conscientious members have a right and duty to maintain in Parliament, and it is an echo of the former dignity of Captain Rous in this respect, and of the rebuke which Mr. Baillie Cochrane incurred in a similar spirit to the Premier himself in the personal castigation of him which he inflicted a few evenings since.

We wish the Government well as being a strong Government but we want it to be wise in proportion, and to display activity for public welfare, and for the alleviation of the public woe; or, if it be idle or undecided, or for the moment perplexed in a difficult course, we can forgive and even pronounce wise any censure; but we could not forgive the Right Hon. Minister to drill his partisans into inane silence and forbearance—to put a veto upon the public spirit of men holding the same principles as himself, but who complain because his measures do not work out those principles as they could wish, to gag, in fact, the mouth of independence and the voice of common sense, and, in a word, to insult the high calling of the legislator, by chaining him mute to his pillar, or fixing him tongue-tied in the [illegible] political stocks; and it is because such treatments have been, in a manner, burst by the party designated as "Young England," that we have thus chosen to give it a qualified modicum of our applause and support. Au reste, for their conduct we may add a wish, for the good of society, that Young England may contrive to keep spotless "the snowy waistcoat, and the white cravat!"

THE HIGHLAND SOCIETY'S AGRICULTURAL SHOW AT DUNDEE.

The important seaport town of Dundee has this year been honoured with the meeting of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland, whose show of [illegible] took place here during the past week. The preparations for the meeting were on the most extensive scale: the place of meeting was in the park north of the town; there was erected, near the [illegible] a grand dinner pavilion, to accommodate 1600 persons. A variety of public amusements were provided, also the Watt Institution, containing many specimens of mechanic art, &c., was thrown open to the public.

The business was commenced on Tuesday, the 8th inst., by Sir John Orby, Bart., taking the chair of the local committee, in the absence of the Earl of Mansfield, who was to have presided. At this meeting, Mr. G. Gordon read an abstract of the amount of stock that had been entered for exhibition. There were 326 cattle, 74 horses, 334 sheep, and 30 pigs—in all 764. This is the largest exhibition of cattle at any show of the society, except that at Glasgow, in 1838. The aggregate number of stock shown was not equal to the exhibition in Edinburgh last year; but that was an extraordinary number, perhaps the largest that had ever been exhibited in Europe. There was also a good exhibition of dairy produce; there being 29 exhibitors in this department, which was better than at any previous show. There was likewise a new feature in the show—the exhibition of poultry. The show-yard was opened for the exhibition of implements, roots, seeds, grasses, and dairy produce. The implements evinced much ingenuity, and contained many modifications of implements already in use; but there were none of original invention, or possessing otherwise features of peculiar interest. In the department of roots, Mr. Swan, of Mains, Lasswade, the Society's seedsmen, exhibited 17 different lots, all of which were importations from foreign countries.

Professor Johnston, the newly-appointed agricultural chemist, next delivered a lecture of two hours' duration, in Bell-street Chapel, on the advantages resulting from the application of chemistry to agriculture. The lecturer was eminently successful, and received much praise.

In the evening, the members of the committee and other gentry dined together in the Thatch-hall, Union-street; after which there was a ball in the Exchange-rooms, which was kept up till four o'clock next morning.

On Wednesday, the grand dinner took place in the pavilion. The food was supported by four rows of handsome fluted columns. It was lit by numerous gas lustres pendent from stellated portions of the roof, and the sides were ornamented by a number of emblematical paintings. Flags and banners were also displayed in various parts of the pavilion. By six o'clock, and at that time the entire square was filled, the Duke of Richmond occupied the chair, supported on the right and left by the Earl of Mansfield, the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Provost of Dundee, Bailie Anderson, Major Thorold, Mr. Coleman, of New York; Dr. Grant, Mr. Richardson, of Pitfour, and Mr. O. Tyndal Bruce. The vice-chair was filled by Lord Kinnaird, who was supported on either side by the Hon. Fox Maule, M.P., Lord Duncan, Lord Kinnoul, Professor Johnston, Sir John Ogilvy, Sir M. Menzies, the Hon. Captain Murray, Major Moray, of Abercarney; Sheriff L'Amy, Mr. Robert Haldane, &c. In addition to these distinguished persons, there was present at the show the gallant veteran Lord Lynedoch, for whom the Duke of Richmond requested the same indulgence which had been granted by the agricultural societies in the south—that his lordship might be permitted to ride on his pony in the show-yard, which is contrary to the general rule.

We have not room to report the proceedings at this very large meeting. The noble chairman, in proposing "Success to the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland," stated his conviction that the Association was generally popular, not only amongst the landlords, but also amongst the tenantry in every part of Scotland. "They had met that day to celebrate their anniversary, to endeavour to improve, by the exhibition of stock, the different breeds of animals belonging to the country, and to endeavour to improve the agriculture of the country." The noble duke then traced the Society's increased success in part to the reduction in price, and, consequently, extended circulation of their monthly journal. Lord Kinnaird, in proposing the health of the Duke of Richmond, characterized his Grace as one who had bled in the cause of his country, but had turned his sword into a ploughshare, and become a practical farmer; and the noble duke, in returning thanks, especially adverted to the importance of the farmers, the manufacturers, and the commercial interests of the country uniting together. "The manufacturers," (observed his grace,) "are our great consumers—the commercial interests are of the greatest importance to us all; and I hope and trust that it shall never live to see the day when the great body of the people will not most cordially support the farmer." (Loud cheers.)—Lord Kinnaird, the croupier, in returning thanks for his health being drunk, observed, "that much of the success of agriculture in Scotland was owing to the competition with which they had to contend—to their having a milder climate to that of England. For it was an undeniable fact, which he had seen both abroad and at home, that the better the climate and the soil, the easily food was procured, the less exertion would be made by the tiller of the soil. (Cheers.) He was happy to say they were beginning to open their eyes in England, and were sending young men to profit by the example of Scotch farmers."

In the course of the evening, the circumstance of the manufacturers of Dundee having given a holiday to their workmen [illegible] occasion of the society's meeting there was referred to, as was also the prosperity of the Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland, which will hold their meeting at Belfast, on the 30th and 31st inst. After the last toast of "A Good Show at Glasgow in 1844, of Horn, Corn, Wool, and Yarn," the company retired highly gratified with the evening's proceedings.

Among the implements exhibited on Thursday was the Marquis of Tweedale's tile-making machine, and also a very neat and economical steam-engine and thrashing-mill; several improved turnip-cutting machines, a number of improved ploughs, &c.

Hybrid clover seed, as it is called, &c., was several specimens of seeds and other products raised from seed chemically prepared; the difference of which from the unprepared seed was remarkably striking. One specimen, which had been sown of very inferior seed, (being the sweepings of a barn floor) but which had been cleansed by the new process, gave four feet in height, strong in the straw, and a heavy top. Mr. Campbell, Dudhope-street, Dundee, is the person who exhibits these specimens, and the manner of preparing the seed is of course a secret. Be it what it may, if it is to be generally and cheaply applied, it bodes to work a change in the cereals of the country, and, in this respect, Mr. Campbell exhibited a specimen of Bokhara clover, being the same as Sir W. M'Naghten forwarded from Affghanistan as Cabul Lucerne. Specimens of its produce from seeds which had sprung up, (having been shaken off the grown plants,) were also exhibited, and this clover may be successfully treated in this country. We annex a splitted group of the Highland cattle

1. A true Kyloe, or West Highland bull: of which cattle the Hebrides contain about 150,000. They are remarkably hardy, and easily fed, and yielding fine-grained and highly flavoured beef, which gives a superior price in every market.

2. The Alderney cow, a valuable breed, which has rapidly grown around the horned cattle. One proprietor has been known to gain, on account of them, more than 100 pair, besides several pieces of plate.

3. The Galloway ox, in good condition, in which the beautiful head laying on of the flesh, &c., is very remarkable; the loose, mellow skin being covered with long, soft, silky hair.

4. Ayrshire cow. 5. Ayrshire bull. [illegible] Scotland for many thousands. The reputation of the Ayrshire cow for butter and cheese is fully established.

6. [illegible] Highland bull, exhibiting evident traces of the same origin with the West Highlander. The Northern Highland cattle continue to live on their native moors and wastes, and even to fatten there

7. The Argyle ox, with the characteristics of the best Highland cattle.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

SPAIN.—(From our own Correspondent.)—PARIS, August 15.—All the private letters received yesterday and to-day from Spain agree that the unhappy country is in a state of anarchy and disorganisation. In Madrid the Christino party are divided into two parties, and there is little doubt that, on after the elections the Lopez administration will be compelled to retire, and be replaced by the creatures of the Queen Dowager. All the grandees, merchants, &c. are decided in favour of the Moderates, and will support them; they fear that Lopez, in the hands of the Ultra-Liberals, will be forced to make concessions such as must lead to a republic. The Moderates, or, as they are called, Moderados, are the real victors; they have forced the ministers to their views, and are now opening the road to the return of Christina to Madrid. It cannot for a moment be supposed that Isabella, an infant not yet thirteen years of age, possessing little or no knowledge of the world, and of a sickly situation, will be allowed to govern Spain in its present critical situation. The object, the only object, of the Moderates, and of [illegible] is to get the person of Christina and her daughter into their hands, and Isabella will be Queen, but Christina will govern. Indeed, [illegible] her visit is of her return to Madrid that, on the departure of her Intendant, M. Ramorino, and others belonging to her household for Paris for Madrid, and all her servants at the Hotel des Courcelles have put on the [illegible] worn by them when Christina was regent. Both, it is, however, await the result of the elections before declaring their real intentions.

The Christinos are actively in the field, and are making use of an army which has not been disbanded. Orders are openly given and openly taken. Large sums of money are being sent in this way. It was only a few days since that eleven Rothschild and Ardouin sent 600,000 francs to Spain for the use of Barcelona, Seville, and Madrid. The Ultra-Liberals, now [illegible] other Progressistas or Christinos has any further occasion for their services, are left to their own resources, and, instead of money, they distribute proclamations. Their instructions to the political chiefs are to publish in every town and province the decrees that their intentions are "to proclaim the constitution of 1837, with such modifications as shall be sanctioned by the Cortes that the marriage of the Queen shall not compromise the national independence, nor place it under a disgraceful dependence, a reconciliation of all Spaniards, with the exception only of those the magnanimity of the country requires should remain in exile; radical reform of the public treasury, a new system of taxation; forgetfulness of the past, and no reaction." The struggle will be between "money and promises"—it is not difficult to prophesy which will gain the day. The Moderates have accepted the decrees that their intentions are "to proclaim the constitution of 1837, with such modifications as shall be sanctioned by the Cortes"

Bayyiaha had fled into Austria, but by suspending the Pacha, to whom the evils were chiefly attributed, and by adopting other conciliatory measures, the Government anticipates that tranquility will be speedily restored.

The Sultan honoured Sir Stratford Canning with an audience on the 27th ult. His Excellency delivered a letter from the Queen announcing the birth of a Princess. The Porte had again addressed circulars to all the foreign embassies, on the subject of protections accorded to natives of this country. The fresh complaints of the Porte were principally excited by the conduct of certain Jews of Salonica, under foreign protection, who for [illegible] months have been engaged in the fabrication of false coin, and [illegible] attempts of the Government to restrain them.

It appears from a statement that has been published in the Journal de Constantinople, that the Greeks have withdrawn themselves from the Russian jurisdiction, and have united themselves to the league which has now been formed throughout the western Caucasus against the invasion of Russia. One vessel alone engaged in the Circassian trade has fallen a victim to the blockade, which during this year been resumed with extraordinary rigour. The Russian armies have entered by the north; but hitherto no information has reached Constantinople of the result of their movement.

The Servian question still remains in the same state of uncertainty, although the Emperor's final decision has at length been communicated to the Porte. His Imperial Majesty will consent to recognise the legality of the election, if Petronievitch and Wutschitch are expelled from Servia!

Switzerland.—After an extraordinary passage of twelve days the royal mail steam-ship Caledonia, Captain Lott, entered the Mersey on Sunday night at ten o'clock, bringing her Majesty's mails from Canada and the United States, and 74 passengers. On the Caledonia leaving she met the Acadia [illegible] Liverpool. She left Liverpool on the 19th ult., and would make the voyage in twelve days from Liverpool to Boston.

By this arrival we have New York papers to the 31st, Boston to the 1st, and Halifax to the 3rd. Their contents are unimportant. In reference to money matters the New York Journal of Commerce remarks:—"There has been a very fine business during the week in groceries, dry goods, hardware, &c. The importations of goods from Europe have been much increased without satisfying the demand at all, the goods being sold as soon as they arrive. Domestic goods of all sorts are selling well, and some of the [illegible] at rising prices."

MARQUESAS ISLANDS.

The following version of the differences which have arisen on this station between the English and French captains of men-of-war appeared on the 13th in the Constitutionnel:—

"Immediately after a private interview with the [illegible], Queen Pomare assembled together the greater part of the populati n of Tahiti, and desired them to proceed from Eimeo to Papeete, to declare to the Islands being placed under the protection of France: the people one and all objected, and the French flag was instantly lowered, and another flag hoisted. The French captain now took an active part, and threatened to fire on the flag. The British captain declared that if he did so he would reply. Affairs were in this unpleasant state on the departure of the last despatches. It was much feared that these insignificant squabbles might lead to serious troubles between England and France."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—SATURDAY.

The lordships met at twelve o'clock.—The Coroners Bill was read a third time and passed.—Lord MONTEAGLE laid on the table the papers [illegible] ordered on his motion, which it is his intention to propose on Monday.—[illegible] brought up from the Commons the Attorney General's Bill; the Grand Jury Presentment (Ireland) Bill; the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill; the Coal Whippers Bill; the Church of Scotland Benefices Bill; and the Customs Bill. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—SATURDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at a quarter past twelve o'clock.—The Consolidated Fund Bill passed through committee; report ordered.—The Attorney Commission Bill; the Attorneys and Solicitors Bill; the Grand Jury Presentment (Ireland) Bill; the Coal Whippers Bill; and the Customs Bill were read a third time and passed.—The order of the day for the third reading of the Machinery Exportation Bill was read and discharged. It is intended to add the provisions of that measure to the Customs Bill.—Adj.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Admiralty Lands Bill was read a third time and passed.—The [illegible] of Schools (Ireland) Bill and the Holyrood Park Bill were read a second time.—The Copyright of Designs Bill was read a second time, likewise the Customs Bill.—Lord BROUGHAM complained of the conduct of Mr. Arnold, the proprietor of the English Opera-house, against certain parts of the Theatres Regulation Bill, chiefly complaining of the seventh clause.—Lord [illegible] of Lansdowne presented a petition from Sir Benjamin Brighton Theatre.—The Disembodied Militia Bill was read a first time. [illegible] with other bills, been brought up from the Commons.—Lord [illegible] Lord Brougham begged to ask, on behalf of Mr Arnold, whether the minor theatres in London would be allowed to act the legal if so, whether the same privilege would be extended to the Lyceum, that theatre not being deemed a minor theatre?—Lord WHARNCLIFFE said (as we understood, that it would be in the power of any theatre to act plays, provided they opened their doors without a licence.—Lord CAMPBELL moved an amendment to the fifteenth clause. The object of that clause was twofold—first, to prevent any seditious representations being made; secondly, that nothing tending to corrupt the [illegible] morals should be permitted. He proposed, in order to carry out these objects effectually, that the words "for the preservation of good manners and decency" be inserted.—Lord REDESDALE objected to the motion for the insertion of the amendment in the clause, because it would limit the discretionary power of the Lord Chamberlain.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE supported the amendment.—The amendment was postponed, and Lord CAMPBELL having given notice that he would move it on the third reading.—The report was then received; after which the Hackney and Stage Carriages Bill and the Highway Rates Act Continuation Bill severally passed through a committee.—Lord MONTEAGLE then rose to move the resolutions of which he had given notice, and said, that for the first time in the history of the country a property tax was imposed in time of peace, and it was, therefore, peculiarly fitting that at the close of the first year they should pause to consider of the effects of the financial measures which had been adopted. The noble lord reviewed the arguments used to overthrow the administration of those who were now in office—a decaying revenue, ruinous war, &c., and the necessity of some decided step being taken to restore the revenue to a state commensurate with the expenses of the country. He saw little hope of the repeal of the property tax, which he hoped would not be continued a moment longer than was absolutely necessary. The Government had pledged themselves that it should be continued for three years only, if it realised their anticipations. How much more, then, were they pledged to its repeal when instead of £3,300,000 it had produced £5,100,000. He thought a substitute might be found for it without much difficulty. There was a bill then upon the table to repeal the duty upon the exportation of machinery which, compared with any measures of free trade proposed by the late Government, was absolutely startling. [illegible] was in support of the principles of free trade, the noble lord concluded by moving the resolutions.—The Duke of WELLINGTON regretted that generally the President of the Board of Control was not able to attend, in order that their lordships might hear his views on the resolutions of the noble lord rather than those of any other person. He appreciated the [illegible] knowledge of the subject. With respect to the property-tax, all he could say was, there had never been any intention of continuing it one day longer than was absolutely necessary. Neither the Government nor the country had produced the amount at which they were estimated; but the corn-duty, it was only fair to state, was only an equivalent for the loss on the malt duty, and the produce from both was about what might have been expected from [illegible] duty on wines and spirits, foreign and domestic, had been [illegible] off very considerably, and this was not owing to any alteration of [illegible] but to increased habits of temperance. It was true that a great portion of the property tax had been collected between April and July, but it had not been carried to account. All these, and the amounts paid in consequence of the forgery of Exchequer bills, accounted for the difference between the estimate and the result so far as to render the case much less bad than the noble lord had made it out. He denied that it was a fact that the balances in the Exchequer had been diminished, as stated in the resolutions, or that the funded debt had been increased. The resolutions, he contended, were not correct as to their facts; and having every confidence in the resources of the country, he trusted the House would not join in rejecting the motion of the noble lord.—Lord BROUGHAM opposed the resolutions of Lord Monteagle, contending, at great length, that his speech in every material particular had been satisfactorily replied to by the noble duke.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE hoped the coal-duties would attract the attention of the Government, for they had not only failed as a measure of revenue, but one-third of the shipping formerly employed in the exportation of coals was thrown out of employment. He supported the resolutions, and contended that as the late Government had been turned out of office on the ground of the unsatisfactory state of the finances, in reference to something that fell from Lord Monteagle, and that the late Government had, as a party, no claim upon him. He had it under the hand of the chief of the party, and he would say that it would be monstrous assurance if they pretended that as a party they had any claim upon him. Although free, however, he had not taken advantage of his freedom to abandon his party until they brought forward a measure for the destruction of the constitution of Canada.—The resolutions were then negatived without a division, and their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The house met at twelve o'clock, and several bills were forwarded a stage In reply to a question from Mr. WILLIAMS, Sir R. PEEL said it was intended to give the Chelsea pensioners who are to be embodied the same pay as was given to special constables, namely—2s. 6d. a day, and they would be placed in the same position as the yeomanry, for whose payment no particular fund was provided. In reply to a question from Mr. COBDEN, Sir R. PEEL said he was not officially aware of the arrival in this country of the Duke of Palmella, with a view to renew the negotiations for a treaty with Portugal; but he had some reason to believe that the report was correct.—Sir H. HARDINGE then moved the committee on the Chelsea Pensioners Bill.—Mr. HUME contended that the pensioners were unconstitutional, for no one could be subjected to the Mutiny Act without a regular corps in committee of supply.—Sir H. HARDINGE said that every description of force in whose hands arms were placed were subject to the Mutiny Act from the moment they were called out.—After some observations from other members, Mr. T. DUNCOMBE moved that the bill should be committed that day three months. He characterised it as an insidious attempt to undermine the constitution, an attempt which, if successful, would reflect eternal disgrace on both sides of the house. As there were 76,000 Chelsea pensioners, and though it was only intended to call out some 10,000 or 12,000 of them, yet they would have power to increase the standing army to the extent of the whole, and to carry bayonets to the door of every house in the country. The country were backed by a majority willing enough to be dragged through the dirt, but he hoped they would pause before they placed the country under military despotism.—Mr. WILLIAMS strongly condemned the bill.—Sir H. HARDINGE defended the army from some strong expressions used by Mr. Duncombe, and said that the Chelsea pensioners had been repeatedly called out, and supplied with arms, but he objected to thus arming a body of men without an act of Parliament. The age and experience of the pensioners rendered them a much more valuable body to call out in cases of disturbance than rawer troops, who when excited would be apt to act with perhaps some ferocity. The pensioners would be called out only in cases of emergency, and under these circumstances before they placed the house would all but unanimously agree to the bill.—Mr. E. B. ROCHE adverted to the words used by Mr. O'Connell with respect to sergeants of the British army, and said he adopted the words of the honourable and learned gentleman. He thought that the non-commissioned officers of the army were not well treated. For fifty promotions from the ranks in the French army there was but one in ours. He wished to know how much number it was intended to keep military possession of Ireland?—Lord PALMERSTON did not view this measure with jealousy, for it gave no additional power to the Crown, and the pensioners would have to perform garrison or other duty.—Mr. BRIGHT strongly opposed the bill, which was supported by Mr. PROTHEROE, who looked upon the measure as one of preventive police, and by no means dangerous to the liberties of the people, under some circumstances.—Mr. HUME, Mr. NEWDEGATE, Mr. COBDEN, and other honourable members took part, the house divided, and the amendment of Mr. DUNCOMBE was negatived by a majority of 99 to 10.—Mr. HUME complained that the Speaker do leave the chair, Mr. DUNCOMBE renewed the amendment, which was again negatived by a majority of 92 to 13.—The bill then went through committee.

HOUSE OF LORDS. [illegible] DAY.

In reply to a question from Lord CHARLEVILLE, Lord WHARNCLIFFE said he had received the returns moved for with respect to the disturbances. Lord Lucan from the magistrates of Mayo; they were in accordance with those read on a former evening by Lord Lucan; but there were letters in a [illegible] before the house on Thursday. He had not had time to peruse them with sufficient attention to enable him to form an opinion upon the subject.—The Theatres Regulation Bill was read a third time and passed, after a short discussion. The Duke of WELLINGTON then moved the second reading of the Irish Arms Bill, and briefly explained its provisions to their lordships.—Lord CAMOYS opposed this bill, and, although opposed to the repeal of the Union, thought the people of Ireland would be unworthy [illegible] did not agitate for the redress of their manifold grievances.—The Earl of WINCHILSEA said the speech of the noble lord proved that every one of his predictions respecting Catholic emancipation had been verified in letter and spirit. The Arms Bill was now was more alarming than on the occasions when the Arms Bill was originally introduced and renewed, and he therefore heartily supported it.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE would not feel himself justified in withdrawing from the Government any power they possessed at present for the preservation of peace in Ireland, and therefore, although he regretted they should have felt it their duty to add to it clauses which he did not think much irritation, he could not conscientiously oppose it. Nevertheless, he did not think it a bill peculiarly applicable to the present state of Ireland. They must look not only at what from, but also at what from, [illegible] certainly it was not a new link between the Government and the people, it could not be the means of silencing popular clamour—it could not disable any demagogue from maintaining or extending his power—nor could it be the means of removing religious or political animosity. For these purposes very different measures would be necessary. It was his deliberate conviction, that the first of these should be the provision by the state for the Catholic clergy. With reference to other points the noble marquis deprecated the tax on conveyances of land, and wished that small sales out of large properties could be facilitated; and concluded his speech by urging on the Government to follow up the measures of relief by other measures for ameliorating the condition of the people of Ireland.—Lord BROUGHAM entirely concurred in the statesmanlike speech of the noble marquis. He had been one of those who gave the first impetus to the Catholic emancipation, and he was still perfectly ready to defend both the principle and the result of that measure. The noble lord then attacked Lord Eldon, and contended that the Catholics had given ample pledges, the oath all Roman Catholics were bound not to disturb the Established Church.—Lord CAMOYS said that the oath could not bind peers in their legislative capacity.—The Earl of DERBY said he thought it would be proceed to sit in the house under such a construction as that which Lord Brougham had placed upon the Catholic oath. The noble lord contended that it could not be treated as a right to be.—The Earl of WICKLOW supported the bill, and expressed his astonishment that Lord Camoys should have declared in his place in Parliament that the Established Church ought to be abolished.—Lord BEAUMONT, as a Catholic peer, disclaimed all intention of disturbing the Established Church, and regretted that sentiments should be uttered in that house calculated to encourage the rebellious spirit now prevalent in Ireland. He would give his vote in favour of the Arms Bill, and was only sorry that no other measures had been adopted to put down agitation.—Lord CAMPBELL contended that the Catholic oath was not binding in a legislative capacity.—The Marquises of HERTFORD, CLANRICARDE, and LONDONDERRY subsequently addressed the house, after which the second reading was agreed to without a division.—Several bills were then forwarded a stage, and their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The house met at twelve o'clock.—On the motion for resuming the committee on the Chelsea Pensioners Bill.—Sir H. HARDINGE agreed to limit the number of the pensioners to be embodied to 10,000.—Mr. BOWRING opposed the bill. He had should be glad only during a limited period.—Sir J. GRAHAM said he could not consent to passing the bill for a limited period, but it was to be recollected that Government would be annually responsible with respect to this force as with respect to any other force.—After a few words from Mr. WILLIAMS and Colonel WOOD, Mr. HUME moved the adjournment of the house.—A discussion ensued, which terminated in a division, defeating the adjournment by a majority of 92 to 13.—Mr. HUME moved the further consideration of the bill that day three months.—Sir R. PEEL said that when he introduced the Metropolitan Police Bill in 1829, it had been met by similar objections, and yet he would venture to assert that the inhabitants of the metropolis felt more security than apprehension from the knowledge that there were 4000 or 5000 men upon whom they could at any time rely for defence. What, he asked, was the objection to the present bill? was intended to be perpetual, and he could look upon it only as a coercion bill, for he did not know what coercion was if bayonets and ball cartridges were not to be called coercion.—Sir H. HARDINGE further answered the objection by a majority of 74 to 10. The house then adjourned for an hour.—Sir C. BULLER then brought forward his motion on colonization. The hon. member entered at great length into the question, and expressed a hope that the right hon. baronet (Sir R. Peel) would turn his attention to the subject during the recess, and, in that hope, he abstained from bringing forward any special measure upon the question of such importance.—Mr. B. COCHRANE moved for certain papers relative to our diplomatic intercourse with Greece, and contended that the kingdom was not governed according to the principles laid down at the time of its establishment. The financial proceedings were conducted in a manner far from satisfactory. Taxation had greatly increased, and the guarantee entered into when King Otho went to Greece had not been complied with, in consequence of which that country had suffered severely.—Dr. BOWRING seconded the motion, and said that, with every intention of doing good to Greece, we had inflicted serious evil upon that country.—Mr. HUME supported the motion.—Lord PALMERSTON then moved for copies or extracts of all communications which have passed between the Government and our ambassadors at VIENNA, PARIS, St. Petersburgh, and Constantinople, since the establishment of the Kingdom of Greece, in regard to the transactions connected with the late changes in the Government of SERVIA. The noble lord contended at great length that the independence of the Turkish nation was necessary to the preservation of the balance of power in Europe, and that the course pursued by the Government was not calculated to ensure that independence to the Ottoman Empire.—Sir R. PEEL said it was impossible for him to lay upon the table papers respecting matters which were still the subject of negotiation, and defended the foreign policy of the Government as far as it referred to Servia.—Mr. DENISON considered Sir R. Peel's reply to Lord Palmerston's motion by no means satisfactory.—Lord SANDON conceived that Mr. D'Israeli had treated the Government with gross contumely in the course of his speech.—Mr. HUME, Mr. MAULE, Mr. SMYTHE, and Mr. CORNISH severally addressed the house; after which Lord PALMERSTON replied, and would not press his motion, as Sir R. Peel had said that the production of the papers would be inconvenient while negotiations were still pending.—The motion was then withdrawn without a division.—The other orders of the day were then disposed of, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY.

The house did not sit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The house met at twelve o'clock.—On the motion of Sir J. GRAHAM, the house went into committee on the Episcopal Functions Bill, which provides for the performance of the episcopal functions in any diocese, where the bishop, from bodily or mental infirmity, is rendered incapable of attending to his duties. The various clauses having been agreed to, the bill was ordered to be reported on Thursday.—A protracted discussion took place on the question that the house should resolve itself into committee on the Chelsea Pensioners Bill. Ultimately it went into committee, and a debate took place as to the period for which it was to continue in operation, the Government proposing it as a permanent measure, while Mr. HUME and other honourable members contended that its duration should be limited to three or five years. On a division the proposal for limiting the operation of the bill to five years was negatived by a majority of 76 to 33. A second proposition to limit its duration to five years and six months was also rejected by a majority of 92 to 14.—Mr. HUME declared that he would give no further opposition to the bill, though his opinion respecting it remained unchanged.—In reply to a question from Mr. MANGLES, Sir R. PEEL said that if the Duke of Palmella had arrived in this country for the purpose of renewing the negotiations for a commercial treaty between Portugal and Great Britain, he had taken the journey solely at the instance of the Portuguese Government.—In reply to a question from Mr. EWART, Sir J. GRAHAM said that though the Government had no present plan of education, yet they would turn their attention to the subject during the recess.—The Lords' amendments to the Coroners Regulation Bill were agreed to, with the exception of one relating to the amount of money payable as fees.—On the motion of Sir J. GRAHAM that amendment was rejected, on the ground that it was an undue interference with the privileges of the House of Commons.—The Court of Exchequer (Ireland) Offices Bill was reported.—Mr. CHRISTIE moved the committee on the Defamation and Libel Bill, stating at some length its provisions to the house.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said that the bill contained provisions to which he was opposed, because they appeared to him to be carrying them back to the severities of the old law before it was ameliorated by public opinion. He was, however, willing to adopt anything in the bill which was an improvement in the existing law, especially that permitting the plea of truth in cases of criminal information.—After a few words from Mr. MACAULAY and Mr. BERNAL, expressing their gratification that the chief principles of the bill was adopted by the Attorney-General, the house went into committee. The various clauses were, after considerable discussion, agreed to, and the house resumed.—The Coroners' Duties Bill went through committee.—The house then went into committee upon the Charitable Loan Societies (Ireland) Bill.—Lord CLEMENTS moved the omission of clause 45.—The committee divided:—For the clause, 64; against it, 2; making up our return to the gallery. Lord CLEMENTS was saying that these clauses were a fine specimen of the conduct of the Government towards Ireland. They force on her an Arms Bill on the report of a few police officers, and now they forced those clauses against her expressed wishes, 21 of the most eminent names in the country having signed a remonstrance against them. He regretted to see that one man who signed that remonstrance had just voted with the majority. Why did they force it on? Merely because one individual desired it.—Mr. YOUNG said that the committee which recommended these clauses consisted of ten Irish members; and the noble lord, in opposing them, stood alone. (Hear.)—The clause was then agreed to.—Lord CLEMENTS said it was useless to attempt to do anything beneficial to Ireland. He would not only withdraw that motion, but all others, and he would go home to Ireland and say so. (Laughter, and loud cries of "hear, hear," during which the noble lord collected his papers, took up his hat, and quitted the house.)—The remaining clauses were then agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be reported.—The house adjourned at half-past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The royal assent was given by commission to several bills [illegible] Noble lords presented petitions from various districts, all complaining of the injury they had sustained by the unrestricted use of machinery, and praying their lordships to take the matter into consideration. The noble earl gave notice that he should bring the subject under the notice of the house at an early next session.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE laid on the table of the house papers relating to the Earl of Lucan and Mr. O'Malley.—The Arms (Ireland) Bill was read a second time, and, having been reported, was ordered to be read a third time next day.—After some conversation with regard to the Foreign Jurisdiction Bill their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at twelve o'clock.—The British Iron Companies Bill was read a third time and passed. Mr. GREENE brought up the report of the committee on the Chelsea Out-pensioners Bill, which was received, ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time on Friday; as were the Episcopal Functions and Charitable Loan Societies (Ireland) Bills.—The China Government Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Coroners' Duties Bill was read a third time and passed, after some verbal amendment to one of its clauses.—The Affidavits (Scotland and Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.—Sir G. CLERK brought up the report on the Libel and Defamation Bill, which was agreed to, and the bill ordered to be read a third time on Friday.—The Court of Exchequer (Ireland) Offices Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Law of Evidence Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Lords' amendments to the Cathedral Churches Bill were agreed to, with some verbal alterations.—On the motion of Sir J. GRAHAM, the house went into committee on the Teachers of Schools (Ireland) Bill.—A short discussion took place, which ended in an arrangement, on the part of Mr. HAMILTON, to withdraw the bill.—The house resumed, and Morgan's Divorce Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. WARD moved for a return of the Ecclesiastical revenues in Ireland, specifying the bishops' lands and glebes, as well as the parochial rent-charge. Ordered.—In reply to a question from Mr. BANNERMAN, Sir JAMES GRAHAM said that he had not yet received the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown with respect to the memorial, as to the authority of Sir David Brewster to discharge his duties as Principal of the College of St. Andrew's, in consequence of his secession from the Scottish Church.—Mr. CHARTERIS gave notice that he should, on to-morrow, ask the right hon. gentleman the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether it was the intention of the Government to introduce next session a bill for the suppression of duelling?—Captain FOLKHILL gave notice that early next session he should move for a select committee to ascertain the best mode of regulating the price of bread in the metropolis.—Mr. WYSE postponed his motion on Legal Education in Ireland till next session.—The house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

Their lordships met at ten o'clock.—The standing orders were suspended, as far as related to the British Iron Company's Bill, and the committee on the bill was ordered to meet on Monday, at eleven o'clock.—Earl STANHOPE presented petitions from the Chamber of Commerce of Birmingham relating to the question of the currency.—Their lordships then went into the question of the dismissal of the Earl of Lucan—who moved for some papers upon the subject, a part of which were given, and part refused.—The Irish Poor-law Bill went through committee, and was ordered to be read a third time on Monday.—The Arms (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.—Several other bills were forwarded a stage, and their lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at twelve o'clock.—The Earl of Shrewsbury's Estate Gibson's Estate, and Gilbert's Estate Bills were read a third time and passed.—The Chelsea Out-pensioners Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Episcopal Functions Bill; the Charitable Loan Societies (Ireland) Bill; and the Defamation and Libel Bill were read a third time and passed.—The house, after some trifling discussion, went into committee on the Savo Trade Suppression Bill. After the clauses had been discussed, the report was brought up, and ordered to be committed again on Monday.—The house adjourned till twelve o'clock on Monday.

THE STORM.—The storm of Wednesday, which was felt so severely in many parts of Kent, was very severe in the neighbourhood of Peckham, Sydenham, Forest-hill, and Bromley. The lightning, which was very brilliant, commenced playing at about six on Tuesday evening, accompanied with violent peals of thunder, but no rain. It continued to increase in severity until about nine, when it could be distinctly seen playing along the rails of the Brighton and Dover Railway. It continued without intermission throughout the whole night, until two o'clock in the morning, when it ceased slightly. At about five it recommenced very severely, accompanied for the first time with the most violent torrents of rain. The road between Peckham and Forest-hill, and the whole Surrey side of the Croydon road, especially where there was any declivity, resembled large torrents, being for the time wholly impassable from the water, which was covered with a considerable quantity of fruit torn by the rain from the trees in the neighbourhood. Several houses at Peckham were flooded, and the corn-fields presented a miserable appearance, and were in some places completely levelled. At about eight o'clock the thunder became more lively, and in length gradually died away, and by ten the storm had completely ceased. At the commencement of the storm an enormous mass of the electric fluid fell in a field near Peckham with a loud hissing noise like a rocket, and after playing for a few seconds on the earth it disappeared with a stunning report. Beyond this the electric fluid did very trifling damage. We have been favoured by several correspondents from various parts of the country with accounts of the progress of this awful visitation, and all concur in giving a most lamentable description of the results. One correspondent, from near Eastone, says that barns, rabbits, pheasants, partridges, rooks, &c. &c., have been picked up by numbers after the storm. A great quantity of soil is washed off the hills, and the electric fluid has done much damage.

THE WAR IN SPAIN.—SARAGOSSA.

The inhabitants of Saragossa, the capital of Lower Aragon, rank high in the estimation of their countrymen, for their cool and determined bravery, and the love they bear to those by whom they are governed. Saragossa has gained high celebrity by the two sieges which it sustained during the Peninsular war: that during the war of the independence, when the fortress was defended by General Palafox, won for them the admiration of the whole world; and the King, in an official decree, conferred on this city the title of "The Heroic Fortress of Saragossa." During the second siege, a young woman of the humbler classes distinguished herself by her bravery; her name will descend to posterity as "the Maid of Saragossa;" and a scene of her bravery has been admirably painted by Wilkie. In 1837, one of Cabrera's chasseurs succeeded in entering one of the suburbs of the city, but was driven back by the National Guards. During the late insurrection, the inhabitants took a calm but imposing attitude: they refused joining the insurgents, and thus violating the constitution. They objected not to the Lopez administration, but demanded that Espartero should remain Regent until the majority of the Queen. Notwithstanding the intrigues and supplications of the Juntas of Barcelona, Malaga, and Valencia, they remained firm in their resolution, and only opened their gates to the opponents of the Regent when any further resistance would have tended to prolong a useless civil war. Brigadier Ametlar, the insurgent chief, entered Saragossa, his troops fraternised with the National Guards; but he was obliged to give a solemn pledge that they should not be disarmed. No sooner had the Regent embarked, than the insurgent Captain General of Aragon attempted to violate the convention entered into with Brigadier Ametlar, and troops were sent to Saragossa for that purpose! The National Guards protested, and for the present the design is abandoned. Brigadier Ametlar has, for reasons at this moment unknown, quitted the army, and thrown up his commission as a brigadier.

Saragossa, by the Spaniards written "Zaragoza," is a large and wealthy city, situated on a fertile plain on the left bank of the Ebro, and at the conflux of the Gallego and the Huerva. The Ebro separates the city from its suburbs, and is here crossed by a fine stone bridge, 600 feet in length, and resting on seven arches. Most of the streets of Saragossa are narrow and crooked; the houses are old, but regularly built. The city, however, has many remarkable buildings, as the Exchange, a noble stone edifice, with marble busts of most of the kings of Aragon; the metropolitan church, with an elaborate front and lofty tower; but the most singular edifice in Saragossa is the leaning tower (Torre Nueva), which, in point of inclination, rivals, if it does not exceed, that of Pisa. It has remained in its present inclined position since 1594, the year in which it was built: this architectural wonder is shown in our engraving.

SARAGOSSA.

The annexed engraving represents Zurbano and his staff, and is very characteristic of the costume of Guerilla partisans. The caps, as worn by the cavalry, are called a beret, and are of different colours. During the Carlist war in the Basque provinces, those who wore red berets were called Chapelcorris, and those with white berets, Chapelchurris; the Carlists of Biscay had brown, and those of Aluva blue berets. These caps are extremely convenient for mountain warfare; they are a preservative against the branches of trees, and a covering for the head during the night. Zumalacarregui wore a red beret, and Cabrera frequently a white one. Don Carlos never could be persuaded to put on the Carlist cap; but his wife, the Princess de Beyra, always appeared before the army, when on horseback, in a beret. All the Guerilla cavalry have lances, which they handle with great dexterity, and do much mischief to their enemy. The officers in the Spanish army above the rank of a captain, are without epaulets. The lieutenant-colonel has two gold stripes on the cuffs of his coat; the full colonel, three; the brigadier, a rank not known in the British or French service, a gold wreath of oak on the cuffs; a marescal de campo, two wreaths; a lieutenant-general, three wreaths; and a captain-general, equal to a field-marshal, is liberally covered with gold braiding.

In the late Carlist war, the troops opposed to Guipuzcoa to the British Legion, commanded by Sir Lacy Evans, wore white berets.

Martin Berrier, more generally known by the name of Zurbano, brought himself into the notice of the Christino party, of which he was a partisan, as a leader of Pizetteros. The reckless daring and miraculous success which accompanied all his exploits, made him a most valuable acquisition in a guerilla warfare. If anything more hazardous than usual was to be accomplished, it was intrusted to Zurbano. The men were generally vagabonds of every country and every clime. With these confidants would Zurbano, in the dusk of the evening, take his departure from Burgos to visit some of the surrounding pueblas. Whether his object were the levying of contribution, the satisfaction of revenge, or the arrest of some suspected or known individuals, Martin seldom returned empty handed. Hence his name became the terror of the neighbourhood; and the threat of a visit from Zurbano was generally sufficient to destroy the peace of any village in Old Castile.

ZURBANO AND HIS STAFF.

In a despatch from Sir Charles Napier to Lord Ellenborough, dated Camp Pir Abubukhur, January 22, 1843, is the following anecdote:—"I must tell your lordship an anecdote of Major Waddington, of the engineers. In blowing up Emaun Ghur, he took three mines to fire himself—they were close together; having fired the fuses of two, he, with his characteristic deliberation, proceeded to apply his match to the third, which would not ignite. An officer who was with him cried out—'Good God, Waddington, come away; the two mines will explode directly,' and immediately the officer very properly ran off to a tree, itself much too close, but he did not like to leave the major, whose answer was, with his accustomed slow way of speaking, 'I can't help that, this mine must be fired;' and there he was, with his accustomed slow way of speaking, 'I can't help that, this mine must be fired;' and there he did explode, and the other two did explode, and he escaped, walking away (for the officer told me it could not be called a run for any one but Waddington) under a shower of ruins, with his hands over his head to save it from falling bricks. This was a very foolish thing to do, but one cannot help admiring the cool resolution of the man."

FATHER MATHEW'S PILGRIM.—An eccentric Irishman has been in the habit of following the reverend apostle of temperance in his mission through Ireland and England, and made his appearance daily near the platform at Kennington-common and other places. He is a man about 40 years of age, of robust stature, and expressive countenance. He wears an old pair of cord trousers and jacket, and has a curious crown on his head formed with rushes, in the front of which is a small peacock's feather. He neither wears shoes or stockings, but carries in his hand a staff with several religious devices carved round it. He is looked upon by the lower orders of his countrymen with great reverence, and receives a few pence occasionally from them. He also wears round his bare brawny neck a small blue ribund, to which is attached a diminutive brass cross and his medal. He is very reluctant to answer any questions which are put to him by strangers, and gets angry when asked too many. He collects almost as great an assemblage around him as his reverend master.

The Welsh correspondent of the Times, in describing the enthusiasm of the Rebeccaites in South Wales, says:—"To show the feeling of the people, the very children, as the mail drove through the town, waved their hats, and shouted 'Becca for ever!' These Welsh children remind us strongly of Lord Eldon's definition of an Irish boy."

CHURCHES OF THE METROPOLIS.—No. XXXIV.

ST. LUKE'S, CHELSEA.

This handsome structure, at the period of its completion, in 1824, attracted considerable attention, from its being less faulty than the majority of modern attempts at a revival of the florid, pointed, perpendicular, or Tudor style of architecture, and is therefore entitled to more detailed description than usual. It was designed by Mr. Savage, who commenced the recent repair of the Temple church; and whose skill in early English architecture is unquestionably extensive. The first stone was laid October 12, 1820, and the church was consecrated October 18, 1824. It stands eastward of the Fulham-road, and its lofty pinnacled tower is a strikingly embellished feature of the western suburb.

In the engraving is shown the principal or western front of this highly-enriched edifice. It is in the style of architecture which prevailed in our ecclesiastical edifices during part of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, which is carefully adhered to throughout the structure. The first object that arrests our attention in this front, is its lofty and well-proportioned tower, the area of which, with the arcade communicating thereto, forms a covered walk or ambulatory, and is at once a great convenience and embellishment. The principal entrance, which is beneath the tower, has a projecting gablet, enriched with tracery and crocketing, and surmounted by a well-sculptured finial; and the wall on each side of the gablet is relieved by panelling. The piers of the arcade have projecting buttresses, above which is a moulded cornice, with Gothic pateræ at intervals, the whole finished by a pierced parapet, and pinnacles above the piers. Above this arcade rise the walls of the aisles and nave; and the flying buttresses springing from the former, in order to counteract the ceiling of the nave, have an extremely light and airy effect. Above the body of the church the pinnacled tower rises to a height of 142 feet from the ground; and near the top, the walls and octangular buttresses are ornamented by panelling, the heads of which are filled with tracery: above this, a large moulded cornice, with grotesque heads and other ornamental devices in its front, is continued entirely round the walls and buttresses. An embattled parapet, pierced by two tiers of upright divisions, with pointed heads filled in with tracery, terminates the walls of the tower; but the buttresses are continued about 20 feet higher, and are pierced similarly to the parapet, by four tiers of openings; the pinnacles are also open at the bottom, and are crowned by finials. The parts thus described, may be said to form an entire mass of decoration, still affording a light and elegant finish to this noble appendage to the more useful part of the structure.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH, CHELSEA.

The north and south fronts are divided by boldly-projecting buttresses into nine compartments, in seven of which are inserted lofty windows, the heads filled in with tracery: small blank windows occupy the two extreme compartments; the windows of the clerestory being similar to those of the aisles, with the omission of the transom. In these fronts the flying buttresses are seen to the best advantage, and each being partly contained on the walls of the clerestory, is crowned by a pinnacle; the extreme buttresses of the aisles are also surmounted with pinnacles; and the parapets are pierced with open tracery. A sunk area extends the whole length of these fronts, serving to admit light and air into the extensive vaults under the church.

The east front would present a magnificent aspect were it not for the vestry building, which occupies the whole space of the central division, to the height of about fifteen feet. The great eastern window is divided horizontally into seven lights, or spaces, by upright mullions, which, being crossed by transoms, the height is made into five divisions. The head of the window contains a circular light, enriched with cinque-foils, between sub-arches springing from the centre and extreme mullions, filled with ramified tracery. At the angles of the nave are octangular turrets rising above the roof, and near the top ornamented with long panels, pierced with open tracery: they are each covered by a cupola of an ogee form, crocketed, and terminated with a finial. On each side of these turrets are entrances to the aisles.

The principal access to the interior is through a lofty vestibule, with a panelled and enriched ceiling: here are spacious staircases leading to the galleries. On entering the body of the church the effect is forcibly impressive, it having much of the boldness characteristic of our ancient cathedrals. Thus, the vaulting of the nave is built entirely of stone, and is believed to be the first of the kind that has been executed since the revival of Gothic architecture. It is groined, and the arch is of an obtusely-pointed form. It commences from the capital of a slender shaft, rising from the clustered columns of the nave, whence nine carved ribs diverge and intersect the ribs from the opposite side at the vertex of the arch, along which is continued a rib, with sculptured bosses at the points of intersection. The vaulting over the communion and organ gallery varies from the preceding: each side of the arch having panels, with pointed heads, inclosing cinque-foils; at the springing of the arch is a moulded cornice, with projecting busts of angels. The nave is lofty and capacious, and is divided on either side from the aisles by an arcade supported by six clustered columns, and two semi-columns next the abutting walls; they are placed on plinths as high as the pewing. These pillars support the galleries through the whole length of the nave and breadth of the aisles; and their fronts are ornamented by Gothic panels. Immediately above the arcade, and under the sill of the clerestory windows, are ornamental recesses in imitation of the ancient triforium, which afford a fine relief to the wall. The altar-screen, occupying the whole breadth of the nave, is profusely decorated with delicate sculpture, and is altogether a fine composition. In the central division is a painting of the Ascension, reputed to be by Northcote. The great window occupying the whole space above the altar-screen is beautifully effective. The font is octagonal, and executed in marble; the pulpit and reading-desk are of oak, octangular, supported by piers and arches, tastefully carved.

The building is of brick, cased externally with Bath stone, of which material all the outside ornamental work is executed. It will contain 2000 persons. The main dimensions are—

Interior length of church	130 feet.
Width	61
Height from pavement to the crown of vaulting	60
Height of aisles	32
Ditto of tower to top of pinnacles	142

A few years since an individual committed suicide by throwing himself from the battlements of this lofty tower.

TAILORS' ASYLUM, HAVERSTOCK HILL.

This handsome building has just been completed for the Benevolent Institution for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Journeymen Tailors, founded on the 10th of February, 1837.

The good work originated with Mr. Stulz, the president of the Society, who, at one of the anniversary meetings, announced to the members that he would present them with a piece of land as a site for an asylum. Accordingly, at a sale of the Southampton estate, he made the above purchase; and, at his sole cost and charge, erected the chapel, and six of the adjoining houses. The asylum consists, at present, of the chapel and ten houses; the dwelling at the south end being appropriated for the chaplain. Each house consists of eight rooms, two being allotted to each pensioner. There are, at present, thirty-six pensioners and their wives in the asylum; and five more to be elected on the 28th of the present month. In addition to the apartments, each pensioner receives 8*s.* per week, and coals.

The Asylum is in the old English style, from the design of Mr. T. Meyer. The first stone was laid by the Marquis of Salisbury, on the 31st of May, 1842; and the chapel was consecrated by the Bishop of London, on the 24th of June last. The chapel has been endowed by Mr. Stulz; and the communion-plate, books, altar-screen, and furniture of the chapel, have been presented by different master members of the institution. In short, there seems to have been only one object in view—the perfecting the work so liberally begun by the president. In addition to the Asylum, there is a permanent fund of upwards of £10,000.

MODEL FRIGATE, GREENWICH.

Greenwich is, strangely enough, the whereabout of the first and last of a seaman's existence. In its magnificent palace-hospital are laid up those weather-beaten and infirm veterans, who look, as they hobble about in their antique dresses, almost like the people of another time. Everything in this ship on shore is as nautical as it can be: they sleep in cabins, they mess together, they are officered by lieutenants, an admiral hoists his flag over the combined force; they have plenty to eat and drink, and the vessel goes on with a smooth sea and a flowing sheet, until the clouds of age and infirmity overshadow all. Such are the closing scenes of the seaman's life at Greenwich; and immediately adjoining the last home of the "ancient mariners" is an institution of kindred interest—the Royal

Naval School, wherein thousands are nurtured for service on the wide, wide sea. It is, indeed, one of the most important institutions in this country. The upper school consists of 400 boys, the sons of officers, seamen, and mariners in the royal service, and the sons of officers and seamen in the merchant sea-service, who receive an excellent practical education in navigation and nautical astronomy: 400 boys and 200 girls are received into the lower school, and instructed in reading, writing, arithmetic, &c. The "Model Frigate," represented in the engraving, has just been added to the educational means and appliances of the upper school, we believe, at the suggestion of the Hon. Capt. Rous, M.P.; and, for practice in what may be termed nautical gymnastics, i. e., learning seamanship practically, we think the model frigate must prove as serviceable as the idea is ingenious and striking. She was built at Chatham in the early part of the year, and is about the size of a sloop of war. Her top-sides are laid on sleepers, and after her construction she was taken to pieces and removed to the school-ground at Greenwich, where she has been set up, as far as in her proper element: she has ten ports of a side, with bridle ports; eight long guns of a side, and a figure-head; and she may be set sail for teaching rigging and unrigging, gunnery, &c. In the engraving, she is shown going into action under her three top-sails, and with hands aloft loosening top-gallant sails. It is supposed that she will be appropriately christened "the Princess Royal."

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 26th.

SUNDAY, August 20.—Tenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 21.—St. Bernard.
TUESDAY, 22.—Battle of Bosworth, 1483.
WEDNESDAY, 23.—American war declared, 1775.
THURSDAY, 24.—St. Bartholomew.
FRIDAY, 25.—Revolution at Brussels, 1830.
SATURDAY, 26.—Prince Albert's Birthday.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending August 26.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
3 18	15 31	4 1	11 31	4 0	0 0	0 20	0 46	1 12	1 37	2 17	2 37

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Clericus Surriensis."—"C. R."—Manchester.—"Pietro."—The author of the romance has a high moral purpose to work out.
"A Subscriber," Plymouth.—Under consideration.
"S.," Brixton.—We have not room.
"?"—The long letter on Irish affairs may prove serviceable.
"A Constant Subscriber."—See our journal of July 15, No. 63, page 33.
"P. C. S."—We will consider of the kindly suggestion.
"T. C." Camden-town.—We have received an impression of a portrait of the Baboo, Dwarkanauth Tagore, from a drawing by James Holmes, Esq., and engraved by Mr. Collins; it is a striking likeness, finely executed.
"Inquirer," Altringham.—The speech will be found in Prior's "Life of Burke."
"H. L. H.," Stamford.—Thanks for the sketch of St. Helena, for which, however, we have not space.
"A. J.," Huddersfield.—We do not receive matrimonial advertisements.
"H. H."—The subjects are not sufficiently picturesque.
"A Lover of Literature," Leeds.—As often as our space permits.
"S. D. D.," Chippenham.—Inquire of Mr. Wyld, geographer to the Queen, Charing-cross.
"M. S. M.," Helston.—We do not know the Christian name of the party referred to.
"A. B. C."—See our engraving of Henson's Aërial Machine, in No. 48, and an exposition of the failing in the following number.
"W. L.," Lynn.—Our correspondent is guessing.
"One who sees the L. L. N." is thanked for the hint.
"J. S.," Islington.—His letter has been referred to the printer.
"A. A. L."—We have not room for the fragment.
"A. B. G.," Birmingham.—We would answer our correspondent with pleasure, did the circumstances stated enable us to do so.
"A Subscriber," Leicester.—Spoonfuls is correct.
"J. A.," Chesterfield.—The subject is picturesque, but has been too often engraved. Novelty is all-powerful.
"T. P." should advertise. Our charge is 7*s. for* 5 lines, and 1*s. per line after.*
"X. Y. Z."—Apply to a respectable solicitor.
"Jacob," Wellingborough.—We do not know the charges of the Heralds' College; but any seal engraver may supply the information.
"W. M. C.," Dumfish.—The Mistletoe Bough will appear in future.
"M. R."—The letter has been referred to our artist.
"R. N. T."—Will our correspondent favour us with a sketch of the new club-house, &c.?
"Tristolensis Yellowley."—The MS. is left at the office.
"J. H.," New Kent-road. The MS. is incligible.
"M. S." near Garstang.—The sketches are not of sufficiently popular interest. The print cannot now be sent postage free.
"J. B.," 191, High-street, Islington.—The invention shall not be lost sight of, should circumstances bring the general subject before the public.
"J. R.," Criee 4th.—We do not remember that Sir George Hewitt ever commanded the forces in Ireland.
We have not room for the sketch of the Priory near Reading.
"H. C. B.," Bloomsbury square.—What is the subject?
"R. B. S." should send six postage stamps, and the No. shall be forwarded.
The mistake has been referred to the printer.
"L. N."—We have not room for the sinking of the steamer in Loch Katrine.
"Querist."—We do not know the precise extent of the patronage in question.
"A. O. E.,"—Pantheism, in mythology, is a species of religion, in which the universe was considered as the supreme God. The term has been used of late by certain reviewers, to stigmatise what they consider the ultra-scientific spirit of the present day.
"C. J. B.," Blackheath.—There is promise in the specimens sent; but we do not recommend the culture of blank verse.
"T. J. D." Dowlais.—The exhibition of the Royal Academy is closed for the season.
The communication from Newbury, dated Aug. 16, shall be attended to.
"R. W. W."—We will inquire.
"Thos. S.," Clerkenwell-green.—Shortly.
"W. F. S."—We think, without tickets.
"Thalia's" letter has been forwarded to the engraver.
"Octogenarius."—The bridesmaids were Lady Alexandrina Vane, Lady Elizabeth Leveson Gower, Lady Mary Campbell, and Lady Clementina Villiers.

CHESS.—"D. G." shall be answered by post.
"A Constant Reader," Gm. P."—Received.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 19, 1843.

The session is all but at an end. In a few days her Majesty will prorogue Parliament in person, and thank her faithful Commons for voting the supplies. Whether the Legislature, however, will succeed in satisfying the country that they have done more than just this—that they have performed an amount of public good which all classes may regard alike as a fair quid pro quo for the moneys levied upon them for the proper service of the state—is a question solved with more ease than gratification, and its answer will be indeed a poor one to the cry of grievance or the murmur of disaffection and distress. What has the Parliament done? How will honourable members answer their constituencies if the grouse shooting does not put constituents altogether out of their heads? John Bull will tell his M.P., "You made me lots of promises when you were out upon the hustings—when you wanted my vote and knew the sort of language that would get it from me—now here you are again, and let us see what sort of business you have made of it.

"You said the new Poor-law should be amended—that the unsightly workhouse should not be filled so wantonly with misery—that you would lop off its cruelties, instil into it a little pabulum for the affections, put a heart into it if possible, and make it a real charity rather than a mockery and a curse. Have you kept your word?"—"No!"

We do not say the M.P. will literally answer "No!" with open-mouthed honesty; he will most likely try to blink the question, but the gist and meaning of his evasion will be the plain downright negative, and nothing else. John Bull loquitur again:—

"You deplored the great amount of distress existing in the agricultural districts, the low condition of wages, the high rents, the oppressive taxation, and you danced a fandango of words over the grievances of farmer and labourer both. Have you done anything to re-assure the one, or alleviate the distresses of the other?"—"No."

"Well, then, on the other hand, you were saddened over the miseries of the manufacturing towns; you sympathised with the overpowering want and woe of the dense cities of trade; you were fearful over the abject wretchedness of the almost starving poor; you admitted over-productiveness, over-population; and you said that some distinct measures must and should be framed to lessen these cankering evils, and pour balm into the wounds of our squalid slavery at home. You have done this of course?"—"No."

"Humph! Your generals abroad have worked out triumphs for you—have wrought honour out of your wars; soldiers have preserved unsullied the flag and name of Old England, and set her in the car of victory again. They have won you beautiful territory in the burning Ind, and have sent shining treasure from the Chinese shores; and, while your army has been thus brilliantly achieving power away, you have emulated its bravery by meeting home emergencies with an equal spirit; and, as statesmen, you have legislated at least as nobly as (as soldiers) they have fought. Is it not so?"—"No."

"At least, however, your diplomacy has been as good as your warfare: you have not allowed the influence of Russia to grow too powerful in Servia, or the tyranny of Otho in Greece; you have not allowed France to feather her nest in any fresh colony to which she had no right; and, above all, you have not suffered the councils of the Tuileries to prevail against English interests and a legitimate regency in Madrid. You have carefully avoided all these blunders, have you not?"—"No."

"You found a vast amount of wrong and disaffection prevailing in Ireland, which, as your deliberations progressed, swelled into a fanatic and unconstitutional shouting for repeal. Large armies were gathered under a popular leader to work out by 'passive intimidation' the dismemberment of the empire; and these you discouraged at once and indeed quelled, by conciliating the people with measures of good government and sterling humanity, so that Ireland is now completely pacified and happy, and O'Connell has retired to the otium cum dignitate of a rint repose. Is not this the state of things?"—"No."

"Scotland is, I believe, in a state of perfect tranquility, particularly on religious questions, is she not?"—"No."

"There was some tendency to insubordination in Wales. The tolls there were so oppressive as positively to afflict the farmers and the peasantry; and a sort of general ground of grievance which had grown to strength in the southern districts of the principality had furnished provocation sufficient to effect the rising of the people in a most undisguised warfare conducted by disguised bands. But you have legislated away the grievances, and Rebecca is now asleep and forgotten, or you have sent down troops and Rebecca is now silenced or shot. Is Wales quiet?"—"No."

"You have given us one long-promised boon any how—a boon and a blessing present and future for the whole empire—a perfect scheme of national education for teaching the lower orders morality and religion—raising them in the scale of civilisation, and so promoting the intellectual welfare of the people. We have to thank you for this beautiful model of human legislation, have we not?"—"No."

"I might ask you a great many similar questions, but I begin to get tired; I therefore sum them up in one emphatic inquiry, 'Have you during the past session done anything?'"—"No—nothing!"

And so John Bull will turn away disgusted, a patient, sensible, animal; but he will go home to think, and he will tell his family to make up their minds for a different sort of legislation, for that the "do-nothing Parliament" will not suite his book; and he will be right. The fact is that Cobden with his League in one way, Rebecca in another, and O'Connell in a third, have, by sheer action, decision, and energy, done more for the good of their respective causes in one week than Parliament has done for the good of the country in a whole session. But of this we shall have to speak more seriously anon.

It is with no vaunting or vainglorious pride—no feeling of malicious triumph or "joy disguised"—that we call attention to a subject which involves the history of the failure of a fallen opponent—the bankruptcy of the Illustrated Weekly Times. It is true that, owing to the use of the word "illustrated" in the title, the first announcement of the doom of that shortlived paper in the Gazette had the effect of confusing it, in the minds of careless persons, with this journal, and we were put to some trouble with correspondence on the subject. We might, therefore, be well justified in selecting the report before us as a fit opportunity to crush all error upon that head, and to prove, once and for all, that neither in life nor after death, in struggle or in failure, had we either funds or fortunes in common with our departed contemporary, who, on the other hand, will hardly look back with jealousy from the grave because his monument is in Basinghall-street and ours in the Strand—his epitaph spoken in the Court of Bankruptcy by Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, ours registered by the fiat of public approval in every respectable domicile, from John o' Groat's to Land's End.

But it is not on any personal ground that we call attention to the report before us; it is rather to check the enterprise of folly, by exhibiting the fate of an undertaking commenced, likelessly, without a prospect of success, in accordance with that sad modern mania for speculation—that gambling among the chances of the world—which expects to become rich without capital, and to make credit do the duty of cash in struggling towards the goal of fortune, until its deluded aspirants, with disappointment and exhaustion, fall prostrate and penniless upon the road. Then we have the sad story of tradesmen victimized, property squandered, respectability forfeited, and disgrace incurred; and all for what?—for a week, vain, foolish vision of profit, that had no foundation in probability, and which it was nothing short of recklessness to have entertained. With this comment we proceed to abridge the publication of the report:—

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—Aug. 10.
(Before Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque.)

THE ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY TIMES.—IN RE JOSEPH WHITMORE.

An application was this day made on the part of the bankrupt for his certificate, which was opposed by Mr. Lawrence, as solicitor for a Mr. Kelly, who had been favoured with the printing of that journal during the six or seven weeks of its existence, and to whom the bankrupt was now indebted in the sum of £290, and also for Dr. M'Keurie for £61 14*s.* for "literary labour."

Mr. Lawrence stated that this "paper" had originated with a gentleman, a lecturer at the Polytechnic Institution, a Mr. Stiff, an artist, and the bankrupt, who had been for some years a pawnbroker at Stockport, where he was entitled to certain property in right of his wife. After a few further observations he called the bankrupt, who, having been sworn, stated substantially as follows:—

I was a partner in the Weekly Illustrated Times with two other partners, one of whom brought in £100 (cash), myself £100, and Mr. Stiff wood-cuts, which he valued at £160, and which I think to have been worth £80, and that was all the capital we had.

By Mr. Lawrence: I see by your balance-sheet that you owe debts to the amount of £1900:—is all these on account of the newspaper?—They are not, and they do not include Mr. Kelly's debt for printing. The paper began on the 4th of March last. It lasted six or seven weeks. Kelly was the printer, and his bill was from £25 to £30 a week. I was not considerably in debt when I started the paper. Mr. Kelly did not get any money for the first three weeks, but at the end of the fourth week he got £25; and, subsequently, blocks to the amount of £35 obtained from a sale, under the sheriff. My partner told me that with £300 the paper could be well carried on.

Now, for the profits of the paper, what were the receipts of your paper?—£404 10*s.* 4*d.* for the six weeks. I never received a farthing of it for my own use, but my partner was paid as editor as well as sub-editor, but the whole of the proceeds were expended upon the paper. The paper-maker got about £130 out of our capital, and there is now only £16 due to him. My solicitor, Mr. James, made an offer of 6*s.* 8*d.* in the pound to my creditors, and he is now in this country.

Cross-examined by Mr. James: We paid about £80 or £90 for stamps, and I never had a penny from the concern for my own living. Mr. Wilson (as I understood) was under the will of my father-in-law) has been tried to sell the Stockport property, both before and after my bankruptcy.

Are you not aware that Mr. Kelly, as the printer, has to pay the advertisement duty, which you have left unpaid?—I am not aware that Mr. Kelly has to pay any advertisement duty.

Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque: There are special securities entered into in this department.

Mr. Wm. Kelly examined by Mr. Lawrence: About ten days before the first publication of the Illustrated Weekly Times, Mr. Whitmore and his partner called upon me, requesting that I should print it, and stipulating to pay me week by week. When, however, I found that no money was forthcoming at the end of the second week, I pressed them for my money, the amount then owing to me being nearly £100, and added that I would not go on, but the editor assured me that Mr. Whitmore was a man of very large property; that he could easily raise ten times the amount of my debt; and that he would immediately write to his solicitor in the country to realize it. In consequence also of repeated declarations of the bankrupt's solvency, I consented to increase my debt, and the only sums I have received are £25 5*s.*, and from the sale of the blocks £35.

Cross-examined by Mr. James: I brought an action against the bankrupt for the amount of my debt, and recovered a judgment. He offered me bills for 6*s.* 8*d.* in the pound, but without any security, which I refused to take.

Mr. Lawrence addressed his observations to the bankrupt's application, chiefly on the ground of his misrepresentations to Mr. Kelly, and upon the impropriety of persons with so small a capital embarking in a speculation of this description with a hope of succeeding with a rival establishment which had been completely successful (the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS). The creditors had not wish to deal any hily with him, nor did they seek to withhold his certificate altogether; but they did think it a case in which the court, for the sake of the public, should mark its displeasure at such a course of conduct as that pursued by the bankrupt.

Mr. James briefly addressed the court in favour of the bankrupt's application, and added that the assignees were satisfied with his accounts.

Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque: This is a case in which the court must mark its disapprobation of the bankrupt's misrepresentations:—for his being a man of property, when, according to his own statement, he was in debt £1900 when he entered into this business. He was barely able to raise £100; his partner also only £100; and the third partner, Mr. Stiff, only a few wood-blocks; and upon that slight capital attempting to rival another well-established paper. To the least of it it was a wild speculation; and his representations to Mr. Kelly as to the amount of his ordinary business passed the ordinary boundaries of the most sanguine speculator. It is not a case, however, for actual refusal, but, as the principal creditors said to the trading community, I shall adjourn his certificate for six months from the time of passing his last examination.

The remarks of Mr. Lawrence and of the learned commissioner mark their sense of the lamentable profligacy of the whole transaction. Here is a paper started upon three hundred pounds which the most moderate success would put to an outlay of several hundreds a week, the capital to supply which is absolutely necessary to maintain a journal of this nature with anything like an approach to respectability. Why, more than as many thousands were expended in the mere announcement of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS before its first number saw the light; and, if there had not been as much more as would naturally be required to follow up the consequences of that first outlay, the proprietors of this journal would never have allowed a number to have gone forth—would never have put themselves—we do not say in a position of failure, for that might happen to us all—but in the still more humiliating predicament of not being able to keep pace with their own success. But what if they had had credit to have involved others in possible ruin without one shilling of their own! Their want of principle would then have been worse than their want of capital. Thus we see in any paper light the impropriety of hazarding wild speculations, and of setting up wholly new oppositions to successful and established enterprise—entering a field without seed to sow or consequent power to reap with crops ripening everywhere around upon luxuriantly cultivated grounds; and the speculator's one waste morsel laying in barrenness and decay, or wildly scattered with the one half-load of manure which he has had the pittance to purchase, and through which is foolish enough to hope that his ground will yield a harvest of its own accord. These are the chimeras which destroy credit, and do incalculable mischief to the integrity of trade.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

WINDSOR, Sunday.—Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert attended divine service in the chapel in the Great Park. The Rev. H. J. Cooper officiated. Several of the royal household attended divine service in the private church. In the afternoon her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert promenaded on the terrace in front of the castle, and once round the Grand Parterre. The fine bands of the Regiments of the Line and Coldstream Guards were in attendance, and the company present very numerous. Her Majesty and the Prince, we are happy to say, were looking exceedingly well.

On Saturday evening the King of Hanover, attended by the Baron de Reitzenstein, honoured the Duke of Wellington with his company at dinner at Apsley House. His Majesty had a dinner party at Kew on Sunday.

On Monday her Majesty and Prince Albert took their accustomed early walking exercise. In the afternoon they rode out in the Park on horseback. The Earl of Haddington, Lord A. Fitzclarence, and Sir H. Wheatley arrived on a visit to her Majesty. The Duke de Palmella took his departure.

On Tuesday and Wednesday her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert took their usual walking exercise, and in the afternoon rode out in the Park.

HER MAJESTY'S MARINE EXCURSION.—Since the arrival of the Earl of Haddington, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and Captain Lord Adolphus Fitz-Clarence, the Commander of the Royal Yacht, at Windsor Castle, upon a visit to her Majesty, all the necessary arrangements have been made connected with the marine excursion of her Majesty the Queen and her illustrious Consort during the sojourn of the court at Brighton. Her Majesty is expected to proceed from Windsor to the Royal Pavilion on Monday, the 28th inst. The magnificent steam-vessel will be one of the squadron which will accompany the royal yacht. There is now very little doubt that her Majesty will honour Plymouth, and probably Pembroke dockyard, with a visit during the present year. It is likewise expected that the Queen and her illustrious Consort will honour the Earl and Countess Cawdor with a short visit, at their mansion, Stackpoole Court, in the county of Pembroke. It will be remembered that at the naming of the Victoria and Albert Yacht at Pembroke on the 26th of April last, it was christened, at the Queen's express desire, by the Countess Cawdor.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, accompanied by the Princess Mary, the Baron Knesebeck, and a numerous suite, arrived, on Tuesday night, at Dover, in four carriages, at Worthington's Sign Hotel. On Wednesday morning the Earl Royal Highnesses embarked, under a salute from the batteries on the heights, from the Admiralty yard, on board her Majesty's packet Ariel, Captain Smithett, for Calais.

His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge will leave St. James's Palace on Wednesday next, on a visit to his serene highness the Hereditary Prince of Mecklenburg Strelitz, after which he will proceed to Corfu, to assume the command in the Ionian Isles.

The preparations which it is usual to make for the reception of the Court at Brighton are still in progress, and are in a very forward state. Instructions have been received from the Lord Chamberlain's office to admit no one to view the Palace whilst the preparations are going on. The 28th inst. has been named as the day on which her Majesty will arrive.

HER QUEEN DOWAGER.—WITLEY COURT, Monday.—Yesterday the Queen Dowager attended divine service at the parish church, and after noon, with Earl Howe and Lady Georgiana Curzon, Earl of Denbigh, Lord Ferning and Lady Mary Fleming, Lady Charles Somerset and Hon. Miss Somerset, Hon. Colonel Eden, Miss Mitchell, and Rear Davies. As usual, nearly the whole of the domestic household attended the service. The Rev. Mr. Grant officiated. This afternoon her Majesty intends to visit Worcester, and it is the first visit of the queen to that city. The presence is daily to occasion the liveliest interest among the inhabitants of that loyal city. Preparations on a most extensive scale are in progress to welcome the Queen Dowager, and there is to be an illumination at night. It is said that the Queen Dowager, after partaking of a déjeûner at the Rev. J. R. Wood's, one of the canons of the Cathedral, will, with the whole of the suite, attend divine service in the Cathedral. A beautiful and accurate engraving of Witley Court appeared in the 66th number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

THE KING OF HANOVER.—His Majesty, attended by the Baron de Reitzenstein, honoured the Viscountess Dungannon with his company on Tuesday, at her ladyship's evening party, in Grafton-street.—Prince Lieven paid a visit to the King on Wednesday.

It is reported that the Duke de Bordeaux intends shortly paying a visit to London. It is said that the young prince, who studies indefatigably, wishes to go to England in order to ascertain the source of the naval superiority of this country; and it is said that his family press him to execute this project, which will save him from witnessing a pannul event which is shortly expected to occur. The Duke d'Angoulême is dangerously ill.

Appointment of Chaplain in Ordinary to Her Majesty.—The Rev. Bantyre, who is about to lead to the hymeneal altar the Lady Evelyn Leveson Gower, second daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, is in his 25th year. He was lately first-class in the Grenadier Guards, and his father, the late lord, was accidentally killed during the revolution in Brussels in 1830. Lady Evelyn, whose presentation at Court took place only in June last, is in her 18th year. The ceremony is expected to take place on the 22nd instant, at Trentham.

The fine old Elizabethan mansion of the [illegible] Salisbury, at Hatfield, was illuminated on Thursday last, on the occasion of the marriage of Lady Blanche Cecil, daughter of the noble marquis, and Mr. Jas. M. Balfour, M.P. for the Haddington burghs, son of Mr. and Lady Eleanor Balfour, of Whittingham Castle, N.B. The Duke of Wellington and several other distinguished members of the nobility were present on the occasion.

Death of Lady Louisa Marsh.—The Marchioness of Anglesey, Earl Cadogan, Viscount and Viscountess Chelsea, Hon. and Rev. Dr. Wellesley, and several other families of rank, have been placed in mourning by the demise of Lady Louisa Marsh, who died at the residence of the Rev. Dr. Marsh, at Birmingham, on Saturday last. The deceased lady, who was third and youngest daughter of George [illegible], first Earl Cadogan, by his second marriage, was born Sept. 1, 1787, and married April 21, 1840, the Rev. Dr. William Marsh.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

Ordinations.—The following Bishops will hold ordinations at their respective cathedrals on Sunday, September 24:—Salisbury, Hereford (on behalf of the Bishop of Lichfield), Peterborough, and Ely. The Bishop of Lincoln has postponed his ordination until Sunday, October 1.

The Rev. W. B. Cosens, M.A., rector of Monkton Farleigh, Wilts, has been instituted to the vicarage of Berry Pomeroy, in Devonshire, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. L. E. Brown, M.A.

The Rev. E. E. Trughton, M.A., has been ordained to the ministry of St. John's Church, Hawarden, recently consecrated by the Bishop of Bangor.

University of London.—Bachelors of Medicine. First Examination, Third Division.—J. H. Bryant, King's College; J. Cumming, King's College; B. M. Eyre, University College; J. Hakes, University College; T. Hawasley, King's College; W. B. Herapath, Bristol Medical School; A. Jackson, University College; B. L. Jennings, King's College; N. H. Littleton, University College; W. F. Noott, King's College; P. Redfern, Queen's College, Edinburgh; G. A. Rees, St. Bartholomew's College; R. N. Rudgey, Guy's Hospital; J. Scott, jun., Aberdeen; R. B. Walcott, St. Thomas's Hospital. Second Division [illegible], University College; M. Barnes, King's College; [illegible] Hospital; [illegible] Gregson, Original School of Anatomy, Peterstreet, Dublin; F. J. Hemley, King's College; J. Snow, Westminster Hospital.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

On Tuesday his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, accompanied by the officers of the 2nd Regiment of Life Guards and a few select friends, partook of a white dair dinner at the Trafalgar tavern, Greenwich. The distinguished party embarked on board the Rose Bridge, aforetime steamer, at seven o'clock from Whitehall stairs. The brass band of the regiment was on board, and played various national and popular airs during the trip. His Royal highness and friends were greeted by a royal salute of twenty-one guns from the yacht of the Belgian minister, lying off the royal hospital. His Royal Highness gave the above entertainment previous to embarking for the Mediterranean.

The [illegible] result of the late trials connected with the Custom-house frauds has caused the heads of the various departments to issue circulars to those in a subordinate capacity, with the view of ascertaining if their securities for the faithful performance of their duties were alive and solvent, as great losses have been sustained by Government in consequence of those who had received heavy bonds or other deeds, being dead or insolvent many years before the parties for whom they became security yielded to the temptations held out to them to connive at fraudulent acts when performing their usual duties. It is understood that, in future, annual returns will have to be made by all employed in the customs department, to show that their securities are alive and solvent, to prevent the possibility of further losses in that way.

Father Matthew at Paddington.—The "Apostle of Total Abstinence" paid a visit to the extensive district of Paddington on Wednesday, for the purpose of administering the pledge to the good people of that and the upper parts of Marylebone. The proceedings were of the usual character, it was computed that about 2000 took the pledge during the day. Father Matthew visited Enfield on Thursday.

Tuesday was an oppressively hot day in the metropolis, with a hazy atmosphere and scarcely a breath of air stirring. The thermometer stood as high as 78. In the afternoon a smart shower fell, and there was a rumbling of distant thunder—and at night lightning; there was also apparently a heavy storm to the southward. We hear that the harvest is going on with activity in most parts of Middlesex, surrey, Essex, Kent, Sussex, Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire, and Wiltshire. On Wednesday morning the atmosphere was very heavy, and about half-past seven o'clock there was a fog as dense as the thickest of "dense November," for about a quarter of an hour, in the vicinity of the Thames, candles had to be lighted to enable persons to transact their ordinary bus ness.

As Apparition in High Life.—A curious circumstance occurred at the dinner given by the King of Bavaria to the Duke of Wellington on the other day evening last. The soup and fish had only been removed, when the folding doors were thrown open, and a lady, in full dress and wearing a profusion of diamonds, entered, and advanced towards the table, evidently with the intention of becoming one of the convives. There was, however, no vacant place. The guests looked at the lady with the suspicion which her unexpected appearance was calculated to excite; and the noble host having at a glance ascertained that she was not an acquaintance of his, deputed Lord Charles Wellesley to hand her from the salle à manger. The lady asserted that she was an invited guest; nay, more, that she had attended for concert late given by his grace. Her name she declared to be Angelina, but it is stated that her real name is [illegible]. Report asserts her to have been a wandering pianist, who inherited a fortune some time back, and whose intellects are somewhat deranged. It appears on inquiry that the person had gained admittance at the duke's concert the other evening.—Morning Post.

The Illustrated London News.—(From the Morning Advertiser.) The publication, which we believe has had, and continues to [illegible], the greatest run of any issues of the same nature in this metropolis, comes out in its last half-yearly portion, most specially bound up in green, ornamented in gilt. Of the countless features of this publication worthy of praise, nothing is superior to its pictorial illustrations, which, first-rate in point of artistic excellence, are wonderful in point of number and variety. Its literary ability is also of conspicuous merit, and its original articles amount in its present phase to no less than 2300. With regard, however, to its combined claims to popularity, the pre of is in the fact, that, with a yearly increasing subscribers, it can number not one reading reader. Nor can this contain anything to surprise, as the interest of its pages is intense to a degree; amusing nay, engaging, beyond the usual range to which publics in these easy, life, piquancy, and variety. The eye and the mind are equally attracted, riveted, and delighted by them. They are the most certain antidotes to ennui we have met with. They enchain the drowsy sense, invigorate into it, as it were, new vitality and animation. Especially to the juvenile part of the public the Illustrated London News is an acquisition utterly invaluable; and the community is under a debt to its conductors not to be calculated by anything less than the very sentiment itself of heartfelt gratitude.

Lord Brougham.—The Morning Post, in reference to the conduct of Lord Brougham on the Caline in oath question the other night, observes, "It may be remarked, as a bit of gossip, that the noble and learned Lord Chancellor has now all but deserted the woolsack on the occasions of its being taken his place on the woolsack so close to Lord Lyndhurst as to threaten momentarily to "push him from his stool." Between the attractive woolsack and the seductive treasury bench Lord Brougham now flits like a perturbed spirit."

COUNTRY NEWS.

The late Thunder-storm.—Accounts from almost every village in the vale of Berks detail the damage inflicted either by the violent hail which accompanied the storm or by the lightning. In many places the grain crops are described as having been completely beaten down, and the grass injured from the cars as cleanly as if in the ordinary process in the barn. Beehives are said to have been, in places, in which the storm descended with its full fury, stripped of their leaves, the windows were broken, and the ground in a few moments covered with pieces of ice, measuring in some instances three inches in circumference.

The late storms.—Serious losses have been sustained by the holders of property in the Bristol level. In the fens alone upwards of 2000 acres of the hay crop, of the value of at least £10,000, have been totally destroyed, and the pastures of 1000 head of cattle is entirely inundated. The consequence of this sad disaster is, that about 1000 persons, men, women, and children, have been entirely thrown out of employment.

Birmingham.—A highly-respectable meeting, convened by the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, was held in that town on Wednesday last, for the purpose of [illegible] the [illegible] ing state of the country, with a view to the adoption of such measures as might be deemed advisable. After a long discussion it was agreed to convene a general meeting of the town.

Sheffield.—The Cutlery Trade.—Two cases of importance to the Sheffield manufacturers, and the cutlery trade generally, came before the Sheffield bench of magistrates on Tuesday last for adjudication. For some time past a practice has prevailed in the cutlery trade of putting the marks of superior articles on things of inferior value and quality. In the case before the court, knives made of cast iron were marked "cast steel," and [illegible] were sent [illegible] for the purpose of [illegible] Act of Parliament (5th of Geo. III., chap. [illegible]), which [illegible] penalty not exceeding one dozen, and for any quantity exceeding one dozen, £5 for each dozen. In the two cases before the court, one against Samuel Naylor, the other against William [illegible]son, penalties were inflicted of £317 10s. upon the former, and £13 5s. on the latter, and the forfeited property was ordered to be destroyed. The manufactures and the trade of the town had been greatly injured by these nefarious practices.

State of South Wales.—We are glad to observe, by the Welsh journals recently received, that Rebecca is becoming more quiet, the recent instances of toll-gate destruction being few; but the gate and toll-house at Penyraru have been demolished for the third time. Two or three more persons have been apprehended, and are lodged for further examination.

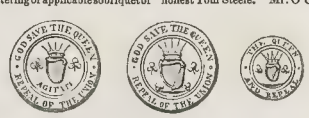
POSTSCRIPT.

ALARMING FIRES AND EXPLOSION

Tremendous Fire near London bridge. Total Destruction of St. Olave's Church. A little before two o'clock this (Saturday) morning, one of the most terrific and destructive fires which have occurred for a number of years broke out in Cotton's Wharf, near London bridge. The front of this extensive building faces the river, and the back part of the house to Tooley-street. Scarcely was the first alarm given before the whole range of buildings became enveloped in flame. The fire spread with amazing rapidity, and before a single engine was on the spot, the premises were in a blaze. Jones's Wharf, which joined Cotton's, was the next ignited, and the flames spread with a rapidity which, considering that the night was perfectly calm, was almost unparalleled. The flames shot upwards to an amazing height, and illumed all the metropolis for miles around. Engines from all parts now rushed rapidly to the scene of danger. The [illegible] engines of the Royal, King's College, and Sun companies of the different companies were congregated on the spot within a short time of each other. But the fire had made so great head that, notwithstanding the vast volume of water poured from different directions upon the blazing mass, it still continued to rage with fiercer fury. From Jones's Wharf, it still continued to rage with fiercer fury. From Jones's Wharf, it still continued to rage with fiercer fury. From Jones's Wharf

WEEKLY MEETING OF THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION, CORN EXCHANGE, DUBLIN.

nent part in the calamitous and insane struggle that must ensue. The majority of our readers will recognise in the brawny-shaped personage near the centre of the foreground—represented in the act of addressing the assembly, by whom he is absolutely idolized—that extraordinary man who has acquired the title of the Liberator of his country, and who, whether he be "a spirit of health or goblin damned," or be his intent "wicked or charitable," is destined to fill a large and important space in British history, and has shown qualities and capabilities—whether for good or evil, to "wield at will the fierce democracy"—such as few men ever before possessed. Possessed of a form almost herculean, a voice powerful and peculiarly musical, an ardent and susceptible temperament, contagious in its example, and prompting an impetuous style of oratory, calculated to overpower discrimination and prudence—he adds to these qualities indefatigable energy both mental and physical. These are the qualities which have enabled Mr. O'Connell, the son, as he boasts, of a plain country gentleman, to maintain for a large number of years over the masses of his countrymen an influence unparalleled in extent and duration. The figure to the left of the chair, surmounted by a cap encircled with a gold band, said to have been a present from the idol of his political worship after many years' wear, is O'Connell's Head Pacificator for Ireland, who was once favourably known to the public by the more laconic and expressive, if not more flattering or applicable sobriquet of "honest Tom Steele." Mr. O'Connell is in the act of drawing a pickaxe pencil sketch of Lord Brougham, for the edification of the ladies, which will be found in another part of this day's paper; and honest Tom, in the exuberance of his delight, is winking at the chairman, as much as to say, "Let Brougham take that." Tom occasionally attempts a similar style of observation with regard to absent characters; but, although his resources of sarcasm and invective are neither trifling nor contemptible, yet, when O'Connell spreads the easel, the improver of the diving-bell must "pale his fire," though the colours to be used were fetched from the profoundest depths of the Dodder or the Liffey. Amongst the most prominent figures in the sketch may be observed a couple of foreigners, who stand near to O'Connell, and listen with breathless attention to all he utters. In the background the usual number of coal-porters and "liberty" boys are hailing with vociferous shouts of admiration the finished portrait of the English ex-Chancellor, which O'Connell has completed; whilst those accomplished representatives of the Pilot, Register, and Freeman, at the long table, are rapidly employed in multiplying copies of the faint original. The Corn-exchange is celebrated as the spot where the agitation for Catholic Emancipation was conducted to a bloodless and successful issue—a result which many are inclined to prophesy is not likely to attend the present movement. In our next number will be found a series of faithful and accurate illustrations of the great and multitudinous repeal meeting on Tara Hill.



REPEAL BUTTONS.

YARMOUTH RACES.—THE CUP RACE.—See preceding page.

DOMINIC FRANCIS ARAGO.

This distinguished philosopher was born at Estagel, near the frontiers of Spain, in the south of France, in the year 1786. Little is known of his early life, excepting that he was educated at the Polytechnic School. In 1805 he was named secretary to the Board of Longitude; and two years afterwards he was chosen, in conjunction with M. Biot, to continue in Spain the great work of measuring the arc of the meridian between Dunkirk and Barcelona. The war which broke out in 1808 in Spain interrupted this important scientific labour. Such was the rage excited by the French invasion, that even the peaceful and beneficial occupation of M. Arago could not save him from captivity, and he was confined for several months in the fortress of Rosas. Nor did his troubles end here. On his return by sea he was taken by an Algerine pirate, and carried to Algiers. The French consul, however, interfered to procure his liberation, and having succeeded, he returned to France in the summer of 1809, and was soon after elected a member of the Royal Institute, in the place of M. Laland. In 1816 he was comprised in the third section of the Royal Academy of Sciences. M. Arago is now at the head of the French astronomical department, with a residence in the Royal Observatory; he is also perpetual secretary to the Royal Institute, and a member of the Chamber of Deputies. M. Arago does not shine as a statesman; indeed he may be considered the shadow of his friend, M. Jacques Laffitte, whose politics he has followed ever since he first obtained a seat in Parliament. The studies of M. Arago have not been confined to astronomy, but have been extended to every branch of natural philosophy. He is the author of some curious inquiries into those properties of light which were discovered by M. Malus. Some of the papers relative to these inquiries have been published in the memoirs of the Institute. He has also written some interesting works on steam-engines. The brother of M. Arago (Jacques), better known as the blind traveller, is an author of great merit. The son of the learned astronomer is a barrister in good practice at the Paris bar, and was the advocate chosen by many of the unfortunate sufferers in the dreadful railroad accident in May last to plead their cause before the Police Correctionnel.

PORTRAIT OF M. ARAGO.

THE ANGLESEY TESTIMONIAL.

This superb piece of plate was mentioned in the memoir of the Marquis of Anglesey in our paper of last week. It has been manufactured at the establishment of Messrs. Mortimer and Hunt, in Bond-street, and it is a most elaborately-finished specimen of modern art, in the production of small figures, or statuettes, for so they may be called, in the precious metals. The group consists of two equestrian figures—a sergeant or corporal in a French regiment of cuirassiers who has extricated himself from his dying horse, and a sergeant of the 7th Regiment of Hussars, who is cutting at him with his sabre. The Frenchman presents a pistol, and this doubtful part of the combat is the point represented. These two figures were designed by Mr. Bailey, the Royal Academician, and manufactured in silver after his models. They are very fine, full of spirit, and well contrasted, both as to nationality of character and as to the relations of him who attacks and him who defends. The minuter portions of the design are all carried out, and in the silver exquisitely worked up by the tools of the artist. The horses, after the design of Mr. M'Carthy, are finely executed: the contrast of the English and the foreign horse is shown, and the anatomy of the animals, the one in all the vigour of life, and the other in the relaxation of approaching death, is skilfully made out. The legend or inscription on the pedestal or base is this:—"Presented to General the most noble Henry William Paget, Marquis of Anglesey, K.G., G.C.B., K.P., G.C.H., K.M.T., K.S.G.T.W., on the 16th of June, 1843, by the officers whose names are hereon inscribed, and who served in the Seventh (or Queen's own) Regiment of Hussars, as a testimonial of their gratitude and affectionate regards for the noble Marquis during the period they had the honour of being under his command." In another part the names of the officers are engraved. It is one of the most elegant specimens of the kind that has been produced for some time. In the memoir above referred to, the Marquis of Anglesey was stated to be colonel of the 7th Hussars; whereas, on the death of Lord Hill, in 1842, the Marquis was appointed to the colonelcy of the Blues, and received the gold stick from her Majesty.

THE ANGLESEY TESTIMONIAL.

CHESTER REGATTA. —See next page.

CHESTER REGATTA.

On Thursday, the 10th instant, "Deva's Druid Water," beneath old Chester's city walls, presented a very animated and interesting spectacle. The day was gloriously fine: about noon, the whole population seemed astir, and the banks of that part of the river where the regatta was to be held, were soon thronged with anxious spectators. The Albion steamer, which plies with pleasure parties between Chester and Eaton Hall, was engaged for the use of the committee, and was moored opposite to the bottom of St. John's-street, from which place the races commenced and terminated; the distance rowed, (except with the sculls and the women's boats) being about three miles. The groves and the public garden of the club ground were decorated with various flags and banners; and on the opposite eminence was a number of booths, with their gay ensigns fluttering in the breeze; on this spot was also stationed the fine band of the 6th Regiment, now occupying Chester Castle; and in addition to their inspiriting music, the scene was further enlivened by Mr. Gould's excellent Cheshire band, which occupied a position in the Albion steamer; and by the well-conducted juvenile band of the Blue Coat Boys, who, by the kindness of Mrs. Wrangham, were permitted to enjoy the day in the pleasant garden adjoining the residence of that lady, at Dee Banks. The place where this aquatic festival is celebrated is one of the most enchanting bits of river scenery in England; and viewed from the elevated ridge of land in the meadows opposite the Groves, the prospect was one of charming and exhilarating. Among the company who graced the occasion with their presence, we noticed the principal families of the city and neighbourhood, including a numerous assemblage of elegantly dressed ladies, whose loveliness fully justified the rapturous encomiums with which poets have sung the praises of the "Cheshire beauties;" and, indeed, all classes, from the fascinating belle of the drawing-room, to the hardy wife of the weather-beaten fisherman—from the votary of fashion and luxurious ease to the toil-worn mechanic—seemed to enter with genuine ardour into the spirit of the sport, and recalled the recollection of those happy British festivals which are now becoming "few and far between;" but which England has become none the wiser, and certainly none the merrier, for abandoning. Before recording the results of these interesting trials of skill and manly strength, let us bestow a meed of well-deserved approbation on the committee, with their excellent and efficient chairman, secretary, and treasurer (Messrs. H. Brown, J. Churton, and J. Prichard, jun.), for the exertions by which they were enabled to provide for their fellow-citizens so gay and gratifying a day's amusement; and on Mr. Ralph Green, for his impartial and satisfactory discharge of the duties of umpire. The sports commenced with

The Trial Stakes, value 5 guineas, for four-oared gigs, to be rowed by boys under 18 years of age.

First Heat—The Deva beat the Hester.

Second Heat—The Gipsy Queen beat the Don Juan.

The next race was for the Dee Cup, value 15 guineas, for four-oared gigs, to be rowed and steered by mechanics or fishermen.

First Heat—The May Queen (fishermen) beat the Gipsy Queen (mechanics).

Second Heat—The Echo (fishermen) beat the Don Juan (mechanics). This was a splendidly contested race to the turn, when the Echo went ahead and won by several lengths.

The tie for the Trial Stakes, rowed by boys—The Deva beat the Gipsy Queen and won the stake: the Deva was rowed by fishing-boys.

Now came the grand race of the day, and which was looked forward to with the greatest interest. The Mersey boat, and the Chester boat, No. 1, met on Warrington about three weeks ago, when the latter came off victorious; but, as a change had taken place in the Liverpool boat's crew, and they having been in close training under the guidance of Tipping, of London, since that period, it was thought that the Liverpool boat might retrieve her lauress here. On the other hand, the Cestrians had not been backward in their training, and during the previous eight weeks they had the advantage of the tuition of George Maynard, who was once the champion of the Thames. After the usual preliminaries, the boats drew up to start for

The City Cup, value 30 guineas, added to a Sweepstakes of 3 guineas each, for four-oared Gigs, to be rowed and steered by gentlemen Amateurs (open to all the world)

The Royal Chester Rowing Club	..	1
The Mersey Rowing Club (Liverpool)	..	2
Gipsy Queen (Chester)	..	3

The Gipsy Queen was inside, the Chester No. 1, in the centre, and the Mersey outside. On the signal being given, a beautiful start was effected, but Chester almost immediately took the lead, and kept it to the end of them, and the Gipsy Queen close to the Mersey. No change occurred till passing the club ground, where the Chester No. 1 drew further ahead, and had a lead of a length and a half, the Gipsy Queen preserving the other two. All three crews pulled with untiring spirit, and were cheered on by their respected admirers and partisans, who ran along the bank. A good sport was now made for them by the bursting of a bomb shell by the Chester No. 1, rather wide, then the Mersey, and Gipsy Queen bringing up the rear. In this order, the race ended; and though the Liverpool gentlemen tried all in their power to make up their ground, it was of no avail, they were beaten by six boats' length. The distance was rowed in sixteen minutes. The winners paid off in a new boat, built by Cownden and Wentzells, of Lambeth, and in such, we believe, is to be manned the Royal Chester.

The tie for the Dee Cup, rowed by mechanics or fishermen, was won by the Echo, beating the May Queen.

A piece of plate, value five guineas, for Skiffs, to be sculled by gentlemen amateurs. Entrance 10s. each as ff.

The Gazelle	G. Bentham	Liverpool 1
The Water Lily	F. Potts	Chester 2
The Jolly Nose	W. Dixon	Chester 3

Won by two lengths, by Mr. Bentham.

The next and last races excited much merriment. They were rowed for by women: in the latter the winning lady was rowed by no fine looking oarsman, who would prove tough opponents to some of the men. Their names are Sconce, and we understand that there were no less than four generations of the family on the river, all of whom came off winners!—(Abridged from the Chester Courant.)

The annexed view, from a sketch by an artist of Chester, embraces St. John's Church, one of the finest structures in the city; and the locality is altogether considered one of the most picturesque views on "Deva's Druid Water."

The river sports of the regatta being over, a numerous party assembled at the Hop-pole inn, and sat down to an excellent dinner; after which the evening was passed in excellent glee, the healths of the winners, &c., were drunk with enthusiasm; and an original song, from the pen of the poet laureate of the Club was introduced, in glorification of the gallant series of successes which have been achieved by the crews of the Chester Royal Rowing Club.

IRELAND.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON AND THE IRISH ORANGEMEN.—A long report of the meeting of the "Protestant Operatives' Society," held at the Rotunda on Thursday night, appears in Saunders's News Letter. The following is an abridgment:—The Rev. Mr. Gregg read a letter from C. A. Bagot, Esq., J. P., of Carlton Lodge, Ballymoe, county Galway, enclosing his subscription of £1, as a member of the association. (Cheers)

The Secretary read the following letter:

"August 4, 1843.

"My Lord Duke,—May it please your Grace—I trust that your Grace will allow me to trespass on your Grace to present to the House of Lords a petition for the repeal of the Emancipation Bill, which was adopted at a very large and highly respectable meeting of the Protestants of Dublin, held in the Rotunda on last evening, and signed in the course of an hour by the petitioners. Should your Grace be so kind as to support the prayer of the petition, we should be obliged.

"I have the honour to be, my Lord Duke, your Grace's most obedient servant, "WM. CORNFORD KEVY, Sec."

The secretary then read the following reply of the duke:—

"August 7, 1843

"F. M. Marshal the Duke of Wellington presents his compliments to Mr. Compton Espy. It is the common practice in both Houses of Parliament for members to comment and observe upon petitions presented to each house, upon the mode in which the petition under discussion is framed, upon the signatures to it, its contents, and whether or not expressing the real opinions of those from whom it is represented as proceeding. It is impossible for the member presenting a petition to answer such observations with satisfaction to the house, with credit to himself, or with advantage to the petitioners, unless he should have some reaction with the place from which the petition comes, and some knowledge of the petitioners. The Duke has no relation whatever with the Dublin Protestant Operative Association and Reformation Society. He declines, therefore, to present to the House of Lords the petition referred to, or to support the prayer of the petition for the repeal of the Act called the Roman Catholic Relief Act. He requests Mr. Compton Espy to observe that the Houses of Parliament avoid to recognise the denominations assumed by, and even the existence of, self-constituted associations. The petition in question could be received only as that of the individuals signing it. But this is a point which will be suggested probably by the noble lord who may present the petition."

The Rev. Mr. Gregg then rose to move a resolution, founded on the letter of the Duke of Wellington. It was to the effect, that that letter was calculated to prevent them, as Protestants, from hoping for anything from the present Ministry. The Duke not only declined to present the petition, but even to support its prayer. He (Mr. Gregg) was a Conservative, and abhorred the church—deprived the Protestants of al. their privileges—broke up the ancient institutions of the country—alluded the heart of every right-thinking man—left the Roman Catholics as discontented as ever—involved the three kingdoms in faction—and was now endangering the integrity of the empire; and yet the Duke of Wellington, who was the perpetrator of all these horrible evils and the women's boats) being about three miles. The groves and the public garden of the club ground were decorated with various flags and banners; and on the opposite eminence was a number of booths, with their gay ensigns fluttering in the breeze; on this spot was also stationed the fine band of the 6th Regiment, now occupying Chester Castle; and in addition to their inspiriting music, the scene was further enlivened by Mr. Gould's excellent Cheshire band, which occupied a position in the Albion steamer; and by the well-conducted juvenile band of the Blue Coat Boys, who, by the kindness of Mrs. Wrangham, were permitted to enjoy the day in the pleasant garden adjoining the residence of that lady, at Dee Banks. The place where this aquatic festival is celebrated is one of the most enchanting bits of river scenery in England; and viewed from the elevated ridge of land in the meadows opposite the Groves, the prospect was one of charming and exhilarating. Among the company who graced the occasion with their presence, we noticed the principal families of the city and neighbourhood, including a numerous assemblage of elegantly dressed ladies, whose loveliness fully justified the rapturous encomiums with which poets have sung the praises of the "Cheshire beauties;" and, indeed, all classes, from the fascinating belle of the drawing-room, to the hardy wife of the weather-beaten fisherman—from the votary of fashion and luxurious ease to the toil-worn mechanic—seemed to enter with genuine ardour into the spirit of the sport, and recalled the recollection of those happy British festivals which are now becoming "few and far between;" but which England has become none the wiser, and certainly none the merrier, for abandoning. Before recording the results of these interesting trials of skill and manly strength, let us bestow a meed of well-deserved approbation on the committee, with their excellent and efficient chairman, secretary, and treasurer (Messrs. H. Brown, J. Churton, and J. Prichard, jun.), for the exertions by which they were enabled to provide for their fellow-citizens so gay and gratifying a day's amusement; and on Mr. Ralph Green, for his impartial and satisfactory discharge of the duties of umpire. The sports commenced with

The Trial Stakes, value 5 guineas, for four-oared gigs, to be rowed by boys under 18 years of age.

First Heat—The Deva beat the Hester.

Second Heat—The Gipsy Queen beat the Don Juan.

The next race was for the Dee Cup, value 15 guineas, for four-oared gigs, to be rowed and steered by mechanics or fishermen.

First Heat—The May Queen (fishermen) beat the Gipsy Queen (mechanics).

Second Heat—The Echo (fishermen) beat the Don Juan (mechanics). This was a splendidly contested race to the turn, when the Echo went ahead and won by several lengths.

The tie for the Trial Stakes, rowed by boys—The Deva beat the Gipsy Queen and won the stake: the Deva was rowed by fishing-boys.

Now came the grand race of the day, and which was looked forward to with the greatest interest. The Mersey boat, and the Chester boat, No. 1, met on Warrington about three weeks ago, when the latter came off victorious; but, as a change had taken place in the Liverpool boat's crew, and they having been in close training under the guidance of Tipping, of London, since that period, it was thought that the Liverpool boat might retrieve her laurels here. On the other hand, the Cestrians had not been backward in their training, and during the previous eight weeks they had the advantage of the tuition of George Maynard, who was once the champion of the Thames. After the usual preliminaries, the boats drew up to start for

The City Cup, value 30 guineas, added to a Sweepstakes of 3 guineas each, for four-oared Gigs, to be rowed and steered by gentlemen Amateurs (open to all the world)

The Royal Chester Rowing Club	..	1
The Mersey Rowing Club (Liverpool)	..	2
Gipsy Queen (Chester)	..	3

The Gipsy Queen was inside, the Chester No. 1, in the centre, and the Mersey outside. On the signal being given, a beautiful start was effected, but Chester almost immediately took the lead, and kept it to the end of them, and the Gipsy Queen close to the Mersey. No change occurred till passing the club ground, where the Chester No. 1 drew further ahead, and had a lead of a length and a half, the Gipsy Queen preserving the other two. All three crews pulled with untiring spirit, and were cheered on by their respected admirers and partisans, who ran along the bank. A good sport was now made for them by the bursting of a bomb shell by the Chester No. 1, rather wide, then the Mersey, and Gipsy Queen bringing up the rear. In this order, the race ended; and though the Liverpool gentlemen tried all in their power to make up their ground, it was of no avail, they were beaten by six boats' length. The distance was rowed in sixteen minutes. The winners paid off in a new boat, built by Cownden and Wentzells, of Lambeth. and in such, we believe, is to be manned the Royal Chester.

The tie for the Dee Cup, rowed by mechanics or fishermen, was won by the Echo, beating the May Queen.

A piece of plate, value five guineas, for Skiffs, to be sculled by gentlemen amateurs. Entrance 10s. each as ff.

The Gazelle	G. Bentham	Liverpool 1
The Water Lily	F. Potts	Chester 2
The Jolly Nose	W. Dixon	Chester 3

Won by two lengths, by Mr. Bentham.

The next and last races excited much merriment. They were rowed for by women: in the latter the winning lady was rowed by no fine looking oarsman, who would prove tough opponents to some of the men. Their names are Sconce, and we understand that there were no less than four generations of the family on the river, all of whom came off winners!—(Abridged from the Chester Courant.)

The annexed view, from a sketch by an artist of Chester, embraces St. John's Church, one of the finest structures in the city; and the locality is altogether considered one of the most picturesque views on "Deva's Druid Water."

The river sports of the regatta being over, a numerous party assembled at the Hop-pole inn, and sat down to an excellent dinner; after which the evening was passed in excellent glee, the healths of the winners, &c., were drunk with enthusiasm; and an original song, from the pen of the poet laureate of the Club was introduced, in glorification of the gallant series of successes which have been achieved by the crews of the Chester Royal Rowing Club.

IRELAND.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON AND THE IRISH ORANGEMEN.—A long report of the meeting of the "Protestant Operatives' Society," held at the Rotunda on Thursday night, appears in Saunders's News Letter. The following is an abridgment:—The Rev. Mr. Gregg read a letter from C. A. Bagot, Esq., J. P., of Carlton Lodge, Ballymoe, county Galway, enclosing his subscription of £1, as a member of the association. (Cheers)

The Secretary read the following letter:

"August 4, 1843.

"My Lord Duke,—May it please your Grace—I trust that your Grace will allow me to trespass on your Grace to present to the House of Lords a petition for the repeal of the Emancipation Bill, which was adopted at a very large and highly respectable meeting of the Protestants of Dublin, held in the Rotunda on last evening, and signed in the course of an hour by the petitioners. Should your Grace be so kind as to support the prayer of the petition, we should be obliged.

"I have the honour to be, my Lord Duke, your Grace's most obedient servant, "WM. CORNFORD KEVY, Sec."

The secretary then read the following reply of the duke:—

"August 7, 1843

"F. M. Marshal the Duke of Wellington presents his compliments to Mr. Compton Espy. It is the common practice in both Houses of Parliament for members to comment and observe upon petitions presented to each house, upon the mode in which the petition under discussion is framed, upon the signatures to it, its contents, and whether or not expressing the real opinions of those from whom it is represented as proceeding. It is impossible for the member presenting a petition to answer such observations with satisfaction to the house, with credit to himself, or with advantage to the petitioners, unless he should have some reaction with the place from which the petition comes, and some knowledge of the petitioners. The Duke has no relation whatever with the Dublin Protestant Operative Association and Reformation Society. He declines, therefore, to present to the House of Lords the petition referred to, or to support the prayer of the petition for the repeal of the Act called the Roman Catholic Relief Act. He requests Mr. Compton Espy to observe that the Houses of Parliament avoid to recognise the denominations assumed by, and even the existence of, self-constituted associations. The petition in question could be received her foot slipped, and she fell into the water. It was very dark at the time; and, as there were no lights upon the wharf, it was with difficulty that timely assistance could be rendered, and the confusion of the moment led many who was very great, many of whom, not knowing who had fallen in, were greatly alarmed for the safety of their own friends. Providentially, however, some one connected with the pier succeeded in getting Mrs. Gilbert out of the water, but not before she was nearly exhausted. The body of the unfortunate Mrs. Ferrand's brother lately lost his life

SUICIDE FROM LAMBETH PALACE STAIRS.—About nine o'clock on Wednesday evening a young woman committed suicide by precipitating herself from Lambeth Palace Stairs into the river. It appears from the statement of a lady and gentleman, who were passing at the time, that they observed the unfortunate creature within a few yards of the water, in a kneeling posture; upon which the gentleman, suspecting that her intentions were to commit suicide, rushed down, but before he got half way to where she stood, a sudden plunge by the wretched woman put it out of his power to render her any assistance.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS—WEDNESDAY.

The sessions paper, appointing the several days for transacting the business of the county and the trial of prisoners, named Wednesday as "appeal day," but the court was not opened in consequence of the learned judges of the Queen's Bench having decided that the magistrates had no jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals against the decisions of the Royal assembled sessions of the peace. This decision, it is expected, will create considerable confusion in the adm nistration of justice at quarter sessions throughout the country, the course hitherto pursued having been acted upon for a number of years.

POLICE.

GUILDHALL.—Thomas Dixon was charged with sending to Newgate market for sale, the carcasses of four sheep unfit for human food. The defendant is a salesman at Smithfield market, and has a layer at Islington, for the reception of animals who require rest before they are taken into the market.—The inspector and the defendant had a dispute about the sheep. He found they had not been killed, but had died a natural death, and were therefore unfit for human food. Such meat became putrid in a few hours. When he went to Mr. Hubbard's he saw the carcasses hanging in the market exposed for sale. Mr. Hubbard asked his opinion of them. Witness told him he had come on purpose to see them.—Mr. Alderman Johnson adjourned the case for further evidence.

MARLBOROUGH STREET.—FISHING IN KENSINGTON GARDENS.—Henry Curtis, son of Captain Curtis, of the Coldstream Guards, the park keeper, with having fished without a rod in the Serpentine in Kensington Gardens, at half-past five o'clock on the afternoon of the 3rd inst. The prosecutor, Mr. Maltby, had been cautioned several times against this practice, and further, that when taken into custody he had said he should like to see his head with the fishing-rod.—Mr. Maltby fined the lad 10s., and he was locked up for a short time after the case was heard. On the case coming pockets of at least fifty gentlemen, which all appeared, however, to be empty. At last the prisoner Newton sounded one pocket of an elderly lady, and drew from it what he no doubt thought was something like a prize, for he instantly gave the signal to his companions, and they hurried off to the outskirts to examine what they had got; but they were quickly followed by the constables, who discovered that the supposed prize was a fancifully engraved ticket, certifying that the person named therein had duly taken the pledge of total abstinence. This, however valueless the article, being an overt act of felony in the opinion of the constables, they took the perpetrators of it into custody.—Mr. Greenwood (looking at the ticket and smiling): I see this is signed "Theobald Mathew," and not in the countenances of the numerous genteel and fashionable visitors with which the Parade and Castle were thronged, standing in gaping astonishment, waiting the signal-gun. At 11.30 A.M. a light breeze had sprung up from the westward, sufficient to fill the canvas, when a gun was fired from the Squadron House Battery, and the yachts were away, making the best of a strong ebb setting to the westward in their various courses was discerned by those on the look out by "the light of the moon." They arrived in the following order:—

	hour	min.	sec.
Corsair	1	24	30
Gem	1	24	50
Phœbe	1	25	20
Peri	1	26	—

The three former vessels kept close to each other the whole distance, and at about 4 P.M returned through Cowes Roads and proceeded to the eastward, the Corsair keeping the lead, followed closely by the Gem and Phœbe, who were together "side by side," and at two o'clock the Peri might be seen the Peri. From this time to sunset it was a perfect calm, and the match might, indeed, be justly termed a drifting match. At about 9 P.M a fine breeze again sprung up, which was just sufficient to enable them to make headway. It was not, however, until past midnight ere any of the yachts made their appearance, when their white canvas was discerned by those on the look out by "the light of the moon." They arrived in the following order:—

	hour	min.	sec
Corsair	—	30	—
Gem	—	41	30
Phœbe	—	41	45

Peri did not go round the Nab vessel. Although the Corsair was again the first vessel in, at 1, according to the "graduated scale of Acker's" time for tonnage, the Phœbe was declared the winner, and the cup duly awarded to her gallant owner.

TUESDAY, Aug. 15.—The third R.Y.S. cup of £50 for first-class cutters of the squadron being 30 tons and under 50 tons, was sailed for by three fine yachts. Course the same as the last race of Saturday, with the exception that at starting they were to proceed to the eastward in lieu of first to the westward. The following were the yachts.—

Aurora	40	WILLIAM BENCH, Esq.
Paris	33	Capt. A. L. Corry.
Nymph	31	Sir John Bayley, Bart.

From the equal tonnage almost of these boats, became a most much interest and agreement, and, if anything, the Phœbe was the favourite; but the weather, unfortunately, proved one, having at the commencement of the race, afterwards light, and

At 11 they simultaneously, on the fire of the gun, got under way, passed their wind to the starboard on the starboard tack, and worked through the roads among the numerous shipping and sailing vessels at all descriptions which studded the Solent. Towards noon it fell calm, and shortly afterwards a breeze came up from the westward, which enabled them to complete the wearying task of sailing under a summer's sun, as hot as has been experienced this summer.

The yachts arrived, just as night had almost closed upon them, in the following order:—

	hour	min.	sec.
Phœbe	8	57	50
Aurora	8	5	10

Nymph did not go round the whole distance, and by the above result the Phœbe was again declared a winner

The summer general meeting of the members of the R.Y. Squadron was held at the Squadron House on Friday, the 11th. The proceedings of the former meeting were read and confirmed; and after transacting various other business relating to the squadron, and there being no candidates for election, the meeting broke up.

PLYMOUTH REGATTA is fixed for the 23rd inst., in the Sound; where, in addition to the Western Squadron, of nearly 50 sail, there will be a squadron of 10 yachts from Cowes, and a number of others they will sail to-day, in order to secure crossing Plymouth before the Wednesday to-morrow. The names of these 10 yachts are as follows:—Lord Yarborough, the Peri, Fiery, Brilliant, Will o' the Wisp, Esmeralda, Corsair, Gem, Owen Glendwr, Ariel, Camilla, Pearl, [illegible], Beaufighter, and [illegible]. These vessels will, of course, went to sea to engage the Western Yacht Squadron of Plymouth will be distinguished by the han[illegible] Correspondent.

NEW MUSIC.

COME THOU TO ME. Ballad. Sung by Mrs. Waylett. The words by Mrs. C. Baron Wilson. The music by Alexander Lee. Duff and Hodgson.

This song or ballad puts us in mind of a pastoral once written by the witty Dr. Sheridan, commencing

Beneath th' umbrageous shadow of a shade.

The music is pretty, particularly in the minor, but the words are "poor indeed."

I WILL BE TRUE TO THEE. Chansonette. The poetry by G. Douglas Thompson, Esq. The music by Alexander Lee. Duff and Hodgson.

This is a most elegant and artistical production. Why is it not more correctly printed? Write often thus, Mr. Lee, and we need not expatriate our ears for good music.

SHE NEVER TOLD HER LOVE. The music composed by John Barnett. D'Almaine and Co.

Dissociation is not an agreeable sensation, if it be one at all. The title of this song is similar to that of one of Haydn's immortal canonets, but there it stops—and so shall we.

TAKE BACK THE GOLDEN GIFTS OF LOVE. The poetry by Mrs. Crawford. The music by J. P. Knight. D'Almaine and Co.

Mr. Knight has mistaken the rhythm of his words, but otherwise he has invented, as is his custom, an elegant and expressive melody.

IMOGEN. Song. The poetry by Mrs. Crawford. The music by E. J. Loder. D'Almaine and Co.

The master-hand of this great and thinking composer is quite present in this beautiful bagatelle. We say bagatelle, for we know this is but a mu[illegible] to the leviathans he could wield.

THE SISTERS. The poetry by Desmond Ryan; the music by Franz Schubert. D'Almaine and Co.

This is one of the great Schubert's productions, which is more ingenious than elegant, more learned than effective. However, every musician will give it "right hearty welcome!"

THE CONGREGATIONAL AND CHORISTERS' PSALM AND HYMN BOOK. Edited by Vincent Novello.

In this clever work of Mr. Dufour Novello we find the following nationally-interesting anecdote:—"John Reading was a pupil of Dr. Blow (the master of Purcell), and was first employed at Lincoln Cathedral. He afterwards became organist to St. John's, Hackney, and finally of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, and St. Mary Woolnoth, London. He published, towards the end of the seventeenth century, a collection of anthems of his own composition, and his productions are generally esteemed for their tastefully simple, melodious, and appropriately natural harmonies. The piece, 'Adeste fideles,' obtained its name of 'The Portuguese Hymn' from the accidental circumstance of the Duke of Leeds, who was a director of the Concert of Ancient Music many years since (about 1785), having heard the hymn first performed at the Portuguese Chapel, and supposing it to be peculiar to the service in Portugal, he introduced the melody at the Ancient Concerts, giving it the title of 'Portuguese Hymn,' by which appellation this very favourite and popular tune has ever since been distinguished; but it is by no means confined to the choir of the Portuguese Chapel, being the regular Christmas Hymn that is sung in every Catholic chapel throughout England." And you might have added Ireland and Scotland, Mr. Novello.

No. 1. OLD FAMILIAR FACES. A Ballad, written and composed by H. Pase. Hy. Pase, Kensington.

No. 2. WHY ARE THE TALES OF THY INFANCY. Ballad. Ditto, ditto, &c.

No. 3. 'TIS BEAUTIFUL TO ME. Ballad. Ditto, ditto, &c.

No. 4. THE OLD MOUSQUETAIRE. Ditto, ditto, &c.

No. 5. TIC, TIC, TIC. Ditto, ditto, &c.

No. 6. BE HAPPY WHILST WE MAY. Written and arranged by Henry Fase. Ditto, &c.

No. 1. Is rather a pretty and flowing melody; but the composer should have written the diminished seventh (with the g flat instead of f sharp) on the sixth bar of the subject when repeated in each verse.

No. 2. Is graceful and original.

No. 3. The frequent occurrence of prohibited open and concealed consecutions, spoils this otherwise agreeable ballad.

No. 4. The 6-4 chord should not be abandoned for the fundamental at bar 3 of the symphony, nor should f sharp be written in place of g flat in bar 6.

No. 5. A pretty melody, but most (shall we say?) carelessly harmonised: The progression at bar 12 is totally inadmissible.

No. 6. Is a proof that Mr. Fase contenns, or would have contemned had he lived in his time, all the contrapuntal rules of Master Thomas Morley and other worthies, who, by precept and example, kept the laws of harmony inviolate. A delicate ear cannot endure the monstrosities that he seems pleased to commit. To indulge in skippings from useless inversnous to remote and unexpected fundamentals, is at once a proof of a fancy "that can never cast anchor," as Carl Maria once observed of an author who was similarly indifferent to necessary rules.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

CHARLES HORN.—This popular composer and accomplished vocalist, we are happy to perceive, is appointed musical director at Covent-garden Theatre for the ensuing season. We hope to see and hear him once more in Caspar.

ACADEMIE DE MUSIQUE, PARIS.—This splendid house narrowly escaped being burnt last week. The fire originated in the little theatre Gymnase Enfantin, in the Passage de l'Opera, but fortunately was prevented doing any further mischief than burning the little arena to its sawdust. It is not to be rebuilt on the same site.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS IN ITALY.—Fanny Elssler and Lucile Grahn are engaged at the La Scala, for the ensuing carnival. The operatic seasons in Italy are but very little known in this country. The season of the carnival invariably commences on the 26th of December; La Primavera (spring season), on the 19th of April; L'Autunno (autumn), on the 15th of August. In certain cities the periods of L'Autunno and Primavera seasons differ. At Milan there is sometimes an Autunino (or little autumn season). As to the carnival, it invariably begins the second day after Christmas.

DEATH OF HERR FREDERIC KIND.

The Author of the Libretto of "Der Freyschutz."

Herr Kind, the worthy coadjutor of the immortal Karl Maria Von Weber, has recently died, in his 66th year. A short time since (on the occasion of the one hundred and first representation of "Der Freyschutz" at Dresden) he published an account of his introduction to the great composer, and the manner in which the matter was concocted between them. The following extracts may not be uninteresting:—

In the course of the year 1816 the chamber musician, Schmiedel, brought to me a stranger dressed in black, extremely thin in person, of a pale complexion, but intellectual countenance, and from his long arms and large extended hands, I took him at once for a pianist. It was Karl Maria Von Weber. I was delighted to form his acquaintance: he had already acquired some reputation from having set to music some popular songs taken from the collections of Herder and of Wirtenberger, the songs of Körner, and some by myself. I knew also that he was the author of a printed Kappel Meister at Dresden

The conversation between us was animated; we talked of various things. At last Weber said to me, "You must write for me an opera." The proposal made me laugh. I had already made various attempts in many branches of literature, but it had never occurred to me to write an opera. But the idea though laughable, was not considered nothing ought to be impossible to a poet. I acknowledged to him with great simplicity that I scarcely understood a note of music. He told me that was no consequence whatever. He added, "We are agreed; we understand each other; and as for the rest we will settle another time. We separated as if we had been old friends.

Weeks and months passed; I worked at various descriptions of pieces, but I did not forget my project; I recollected that a certain number of my poems had been put to music, and that they had met with some success; I recollected having read somewhere that a tragedy, by its being adapted to music, had attained extraordinary success. At length Weber came to reside at Dresden; he paid me a visit, and spoke again upon the subject of my libretto. I had often heard speak of the exigencies of composers, who only view an opera as regards the music, and often impose on the writer alterations and considerable changes. I explained this circumstance very freely and openly to Weber. "I will compose your libretto," said I, "such as you direct me, I give you my word; as to those details which require but a dash of the pen, these you will not refuse to make yourself out of friendship for me."

It now only remained to find a subject; I wished that it should be popular, such as became Weber's talents and my own. We searched Musenus, Benzel, Wieland, several collections of romances and novels; at length we stopped at the "Freyschutz" by Apel, and then we gave it up. The measure was severe; the subject might appear to them dangerous, as tending to increase superstitious ideas. Besides, in the tale of Apel, the two lovers die, which could not be supported on the stage. All these difficulties disconcerted us; we parted without doing anything.

But the subject had struck me; my heart fluttered; I paced my room intoxicated with the poems of the forests and popular legends. At length the mists dispersed and the sun broke forth to enlighten me. The same evening, or the morrow of the eventful day, I ran to Weber's house, and exclaimed on seeing him, "I have done "Der Freyschutz!" I have acted the devil himself! I have gone to work in an original manner. nothing is wanting but the conclusion of the 30 years' war; scene —the depths of the Bohemian forests. A pious hermit has appeared to me! The white rose protects itself against the Demon Hunter! Innocence comes to the aid of the weak—vice is destroyed, and virtue triumphs." I further explained more perfectly my plot; we shook hands together, and wished hearty success to our "Freyschutz."

There is a certain German enthusiasm in this which must interest every one possessing that romance so necessary to the due appreciation of art in any form.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—FINAL CLOSE OF THE SEASON.

Jam hoc opus est.—TERENT.

Quæ è longinquo magis placent, says Tacitus; "things which are far sought and dear bought," as our own proverb asserts, are prized the most. Immania monstra perferimus, says Virgilius; and is there not a proof of this every day before our judicial eyes? Do we not see macaws in the place of nightingales—perroquets and parrots in lieu of the "merle and the mavis"—humming-birds in the locality of those which could sing outright (were they patronized properly), and, as if the eye were the monopolizing sense of all beauty, everything sacrificed to external show and pageantry, provided it be "neat as imported!" We are certainly a most unnational people, as regards the cultivation of the arts—chez nous. Painting, perhaps, may be an exception, because no foreign artist has the remotest chance of competition with our natives; but in music, where rivalry, or would-be competition, is between the pretenders of our land and the acknowledged of another, the mass are universally inclined to overlook or underrate the native productions of their compatriots, forgetting that England once gave musical laws to the world, and yet possesses a richer harmonical store of indigenous produce than any other country on the face of the earth. We, nowadays, must expatriate a countryman for education; he must enlist in a foreign corps before he is fit to serve in our ranks; he must acquire a conviction that Music is a generic art; that it is no matter what notes are written to certain given words; that pathos, or, in fact, every delicate shade of feeling, should be all merged in that thing termed effect, by which noise is generally understood; and that he who can instrument most composes the best opera. Alas! what would become of our great Quarlo writers, who have developed the whole truth of harmony in four parts, without the aid of gran cassa, ophicleide, or trumpet?

Well, well, we suppose we must submit for the present; but we hope the better days, and if we could individualize ourselves, we would exclaim,

Utinam id sit, quod spero,

and that would be a national operain every sense of the words: viz., the libretto written in the language of a Shakspere, a Milton, and a thousand other English worthies, and the music composed in the way that

Great Purcell pointed to, but few have follow'd!

Music, connected with words, becomes ridiculous when it does not faithfully respond to and aid their meaning. Italian music, generally speaking, is indifferent to this matter. It is rare that an Italian composer attends to this department of his art. Of the moderns, Bellini has been, perhaps, the most studious, and Rossini the most indifferent, great as he is in other things.

But enough of this querulous complaining about the want of a National opera; let us adopt the convenient, stoical philosophy of our Gallic neighbours, and say, "Quand l'on n'a pas ce que l'on aime, il faut aimer ce que l'on a." And what is it that we have? It is some consolation to be able to reply, THE FIRST ITALIAN OPERA OF ANY CITY IN THE WORLD! And to whom do we owe it? Patronage certainly goes a great way to insure the production of meritorious things in every art: we have the authority of a shrewd little ancient to say that even in poetry many a man may be hot-bedded into possession of the "mens divinior poetæ" by the sunbeams of social influence, who otherwise, like the unnoticed flower, might have "blush'd unseen;" or even if he had attempted, sensa padrone, would have been forced to feel the fatal reverse of "who dares nobly does nobly!" Still, patronage alone will not do: there must be taste, tact, zeal, judgment, and indefatigable industry on

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

COWES REGATTA.

The second prize (the season for a R.Y.S. Cup, value £50, was sailed for on Saturday last, by the following vessels, viz

Fiche	..	Dirter	.. 34 Tons ..	Captain A. L. Corry, R.N.
Peri	..	Schooner	.. 60 ..	Capt. Charles Bulkeley.
Gem	..	Schooner	.. 125 ..	Marquis of Ormonde.
Corsair	..	Cutter	.. 84 ..	John Congreve, Esq.

The match for this cup was incorrectly reported to have taken place on Friday, the 4th instant, and we now proceed to supply the correct report. Owing to the boisterous state of the weather, this match was postponed, the sailing directions and orders eventually altered, and the yachts which were then entered for sailing underwent. On the present occasion the course was to be from Cowes Roads to the westward, and round a vessel moored off Yarmouth, returning through Cowes Roads, thence to the Nab, and back to the starting point. Long before the given hour had arrived the vessels were at their stations; but the weather throughout the early part and, in fact, most of the day was a perfect calm, the sea as unruffled at any time getting above "a cat's-paw;" the water was to appearance one sheet of g[illegible], without so much as a ripple; and it was for some time apprehended that a further postponement of the race would be the result, as the committee, it would appear, had been vested with powers to defer a race at any time, should the weather prove unfavourable. The appointed time for sailing was 11 o'clock, but a perfect calm reigned, and the yachts which were then entered for sailing underwent. On the present occasion the course was to be from Cowes Roads to the westward, and round a vessel moored off Yarmouth, returning through Cowes Roads, thence to the Nab, and back to the starting point. Long before the given hour had arrived the vessels were at their stations; but the weather throughout the early part and, in fact, most of the day was a perfect calm, the sea as unruffled at any time getting above "a cat's-paw;" the water was to appearance one sheet of g[illegible], without so much as a ripple; and it was for some time apprehended that a further postponement of the race would be the result, as the committee, it would appear, had been vested with powers to defer a race at any time, should the weather prove unfavourable. The appointed time for sailing was 11 o'clock, but a perfect calm reigned, throughout, both in the offing and in the countenances of the numerous genteel and fashionable visitors with which the Parade and Castle were thronged, standing in gaping astonishment, waiting the signal-gun. At 11.30 A.M. a light breeze had sprung up from the westward, sufficient to fill the canvas, when a gun was fired from the Squadron House Battery, and the yachts were away, making the best of a strong ebb setting to the westward in their various courses was discerned by those on the look out by "the light of the moon." They arrived in the following order:—

	hour	min.	sec.
Corsair	1	24	30
Gem	1	24	50
Phœbe	1	25	20
Peri	1	26	—

The three former vessels kept close to each other the whole distance, and at about 4 P.M returned through Cowes Roads and proceeded to the eastward, the Corsair keeping the lead, followed closely by the Gem and Phœbe, who were together "side by side," and at two o'clock the Peri might be seen the Peri. From this time to sunset it was a perfect calm, and the match might, indeed, be justly termed a drifting match. At about 9 P.M a fine breeze again sprung up, which was just sufficient to enable them to make headway. It was not, however, until past midnight ere any of the yachts made their appearance, when their white canvas was discerned by those on the look out by "the light of the moon." They arrived in the following order:—

	hour	min.	sec
Corsair	—	30	—
Gem	—	41	30
Phœbe	—	41	45

Peri did not go round the Nab vessel. Although the Corsair was again the first vessel in, at 1, according to the "graduated scale of Acker's" time for tonnage, the Phœbe was declared the winner, and the cup duly awarded to her gallant owner.

TUESDAY, Aug. 15.—The third R.Y.S. cup of £50 for first-class cutters of the squadron being 30 tons and under 50 tons, was sailed for by three fine yachts. Course the same as the last race of Saturday, with the exception that at starting they were to proceed to the eastward in lieu of first to the westward. The following were the yachts.—

Aurora	40	WILLIAM BENCH, Esq.
Paris	33	Capt. A. L. Corry.
Nymph	31	Sir John Bayley, Bart.

From the equal tonnage almost of these boats, became a most much interest and agreement, and, if anything, the Phœbe was the favourite; but the weather, unfortunately, proved one, having at the commencement of the race, afterwards light, and

At 11 they simultaneously, on the fire of the gun, got under way, passed their wind to the starboard on the starboard tack, and worked through the roads among the numerous shipping and sailing vessels at all descriptions which studded the Solent. Towards noon it fell calm, and shortly afterwards a breeze came up from the westward, which enabled them to complete the wearying task of sailing under a summer's sun, as hot as has been experienced this summer.

The yachts arrived, just as night had almost closed upon them, in the following order:—

	hour	min.	sec.
Phœbe	8	57	50
Aurora	8	5	10

Nymph did not go round the whole distance, and by the above result the Phœbe was again declared a winner

The summer general meeting of the members of the R.Y. Squadron was held at the Squadron House on Friday, the 11th. The proceedings of the former meeting were read and confirmed; and after transacting various other business relating to the squadron, and there being no candidates for election, the meeting broke up.

PLYMOUTH REGATTA is fixed for the 23rd inst., in the Sound; where, in addition to the Western Squadron, of nearly 50 sail, there will be a squadron of 10 yachts from Cowes, and a number of others they will sail to-day, in order to secure crossing Plymouth before the Wednesday to-morrow. The names of these 10 yachts are as follows:—Lord Yarborough, the Peri, Fiery, Brilliant, Will o' the Wisp, Esmeralda, Corsair, Gem, Owen Glendwr, Ariel, Camilla, Pearl, [illegible], Beaufighter, and [illegible]. These vessels will, of course, went to sea to engage the Western Yacht Squadron of Plymouth will be distinguished by the han[illegible] Correspondent.

NEW MUSIC.

COME THOU TO ME. Ballad. Sung by Mrs. Waylett. The words by Mrs. C. Baron Wilson. The music by Alexander Lee. Duff and Hodgson.

This song or ballad puts us in mind of a pastoral once written by the witty Dr. Sheridan, commencing

Beneath th' umbrageous shadow of a shade.

The music is pretty, particularly in the minor, but the words are "poor indeed."

I WILL BE TRUE TO THEE. Chansonette. The poetry by G. Douglas Thompson, Esq. The music by Alexander Lee. Duff and Hodgson.

This is a most elegant and artistical production. Why is it not more correctly printed? Write often thus, Mr. Lee, and we need not expatriate our ears for good music.

SHE NEVER TOLD HER LOVE. The music composed by John Barnett. D'Almaine and Co.

Dissociation is not an agreeable sensation, if it be one at all. The title of this song is similar to that of one of Haydn's immortal canonets, but there it stops—and so shall we.

TAKE BACK THE GOLDEN GIFTS OF LOVE. The poetry by Mrs. Crawford. The music by J. P. Knight. D'Almaine and Co.

Mr. Knight has mistaken the rhythm of his words, but otherwise he has invented, as is his custom, an elegant and expressive melody.

IMOGEN. Song. The poetry by Mrs. Crawford. The music by E. J. Loder. D'Almaine and Co.

The master-hand of this great and thinking composer is quite present in this beautiful bagatelle. We say bagatelle, for we know this is but a mu[illegible] to the leviathans he could wield.

THE SISTERS. The poetry by Desmond Ryan; the music by Franz Schubert. D'Almaine and Co.

This is one of the great Schubert's productions, which is more ingenious than elegant, more learned than effective. However, every musician will give it "right hearty welcome!"

THE CONGREGATIONAL AND CHORISTERS' PSALM AND HYMN BOOK. Edited by Vincent Novello.

In this clever work of Mr. Dufour Novello we find the following nationally-interesting anecdote:—"John Reading was a pupil of Dr. Blow (the master of Purcell), and was first employed at Lincoln Cathedral. He afterwards became organist to St. John's, Hackney, and finally of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, and St. Mary Woolnoth, London. He published, towards the end of the seventeenth century, a collection of anthems of his own composition, and his productions are generally esteemed for their tastefully simple, melodious, and appropriately natural harmonies. The piece, 'Adeste fideles,' obtained its name of 'The Portuguese Hymn' from the accidental circumstance of the Duke of Leeds, who was a director of the Concert of Ancient Music many years since (about 1785), having heard the hymn first performed at the Portuguese Chapel, and supposing it to be peculiar to the service in Portugal, he introduced the melody at the Ancient Concerts, giving it the title of 'Portuguese Hymn,' by which appellation this very favourite and popular tune has ever since been distinguished; but it is by no means confined to the choir of the Portuguese Chapel, being the regular Christmas Hymn that is sung in every Catholic chapel throughout England." And you might have added Ireland and Scotland, Mr. Novello.

No. 1. OLD FAMILIAR FACES. A Ballad, written and composed by H. Pase. Hy. Pase, Kensington.

No. 2. WHY ARE THE TALES OF THY INFANCY. Ballad. Ditto, ditto, &c.

No. 3. 'TIS BEAUTIFUL TO ME. Ballad. Ditto, ditto, &c.

No. 4. THE OLD MOUSQUETAIRE. Ditto, ditto, &c.

No. 5. TIC, TIC, TIC. Ditto, ditto, &c.

No. 6. BE HAPPY WHILST WE MAY. Written and arranged by Henry Fase. Ditto, &c.

No. 1. Is rather a pretty and flowing melody; but the composer should have written the diminished seventh (with the g flat instead of f sharp) on the sixth bar of the subject when repeated in each verse.

No. 2. Is graceful and original.

No. 3. The frequent occurrence of prohibited open and concealed consecutions, spoils this otherwise agreeable ballad.

No. 4. The 6-4 chord should not be abandoned for the fundamental at bar 3 of the symphony, nor should f sharp be written in place of g flat in bar 6.

No. 5. A pretty melody, but most (shall we say?) carelessly harmonised: The progression at bar 12 is totally inadmissible.

No. 6. Is a proof that Mr. Fase contenns, or would have contemned had he lived in his time, all the contrapuntal rules of Master Thomas Morley and other worthies, who, by precept and example, kept the laws of harmony inviolate. A delicate ear cannot endure the monstrosities that he seems pleased to commit. To indulge in skippings from useless inversnous to remote and unexpected fundamentals, is at once a proof of a fancy "that can never cast anchor," as Carl Maria once observed of an author who was similarly indifferent to necessary rules.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

CHARLES HORN.—This popular composer and accomplished vocalist, we are happy to perceive, is appointed musical director at Covent-garden Theatre for the ensuing season. We hope to see and hear him once more in Caspar.

ACADEMIE DE MUSIQUE, PARIS.—This splendid house narrowly escaped being burnt last week. The fire originated in the little theatre Gymnase Enfantin, in the Passage de l'Opera, but fortunately was prevented doing any further mischief than burning the little arena to its sawdust. It is not to be rebuilt on the same site.

MUSICAL ARRANGEMENTS IN ITALY.—Fanny Elssler and Lucile Grahn are engaged at the La Scala, for the ensuing carnival. The operatic seasons in Italy are but very little known in this country. The season of the carnival invariably commences on the 26th of December; La Primavera (spring season), on the 19th of April; L'Autunno (autumn), on the 15th of August. In certain cities the periods of L'Autunno and Primavera seasons differ. At Milan there is sometimes an Autunino (or little autumn season). As to the carnival, it invariably begins the second day after Christmas.

DEATH OF HERR FREDERIC KIND.

The Author of the Libretto of "Der Freyschutz."

Herr Kind, the worthy coadjutor of the immortal Karl Maria Von Weber, has recently died, in his 66th year. A short time since (on the occasion of the one hundred and first representation of "Der Freyschutz" at Dresden) he published an account of his introduction to the great composer, and the manner in which the matter was concocted between them. The following extracts may not be uninteresting:—

In the course of the year 1816 the chamber musician, Schmiedel, brought to me a stranger dressed in black, extremely thin in person, of a pale complexion, but intellectual countenance, and from his long arms and large extended hands, I took him at once for a pianist. It was Karl Maria Von Weber. I was delighted to form his acquaintance: he had already acquired some reputation from having set to music some popular songs taken from the collections of Herder and of Wirtenberger, the songs of Körner, and some by myself. I knew also that he was the author of a printed Kappel Meister at Dresden

The conversation between us was animated; we talked of various things. At last Weber said to me, "You must write for me an opera." The proposal made me laugh. I had already made various attempts in many branches of literature, but it had never occurred to me to write an opera. But the idea though laughable, was not considered nothing ought to be impossible to a poet. I acknowledged to him with great simplicity that I scarcely understood a note of music. He told me that was no consequence whatever. He added, "We are agreed; we understand each other; and as for the rest we will settle another time. We separated as if we had been old friends.

Weeks and months passed; I worked at various descriptions of pieces, but I did not forget my project; I recollected that a certain number of my poems had been put to music, and that they had met with some success; I recollected having read somewhere that a tragedy, by its being adapted to music, had attained extraordinary success. At length Weber came to reside at Dresden; he paid me a visit, and spoke again upon the subject of my libretto. I had often heard speak of the exigencies of composers, who only view an opera as regards the music, and often impose on the writer alterations and considerable changes. I explained this circumstance very freely and openly to Weber. "I will compose your libretto," said I, "such as you direct me, I give you my word; as to those details which require but a dash of the pen, these you will not refuse to make yourself out of friendship for me."

It now only remained to find a subject; I wished that it should be popular, such as became Weber's talents and my own. We searched Musenus, Benzel, Wieland, several collections of romances and novels; at length we stopped at the "Freyschutz" by Apel, and then we gave it up. The measure was severe; the subject might appear to them dangerous, as tending to increase superstitious ideas. Besides, in the tale of Apel, the two lovers die, which could not be supported on the stage. All these difficulties disconcerted us; we parted without doing anything.

But the subject had struck me; my heart fluttered; I paced my room intoxicated with the poems of the forests and popular legends. At length the mists dispersed and the sun broke forth to enlighten me. The same evening, or the morrow of the eventful day, I ran to Weber's house, and exclaimed on seeing him, "I have done "Der Freyschutz!" I have acted the devil himself! I have gone to work in an original manner. nothing is wanting but the conclusion of the 30 years' war; scene —the depths of the Bohemian forests. A pious hermit has appeared to me! The white rose protects itself against the Demon Hunter! Innocence comes to the aid of the weak—vice is destroyed, and virtue triumphs." I further explained more perfectly my plot; we shook hands together, and wished hearty success to our "Freyschutz."

There is a certain German enthusiasm in this which must interest every one possessing that romance so necessary to the due appreciation of art in any form.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—FINAL CLOSE OF THE SEASON.

Jam hoc opus est.—TERENT.

Quæ è longinquo magis placent, says Tacitus; "things which are far sought and dear bought," as our own proverb asserts, are prized the most. Immania monstra perferimus, says Virgilius; and is there not a proof of this every day before our judicial eyes? Do we not see macaws in the place of nightingales—perroquets and parrots in lieu of the "merle and the mavis"—humming-birds in the locality of those which could sing outright (were they patronized properly), and, as if the eye were the monopolizing sense of all beauty, everything sacrificed to external show and pageantry, provided it be "neat as imported!" We are certainly a most unnational people, as regards the cultivation of the arts—chez nous. Painting, perhaps, may be an exception, because no foreign artist has the remotest chance of competition with our natives; but in music, where rivalry, or would-be competition, is between the pretenders of our land and the acknowledged of another, the mass are universally inclined to overlook or underrate the native productions of their compatriots, forgetting that England once gave musical laws to the world, and yet possesses a richer harmonical store of indigenous produce than any other country on the face of the earth. We, nowadays, must expatriate a countryman for education; he must enlist in a foreign corps before he is fit to serve in our ranks; he must acquire a conviction that Music is a generic art; that it is no matter what notes are written to certain given words; that pathos, or, in fact, every delicate shade of feeling, should be all merged in that thing termed effect, by which noise is generally understood; and that he who can instrument most composes the best opera. Alas! what would become of our great Quarlo writers, who have developed the whole truth of harmony in four parts, without the aid of gran cassa, ophicleide, or trumpet?

Well, well, we suppose we must submit for the present; but we hope the better days, and if we could individualize ourselves, we would exclaim,

Utinam id sit, quod spero,

and that would be a national operain every sense of the words: viz., the libretto written in the language of a Shakspere, a Milton, and a thousand other English worthies, and the music composed in the way that

Great Purcell pointed to, but few have follow'd!

Music, connected with words, becomes ridiculous when it does not faithfully respond to and aid their meaning. Italian music, generally speaking, is indifferent to this matter. It is rare that an Italian composer attends to this department of his art. Of the moderns, Bellini has been, perhaps, the most studious, and Rossini the most indifferent, great as he is in other things.

But enough of this querulous complaining about the want of a National opera; let us adopt the convenient, stoical philosophy of our Gallic neighbours, and say, "Quand l'on n'a pas ce que l'on aime, il faut aimer ce que l'on a." And what is it that we have? It is some consolation to be able to reply, THE FIRST ITALIAN OPERA OF ANY CITY IN THE WORLD! And to whom do we owe it? Patronage certainly goes a great way to insure the production of meritorious things in every art: we have the authority of a shrewd little ancient to say that even in poetry many a man may be hot-bedded into possession of the "mens divinior poetæ" by the sunbeams of social influence, who otherwise, like the unnoticed flower, might have "blush'd unseen;" or even if he had attempted, sensa padrone, would have been forced to feel the fatal reverse of "who dares nobly does nobly!" Still, patronage alone will not do: there must be taste, tact, zeal, judgment, and indefatigable industry on the part of him who conducts an establishment dependent upon public approval, before that patronage can be earned on the one hand, or well bestowed on the other; and as an instance of it being fully proved to exist in its double principle in one individual, we beg to present our readers with the portrait of Mr. Lumley, the entrepeneur of her Majesty's Theatre, the sedulous caterer for "the banquet of our dearest senses."

Eye rapt in visions of enchanting grace,
And ear dissolv'd in liquid melody!

PORTRAIT OF MR. LUMLEY.

And now to chronicle, en detail, the various performances of the most charming Opera season that was ever presented to our notice and delight.

Her Majesty's Theatre opened on the 11th of March last with a new opera, by Donizetti, entitled "Adelia," in which, for the first time on an opening night, appeared a prima donna (Persiani), and a tenor (Signor Dominique Conti), whose respective merits would shed lustre upon the more advanced stages of any previous seasons. In addition to these, a most charming danseuse (Mademoiselle Dumilâtre) made her first curtsey to an English audience—and not in vain "was her sweet poetry of feet." Fanny Elssler, too, la divinité de danse, as some enraptured Gallic admirer has termed her, was also present, and made "La Tarentule" seem more dangerous than ever.

March 25. "Belisario," for the début of Fornasari, of whose transcendent merits we have spoken already. Ballet, "Une Soirée de Carnaval."

March 30. The novelty in the ballet department, "Giselle," being revived for the display of Elssler's wonderful pantomime.

April 6. "La Sonnambula," in which Persiani, as Amina, made it her own character. Mario and Fornasari great in their respective personæ. Divertissement, "Un Bal sous Louis XIV.," in which there was a galaxy of charms, in the persons of Elssler, Guy Stephan, Camille, Planquet, Dumilâtre, &c.

April 18. "Norma." First appearance of La Diva (Grisi) and the charming Moltini. Conti as Pollione, and Lablache in Oroveso.

April 20. "Semiramide." Beautifully performed by Grisi as the heroine, Brambilla as Arsace, and Fornasari as Assur. "La Gipsy" followed, which was exquisitely personated by Elssler, Coulon, Gosselin, and Silvain.

